Writers telling of Dr. Mary Stone usually emphasize the fact that she was the first woman in Central China to have unbound, natural feet. But more than for unbound feet, Dr. Stone impressed me for her boundless energy and love for her work. She is an enthusiast, who casts all her cares on God, and then helps him bear them.

I met Dr. Stone in Hangchow, and while she was visiting with some friends there, I picked up Margaret Burton's book on the women of China, in which the now familiar story of Dr. Mary Stone is most charmingly told. A friend came over and said, "How can you waste time reading about such a woman when you can talk with her?" But I replied that I wanted to see this wonderful surgeon in her natural environment, and I am glad I did so. In Hangchow Dr. Mary Stone was a scintillating entertainer, vivacious, spirited, enthusiastic and lovable. My friend was quite entranced with her. But in Kiukiang she was all that and more—an emancipated woman, serving mankind as few women are privileged, or able, to serve.

Women of China in the process of emancipation. They begin young. This is a kindergarten class at Kiukiang. In the background is the pagoda they photograph

THE nurses that graduate from the Danforth Hospital at Kiukiang work for a small salary and often earn much more in attending private cases. But every penny that is thus earned is turned back into charity work. Dr. Mary Stone's nurses serve others rather than themselves.

The latest departure of the medical work in Kiukiang is the district work done by graduate nurses, who carry medicines and bandages into the neighboring villages, and open temporary dispensaries there. Each nurse carries out a full equipment for the treatment of cases that do not require hospital attention, and Kiukiang is the center for a healing work that extends into districts where a foreigner is seldom seen. The outlay for this work is slight, and the good done is tremendous. The work is limited only by the number of graduate nurses available.

In Kiukiang I had the privilege of speaking on Bible geography before the largest group of women, definitely committed to Christian work, in the entire field of foreign missions. I could not help thinking how much joy it would have given the Master himself to look into the faces of those women, more than two hundred in number, who have pledged themselves to his service.

THE women come from many provinces and from many denominations, and the whole course is for six years. There are other excellent Bible schools for women in Swatow, where the first school of this kind in China was opened, and in Foochow; but the one at Kiukiang is larger than any other in the world.

Some of the girls are young and unmarried. Some are older and have husbands who are in school or who are preachers or teachers. One woman walks on stumps, due to infection that resulted from foot-binding. There are two other patients of Dr. Stone who have lost their feet. Foot-binding, like infanticide and the selling of babies, is still practiced in China, and in Hankow I saw a girl who was evidently less than fourteen, whose feet were bound as tightly as were those of the grandmothers who stump along so painfully.

No matter how much financial help is given to the different women in the school, they must do productive manual labor to keep them from becoming dependents. Many of the girls earn half of their support in this way, and any girl who has the slightest help from her mission or from the school is compelled to do embroidery or sewing. In addition there is a regular course in sewing, cooking and household management, which every girl, rich or poor, has to take. The school is no place for slackers, and even if a loving friend in America is supporting a girl and paying her entire expenses, that girl has to work at paying labor and produce materials which find ready sale in America. Pauperism and dependence cannot be allowed among women who are pledged to the service of others.

Games are provided, and I spent a busy fifteen minutes coaching two teams in basketball. At first the girls were too polite to guard closely and take the ball away from their opponents, but they soon speeded up and laughed and shouted and were as aggressive as any one could wish. Not only do the girls study hard and work hard at the needle and lace work that aids them to a spirit of independence and self-confidence, but they are given games to keep them healthy and alert.

Under Miss Hughes and Miss Woodruff, the women at Kiukiang are developing into workers who will be a credit to Christianity in many centers of Chinese life.

At William Nast College, where several prominent Chinese have been educated, there is a building that was almost entirely paid for by the sale of hundreds of ancient coins that were found in the soil of the campus. Dr. Kupfer, the principal, has done a great service through his influence with scores of Chinese who have become leaders.

The folly of providing only intellectual work as a means of training for Christian service is seen in the case of Chang Mou Chih, who is "number one Chinaman" for the Asiatic Petroleum Company and who is constructing a motor car road to the Central China summer resort of Kuling, in the hills behind Kiukiang.

Mr. Chang was a failure as a student, but two missionaires gave him a chance to do manual labor. His rise was rapid and his success is assured. He is a prominent and useful Christian layman and gives largely to the church and to philanthropic work.

Another William Nast student who has become prominent is Hwang Hsi Chen, who was one of the directors of the Chinese exhibit at San Francisco. He has repeatedly refused tempting offers from the government and the Y. M. C. A., because he looks forward to establishing an industrial school in which Chinese boys can be taught manual efficiency, and to help develop the products of China.

American papers tell of the importance of opening mines in China, of extending the railways and of increasing the exports of this great country, whose wealth is potential rather than evident. Yet American schools in China have thus far done little to train Chinese students for much needed work. Chinese students can learn English in China, but if they desire to learn technical subjects and industrial courses they have to go to Cornell, Michigan, Wisconsin, Columbia, or some other school away from home, to do it. The day may come when mission schools will realize the need for a broader curriculum, fitted to vocational training, aside from the ministry and teaching, and when philanthropists in America will furnish the money needed to provide such courses in mission schools.

What is needed in China now is more standardization and organization—the twentieth century machinery for carrying a saving Gospel to the people. This, and the sending out of missionaries whose training has not all been in theological schools and

Continued on page 850

How to Reach the Masses

A SERMON BY REV. W. H. HOPKINS[*]

TEXT—John 4 : 35. "Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? . . . Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white unto harvest."

THERE are in this country something more than a hundred million people. The United States Census Bureau tells us that there are in all the churches, Catholic and Protestant, something like forty million people, leaving over sixty million people who have no church connection. How can we reach these millions who are away from the church, is ever the question which church conferences are discussing. The answer is not so far away. In his dealings with the woman of Samaria Christ has for all time answered the question. If the church would rise to the program he presented, it would not be a generation until the masses would be reached. There are for our present consideration two surprising facts about the text.

The first is the manifest impossibility of its being true. We would heartily agree with the disciples in asking the Master to wait four months. If it had been at the close of his ministry in place of at the beginning, it might have been true. If it had been in his own Judea, in place of in half-heathen Samaria, it might have been true. If he had been given an audience of the best people, in place of an audience of outcasts, then it might have been true. But with all the circumstances against him, yet the Master says: "The fields are white unto the harvest." He emphasizes for all time the truth which the church must not forget.

THE other surprising fact is that, after all these centuries, we are still saying four weeks, four months or four something. For generations mothers, Sunday school teachers, pastors and Christian workers have been sowing seed that has not been reaped. It is always wait four weeks, four months.

Study the story of the woman of Samaria as an illustration of how Christ would have us reach the people with the Gospel. He forgets himself. Hungry, weary, footsore, yet he forgets all of his own needs in his desire to help her. He is a Jew and she a Samaritan; he is clean and respectable, she an outcast sinner. He forgets it all in his desire to help. When the Christian worker in church and Sunday school forgets himself, he has gone a long way toward reaching the people. When we forget our education, our culture, our social position, and all the other accidents of life, we shall begin to reach the people who are away from Christ and the church. The reason why in the Salvation Army and in the gospel missions so much is being done, is because there is more self-forgetfulness. When Jane Addams leaves her home of culture and refinement for the slums of Chicago, it is no wonder that they call her "the angel of the tenements." When David Livingstone forgets his desire for cultured association and buries himself with the black man in Africa, it is certain that there will be great results. The Christian worker today who wishes real success must learn of his Master in forgetting himself.

He meets her on the plane of her need. What does she want? To draw water and nothing more. She is not interested in his Gospel or in his preaching. What do the masses want today? Neither the average church service nor the average church prayer meeting. It is easily within the mark to say that there are thousands of people who have absolutely no interest in the present-day church life and the present-day church program. And because they have no interest, the church goes on in its indifferent way, charging the lack of interest to the perversity of human nature, entirely forgetting her own faults and her own failures. How are we to reach the people? By meeting them as Jesus did, on the plane of their everyday needs. He asks of the woman a drink of water. If only in the same way we met the human relationships about us, this question would soon cease to be a vital one.

THE average man in the street cares nothing for the dull preaching, the operatic music, nor even the average church social. The church will never reach him until it begins to voice its interest in human needs. There is need of comfort in the hour of sickness and distress. In some measure, most churches answer to this need. There are many churches which owe all their growth to the fact that they do minister to the sick and the suffering. But there are other human needs—the need of social life. The American people are always moving. It is from the country, where everybody is known and has an interest in everybody else, to the city, where nobody cares or takes an interest. The average city today is literally full of homesick, heartsick people. Many a church would fill its empty pews if only it did something to break the homesickness which is today breaking many hearts. In our great cities, renowned for their hospitality, there are thousands of girls going to ruin every year, spending their time off duty in little hall bedrooms, and just dying for a little touch of home. Many a church worker talks of consecration who has never even thought of the possibility of consecrating the home to Christ.

Then there is the need of social justice. The old prophets were ever crying out against the social wrongs of their day. Far too many people are forgetting the larger Christian message. A few months ago, in one of our cities there was pointed out a big factory which works 1,350 men and women, and in which the profits for the previous year had been one million dollars. Up to a few months ago the average wage had been a dollar a day. The church of Jesus Christ, when true to our Master, must plan for economic justice—the square deal for every man! There are still thousands who are robbing the people and sitting comfortably in their church pews. Until the church begins to realize its social message, we must expect a good many people to stay outside.

THERE is also in these days a growing demand for intellectual honesty. In far too many churches there is a worship of dead creeds and a refusal to ask the question, What is truth? The religion that does not go to school, that is unwilling to turn on the modern light, is a religion that will not satisfy the best thinking man of our day or of any day. When the church stands for intellectual honesty, it will begin to rise in the appreciation of a great many thinking men and women of today.

Jesus meets the woman of Samaria on the plane of her need, yet never for a moment does he forget that she has a higher need. He begins talking about the drink of water—he ends telling her about the Water of Life. There in a nutshell you have the mission of the church. It does not matter very much where you begin, if only you end with the eternal needs of man's life. The church social may be far more important than the revival meeting. The minister who touches community life and community needs may be making the very best preparation for touching the higher needs of the soul.

Here, again, is a great lesson which Christian workers too often forget. Many a social worker starts well; he ends poorly because he forgets that there are eternal needs as well as earthly needs. Man has a body to be clothed, to be fed; but he has also a soul to be cared for. If we forget that need, no man, no woman, no boy, no girl is ever right, until he or she has found peace and joy in the Master's fellowship. We forget the great central aim of the church.

THE TOILERS

By Nancy Fitzhugh Richey

AN hour ago I gazed with aching eyes
Upon the ugliness across the street;
Revolting at the sight of wretched folk
Who plodded by on weary, dragging feet.

A sudden tide of storm came sweeping up,
And veiled with curtained rain the garish day;
And twilight followed hard upon the storm.
The twinkling lights came tripping out to play:—

And now I see anew the shabby streets,
Transformed from tawdriness to sudden splendor;
The fairy prince who stands across the way
A moment back was just the peanut-vender.

The little lady smiling to herself,
And brooding softly, who would ever know
She jingled tambourines to silly tunes—
A street musician not so long ago?

Where stitched the stolid, pallid sweatshop girls,
In that big building opposite to me,
I see, amid those soft and mellow lights,
Exquisite women sewing joyfully.

And oh, I think the vagrant fairy gold
That ever hides within the toiler's heart
Was gently coaxed into the twilight soft,
That I might find the faith to play my part!

Soul needs are far greater than all of our other needs. The average church is not wrong in its emphasis—it is wrong in its refusal to adapt itself to present-day needs and present-day opportunities. It is wrong in tying itself up to old wornout programs and ideals. Christ was interested in human needs and human wrongs. He visited the sick, fed the hungry, cared for the oppressed. The church is serving him when she seeks to minister to all the needs of the community, but all the time remembering the higher needs of the soul. The young man needs remunerative toil. He needs a home, neat and attractive in its appointments. He needs supremely that Christ-life in his home which will make that home the center for him. Jesus begins with the drink of water; before he gets through the woman is asking for the Water of Life.

JESUS next touches the sore spot in her life—"Woman, go call thy husband." The one reason why the Christian worker of today so often fails is because of the sore spot in his life—the thing he does not want to talk about or have any one else talk about. It may be a love of ease, or it may be seeking worldly applause; it may be a desire for worldly gain, or it may be a sensitiveness or an unforgiving disposition—some one thing that is constantly causing irritation whenever the Master speaks. Until that thing is removed, there will neither be joy nor fruitfulness in Christian service. The Master himself must put away the thing which is causing the trouble.

Jesus commissions for Christian service. When the sore spot has been removed—when the life has been cleansed—he next sends her out to become the evangelist for the community. Then it is that we have the marvelous record. This woman, without friends, prestige, influence, without anything, tells the whole community of Christ. Every time we read the record we are filled with shame that, with all of our privileges and with all of our opportunities, so many of us are doing so little for the Master. What was needed was simply for the heart to be set on fire, and then that whole community, with all of its flagrant wrongs, would be brought to the Master's feet. What is needed today, even more than in the past, is the need of hearts set on fire for him.

SOME time ago I went one Sunday to a little old dead church. They had a Sunday school, a prayer meeting, a Ladies' Aid Society, everything which the church should have, except converts. The pastor had resigned and everybody was discouraged. I preached that day and seemingly it was with a stone wall in front of me. On Monday morning, as I went to the depot, I found the train was two hours late. Next to the depot there was a man pumping water for the engines. As I went in to talk with him, he said: "You need not say anything to me. You have not a Christian here. There are nothing but a lot of hypocrites up there." For two hours I talked with him and seemingly made no impression. A few days later he went home to find his little girl lying on a cot and the doctor shaking his head by her side. For a few nights he walked the room beside the little cot, and then the little thing winged away and he was left in his tears. He remembered the old Sunday-school days of his boyhood and one of the golden texts. After reciting it a few times, he knelt down beside the little lifeless form, and prayed that it might be his in due time to go home to her. And then, in the next two weeks, he had buttonholed every man in the community, telling him of his newly found Saviour. The pastor wrote in, saying, "I cannot resign—there is a revival on my hands." The last time I went through that little town, I noticed on the hill the beautiful white new church—the work of the man who pumped water for the engines.

"Say not ye. There are yet four months and then cometh the harvest"—you have said that long enough. Again and again it has been four weeks, four months, or four something. Listen, as Jesus speaks a word as timely for us as it was for the disciples in the long ago: "Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest."

---

[*] Pastor Superintendent, Congregational Home Missionary Society, Atlanta, Ga.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Looking Up and Lifting Up

SUNDAY, August 12. Acts 3 : 6, 7. "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk. And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up." That is surely the order in which those "greater things" are done which are to distinguish the faithful disciple of Christ. It is no use enjoining the impotent man to rise. And it is no use taking him by the hand and lifting him up. The word and the act must have their roots in the infinite energies which are hidden in "the name of Jesus Christ." And what is implied in naming the sacred Name? It is infinitely more than the mere utterance of a talisman prior to the performance of some wonderful trick. No one can name the name without reverence, and aspiration, and prayer, and communion, and reception. To name him is to humbly seek fellowship with him, so that through the channels of vital union his wonder-working power may flow into all our words and deeds. To name the name is far more than the utterance of the lips; it is the act of the soul flinging itself back upon the unlimited resources of grace. It is putting on the Lord Jesus. The soul that names the Name marches forth to its task in the communion of the Holy Ghost. When we name the Name the Lord speaks through our words and works through our deeds. "It is God that worketh in us to will and to do." "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk!"

But while we cannot do anything without the Lord, he will not do everything without us. His communion demands cooperation. We can ensure the needful endowment by looking up, and naming the sacred name; but the endowment is only revealed when we address ourselves to our tasks, and lay hold of the burden, and lift with all our mind and heart and strength. Our strength must back our prayers even if there be only an ounce of it; nay, the consecration of our strength must be the pledge of the sincerity of our prayers. The oratory is also an armory, and we come forth not to stand at ease but to fight. It was the apostle Paul, who more than any man proclaimed the all-sufficiency of the grace of Christ, who also said: "I labored more abundantly than they all!" We are to look up, and then we are to lift up, and the miracle will be wrought.

And what is the blessed issue in this story? What happened to the impotent man? "He, leaping up!" That is the issue. And that is always the divine order: the look up, the lift up, the leap up! In that order God will reveal his glory to us in our own day, and we shall do impossible things in the name of his holy Child Jesus. J. H. J.

Can These Bones Live?

MONDAY, August 13. Ezek. 37 : 3. "And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest." The prophet's vision of the field of dry bones is a parable designed to show us the uselessness of form without force, the necessity of life to give value to mechanism. Ours is an age of organization. There are societies for everything. The church is no exception to this rule. We have been so busy writing constitutions and by-laws, perfection resolutions and programs, appointing commissions and reading their "findings," that we are in danger of neglecting the nurture of that life without which all our social machinery will fail of its own dead weight. Societies and organizations are, at best, but instruments. No axe will cut unless it be wielded by a strong arm. Back of the strong arm there must be a strong will. A battering-ram is useless without a squad of fighting men, and fighting men are useless without the fighting spirit.

Among all God's gifts to the church, there is neither ordinance nor sacrament which does not derive its value from the spirit which prompts its use. A Sabbath observed but formally, a Bible read but perfunctorily, a sacrament administered only officially, a church maintained merely for the sake of its conventionalities—these are but a field of dry bones. Can these bones live? Only in so far as we avail ourselves of the presence and help of the Holy Spirit. John speaks of "being in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Let us daily invite the Holy Spirit unto our lives. He alone can make religion vital. C. C. A.

Fear and Divine Grace

TUESDAY, August 14. Rom. 6 : 15. "Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid." In all ages there have been men in the Church of Christ who were afraid to preach the Gospel, the doctrine of free, unconditional and universal grace. Preaching the Gospel means preaching liberty to men—liberty from sin through faith in the atoning sacrifice of Christ, liberty from the tyranny of the law by the acceptance of Christ who is the end of the law, liberty from the eternal punishment of sin.

It is held that the unqualified preaching of the forgiveness of sin is injurious to good morals because it removes the formidable prospect of the consequences of men's sinning; it makes sinning easy because forgiveness is so easy. In order to deter men from wickedness, it is held, the wrath of God ought to be held up to them.

This fear is based on a very imperfect view of divine grace. The sinner who accepts the pardon which God through the Gospel offers him for Christ's sake is moved to such acceptance by the same grace which sacrificed the Son of God for the sinner's redemption. With indelible letters there is written into the heart of believers the awful cost of their liberation: the pardon which is offered them gratis was dearly bought by Jesus; it broke his heart. As often as the believer remembers Jesus he remembers his sins. Into his daily consciousness there is flashed the vision of the cross and the dying agony of God's Only-Begotten One. That is the most powerful deterrent from sin that can be imagined. The Gospel does not stifle and hinder the development of good morals, but fosters, nourishes and renders effectual every true moral effort of men by the grace of God.

W. H. T. D.

The Assurance of Faith

WEDNESDAY, August 15. John 11 : 41. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me." Before the raising of Lazarus, Jesus expresses His thanks to the Father, knowing that the victory is already secured. Faith always sees the triumph from afar, just as our Lord saw victory from Calvary's cross; just as the prophets perceived that the Messiah was coming. May not every disciple know by the sweet assurance of faith that God has heard his prayer and that what we have asked is according to the Divine will? The blessed consciousness is the Divine language to the soul. It is the "yes" of the Holy Spirit before the visible gift is imparted. It is the heaven in the human heart to go to heaven in. Are not many who are advanced in life enjoying a full assurance that they will one day inhabit the celestial city? Have they not reached a height where spiritual gravitation goes the other way, and where they have reached a momentum so strong as to have no fear of ever turning back?

How beautiful it is to have such perfect confidence in our heavenly Father that we praise him for what he has promised but we have not yet received; that we can sing the song of triumph before the victory is known to others!

Thankfulness glorifies God and beautifies man, uniting both in holy communion. When Jesus broke bread at Emmaus and gave thanks they saw the luster of his divine presence shining about them. The giving of thanks makes the soul bright with heavenly radiance. When we break bread, should we not always render thanksgiving to God? He, the great Giver, is worthy of all honor, praise and blessing, and our gratitude gives delight to all who are gathered around the household table. We thank him for what he has been, is, and everlastingly will be. E. W. C.

The Vine and the Branches

THURSDAY, August 16. John 15 : 5. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." It is not strange that Jesus spoke of vines and branches as he led his disciples from the upper room across the moonlit hillslopes in full view of the vineyards. He always borrowed his figures of speech from the fresh fair forms of Nature that were nearest at hand. Unspeakably comforting is his parable of the relationship between himself and us. Nothing can be more intimate than the association of a vine and its branches. It is not merely association, but identity of nature and function. What is a branch's source of strength? Ask the vine. The vine has no access to nourishment which is not also tributary to the branch. Is the vine strong? Its strength flows into the branches. Is a branch wounded? The vine feels it.

The branches of a vine have their limitations, but so has the vine. The vine can not bear fruit—it bears branches, and they bear the fruit. Only thus does the vine vindicate its existence, justify its place in the sun, by the fruit that hangs from its branches. So the branches are as important as the vine. Neither is perfect without the other.

It is not blasphemy to say that we are as necessary to Christ as Christ is to us. Only through us can Christ mediate his grace and sweetness to the needy world. He says, "Without me ye can do nothing." In substance, again and again, he says, "Without you I can do nothing." A great preacher, who was also a poet, wrote a similar parable: "When the spring comes, the tree with its thousands upon thousands of leaves blossoms all over. The heart of the tree remembers every remotest tip of every farthest branch, and sends to it the message and the power of the new life. . . . Somewhat in that way we may think of God's remembrance of his children. He remembers them as the heart remembers the fingertips to which it sends the blood." C. C. A.

Sloth and Waste

FRIDAY, August 17. Prov. 18 : 9. "He that is slothful in his work is a brother to him that is a great waster." Thus the wise man concludes his sermon on unsocial vices with a censure of laziness. The person whom he has in mind is not entirely inactive. He works, but he has no heart to work. He is slow and dispirited. To him work is not a noble duty, but an unfortunate necessity; not a fine privilege, but a wearisome drudgery. The consequence is that he accomplishes nothing. Measured against the results that are justly expected from his labor, his accomplishments are really less than nothing—they represent a waste—a waste of time, of strength, of materials. His work is virtually thrown away. Rightly, therefore, the person who is slack at his trade is assigned close kinship with the prodigal, who delights in squandering his goods, and instead of producing something useful destroys the useful things which others have produced by their honest and painstaking labor. Society is in no wise benefited by having such men as its members. Their bad example discourages the industrious workmen. They are a danger to the peace and prosperity of the community, for idleness and shiftlessness lead to criminal actions, and ultimately the honest part of society is taxed either to support the slothful man by charity or to confine him for his misdeeds. Every way sloth leads to waste.

It is a great encouragement to Christians that every sin and vice is shown in its true character in the Bible, and that sinners are made to understand that their actions are not only disapproved by men but judged as utterly unworthy by a God of unerring justice. Mere censure of wrong, 'tis true, cannot bring about a reformation of the wrongdoer. Only the Gospel of Jesus can effect that inward change in men that causes them to hate vice and to follow after virtue. But what would this world come to if sins were no longer reproved? We have to thank the righteous God for maintaining in this wicked world his holy law, the constant remembrance to men of their duties and of the consequences of their failure to do their duty. W. H. T. D.

The Never-Failing Book

SATURDAY, August 18. Ps. 19 : 7. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." The Bible in the home is the moral text-book for the family. It should be read, studied and taught every day of our lives. The wonderful Word of God is threefold in its influence. It shows the evil of sin by both its precepts and its wicked characters. It reveals the Christ, the only Saviour of sinners, guiding the heart in its acceptance of him.

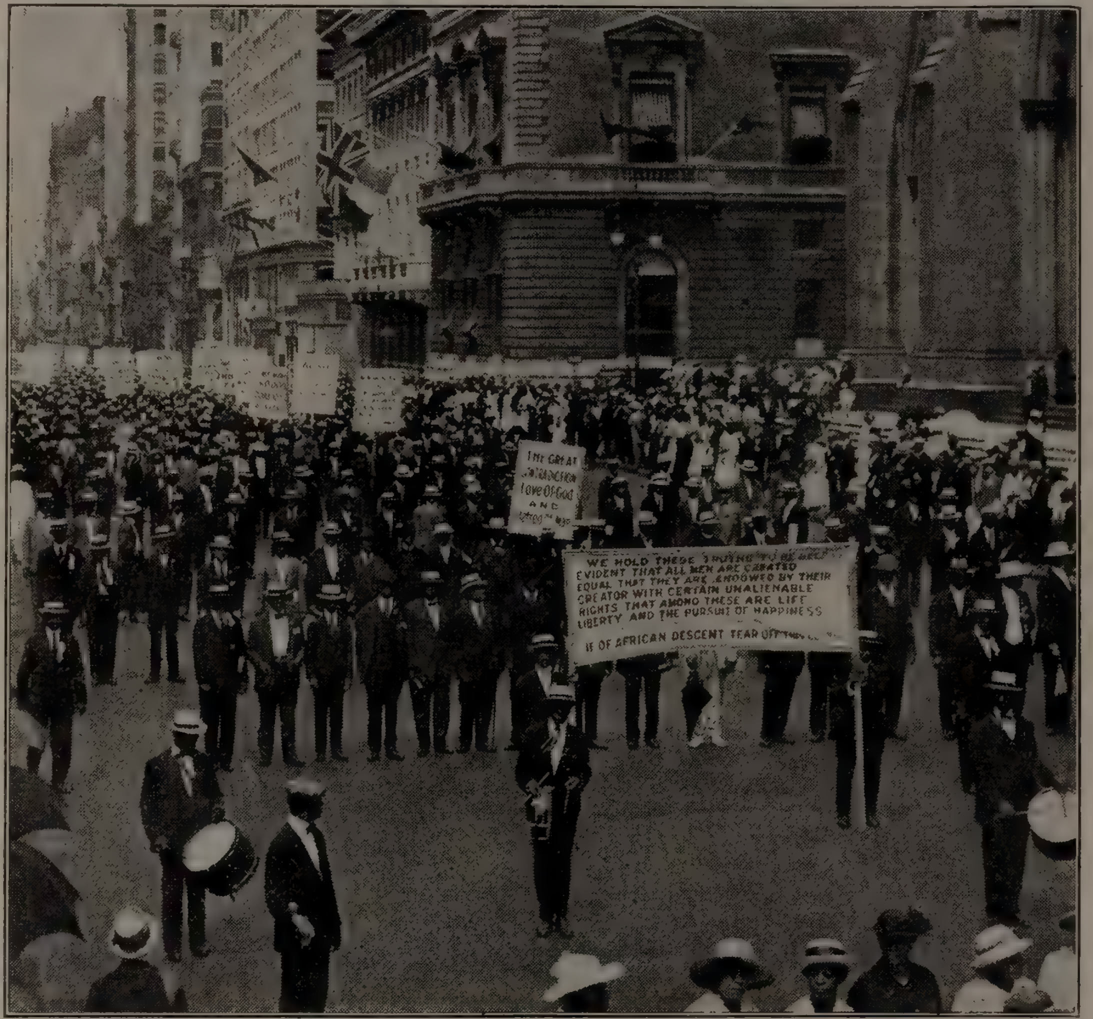
The Bible is literary, poetical, historical and educational. Abraham Lincoln had only three books in his early manhood: the Bible, Æsop's Fables and Weems's History of the United States. The Bible was the great Book that gave our martyred President his simple, tender, beautiful literary style, both for speaking and writing. The Fables gave him his story illustrations, while the History made him familiar with the great characters and events of the nation. Leave the Bible out of his life and he might have been a moral wreck; at least, there would have been no Abraham Lincoln as the world sees him today.

Young man, the dust on your Bible may be the cause of your downfall—your failure in this life, as well as in the life to come. If you are not a lover of the Divine counsel, you will gradually drop out of the Sunday school, the church, the worship and service of the living God. You will become a stranger and foreigner when you should be a fellow citizen of the New Jerusalem on earth and of the capital city of the Celestials in the heavenly world. When you see this red light of warning, heed it; step off the track leading to ruin into the way of holiness, happiness and usefulness forever. E. W. C.

Love is heaven's best cosmetic—try it!

Perspiration opens the pores through which efficiency enters.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS



WE HOLD THESE TRUTHS TO BE SELF EVIDENT THAT ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL THAT THEY ARE ENDOWED BY THEIR CREATOR WITH CERTAIN UNALIENABLE RIGHTS THAT AMONG THESE ARE LIFE LIBERTY AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS

New York negroes protest injustice in silent parade

MARCHING to the beat of muffled drums, 8,000 negroes, men, women and children, marched down Fifth Avenue, New York City, on July 28, in a parade of "silent protest against acts of discrimination and oppression" inflicted upon them in this country. Banners voiced the sentiments of the silent marchers and shouted to the watching thousands the appeals of a race for justice and a man's chance. "Jim Crow" laws, disfranchisement, discrimination, segregation and lynching were especial grievances, and the East St. Louis race riots were not forgotten. One banner read, "We are Maligned as lazy and Murdered when we work." Another declared, "We march because the growing consciousness and solidarity of a race, coupled with sorrow and discrimination, have made us one."

STERN BUSINESS AHEAD. The New York World of July 25 carried a special dispatch from Washington in which it was declared that officers who had accompanied General Pershing to France, and who had been given every facility to see all that was to be seen along the western front from Switzerland to the sea, and had returned to Washington to make a report to the War and Navy and other interested departments, had admitted that they were astounded at the conditions, and declared that the German line on the western front "was virtually impregnable; that the Allies could not budge the line, unless they received tremendous assistance from the United States." They were reported to have declared also that there was no evidence whatever that the German empire was endangered because of internal dissensions or shortage of food, and that the Allied officers on the front had admitted freely that they could not break the the German line with their present forces. They added that Germany was temporarily at least in the ascendency in the air, and gave the number of troops on this front as 5,000,000 French and British troops who were facing approximately 3,000,000 Germans, with about 2,000,000 of Germany's 4,000,000 reserves held behind the lines. On the evening of the 25th, Secretary Baker issued a statement announcing the return of these officers, and declaring that they were unanimous in praise of the splendid morale of the Allied forces, and that, while they shared the general realization of the gravity of the war, they had returned without any pessimistic opinion but with a decided feeling of confidence as to its final outcome. The Secretary declared as lacking in truth the stories purporting to quote members of the party as saying that the German lines were "impregnable." It is generally recognized, however, that the German position on the western front is exceptionally strong, and many military men are said to agree that it will be necessary to turn the flank where it rests upon the sea in Flanders, although this operation, involving the cooperation of the navy and army, may be expected to be very costly. It was announced at the same time that the United States War Department had decided to increase the initial force abroad to 1,000,000 men, and to begin at once the training of two new armies of 500,000 men each.

FREEING THE PRESS. The Masses, one of the publications the mailing of which was held up by the Postmaster General under the Espionage Act, secured on July 25 a preliminary injunction restraining the Postmaster General from preventing its distribution through the mails. In granting the temporary injunction, the judge carefully outlined what constituted resistance to the government, and practically limited the operation of the law as far as newspapers are concerned to articles counseling forcible resistance, declaring as legal any criticism falling short of this mark, so long as such criticism did not wilfully misstate facts. This decision, if it results in a permanent injunction, will prevent the exclusion of any publication from the mails simply because the matter contained therein is distasteful to some officer of the government. It establishes a new bulwark of free speech, which is the citizen's greatest protection against exploitation, tyranny and bureaucratic self-sufficiency. The government appealed immediately to the United States Circuit Court, which issued a stay of proceedings. The case will probably be heard early in October.

Taking the Next Step

ANOTHER mountain height of prophetic vision is just ahead in which we will see, through Dr. Gray's eyes, the place of the church in the plan of redemption.

We hear much of prohibition these days, but there are varieties of prohibition. In one country of the Western Hemisphere a book is prohibited. Watch next-week's Christian Herald.

"The Road to Understanding" will be completed in the August 22 number. Next week it swings into the home stretch.

The work of Pastor Charles Wagner is dear to the hearts of many of the Christian Herald Family. Next week there will be a stirring message from this man who has done so much to point France toward the Prince of Peace.

Yes, still more pictures.

THE DECKS ARE CLEAR. President Wilson settled the ship controversy on July 24 by accepting the resignation of General Goethals, the manager of the Emergency Ship Corporation, and by requesting the resignation of Mr. Denman as chairman of the Shipping Board. He appointed in Mr. Denman's place Edward N. Hurley of Chicago, former chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, the appointment being immediately confirmed by the Senate; and he assigned to Mr. Goethals's place Rear Admiral Washington Lee Capps, former chief constructor in the navy. He also accepted the resignation of Captain John White, appointing to the place Bainbridge Colby of New York City. It was expected that with these appointments the period of discussion had ended and the period of construction had begun.

FOOD BILL IN CONFERENCE. An attempt failed to commit the House to the Senate amendment to the Food Bill which provided a joint commission of the two Houses to supervise war expenditure. The bill was sent to conference without instructions, the conferees being left free to compromise with the Senate. The President was reported as considering the committee amendment as an evidence of lack of confidence in the Executive Department. It was even reported that he would veto the bill unless this provision were eliminated. It was expected that the House conferees would fight for the retention of the bone dry provision of the House bill, and that they would oppose the joint committee on war expenditures.

WAR COSTS MONEY. Following the return of the officers whose report was referred to in the first item on this page, the War Department adopted a wider program than had previously been considered, which made necessary a revision of the financial estimates. Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury reported to the Senate Finance Committee, which was about to report the war revenue bill carrying taxes estimated to raise about $1,670,000,000 a year, that $5,000,000,000 more would be needed for immediate war uses. The committee withheld the report on the revenue bill pending a re-writing, to bring the income nearer to the estimates. It was intimated that the tax on excess profits would be greatly increased, and that further taxes would be levied upon consumers, while some further billions would necessarily be raised by the issuing of bonds.

PREMIER ANSWERS CHANCELLOR. Premier Lloyd George, addressing a patriotic demonstration on July 21 in London, characterized the recent speech of the German Chancellor as a mere sham, facing all ways. He declared he did not want the Germans to "harbor any delusions that they were going to put Great Britain out of this fight until liberty has been reestablished throughout the world." He declared that Great Britain could make peace with a free Germany, but never with a Germany dominated by autocracy. He declared also that the Germans were making the same mistake in underestimating America's efforts as they had made about Great Britain in the

Continued on page 847

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The outdoor school at a Detroit plant whose American employees act as teachers, serving as the leaven which is to convert a great alien mass into patriotic English-speaking American citizens

The NEIGHBORS' LEAGUE

A FEW months ago the United States Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, through its newly created Division of Immigrant Education, inaugurated a campaign which challenges the patriotism of every citizen. It is explained that "the immediate object of the campaign is to induce the 3,000,000 non-English-speaking immigrants to attend night schools and learn the common language of America. The ultimate object," as stated in the circular, "is a unified and intelligent American life and citizenship."

It is a campaign on behalf of adults. The children readily master our language and are easily Americanized in our public schools. But we have not only 3,000,000 non-English-speaking immigrants but also more than 12,000,000 adult, foreign-born whites, unable to read or write in any language and 9,000,000 whose reading is chiefly that of foreign language newspapers.

Frances A. Kellor, in "Straight America," 1916, says, "Many important communities, in such important industrial states as Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut, where the population is at least one-half immigrant, do not maintain any classes whatever where English can be learned." In New England alone sixty-four towns, each with more than 1,000 foreign born in the population, are reported as having no evening schools or other municipal provision for teaching our language. The same conditions prevail in many of our Central and Western states. In New York, educational provision for adult foreigners is notoriously inadequate.

The twenty or more circulars already issued by the Bureau of Education include practical suggestions on such topics as "How to Organize An Evening School for Immigrants," "How Chambers of Commerce Can Cooperate," "How Labor Unions Can Cooperate," "How Libraries Can Help," "How to Advertise Evening Schools," "How Sectarian Organizations Can Cooperate," etc.

Every man and woman who has caught the vision of life in terms of ministry must recognize in this movement an open door for patriotic Christian service.

The fundamental ideals of American democracy are Biblical ideals. The millions of illiterates among us have come chiefly from countries in which the Bible is not an open book. To many of them religion had been chiefly an accessory of the church; and the church had been so closely related to the state that in "leaving the old country" their farewell included both. Religiously they are adrift. The old customs, the familiar prohibitions and sanctions of the old life, were left on the other side of the sea. Neither through speech nor literature have they been able to interpret rightly the new life which surrounds them. They have not been reached by the ideal of religion as a vital, personal relation between the individual soul and God. Yet for that personal relation to God and to fellow-men their souls are groping more or less consciously through all the world-welter of today.

This campaign for teaching our language to the illiterate immigrants offers opportunity not only for personal helpfulness but for contribution to national character, efficiency, and life. In the great majority of cities and towns in which evening schools have been made a part of the public school system, such schools are held only from October to April, at most. Yet from April to October, with more daylight, with greater freedom in going and coming, is the more favorable time for many pupils.

The Neighbors' League exists to meet this opportunity. We have known men working twelve hours a day at hard manual labor to omit their evening meal regularly three evenings a week during two months for the sake of securing time for learning the language. We have known women, doing all the household work in a family consisting of husband and two or three or four little children, making excellent progress in learning English through two afternoon lessons a week. Thousands such as these and others who cannot attend regularly the public evening schools, even where such schools exist, await the coming of teachers to them.

In addition to cooperating in the general campaign to promote attendance at public evening schools and church classes, many will be able to teach some one non-English-speaking man or woman. The teaching which is inspired by Christian neighborliness should be better teaching than any other by as much as its incentive is higher.

It is the self-help, the self-adjustment, which will follow acquaintance with the language spoken around them which these people must have in order to become Americanized in any true sense. They must learn to read for themselves the teachings of Jesus on which true life must be built. In America as well as across the sea there is today such prevailing hunger for the "bread of life" as has not been known before.

The Neighbors' League stands for national benevolent service. Any one desiring to be a member may address Mary Clark Barnes, care of the Christian Herald, New York.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

DURING the week just passed, July 18–25, the Russian situation both in its political and military aspects has continued to be the most interesting and important feature of the war. These military and political aspects are so interwoven that it is difficult to understand the military events without some slight reference to the political. [The latter are treated on pages 831–32 of this issue.]

Almost immediately after Kerensky's assumption of the headship of the Russian government, he was given dictatorial powers; and today, as far as there is any constituted authority in Russia, it is concentrated in his person.

At the conclusion of last week, the Russian army in eastern Galicia occupied a position extending along a north and south line which began at Ozydow, on the railroad between Krasne and Brody. This line ran a little to the east of Zloczow to Buszcze, whence, after following the east bank of the Zlota Lipa for a distance, it turned slightly to the west and reached the Dniester River, flowing roughly east and west, and thence at right angles with the battle line at Mariampol. Here the battle line crossed the Dniester to its southern bank, which it then followed to the west to a point west of Halicz, where the Lomnica, flowing from the southwest, falls into the Dniester, from which point the line followed the eastern bank of that stream to the main chain of the Carpathians.

As will be remembered, the ground west of a north and south line running through Halizc to the Lomnica River had been gained by the Russians in the offensive which they had opened in the early days of July, and this offensive had been even pushed across the Lomnica, and Kalusz to the west of that stream had been taken by the Russian army. But, as chronicled last week, this capture was the highwater mark of the offensive, and even last week the ebbtide began to the extent that the Russians were driven out of Kalusz and back across the Lomnica. Then the ebbtide began to flow still more strongly. From Krasne, already mentioned, a line of railroad runs southeast through Zloczow to Tarnopol, a town of some 35,000 inhabitants, which is the metropolis of extreme eastern Galicia, and which was captured by the Russians in the autumn of 1914, and has since remained in their possession. On Saturday, July 21, the Austro-Germans began an offensive on a 20-mile front extending south from Zloczow to the railroad running east from Rohatyn to Trembowla. This offensive was

Continued on page 847

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

100 Per Cent. Service

THE strong plea for maximum service from every man and woman in whatever occupation, as a duty to the nation in time of war, is meeting with satisfactory response in every section of the country and every line of labor. Everywhere, an idler is a rarity and an industrial slacker is an outlaw.

It is a condition necessary in war, but no less desirable in peace. The same spirit for maximum service that will help the nation win the war will also, after the war is won, help tremendously in the advancements of peace. What is now an individual contribution to national strength will become in the contests of peace a powerful element in individual success.

In this general campaign for increased efficiency it is most important to remember that most careers are made or marred in the hours after supper. Among the burners of oil at the shrine of knowledge will be found about every man whose life has been rich in the joys of achievement.

Eight hours a day are sold to employers, and not many are shirking or slighting their tasks. They do the best they can—for the other man and for the nation. Eight hours are due to nature in rest and sleep. Every man has approximately eight hours a day in which to work for himself. Of this time how prodigious is the waste!

The eight hours a day which are a man's own time offer him his best opportunity for good fortune. People fail or drag along in incompetence because they are not in earnest about wanting to succeed. A determined spirit overcomes all the difficulties that may confront it.

Among a hundred or a thousand young men there are a few who really study their purposes and methods. They decide upon a line of action, and "hew to the line." They may miss a lot of "good times," but joy is evenly distributed throughout their lives. With minds set upon efficiency and success, they study for it, plan for it, work for it, fight for it, live for it, and get it!

Earnestness means success; indifference, failure. Earnestness studies the task and wins. Indifference lags and loses.

Thrift in Text-Books

AMERICA will be the first nation in the world to rewrite her text-books so that the children of the country will be taught thrift in the schoolroom.

This is the sweeping significance of the resolutions adopted by the National Council of Education at its recent meeting in Portland. They point out that on account of the war America must from now on eliminate waste of every character, that President Wilson's first message to the public after the beginning of war was on thrift, and that the best way to safeguard the economic future of the nation is through a better understanding of thrift, which can be made possible only through the schoolroom. At the coming meeting of the Council in Atlanta the school organization is expected to have before it a comprehensive plan for the practical study of thrift in all the schools of America.

Thrift is more than a principle; it is a habit. It cannot be inculcated any too early in life. It is properly one of the most important elements in practical education. It furnishes firm basis for right living in war or peace.

There is no more inflexible law of human nature than that one frugal habit begets another, and that frugal habits beget confidence and competence. We hear of great fortunes made in a moment. But that is not the common way. Ordinarily a fortune is built up like a stone wall, a stone at a time. The child who is permitted to neglect or decline to lay up the first stone will never make progress in financial masonry. Only the ones who learn to save small amounts will ever have much to save.

Real thrift means far more than mere saving. It means more character, more effort, more aspiration, more efficiency, more production, more opportunity, more achievement, more satisfaction and usefulness in life to self and others. Thrift cannot be taught too thoroughly, or too early.

The Challenge to Missions

HISTORY has shown that it is during times of international upheaval that the beginnings of great missionary enterprises are usually launched. While the Napoleonic wars were being fought in Europe and the whole continent seemed to be rending asunder, the missionary societies of Great Britain were organized and began a spiritual crusade, the results of which have been growing cumulatively all through the years. Our first American missionaries were sent abroad while the war of 1812 was in progress. Many still living will recall the fact that during the Civil War a number of new missionary boards came into being, and the old boards were rejuvenated and greatly enlarged their work.

The Foreign Missions Conference of North America, representing a number of denominations, has issued a timely challenge to the churches to greater activity in the mission fields. "This period of war," it says, "with all its exacting demands, may be a supreme opportunity for undertaking new and daring enterprises for Christ and the church. In the history of the church, widespread disorder, physical suffering and need have incited to greater devotion and sacrifice. We are also face to face with the startling fact that the work of more than 2,000 Teuton missionaries has become disrupted and is in danger of dissolution, whereby some 700,000 followers of Christ in pagan lands may be left as sheep without a shepherd. This throws an immediate and enormous responsibility upon the Christians of England and North America to conserve the devotion and sacrifice which these missionaries have given to building up Christian communities and institutions. England is heroically assuming a large share of the burden; we of America must not hold back."

In the changes now taking place, all the foreign mission fields are involved. Sweeping transformations have taken place or are now under way in Asia and Africa. China and Japan are demanding a substantial religious foundation. To meet this new situation with its great opportunities, the Conference calls upon the foreign missionary bodies of the United States to concentrate their forces for more effective work. These people of the far-off missionary fields are more accessible and more eager for Christian instruction than ever before. The effort should be made now, as such conditions cannot be expected to continue indefinitely. In these days, when the vast wealth of our great nation is being poured out like water and when billions of dollars are being appropriated for war and scores of millions for benevolence, it would be strange indeed if the Gospel campaign should be allowed to suffer for the lack of means. The hour is opportune. Our missionary boards should not ask half-heartedly, but with courage and assurance. God's people should respond as promptly and generously to the call of this spiritual campaign as to any other. The Lord's work must not suffer. The sacrifice for souls is the highest and noblest of all. This war has increased our missionary obligations in a greater measure than ever before, as it has shown the world's desperate need of the Gospel. Moreover, in the wars of governments and peoples all forecasts may prove premature; but in the warfare we undertake against the powers of sin and darkness, in obedience to the divine mandate, we have the assurance that the Lord is on our side. China, Japan, India, Mexico, South America, Africa, should each be the scene of a mighty spiritual drive in missions.

Letters from foreign missionaries to the Christian Herald show that what promises to become one of the greatest spiritual movements of modern times is already under way. The field is ripe, but what will it avail unless the workers are there and the means are ready for the harvesting? A missionary in India writes: "Send us teachers. Send us workers! . . . I cannot get away from these calls. If we could only man this field as it should be manned, thousands more could be saved."

"I can hear strange voices calling
  Through the silent Indian air;
See, the citadels are falling.
  Up, my comrades! Up and dare!
Cease from love of gain and pleasure,
  Cease from love of rest and ease;
Heaven above's your sacred treasure,
  Hark! the 'going in the trees.'
See the heights that loom before you!
  See, in front, the Morning Star!
All the powers in heaven pour you
  Victory from their urns afar."

Soul-Music

THE natural world is illustrative of the spiritual. Our Lord, explaining the mystery of the new birth, said: "The wind bloweth where it will; thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit." In both the Hebrew and Greek languages the same word is used for "wind" and "spirit." The secret of the sweet breath of heavenly comfort, coming like a cooling breeze on the brow, can only be known by the individual believer. The movement of the atmosphere is a good illustration of the coming of the divine Spirit. Except fire, it is the most spiritual of material substances. It is ethereal, invisible, mysterious; we cannot see it, handle it or weigh it. So God's Spirit, a celestial breeze, when all the windows of the soul are opened, brings the breath of life and peace to man. Sometimes it is a gentle zephyr, communing with the mind; again, it is the full diapason of jubilant melody, enrapturing the heart. And then, it is like a mighty rushing wind of pentecostal power.

It is said that between some of the towers of old castles in Europe, a network of wires was stretched which every wind that blew awakened into minor or major melodies, filling the air with delightful tones. Homer D. Martin, an American artist, with this fact in mind, painted a picture of tall, slender poplars, standing on the shores of a beautiful lake, where the trees are mirrored, entitled, "The Harp of the Winds." The gentle breezes, softly stealing through the waving branches, discoursed the most delicious music. Jesus used this truth in nature to illustrate the movement of the divine wind of the Spirit upon the harp of the soul, whispering heavenly symphonies and harmonies through the inmost recesses of the mind.

Though we may not be able to solve the mystery of the wind, to tell how its fingers play upon the harp of nature, we know of its delightful reality, and it is enough for us to be aware that, when Jesus comes into the soul, the melody is like the angelic choirs who sang when he came into the world.

A friend, who was the recipient of the present of an Æolian harp, tried to bring out the music with her own playing, but it was unresponsive. She then placed the harp in an open window, where the gentle breezes, trembling over the wires, brought out the low, sweet notes which thrilled her with delight. Put your soul-harp where the breath of God can breathe upon it, and all the faculties of the mind will tremble with joy, as though angels were making music in your being.

The Earth a Power-House

"SCIENCE," said Emerson, "surpasses the old miracles of mythology." And certainly if we regard some of the scientific triumphs of the present generation, we shall be disposed to go far beyond Huxley's axiom that "science is nothing but trained and organized common sense." One of the most interesting of recent scientific discoveries is reported by the United States consul in Florence, Italy. He tells of an attempt that is now being made to utilize volcanic heat and power to light Italian cities and to warm the dwellings. Investigation by a practical-minded observer showed long ago that the steam issuing from earth-cracks in a volcanic section of Tuscany was heavily charged with boracic acid. He determined to establish a plant for the purpose of extracting the acid, and later workers have made some interesting discoveries. It was found that the escaping steam from these fissures could be piped from a point far beneath the earth's surface, at a pressure and temperature sufficient to secure a steam current providing 16,000 volts of electricity. If this plan worked out satisfactorily, the steam and electrical power could both be utilized for towns within a convenient radius.

To harness the subterranean forces of nature is not a new proposition. There are localities in Idaho where the flow of water from the hot springs has been piped to considerable distances and applied to various uses. The fields of Tuscany are probably far enough from active volcanoes to make the experiment comparatively safe; but the whole peninsula and its surroundings are more or less volcanic. Italy has three great volcanoes, Stromboli: on an island near the Straits, Etna, in Sicily, and Vesuvius, overlooking Naples; and it is possible that the subterranean ramifications may be such as to afford wide opportunities for experiment.

Science knows the sea-bottom and the upper air, but the heart of the earth is yet unexplored. Who knows whether it will not yet give us, from its unlimited hidden stores of power and heat, what is needed for the material progress of the world, supplanting gradually the conventional fuels and yielding far better service?

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Dies, But Saves Children

ON the broad expanse of Eleventh Avenue, New York, at dusk the other evening, a number of children were playing, when William Weaving, driver of a heavy truck, stopped at the trough at the corner of Twenty-second Street. When the horses had finished drinking a child danced out from the sidewalk waving a white handkerchief a few inches from their eyes. They reared and galloped off before the driver could take his seat. They headed directly toward the little folks playing in the center of the street. The children, stunned by fright, stood motionless. A slim young man sprang out of a group near the corner. He was William Jones, twenty-eight, a laborer of West Twenty-sixth Street. He saw the horses were running away, with the reins dangling loose. He had half the width of the Avenue to run before he could overcome the galloping animals. Then he had only one instant in which to grab for them, before their course would carry them to where the children were playing. He jumped, missed the reins, pawed a moment at their heads, and they swerved off and away from the terror-stricken boys and girls. But Bill Jones fell, not grasping anything in his hands, and the heavy horses thundered over him, and then the truck wheels caught him, and when Patrolman Termiallo called an ambulance from the New York Hospital, the doctor said Bill had died instantly. The game in the street stopped, the children went home, awed and silent, and there was crying over the dead young man. The children are alive because Bill Jones died to save. Who was Bill Jones? Simply a laboring man among the millions of the big city. That is honorable enough; but he was more—a hero of the highest type. Let the kings take off their crowns and place them on the heads of such. It was only because Bill Jones was killed by accident that he got a stickful of notice in the paper. But God took special notice of him, for he had the spirit of the Christ, who died that others might live. What a lesson of heroism for us all! This is the thought: "Because he hath laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." (I John 3 : 16.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Houston Ship Canal

IN the naval preparation for the war and for coast defense our government is putting torpedo-boat destroyers near the ports. The destroyer Reid. has recently navigated the Houston Ship Canal. At an expense of approximately $5,000,000, the residents of Houston, Texas, assisted by the Federal government, have deepened Buffalo River, leading into the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of fifty miles, and have made Houston a seaport. The Houston Ship Canal was formally opened for commerce during the latter part of 1914, and despite the European War handled a commerce of $58,000,000 for the first twelve months. A bond issue of $3,000,000 has been voted by the taxpayers of Houston to further equip the port. It is proposed to add to the modern sheds and docks already in existence and to make the shipping facilities at this port second to none. A municipal belt railroad, built, operated and controlled by the city, was constructed and placed in operation during 1916–17. This belt connects all railroads entering the city with the waterside properties. Houston is a "free port." The facilities are owned by the people and operated solely for the benefit of the shipper. It is not proposed to make conditions such as to preclude private development, however. It is believed that public and private ownership can be coordinated and made to work for the general good. Several of the largest industrial concerns in the South own waterside properties on the Canal which leads through Bolivar Roads and Galveston Bay. The channel is fifty miles in length, with a minimum depth of twenty-five feet. Wharves built of concrete, fire- and rat-proof, are now completed, and others, including a huge cotton wharf, are in process of construction, making a total water frontage of wharves amounting to 2,227 feet. Houston, a city of nearly 100,000 inhabitants, is one of the best expressions of the progress of the new South in reaching out after its share of the commerce of the world. The people of Houston in opening their Bible will find two verses of special interest to them, which magnify man's mastery of the sea as well as God's handiwork. These are the verses: "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters, these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." (Ps. 107 : 23, 24.)

Porto Rico Votes Dry

AT a hotly contested election on July 16, the whole territory of Porto Rico voted for prohibition by a large majority. The day after the election, with only four unimportant towns missing, the report was 99,775 for prohibition and 61,295 against it. Fifty-one Minneapolites voted for the prohibition measure as compared with twenty-one against it. San Juan's vote was 5,117 for and 2,255 against. All other large cities were strongly on the dry side. Towns, counties, states and countries are going dry so rapidly that there is no surprise any more at a prohibition victory. The saloon is the greatest enemy of the common people, and they have come to realize that fact. And it appears now that whenever the people can get a good whack at it at the polls, they knock out the saloon. The nation is not going to listen with any patience to its apologists. Alaska is bone-dry, and now Porto Rico follows her example. The capital and a majority of the states have thundered "No!" to the liquor traffic, and nation-wide prohibition cannot be long delayed. These words of the Almighty prohibiting the idolatry of the heathen can be fittingly used with reference to our modern drink curse: "Neither shalt thou bring an abomination into thine house, lest thou be a cursed thing like it: but thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it; for it is a cursed thing." (Deut. 7 : 26.)

Glycerine Made from Sugar

THE Treasury Department at Washington on July 14 announced that a new process of manufacturing glycerine from sugar had been discovered in the internal revenue division laboratory. Under the secret process evolved, the cost of the substance will be reduced to slightly more than one-fourth of the present figure. Glycerine is at present manufactured almost entirely from fats, at a cost of 90 cents a pound, which is six times the cost of its production before the war. If this discovery shall prove successful, as there is every reason to believe, it will be of immense importance in the conservation of food energy. Fats and sweets as nutriment in food are here referred to: "Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared." (Neh. 8 : 10.)

Hatters Settle Judgment

AN agreement for a settlement of the judgment of $250,000 in the case of D. E. Loewe & Co. against members of the United Hatters of North America was announced the other day after a short conference between the lawyers and Union officers representing the litigants. The famous Danbury hatters' case had its inception in a boycott of the product of the Loewe factory after the firm refused to make its shop a closed one, at the time in 1902 when organized labor was trying to unionize all factories in Danbury. Union men in the Loewe plant were called out on July 25, 1903. A strike actually began on Aug. 20. The boycott followed, and action under the Sherman anti-trust law was begun that fall. The case twice went to the United States Supreme Court. The firm's judgment embraced triple damages under the law, which brought the total to approximately $250,000. Thus ends one of the most important cases in the history of American litigation. Men have a right to quit work in a body and peaceably persuade others to quit. But they have no right to intimidate or forcibly prevent others from taking their places; and they have no right to undertake to break up a business by a boycott. The capital and labor problem is to be settled by each using the Golden Rule. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matt. 7 : 12.)

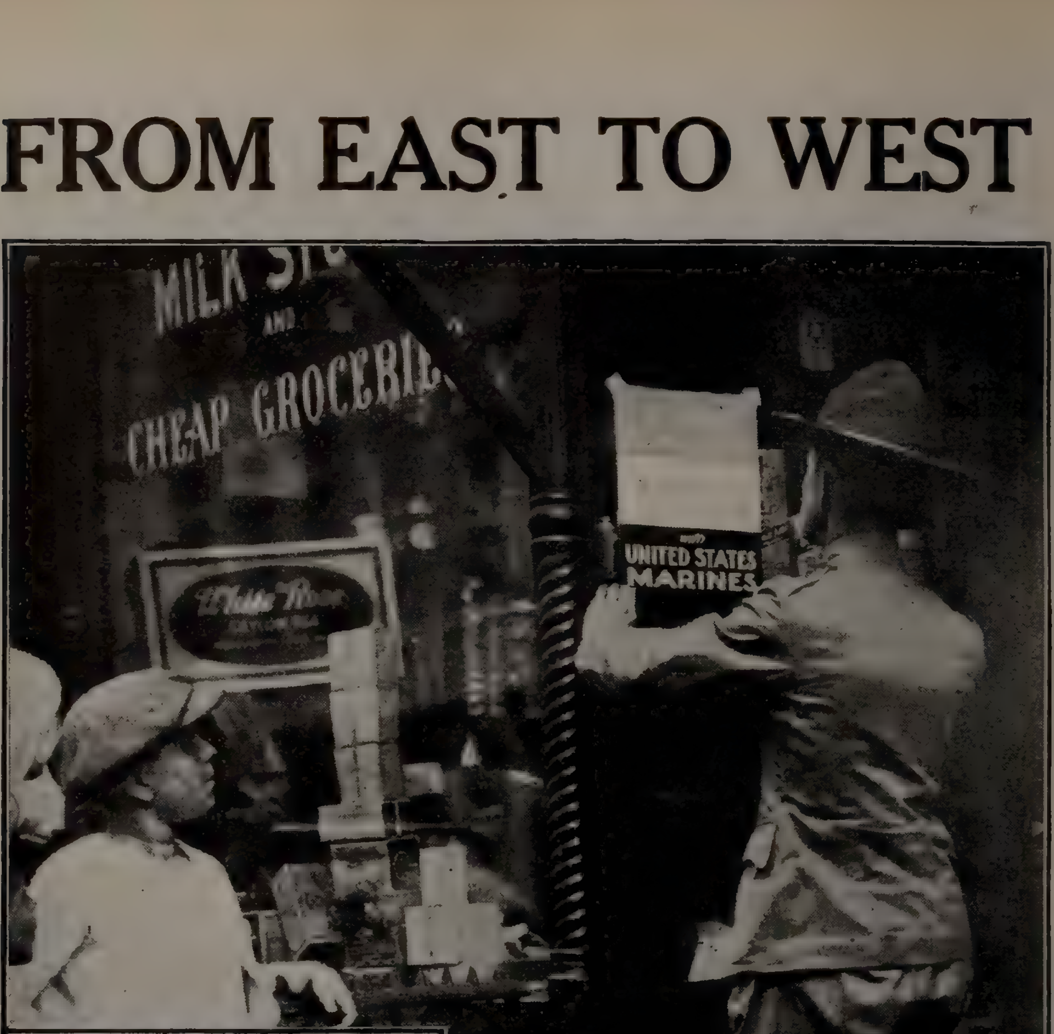
Rooster Mothers Chickens

WILLIAM RAIKE of Doylestown, Pa., has a big rooster weighing nine pounds, which is mothering a brood of chickens with all the art and tenderness of a mother hen. Some time ago Mr. Raike noticed the rooster's fondness for chicks and allowed him to take a few to raise. The rooster soon grew proud of his new possessions and fed, guarded and cared for his charges, with the ability of an experienced hen. Mr. Raike was quick to take advantage of this aptitude, and he soon increased the rooster's family, so that now the big bird is strutting around the yard with a brood of forty chicks. At feeding time he carefully pecks the food apart, and then feeds it to them; and not until they have eaten their fill does he attempt to partake of nourishment himself. Two of the chicks attempted to start a "scrap" one morning, but immediately Father Rooster was on the scene, and gently but firmly pushed his beak between the scrappers, and the fight was over. It is not in the arrangement of nature that the rooster should mother the brood; that is the business of the hen. Nor is it the order of providence for the father to assume the rôle of the mother of the family, or the mother to take the place of the father. Christ has this touching reference to the hen as the mother of the brood: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. (Matt. 23 : 37.)

Baby Adopted by Church

THE Presbyterian Church of Dobbs Ferry, New York, adopted a foundling left on the sexton's door-step. A black picture the baby deserted, a beautiful contrast the church adopting it. Whom the hand of man casts out, the heart of God in the church, takes in. "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." (Ps. 27 : 10.)

FROM EAST TO WEST THE CAMERA T



MILK ST
AND CHEAP GROCERIE
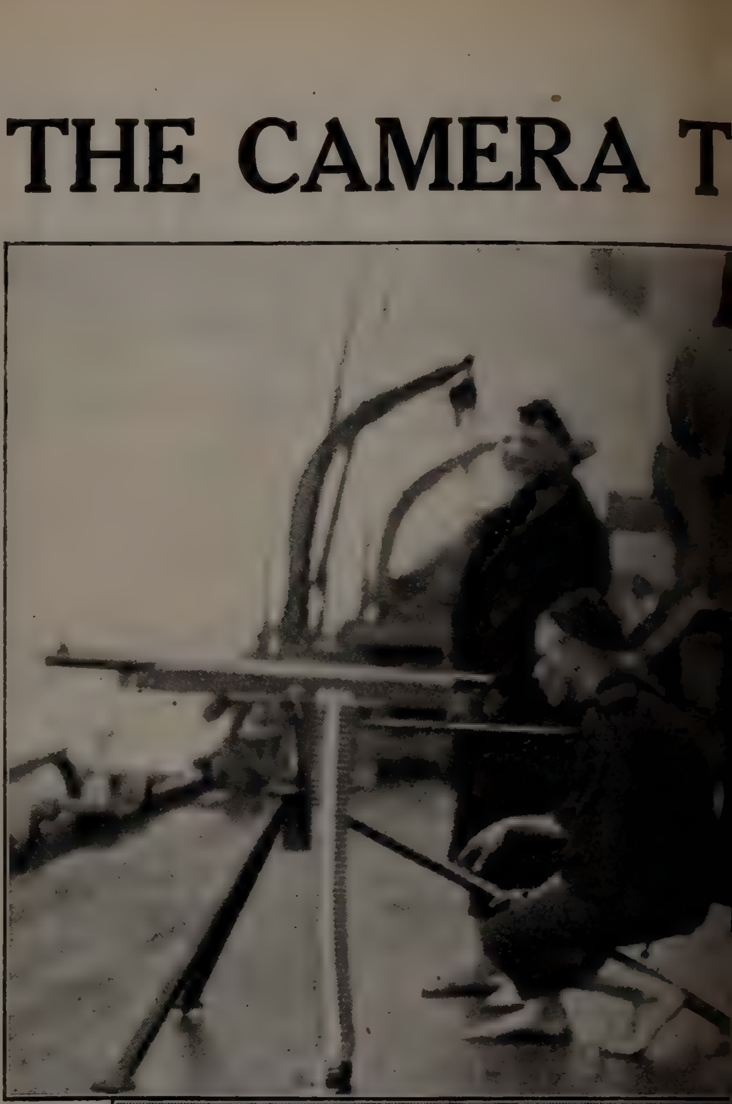
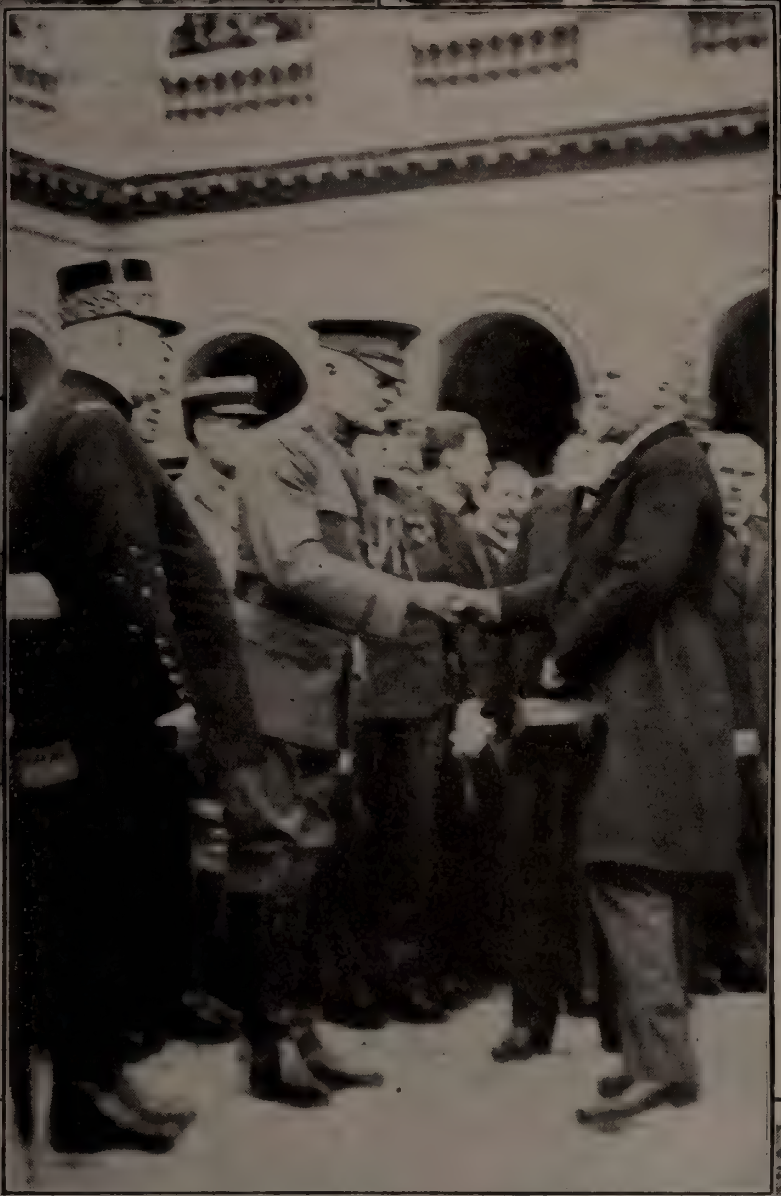
White Rose
UNITED STATES
MARINES



LS ITS STORY



DESCRIPTION OF THE PICTURES

No. 1. A member of the marine corps posting a red, white and blue placard that tells its own story

No. 2. King Vagiravudh of Siam, the latest monarch to enter the great war. Siam has declared herself at war with Germany
Photo copyright, Underwood & Underwood

No. 3. The Germans first used flame-throwers. The English and French improved this method of attack. This picture shows French soldiers flooding the battleground with fire. The range is about 300 yards
Photo, copyright, Kadel and Herbert

No. 4. Men of the American Fleet on the lookout for periscopes
Photo, copyright, Underwood & Underwood. Passed by U. S. Censor

No. 5. These high school girls and a few others put up five tons, 2,000 quarts, of apricots and berries

No. 6. These are strenuous days. Men must be fit. A prominent athlete is daily putting cabinet members and their assistants through their paces. Left to right, Attorney General Gregory, Secretary of Labor Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, F. A. Deland, Mr. Davis, Mr. Vogelsang, Mr. Koons

No. 7. President Poincaré shaking hands with General Pershing in the Court of the Hôtel des Invalides in Paris. Marshal Joffre at the left

No. 8. The first American troops in the streets of Paris

No. 9. American soldiers, who may go to France, learn a most important sentence
Photo, copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Donnez moi du pain
Give me some bread

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XXII

Actor and Audience

HELEN did not go with her daughter to Denby House the second morning. Betty insisted that she was quite capable of taking the short trip by herself, and Helen seemed nothing loath to remain at home. Helen never seemed, indeed, loath to remain at home these days—especially during daylight. In the evening, frequently, she went out for a little walk with Betty. Then was when she did her simple marketing. Then, too, was the only time she would go out without the heavy black veil. Betty, being away all day, and at home only after five o'clock, did not notice all these points at first. As time passed, however, she did wonder why her mother never would go out on Sunday. Still, Betty was too thoroughly absorbed in her own new experiences to pay much attention to anything else. Every morning at nine o'clock she left the house, eager for the day's work; and every afternoon, soon after five, she was back in the tiny home, answering her mother's hurried questions as to what had happened through the day.

"And you're so lovely and interested in every little thing!" she exclaimed to her mother one day.

"But I am interested, my dear, in every little thing," came the quick answer. And Betty, looking at her mother's flushed face and trembling lips, felt suddenly again the tightening at her throat—that her success or failure should mean so much to mother—dear mother who was trying so hard not to show how poor they were!

FOR perhaps a week Betty reported little change in the daily routine of her work. She wrote letters, read from books, magazines, or newspapers, worked on the card-index record of correspondence, and sorted papers, pamphlets, and circulars that had apparently been accumulating for weeks.

"But I'm getting along beautifully," she declared one day. "I've got Mrs. Gowing thawed so she actually says as many as three sentences to a course now. And you should see the beaming smile Benton gives me every morning!"

"And—Mr. Denby?" questioned her mother, with poorly concealed eagerness.

Betty lifted her brows and tossed her young head.

"Well, he's improving," she flashed mischievously. "He asked for the salt and the pepper, yesterday. And to-day he actually observed that he thought it looked like snow—at the table, I mean. Of course he speaks to me about my work through the day; but he doesn't say any more than is necessary. Truly, mother, dear, I'd never leave my happy home for him."

"Oh, Betty, how can you say—such dreadful things!"

Betty laughed again mischievously. "Don't worry, mumsey. He'll never ask me to do it! But, honestly, mother, I can't see any use in a man's being so stern and glum all the time."

"Does he really act so unhappy, then?"

At an unmistakable something in her mother's voice Betty looked up in surprise.

"Why, mother, that sounded exactly as if you were glad he was unhappy!" she exclaimed.

Helen, secretly dismayed and terrified, boldly flaunted the flag of courage.

"Did I? Oh, no," she laughed easily. "Still, I'm not so sure but I am a little glad: if he's unhappy, all the more chance for you to make yourself indispensable by helping him and making him happy. See?"

"Happy!" scoffed Betty with superb disdain; "why, the man doesn't know what the word means."

"But perhaps he has seen—a great deal of trouble, dear." The mother's eyes were gravely tender.

"Perhaps he has. But is that any reason for inflicting it on other people by reflection?" demanded Betty, with all of youth's intolerance for age and its incomprehensible attitudes.

"Oh, Betty, how can you!" protested the dismayed mother again.

But Betty, with a laugh and a spasmodic hug that ended in a playful little shake, retorted with all her old gay sauciness:

"Don't you worry, mumsey. I'm a perfect angel to that man." Then, wickedly, she added as she whisked off: "You see, I haven't yet had a chance to poke even one finger inside of one of those cabinets!"

IT was three days later that Betty, having put on her hat and coat at Denby House, had occasion to go back into the library to speak to her employer.

"Mr. Denby, shall I—" she began; then fell back in amazement. The man before her had leaped to his feet and started toward her, his face white like paper.

"What!—you!" he exclaimed. The next instant he stopped short, the blood rushing back to his face. "Oh, Miss Darling! I—er—I thought, for a moment, you were— What a fool!" With the last low muttered words he turned and sat down heavily.

Betty, to whom the whole amazing sentence was distinctly audible, lifted demure eyes to his face.

"I beg your pardon, you said—" The sentence came to a suggestive pause. Into Betty's demure eyes flashed an unmistakable twinkle.

The man stared, frowned, then flushed a deeper red as full comprehension came. He gave a grim laugh.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Darling. That epithet was meant for me—not you." He hesitated, his eyes still searching her face. "Strange—strange!" he muttered then; "but I wonder what made you suddenly look so much like— Take off your hat, please," he directed abruptly. "There!" he exclaimed triumphantly, as Betty pulled out the pins and lifted the hat from her head, "that explains it—your hat! Before, when I first saw you, your eyes reminded me of—of some one, and with your hat on the likeness is much more striking. For a moment I was actually fool enough to think—and I forgot she must be twice your age now, too," he finished under his breath.

Betty waited a silent minute at the door; then, apparently still unnoticed, she turned and left the room, pinning her hat on again in the hall.

TO her mother that afternoon she carried a jubilant countenance. "Well, mother, he's alive! I've found out that much," she announced merrily.

"He? Who?"

"Mr. Burke Denby, to be sure."

"Alive! Why, Betty, what do you mean?"

"He's alive—like folks," twinkled Betty. "He's got memory, a heart, and I think a sense of humor. I'm sure he did laugh a little over calling me a fool."

"A fool! Child, what have you done now?" moaned Betty's mother.

"Nothing, dear, nothing—but put on my hat," chuckled Betty irrepressibly. "Listen, and I'll tell you." And she drew a vivid picture of the scene in the library. "There, what did I tell you?" she demanded in conclusion. "Did I do anything but put on my hat?"

"Oh, but Betty, you mustn't, you can't—that is, you must—I mean, please be careful!" On Helen's face joy and terror were fighting a battle royal.

"Careful? Of course I'm careful," cried Betty. "Didn't I stand as still as a mouse while he was sitting there with his beetling brows bent in solemn thought? And then didn't I turn without a word and pussy-step out of the room when I saw that he had ceased to realize that there was such a being in the world as little I? Indeed, I did! And not till I got out of doors did I remember that I had gone into that library in the first place to ask a question. But I didn't go back. The question would keep—and that was more than I could promise of his temper, if I disturbed him then. So I came home. But I just can't wait now to get back. Only think how much more interesting things are going to be now!"

"Why, y-yes, I suppose so," breathed Helen, a little doubtfully.

"Oh, yes, I shall be watching always for him to come alive again. Besides, it's so romantic! It's a love-story, of course."

"Why, Betty, what an idea!" The mother's face flamed instantly scarlet.

"Why, of course it is, mother. If you could have seen his face you'd have known that no one but somebody he cared very much for could have brought that look to it. You see, he thought for a moment that I was she. Then he said, 'What a fool!' and sat down again. Next he just looked at me; and, mother, in his eyes there were just years and years of sorrow all rolled into that one minute."

"Were there—really?" The mother's face was turned quite away now.

"Yes. And don't you see? I'm not going to mind now ever what he says and does, nor how glum he is; for I know down inside, he's got a heart. And only think, I look like her!" finished Betty

But her mother did not answer. She did not seem to have heard, perhaps because her back was turned. She had crossed the room to the window. Betty, following her, put a loving arm about her shoulders.

"Oh, and, mother, look!" she exclaimed eagerly. "I was going to tell you. I discovered it last Sunday. You can see the Denby House from here. Did you know it? It's so near dark now, it isn't very clear, but there's a light in the library windows, and others up-stairs, too. See? Right through there at the left of that dark clump of trees, set in the middle of that open space. That's the lawn, and you can just make out the tall white pillars of the veranda. See?"

"Oh, yes, I see. Yes, so you can, can't you?"

Helen's voice was light and cheery, and carefully impersonal, carrying no hint of her inward tumult, for which she was devoutly thankful.

In spite of her high expectations, Betty came from Denby House the next afternoon with pouting lips.

"He's just exactly the same as ever, only more so, if anything," she complained to her mother. "He dictated his letters, then for an hour, I think, he just sat at his desk doing nothing, with his hand shielding his eyes. Twice, though, I caught him looking at me. But his eyes weren't kind and—and human, as they were yesterday. They were their usual little bits of cold steel. He went off then to his office at the Works (he said he was going there), and he never came home even to luncheon. I didn't have half work enough to do, and—and the cabinets were locked. I tried them. At four he came in, signed the letters, said good afternoon and stalked up-stairs. And that's the last I saw of him."

Nightly, after this, for a time, Betty gave forth what she called the "latest bulletin concerning the patient":

"No change."

"Sat up and took notice."

"Slight rise in temper."

"Dull and listless."

Such were her reports. Then came the day when she impressively announced that the patient showed really marked improvement. He asked her to pass not only the salt and the pepper, but the olives.

"And, indeed, when you come to think of it," she went on with mock gravity, "there's mighty little else he can ask me to pass, in the way of making voluntary conversation; for Benton and Sarah do everything almost, except lift the individual mouthfuls for our consumption."

"Oh, Betty, Betty!" protested her mother.

"Yes, yes, I know—that was dreadful, wasn't it, dearie?" laughed Betty contritely. "But you see I have to be so still and proper up there that home becomes a regular safety-valve; and you know safety-valves are necessary—absolutely necessary."

Helen, gazing with fond, meditative eyes at the girl's bright face, drew a tremulous sigh.

"Yes, I know, dear; but, you see, I'm so—afraid."

"You shouldn't be—not with a safety-valve," retorted Betty. "But, really," she added, turning back laughingly, "there is one funny thing: he never stays around now when there's any chance of his seeing me with my hat on again. I've noticed it. Every single night since that time he did see me a week ago, he's bade me his stiff good afternoon and gone up-stairs before I'm ready to leave."

"Betty, really?" cried Helen so eagerly that Betty wheeled and faced her with a mischievous laugh.

"Who's interested now in Mr. Burke Denby's love-story?" she challenged. But her mother, her hands to her ears, had fled.

IT was the very next afternoon that Betty came home so wildly excited that not for a full five minutes could her startled mother obtain anything like a lucid story of the day. Then it came.

"Yes, yes, I know, dear, of course you can't make anything out of what I say. But listen. I'll begin at the beginning. It was like this: This morning he had only a few letters for me. Then, in that tired voice he uses most of the time, he said: 'I think perhaps now, we might as well begin on the cataloguing. Everything else is pretty well caught up.' I jumped up and down and clapped my hands, and——"

"You did what?" demanded her mother aghast.

Betty's nose wrinkled in a saucy little grimace.

"Oh, I mean inside of me. Outside I just said, 'Yes, sir,' or 'Very well, Mr. Denby,' or something prim and proper like that.

"Well, then he showed me huge drawers full of notes and clippings in a perfectly hopeless mass of confusion, and he unlocked one of the cabinets and took out the dearest little squat Buddha with diamond eyes, and showed me a number on the base. 'There, Miss Darling,' he began again in that tired voice of his, 'some of these notes and clippings are numbered in pencil to correspond with numbers like these on the curios; but many of them are not numbered at all. Unfortunately, many of the curios, too, lack numbers. All you can do, of course, is to sort out the papers by number, separating into a single pile all those that bear no number. I shall have to help you about those. You won't, of course, know where they go. I may have trouble myself to identify some of them. Later, after the preliminary work is done, each object will be entered on a card, together with a condensed tabulation of when and where I obtained it, its age, history—anything, in short, that we can find pertaining to it. The thing to do first, however, is to go through these drawers and sort out their contents by number.'

"Having said this (still in that weary voice of his), he put back the little Buddha,—which my fingers were just tingling to get hold of,—waved his hand toward the drawers and papers, and marched out of the room. Then I set to work."

"But what did you do? How did you do it? What were those papers?"

"They were everything, mumsey: clippings from magazines and papers and sales catalogues of antiques, typewritten notes, and scrawls in long hand telling when and where and how Mr. Burke Denby or his father had found this or that thing. But what a mess they were in! And such a lot of them without the sign of a number!

"First, of course, I took a drawer and sorted the numbers into little piles on the big flat library table. Some of them had ten or a dozen, all one number. That work was very easy—only I did so want to read every last one of those notes and clippings! But of course I couldn't stop for that then. But I did read some of the unnumbered ones, and pretty quick I found one that I just knew referred to the little diamond-eyed Buddha Mr. Denby had taken out of the cabinet. I couldn't resist then. I just had to go and get it and find out. And I did—and it was; so I put them together on the library table.

"Then I noticed in the same cabinet a little old worn toby jug—a shepherd plaid—about the oldest and rarest there is, you know; and I knew I had three or four unnumbered notes on toby jugs—and, sure enough! three of them fitted this toby; and I put them together, with the jug on top, on the library table. Of course I was wild then to find some more. In the other cabinets that weren't unlocked, I could see, through the glass doors, a lot more things, and some of them, I was sure, fitted some of my unnumbered notes; but of course they didn't do me any good, as I couldn't get at them. One perfectly beautiful Oriental lacquered cabinet with diamond-paned doors was full of tablets, big and little, and I was crazy to get at those—I had a lot of notes about tablets. I did find in my cabinet, though, a little package of Chinese bank-notes, and I was sure I had something on those. And I had. I knew about them, anyway. I had seen some in London. These dated 'way back to the Tang dynasty—sixth century, you know—and were just as smooth! They're made of a kind of paper that crumples up like silk, but doesn't show creases. They had little rings printed on them of different sizes for different values, so that even the ignorant people couldn't be deceived, and——"

"Yes, yes, dear, but go on—go on," interrupted the eager-eyed mother, with a smile. "I want to know what happened here—not back in the sixth century!"

"Yes, yes, I know," breathed Betty; "but they were so interesting—those things were! Well, of course I put the bank-notes with their clippings on the table; then I began on another drawer. It got to be one o'clock very soon, and Mr. Denby came home to luncheon. I wish you could have seen his face when he entered the library and saw what I had done. His whole countenance lighted up. Why, he looked actually handsome!—and he's forty, if he's a day! And there wasn't a shred of tiredness in his voice.

"Then when he found the bank-notes and the Buddha and the toby jug with the unnumbered clippings belonging to them, he got almost as excited as I was. And when he saw how interested I was, he unlocked the other cabinets—and how we did talk, both at once! Anyhow, whenever I stopped to get my breath he was always talking; and I never could wait for him to finish, there was so much I wanted to ask.

"But I thought he—he never talked."

"He hasn't—before. But you see today he had such a lot to tell me about the things—how he came by them, and all that. And every single one of them has got a story. And he has such wonderful things! After luncheon he showed them to me—some of them: such marvelous bronzes and carved ivories and Babylonian tablets. He's got one with a real thumb-print on it—think of it, a thumb-print five thousand years old!

"Why, mother, he's traveled all over the world, and everywhere he's found something wonderful or beautiful to bring home. I couldn't begin to tell you, if I talked all night. And he seemed so pleased because I was interested, and because I could appreciate, to some extent, their value."

"I can—imagine it!" There was a little catch in Helen Denby's voice, but Betty did not notice it.

"Yes, and that makes me think," she went on blithely. "He said such a funny thing once. It was when I held in my hand the Babylonian tablet with the thumb-mark. I had just been saying how I wished the little tablet had the power to transport the holder of it back to a vision of the man who had made that thumb-print, when he looked at me so queerly, and muttered: 'Humph! they are more than potatoes to you, aren't they?' Potatoes, indeed! What do you suppose made him say that? Oh, and that is when he asked me, too, how I came to know so much about jades and ivories and Egyptian antiques."

A FOUR-LEAF CLOVER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

I FOUND a four-leaf clover in a city yard today,
A little four-leaf clover that perhaps had lost its way;
And I bent above it, smiling, and it sparkled up at me
Like a star of hope reflected in some gray and troubled sea.

Just a tiny four-leaf clover in a withered, sunbaked spot
Where the meager grass was faded, and the sandy soil was hot;
But it brought a message with it from a half-forgotten day,
That was filled with light and color, and is many years away!

YES, we found it there, a clover, in the grasses by the lane;
All the ground was damp and glowing from a perfumed summer rain;
And you said, "It's luck! I know it!" And you pulled it from its place,
While I watched the sunlight dancing with the laughter on your face.

Ah, the lane in languid August, when the asters blossomed blue,
When the earth seemed filled with music that was old and strangely new!
When your hand touched mine and clung there, and we hadn't much to say . . .
When we found a four-leaf clover. . . . It was many years away.

WHEN the summer's on the city, I can see the fields once more,
And the honeysuckle climbing all about the open door;
And perhaps for one brief heart-beat, I forget what life has taught,
And remember just the message that a four-leaf clover brought.

And I see you standing near me, and I feel your hand again,
And I hear the ghost of music in that lonely country lane;
For I found a four-leaf clover in a city yard today,
And it made me dream, a moment, of a summer far away!

"What did you tell him?"

At the startled half terror in her mother's voice Betty's eyes widened.

"Why, that I learned in London, of course, with you and Gladys and Miss Hughes, poking around old shops there—and everywhere else that we could find them, wherever we were.

"Well, we worked all the afternoon—together!—Mr. Denby and I did. What do you think of that?" resumed Betty, after a moment's pause. "And not once since this morning have I heard any tiredness in Mr. Burke Denby's voice, if you please."

"But how—how long is this going to take you?"

"Oh, ages and ages! It can't help it. Why, mother, there are such a lot of them, and such a whole lot about some of them. Others, that he doesn't know so much about, we're going to look up. He has lots of books on such things, and he's buying more all the time. Then all this stuff has got to be condensed and tabulated and put on cards and filed away. But I love it—every bit of it; and I'm so excited to think I've really begun it. And he's every whit as excited as I am, mother. Listen! He actually forgot all about running away tonight before I put on my hat. And I never thought of it till just as I was pinning it on. He had followed me out into the hall to tell me something about the old armor in the corner; then, all of a sudden, he stopped—off—short, just like that, and said, 'Good night, Miss Darling,' in his old stiff way. As he turned and went up-stairs I caught sight of his face. I knew then. It was the hat. I had reminded him again of—her. Oh, mother, if you could see those wonderful things! But may be sometime you will. I shouldn't wonder."

"Maybe sometime—I—will!" faltered the mother, growing a little white. "Why, Betty, what do you mean?"

"Why, I mean, maybe I can take you sometime—I'll ask Mr. Denby by and by, after we get things straightened out, if he won't let me bring you some day to see them."

"Oh, no, no, Betty, don't—please don't! I—I couldn't think of such a thing!"

Betty laughed merrily.

"Why, mumsey, you needn't look so frightened. They won't bite you. There aren't any of those things alive, dear!"

"No, of course not. But I'm—I'm sure I—I wouldn't be able to appreciate them at all."

"But in London you were trying to learn to be interested in such things," persisted Betty, still earnestly. "Don't you know?"

"Yes, I know. But I'm sure I wouldn't like to—to trouble Mr. Denby—here," stammered the mother, her face still very white.

CHAPTER XXIII

"The Plot Thickens"

IT was shortly before Christmas that Frank Gleason ran up to Dalton. He went first to see Burke Denby.

Burke greeted him with hearty cordiality.

"Hullo, Gleason! Good—you're just in time for dinner. But where's your bag? You aren't going back tonight!"

"No, but I am tomorrow morning, very early, so I left my grip at the hotel. I'll be delighted to stay to dinner, however,—if I get an invitation."

"An invitation! As if you needed an invitation for—anything, in this house," scoffed Denby. "All mine is thine, as you know very well."

"Thanks. I've half a mind to put you to the test—say with that pet thumb-marked tablet of yours," retorted the doctor, with a lift of his eyebrows. "However, we'll let it go at a dinner this time.—You're looking better, old man," he said some time later, as they sat at the table, his eyes critically bent on the other's face.

"I am better."

"Glad to hear it. How's business?"

"Very good—that is, it was good. I haven't been near the Works for a week."

"So? Not—sick?"

"Oh, no; busy." There was the briefest of pauses; then, with disconcerting abruptness, came the question: "Where'd you get that girl, Gleason?"

"G-girl?" The doctor wanted a minute to think. Incidentally he was trying to swallow his heart—he thought it must be his heart—that big lump in his throat.

"Miss Darling."

"Miss Darling! Oh!" The doctor waved his hand inconsequently. He still wanted time. He was still swallowing at that lump. "Why, she—she—I told you. She's the daughter of an old friend. Why, isn't she all right?" He feigned the deepest concern.

"All right!"

Voice and manner carried a message of satisfaction that was unmistakable. But the doctor chose to ignore it. The doctor felt himself now on sure ground. He summoned a still deeper concern to his countenance.

"Why, Denby, you don't mean she isn't all right? What's the trouble? Isn't she capable?—or don't you like her ways?"

"But I mean she is all right, man," retorted the other impatiently. "Why, Gleason, she's a wonder!"

GLEASON, within whom the Hallelujah Chorus had become such a shout of triumph that he half-expected to see Burke Denby cover his ears, managed to utter a cool—

"Really? Well, I'm glad, I'm sure."

"Well, she is. She's no ordinary girl." ("If Helen could but hear that!" exulted the doctor to himself.) "Why, what do you think? She can actually tell me some things about my own curios!"

"Then they are more than—er—potatoes to her? You know you said——"

"Yes, I know I did. But just hear this. In spite of her seeming intelligence and capability, I'd been dreading to open those cabinets and let her touch those things dad and I had spent so many dear years together gathering. But, of course, I knew that that was silly. One of my chief reasons for getting her was the cataloguing; and it was absurd not to set her at it. So one day, after everything else was done, I explained what I wanted, and told her to go ahead."

"Well, and—did she?" prompted the doctor, as the other paused.

"She did—exactly that. She went ahead—'way ahead of what I'd told her to do. Why, when I got home, I was amazed to see what she'd done. But best of all was her interest and her enthusiasm, and the fact that she knew and appreciated what they were. You see that's one of the things I'd been dreading—her ignorance—her indifference; but I dreaded more that she might gush and say, 'Oh, how pretty!' And I knew if she did I'd—I'd want to knock her down."

"So glad—she didn't!" murmured the doctor.

His host laughed shamefacedly.

"Oh, yes, I know. That was rather a strong statement. But you see I felt strongly. And then to find— But, Gleason, she really is a wonder."

"Is she agreeable—personally?"

"Yes, very. She's pleasant and cheerful, bright, and very much of a lady. She's capable, and has uncommon good sense. Her voice, too, is excellent for reading. In short, she is, as I told you, a wonder; and I'm more than indebted to you for finding her. Let's see, you say you do know her family?"

Gleason got suddenly to his feet.

"Yes, oh, yes. Good family, too! Now I'm sorry to eat and run, as the children say, but I'll have to, Burke, tonight. One or two other little matters I'll have to attend to before I sleep. But, as I said a few minutes ago, I'm glad to see you in better spirits. Keep on with the good work."

The doctor seemed nervous, and anxious to get away; and in another minute the great outer door had closed behind him.

"Hm-m! Wonder what's his rush," puzzled Burke Denby, left standing in the hall.

There was a slight frown on his face. But in another minute it was gone: he had remembered suddenly that he had promised Miss Darling that he would try to find certain obscure data regarding the tablet they had been at work upon that afternoon.

With an eager lifting of his head Burke Denby turned and strode into the library.

To be continued

The Call of the Harvest Field

By EARLE W. GAGE

The last chapter in the story of Harvest. Separating the sheaves into pyramids of straw and sacks of golden grain

"HEY there, boys! lookin' for work?" asks the big wheat farmer.

After staring at each other and at the man seeking to hire men, one finally asks: "What d'you pay?"

"Easy work; three dollars a day."

They tell him bluntly that the farmers are paying $3.50 and $4 and board. Off they go, and he feels as if the workingman does get the best of it sometimes.

But the big harvest must be garnered in, and city jobs can wait. Each spring the employer can have his pick of men, but in the harvest season it is different; conditions are reversed. The big wheat farmer then must go up and down the street and ask each likely man he meets if he is not looking for a job.

Grain farming, such as they do on the prairies, means short spells of intense work with long intervals of comparative ease. While the grain is growing, there is nothing to do but watch it grow, but when it is ripe for the reaper, it must be harvested in a rush or the loss will be great.

No other country produces so much wheat as the United States, which harvests approximately one-fifth of all the wheat grown in the world. Within more recent years Canada, especially in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, has taken a commanding position among the wheat-producing nations, its relatively small population (less than that of New York State) leaving much of its crop for export. Europe produces about two and one-half times as much wheat as North America under normal conditions; but as her wheat-growing area includes the black plain of Central and Southern Russia—the plain that slopes to the North and Baltic Seas—and the plains of Hungary and Lombardy, it is easy to understand that even though these might not be included in the war zone, lack of men to till the soil retards production. Russia, Austria-Hungary and the countries along the lower Danube produce more wheat than they consume, normally, but they cannot produce sufficient wheat for home use this year. France usually grows about enough for home use, but for three years has depended upon the United States, Canada and Argentina for her bread. Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Italy and Greece are all forced to depend now upon outside countries for sufficient bread. They usually import 500,000,000 bushels, but these nations, outside of Germany, will need fully 600,000,000 bushels this year to keep them from starvation. Great Britain does not produce one-fourth enough wheat to supply bread for her people, and buys approximately 200,000,000 bushels annually, being the world's greatest wheat-buyer.

SOMEWHERE the wheat harvest is always in progress. Asia produces about four-fifths as much as North America, the greater part being grown in India and Asiatic Russia. Northern China is a wheat-producer, as also is Southern Siberia, which may hereafter become one of the world's greatest wheat-growing regions. South America produces less than one-fourth as much wheat as North America. This is raised largely in Argentina, but, her population being small, this southern country has the reputation of being the world's greatest surplus export-crop country. Australia and Africa together produce about as much as South America. Everywhere the cry is for wheat; for bread.

American farmers, for the third season, are surely destined to feed the world's children during the months to come. One hundred and fifty thousand men, from every state of the Union, have invaded the Western sections and are engaged in harvesting the greatest cereal crop. Two Kansas counties this year alone have more than 200,000 acres planted to wheat, and this area will no doubt produce more wheat than most of the other wheat-growing states. Reno, the banner wheat county of the state, has 289,000 acres of wheat, and if the yield comes up to expectations will produce at least 6,000,000 bushels, while Barton county, with an acreage of 270,000 acres and a condition of 70 per cent. is expected to produce close to the Reno yield. The whole ten counties, with an average condition of 75 per cent. on 2,400,000 acres, are expected to produce not less than 45,000,000 bushels. With conditions better this year, as regards weather, prices, demand, the Kansas yield, estimated at 150,000,000 bushels, should put nearly $300,000,000 in Kansas wheat-growers' pockets.

Kansas has 50,000 men in her wheat-fields, harvesting the gigantic crop. Oklahoma has some 18,000 men gathering in the golden grain. Harvest hands this year receive from $3 to $4 per day. Thus the wheat farmer puts a large sum of money into immediate circulation through the pay roll.

Getting the men to handle the grain crop is the greatest set-back to a larger acreage of wheat. Although the Department of Agriculture and state colleges may cry for more wheat acreages, the wheat farmer is too shrewd to seed more land than he knows to a certainty he will be able to harvest properly.

HARVESTING wheat is strenuous work. For days before the harvesting season begins, men and teams are kept busy erecting cook-houses and sleeping quarters. These are located in the midst of the vast wheat-fields. Wells are dug, sheds built and stalls put up for the horses. Bedding and kitchen utensils are taken to the camps last of all. Everything is on the field when the harvest starts. The men rise at 3 A.M., and work in shifts until 9 P.M., with short intervals for food and rest. On some big wheat ranches, searchlights have been placed on the head of the large tractors, and a night shift is run that the crop may be harvested while the weather is favorable.

Wheat farmers expect this year to receive a record-breaking price for grain fresh from the threshers. A minimum price of $1.75 to $2 will probably be fixed by the Food Bill pending in Congress, as this was written. The 150,000 men who garner the grain receive about $2,000,000 per week. At $2 per bushel, the price received by the American wheat growers would cover a path sixteen feet wide from New York to San Francisco, over the Lincoln Highway.

The wheat crop of this season, if used entirely for bread, would make 190,000,000 barrels of flour, estimating five bushels to a barrel. A barrel of flour will ordinarily make 200 loaves of bread. This gives a grand total of 38,000,000,000 loaves, or about 3,800 loaves for every man, woman and child of the United States. Calculating that there are 20,000,000 men involved in the great conflict, this would supply each with a loaf of bread per day, and give them "the staff of life" for a period of five years.

The big wheat farmers, the ultimate consumers, the millions of Europe, are demanding that the tricky and dangerous manipulator of the wheat pit be out of business. American farmers have toiled for ten months in their endeavor to feed the world; and they demand that their representatives at Washington make the American market safe for the honest distribution of their great crop.

Little Things the Soldier Needs

By Chaplain John T. Axton, U. S. A.

THE first few weeks in camp are the hardest for the young soldier. It is a violent wrench from home life and normal social ties to camp conditions with tent life, radical change of food, limited bathing facilities, stiff drill and rigid discipline. To tide the lad over this period, home folks may help very materially. His mail is the big thing for the boy in camp. Each day send him some greeting or some love token, be it ever so small. The problem of laundry is sometimes difficult, so send him a handkerchief today and a pair of good socks tomorrow, and repeat it now and then. He has a sweet tooth—satisfy it with candy and chocolate in small lots only, each piece wrapped in oiled paper that it may not reach him a sticky mess. He will, after a little experience, take pure chocolate with him on a hike, and it seems to keep a man up better than other food.

His tent is not lighted, so if you can provide a small pocket flashlight, you may solve the problem of his finding things at night. Because bathing facilities are sometimes very limited, a good big bath sponge is appreciated, and you may follow it with a towel now and then. Pennies for postage may be few, so send him a book of stamps, also an occasional magazine or illustrated weekly. Bound books are not usually desired in camp. He needs the ordinary toilet articles, but do not send talcum powder, tooth paste, tooth brush, shaving cream, razor blades and soap all on the same day—an item each mail is better. Put a small package of court plaster in your next letter. He will enjoy a Testament or prayer book, and especially one of the khaki-bound ones that may be secured from the American Bible Society. If he did not take his watch and you can afford a cheap wrist watch, send it. A pair of heavy tan laces to replace the worn ones that permit his shoes to be sloppy would be welcomed; also a tiny, good, hand shaving-mirror. Half a dozen blanket safety pins and as many ordinary large safety pins are among the handiest things in the kit. Two or three small washrags—a sort that can be easily cleaned and dried quickly.

Parcel post solves the problem of sending small packages safely. Address plainly and fully with the number of his regiment and the letter of his company, troop or battery, and delivery is almost absolutely assured, though he moves from place to place very often. Insure the more valuable articles; it costs but a trifle.

Do not put all in one bundle, but string it out over days and weeks, so that he will learn to listen most eagerly for "mail call." It is pathetic to note the number of men in the service to whom the arrival of mail means nothing. Carelessness or wrongdoing separates them from home and loved ones, so they get no mail. Don't let the soldier man from your home circle be of this group.

To Find the Land of Dreams Come True

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

ONCE, on a sultry August day, three men started off on a search for the land of Dreams Come True. And one was a Great Scientist, and one was a Very Rich Man, and one was a Poet, although many folk called him a fool.

They started out together rather happily, for it was a sunny day—though sultry—and the wayside was beautiful.

"It's my first vacation in years," said the Great Scientist, as he walked briskly, a bit ahead of the others—"my first in years, and I mean to make the most of it!"

The Very Rich Man was rather stout. He puffed when he walked, but his warm face was beaming with the novelty of the adventure.

"This," he observed, "is the first time since I made my pile that I've been out on a trip without my limmersine and my val-et. Seems funny," he gurgled, "to be walkin'."

The Poet (whom many folk called a fool) was staring quite wistfully off into the distance.

"I wonder what it will be like," he murmured—"this land that we are seeking."

The Great Scientist stopped to tie his shoelace.

"There will be wonderful machines in the Land of Dreams Come True," he said quite positively.

The Very Rich Man stopped to mop his perspiring face with a linen handkerchief.

"And money," he added.

The Poet paused, too, but out of politeness. For his young face was cool, and his young feet were clad in leather sandals.

"And humming-birds and butterflies," he suggested gently, "and flowers!"

The Great Scientist and the Very Rich Man looked at him strangely. And then they remembered that many people called him a fool, and they laughed.

THE three men walked together all morning, and at noontime they came to a beautiful little stream bordered by splendid old forest trees.

"Let us rest here," said the Great Scientist, who was tired. He had tied his shoelaces many times in the course of the morning. "Let us rest here."

"It is a beautiful spot," said the Poet as he flung himself down on the bank of the stream, "and this primeval forest—"

But the Very Rich Man interrupted. Despite his weariness he was still standing.

"Fellers," he said, "do you see those trees? They're worth real money. If I could buy this land cheap, I could clean up. I know . . . most of my pile was made in lumber."

The Poet and the Great Scientist stared at each other, The Great Scientist raised his brows, but the Poet only looked honestly sorry.

"Then," said the Poet, after a moment, "you'll not be going with us to find the Land of Dreams Come True? For we are going on."

"No, I'll not," answered the Very Rich Man. And one could tell by his tone how he had become so very rich. "There's work to be done here." And he turned his back on them and strode off into the forest that bordered on the stream. Just before he entered its shade, he paused.

"A year from today," he called back through hands raised, trumpetlike, to his mouth, "I'll meet you at the point we started from, an' we'll talk things over."

THE Great Scientist and the Poet, whom many folk called a fool, went on together. And presently they came to a hilltop, and, looking down, they saw a cloud of smoke in the valley below them. The Great Scientist sniffed:

"Smells like powder!" he observed.

"Indeed!" said the Poet rather uninterestedly. "I believe there's going to be a beautiful sunset later," he added.

The Great Scientist wasn't listening. He was bending over, hailing a boy who worked with a plow on the edge of the valley.

"What's doing?" he called to the boy.

"Oh," the boy called back, "nothing much. A little war, that's all."

The Great Scientist straightened up. And then he bent down again, for his shoelace had become untied.

"If I were down in that valley," he excitedly told the Poet, "I'd show them how to make war. I'd use my knowledge to make guns for them, and blinding chemicals for them, and poisonous gases. I'd show them how to make war!"

"But," interposed the Poet (whom many people called a fool), "we're hunting for the Land of Dreams Come True."

Already the Great Scientist was scrambling down the hillside. "Bother dreams!" he called over his shoulder.

"How about a year from today?" shouted the Poet after him.

The Great Scientist turned and waved his hand. Looking at his face, alive with interest, one could tell why he was a great scientist.

"At the starting point!" he shouted back. And, passing the boy at the plow, he plunged into the smoke-cloud.

AND so the Poet (whom many people called a fool) was left alone to find the Land of Dreams Come True. And he trudged on until, at the sunset time of day, he came to a cottage that stood jauntily by the wayside—a trim little cottage with white curtains at the window and a flowering bush beside the door. And, as he paused to drink in the fragrance of the blossoms, the door swung open and a Girl stood in its shadow, looking at him.

The Poet bowed low before her. And as he bowed, he saw that she wasn't pretty. But he also noticed that understanding dwelt in her eyes—and laughter on her lips.

"I am," he told her, "a Poet. And I am seeking the Land of Dreams Come True. But the lovely flowers, growing beside your home, were so very fragrant that I had to stop a moment. What is their name? No flowers so beautiful grow in the land that I come from."

The Girl smiled, a slow sweet smile.

"I call them 'First Love'," she told him softly. And, breaking a spray of them, she pinned it to his coat.

THE Poet (whom some folk called a fool) stayed on in the cottage with the white window curtains and the flowering bush by the door. And he watched many sunsets and wrote many verses, and at twilight he and the Girl always sat hand in hand and talked happily of many things.

And a year from that first sultry August morning they journeyed back to the starting-point.

"How glad I'll be to see the boys!" exclaimed the Poet as they took the road together.

They walked in silence, for a time, and then at last they came to a hilltop. But they started back from the road in horror; for a dense cloud of smoke was swirling up from the valley below—a cloud pierced by angry tongues of flame—and, in the sky, many buzzards circled low. And as the poet, creeping fearfully to the edge of the hill, peered down the valley, he could see no living person except a hollow-eyed woman with a pallid baby in her arms, who stood at the edge of the valley near a rusty plow.

"What's the trouble down there?" he called. And she answered sadly:

"It is a great war!"

And the Poet (whom some people called a fool) took the Girl's hand firmly in his, and they hurried away with averted eyes.

At noontime the sound of water came to their ears, and for the first time since they had left the hilltop the Poet smiled.

"My dear," he said, "we are coming to a very beautiful place!"

And then they rounded a curve in the road and came upon a great sawmill set upon the banks of a stream which had been dammed and built up with cement until it was but a pitiful swollen phantom of its former self. And of the trees that had grown splendidly on the banks, only broken stumps remained.

"Where," questioned the Girl, "is the beautiful spot, dear?"

"We'd best hurry on," evaded the Poet.

And then, finally, they came to the starting-place from which, on that other August day, the three men had started out on their quest. But though the Poet strained his eyes, he could see neither the Great Scientist nor the Very Rich Man.

"They aren't here," he said, rather piteously, to the Girl. But she patted his hand and—

"They'll be along presently," she told him.

WHEN the night settled down, the Poet and the Girl were still alone. And at last the Poet (whom some people called a fool) spoke:

"Well, I guess they're not coming," he said somberly. And he put his hand upon her shoulders. And the Girl, with a sudden break in her voice, flung her arms around his neck.

"Perhaps," she half sobbed, "they have found the Land of Dreams Come True."

Then, in the gathering darkness, the Poet looked down at the sweet white blur that her face made. And, from where it was pinned to his tunic, he could smell the flower of First Love—as pure and fresh as if it had been broken but an hour before. And he thought of the busy sawmill, and of the smoke-filled valley, and of the rusty plow. And then, quite suddenly, he thought of the jaunty little cottage with the white window curtains and the fragrant bush growing at the door. And all at once his laugh rang out through the dark.

"My dear," he said very happily, "we'd best be getting—home!"

Ah, well, many folk thought he was a fool.

Samantha Meditates

By JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

MIS' Simon Bobbett invited me to her house yesterday, her sister-in-law, Mary Wilson, from Canada, is there, and she said she wished I would come over and try to chirk her up. I'm called a excellent chirker.

Sez I, "What duz she need chirkin' fur?"

"Oh, Mary is wadin' through a sea of trouble, almost drownded in it."

"Well," sez I, "sorrow is a black sea; I've waded out in it time and agin."

"So have I," sez she, "but not so fer as Mary. You nor I, sister Allen, don't know anything about trouble compared to her."

"Tell me about it, Sister Bobbett," sez I; and she went on:

"You know Mary wuz married late in life, and only had one child, a boy that she almost worshiped; jest seemed to live fer him. His pa died and she spent most all of her property educatin' John and startin' him in bizness. He wuz very successful and prosperous, and then he turned right round and seemed to jest live fer his ma; carried her in his arms, as you may say. His constant love and care shone on her like the sunshine. But bein' what he wuz, bound to foller duty, he thought that he must help the Fatherland, so he went, takin' all her sunshine with him, but black night come with the news:

"Died in the trenches!"

She lay on Death's doorstep fer a spell, but gradually come back because she had to, to a cold gray empty world. After a while her folks thought a change of seen might help her, so she come to the States with a sister. But her first visit wuz to the grave of the sweet young girl John wuz engaged to.

She wuz a delicate young creeter, and when the news come she didn't try to bear up under it. She jest sunk down like a posy in a black frost, and that wuz another sharp arrer fer poor Mary's heart, fer she loved her next to John.

WELL, when Mis' Bobbett finished her story, I sez, "I guess the best chirker on earth can't do much in this case, it will take a higher Power, but I'll come and see her and be glad to. I can jest take holt of her hand and say from my heart, 'I'm sorry fer you,' and that's about all anybody could say."

Well, if I ever see a pitiful sight it wuz Mary Bobbett Wilson. She seemed like a pale ghost walkin' about in a strange world, wan and white as a white piller-case, and her eyes two dark wells of anguish.

And as I looked at her I seemed to see the endless procession of wives, mothers, sweethearts, sisters, marchin' along with the army, with no flare of bugles and drums, only a dead march soundin' from dead lips, goin' with 'em where they go.

And for what? Millions of promisin' young lives wiped out, the world made bankrupt of manly strength and vigor, and for what? The treasuries of the world drained, poverty, pestilence and crime stalkin' through the land like grim shadows, and for what? Mebby the ones that brought on the war can tell. Mebby fer some land now soaked with blood. Mebby fer ambition, wantin' to rule the world, made by 'em now a world of poverty, invalids and cripples. Mebby fer revenge, fer some wrong that bein' done couldn't be helped. Heaven knows what; I don't know, nor Josiah don't, nor the common people don't who walk blindly to their death, because they are told to.

WELL, that night after I got home worn out with tryin' to chirk where chirkin' wuz as impossible as to call daylight out of midnight darkness, I gin vent to my feelin's about war, and my forebodin's now that our country had been drawed into it, in spite of all the wise and prayerful efforts to prevent it. And Josiah, bein' cross on account of a corn he wuz raisin' on his big toe, sez in a very disagreeable axent:

"It hain't wimmen's spear to argy about war."

And I sez: "I know what a woman's spear is in war, Josiah Allen. It is to furnish breathin' and livin' food for the cannons and the deadly bombs to tear to pieces, and say nothin'. To have her heart go to the front and down into the trenches with them that she loves better than her own life. To suffer and die with 'em, only hern is a livin' death, ten times worse to bear. To endure and

Continued on page 849

Finding the Book of the Law

International Sunday School Lesson for August 19. II Chron. 34 : 14-33

The Power of a Book

By Rev. George D. Allison

ONE of the Bible's memorable dates is 621 B.C., the year when Hilkiah the high priest found the Book of the Law in the temple and sent it to King Josiah. The fact is, the finding of this book was the most remarkable feature of Josiah's restoration of the temple. The mere replacement of walls and altars is overshadowed by the unearthing of a new set of ideas enshrined in a book, which in some dark hour had been consigned to a place of safety in the desecrated building.

What the Book Was

From early times it has been clearly seen that this book was all or part of Deuteronomy. The terror of King Josiah when he read it was caused by the awful consequences which the 28th chapter recites as certain to follow if the statutes are not kept—and Josiah knew well they had not been kept. Unlike the earlier statements of the law, Deuteronomy forbids the use of any other shrines but the one central sanctuary at Jerusalem. Therefore it embodied the denunciation of the "high places" which had been such a snare to the people and such an abomination to the prophets.

Humanitarian Emphasis in Deuteronomy

For us today, the Book of Deuteronomy is especially interesting because the principle of kindness in dealing with men and even with animals is stronger there than in any other ancient work. Let us note a few illustrations of this humane emphasis:

Deut. 24 : 14. "Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren or of thy strangers [immigrants]."

Deut. 24 : 10. "When thou dost lend thy neighbor any manner of loan, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge. Thou shalt stand without."

Deut. 25 : 4. "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the grain." (See also 22 : 1–4.)

Here also is found the first law of sanctuary for a fugitive slave.

Deut. 23 : 15. "Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a slave that is escaped from his master unto thee."

The Power of the Bible

"When the king had heard the words of the law he rent his clothes." The direct and forceful style of Deuteronomy has often been noted. When the Bible deals with sin and penalty, its statements are clear-cut. Times without number, its message has come home to human souls with all the directness of Nathan's charge to David, "Thou art the man!" The Bible finds us. It has power to convict us of sin. Just to put it into the hands of a sincere reader is to guarantee results.

That is one of the reasons why we ought to give at least a Testament to every American soldier. In the monotony of camp life, thousands will read it carefully for the first time. Suggest a few key chapters on the fly-leaf.

I have just heard from one of our boys who loaned a Testament to his chum. This lad, living in Nova Scotia, had never before read any of the Bible! He is fascinated by it.

"It Is I!"

Josiah felt that the warnings of Deuteronomy struck him and his people. Dr. Thomas Hall told of Arabs around a campfire, who listened to the story of the Fall of Man and smote their breasts, saying, "It is I." They saw its symbolic application to every life. Just so a youth in a New York prison felt. The chaplain saw him weeping after a reading of the 15th of Luke, and asked him what was the trouble. The convict, a mere boy, said, "I am the prodigal son."

Let us not become lost in a mere literary reading of the Bible. It is primarily a book for conduct and life. As we read, let us be more like Josiah, and see wherein it applies to us and to our people.

A Royal Bible Interpreter

The king lost no time in bemoaning the disobedience of the nation. He began to work for repentance and obedience. So he summoned the leaders and the people, and himself set the example by reading to them the entire book. This was a great deal more effective than ordering them to read it. Example counts for more than precept. It had affected him profoundly, and there is no doubt he read it impressively.

What would you think of a superintendent or teacher who should get up and read on Sunday to his classes what he had not even once read thoughtfully himself during the week?

One of the crying needs of our Christianity is for a new stress upon effective reading of the Word of God. Let the pastor, the teacher or the parent once make a practice of Josiah's method, and read with appreciation and feeling some great chapter until it grips his mind and fires his soul, and then the church or class or home will be transformed.

Such halting, stumbling, unintelligent reading of the World's Masterpiece to God's children! Won't you help to feed the people, lest there be a famine, not of bread, but of hearing the words of the Lord?

The Covenant of Josiah

Josiah believed in striking while the iron was hot. The reading had its impress, and the multitude seethed with emotion. Therefore the king publicly pledged himself anew to God, and announced his desire to walk after the Lord and to keep his commandments with all his heart and with all his soul. So he called for those who would take this covenant to stand, and the great gathering responded to a man. Thus the nation was transformed into a league of Bible students and worshipers of Jehovah.

In the early days of the Protestant Reformation, many nations were transformed by a public knowledge of the Bible. Luther's efforts made all Germany familiar with the gospel of justification by faith. The reigns of Elizabeth and James made all England "the people of a book, and that book the Bible."

Is it not possible that the remarkable success of the organized men's classes in our day may yet lead to a great revival of Bible religion? Should we not work to enlist our church members anew as Bible readers and students?

In Finding the Church, They Found the Bible

It was when Josiah turned his thoughts to the temple that the epoch-making book was found. Do you suppose we could ever look for a revival of Bible study and Christian consecration apart from the organized church? Josiah's experience is the natural order. We must build up the church and make it an attractive force in men's lives, before large numbers will find the Great Book.

Coming to church through friendship, through the insistence of neighbors and acquaintances, through the social appeal of organized Bible classes, thousands have been enlisted in real vital study during the past decade. Men and women will come to "the school that does things." The day of the staid, formal church is past. People are attracted by the church that is a real force in the community.

See to it that, when they come to the church, they come to the open Bible.

The Value of Godly Example

Few kings have thought they had anything in common with Sunday school superintendents. Yet Josiah played such a rôle. The result? "All his days they departed not from following Jehovah the God of their fathers." There is personal influence for you—"all his days they departed not." One man holding many steadfast.

We need to have our able and prominent men set such an example as this ancient king. Why should they not stand up before their fellow men and pass on to them the messages that grip them? But they will have to read and pray before they will qualify. Then we shall have done with the sad spectacle of Bible schools begging for leaders, and classes of boys being broken up and scattered for lack of men teachers.

Bringing the Bible to the People

The Bible itself is the supreme thing, and books about it are secondary. But how greatly they help! The chief reason for this is that even the American Revised Version is not yet the ideal Bible in doing justice, by proper arrangement and spacing, to the great thoughts there enshrined.

Fruit in Life

The Bible is not to be read for its own sake, but "that ye may bear much fruit." Its purpose is ethical and social, and not simply to entertain or instruct. One might know all the dates of Kings and Chronicles, and be able to list the miracles and parables of Jesus, without being a real Christian. We are not to teach the Bible but to teach the religion of the Bible. We are not to assimilate Bible information merely, but to catch the spirit that dwells there, the Holy Spirit himself, full of present power.

Josiah, the Bible-restorer, lives in history as one who walked in the ways of Jehovah and turned not aside to the right hand or the left. The Bible bore its fruit in his life. Is it not true, now as then, that the men of the Book are the men of God?

"Thy Word have I laid up in my heart,
That I might not sin against thee.

Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet,
And a light unto my path."

A Working Outline for the Teacher

1. THE LOST BOOK.
   (1) Name two kings who were partly responsible for its loss.
   (2) It was lost in the temple!
   There are churches where it is neglected today.
   Is it a lost book in our homes, if unread, unstudied?
   (3) It was lost because its teachings were disobeyed.
   Can evildoers ever love and cherish the Bible?

II. FINDING THE BOOK.
   (1) Who started the rebuilding of the temple which resulted in finding the Book?
   (2) Who found the Book and what did he do with it?
   (3) Who read it to the king? (Verse 34 : 18.)
   Do you think he was a good reader? Why?
   (4) Who declared the Book to be true? (Verse 22.)

III. USING THE BOOK.
   (1) The Bible Conference and its members (verse 29).
   Why were elders, priests, Levites, all people, called?
   (2) The agreement to obey the precepts of the Book.
   Who led? Who joined him?
   (3) Cleaning up the neighborhood (verse 33).
   (4) The result of using the Book.
   "They departed not from following the Lord."

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary, World's Sunday School Association

How to Build Up Attendance

IT is now a good time to plan for a better and a bigger school this fall.

1. Look After Present Customers. See that every absentee is reached by a personal call by the teacher or visiting committee. Many scholars slip permanently out because no one appears to miss them. Many good-sized schools could be built out of absentees who are not looked after.

2. Advertise your Goods. Aim for the last man, woman and child in your community as a customer, and through attractive cards, novel signs and good articles in the local press, let the community know you are in business. Play up your classes, your departments, your men's and women's classes, your exercises and special events as the commercial men to their business, and go after new buyers by the enthusiasm and plan of your weekly write-up.

3. Canvass the Community. One big commercial house in this country starts new salesmen presenting the goods from door to door, and tests out the men in this plan of breaking up new soil. Appoint captains for districts and make them responsible for a house-to-house canvass, leaving behind a word of invitation and a card setting out the school attractions.

4. Get the Pastor Going. There are some pastors who feel superior to Sunday school obligations, but the real pastor of the whole flock will be willing to do several things:

(a) Be at the Sunday school session every Sunday unless a funeral intervenes.

(b) Preach a sermon occasionally to stir up parents and the community on the value of the Sunday school.

(c) He will carry about with him on his calls cards of enrolment, and will aim to get every member of the household as a member of some class in the Sunday school or of Home Department or Cradle Roll.

5. Speed Up the School Program. Introduce some new features. Children and young people abhor ruts. Get the classes doing something for the program. Put up some new mottoes and decorations. Find out individual talent and use it. Make much of special day features. Shorten the prayers. Smile often. Put snap into the notices. Magnify your job.

6. Use Stimulating Devices. One school used a large picture of a hive and placed a paper bee on it for each new boy brought. The new girls were represented by paper butterflies attached to a paper branch. (Dennison Co., New York.) Classes have chosen an auto cut from advertisements, and these autos move from city to city in a journey to a goal according to points gained from perfect attendance, and new scholars brought in by the class. Departments in the school can be divided into teams with captains, and the team records for new scholars noted from Sunday to Sunday, on the plan of the team financial campaigns.

Scholars can be organized under the Army plan: "Soldiers of the Cross," with a motto, "The World for Christ." Each scholar makes progress from private (for one new scholar), to corporal (two), sergeant (three), and so on, to general (fifteen). A roll of the scholars should be kept indicating opposite the name the rank attained. Cradle Roll and Home Department members can count as new scholars.

A 100 or 200 or 500 "New Scholars Club" can be organized, and the scholars can be given credit week by week in some public form.

Where the school is reasonably small, a doubling contest can be started, and a limit of time set; every scholar wearing a "win one" badge until a new scholar has been secured, and then exchanged for a "Brought One" button. (These buttons can be purchased of Sunday school supply houses.)

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 836

beginning. He said he had sought in the Chancellor's speech for something from which he could hope for the ending of the bloody struggle, but declared: "I see in it a sham independence for Belgium, a sham democracy for Germany, a sham peace for Europe, and I say that Europe has not sacrificed millions of her gallant sons to set up a sanctuary for sham." He declared it a dexterous speech, and said: "There are phrases for those who earnestly desire peace, but there are phrases which the military powers of Germany will understand, phrases about making the frontiers of Germany secure. That is the phrase which annexed Alsace-Lorraine; that's the phrase which has drenched Europe in blood since 1914; that's the phrase, if they dare, that will annex Belgium and Courland; that's the phrase which will once more precipitate Europe into a welter of blood within a generation unless that phrase is wiped out by the statesmanship of Europe." On July 29 Count Czernin in an interview deplored Premier Lloyd George's criticisms on the Chancellor's speech, and declared that the Vienna government was ready to accept an honorable peace, and that if the Entente did not wish to enter negotiations on the basis clearly indicated (the Reichstag resolutions), Austria and her allies would fight to the last extremity. Secretary Lansing on the same day, in an address at Sackett's Harbor, New York, said: "There is but one way to restore peace to the world, and that is by overcoming the physical might of German imperialism by force of arms." And on the same day in Zürich, Switzerland, Mathias Erzberger, whose epoch-making address resulted in the emperor's promise of reform, said to an interviewer: "If I could talk with Lloyd George or Mr. Balfour, we could in a few hours reach an understanding which would enable official peace negotiations to commence."

No Time to Talk Peace. Both at Westminster and at Washington on July 26 Peace found herself lacking friends. A resolution introduced into the House of Commons, which sought to have that body concur in the principles expressed in the recent resolution of the German Reichstag, was defeated by a vote of 148–19. Former Premier Asquith declared the Reichstag impotent, but said that peace had become the supreme interest of mankind, subject to the all-important condition that it should be a peace which did not defeat the purpose for which the great nations entered and have continued the war, and that it did not turn to waste the immeasurable loss and suffering they had shared. He welcomed the news of the conference called by the Russian government, and declared that nothing but good could come of the plain restatement of the Allies' aims. In the United States Senate, Senator Borah of Idaho sounded a call to Americans to awaken to the stern reality that America faced a great peril. He declared that the United States was not waging war for the erection of democracies in Europe, but for the preservation of its own democracy, and that this is no longer a European war, but an American war, and he urged that America view the struggle as if the enemy were at her own gates.

And Not a Shillalah in the Hall! The Irish Convention, which it is hoped will be able to unite all factions of Irishmen upon a plan for the government of the Emerald Isle within the British empire, met in Dublin on July 25. While the Sinn Fein was not directly represented, a number of delegates from the county councils were said to be in sympathy with it and unofficially its representatives. At the first meeting of the convention Sir Horace Plunkett was unanimously elected chairman and the first day's session was notably harmonious. After appointing a Preliminary Procedure Committee the Convention adjourned on July 26 until August 8.

Fragments of News. A. C. Bedford, president of the Standard Oil Company, on July 22 issued a statement showing that the nation was using 35,000,000 more barrels of oil a year that it was producing. In order to insure for the United States government the oil necessary for a successful prosecution of the war, he urged users of automobiles to eliminate unnecessary riding.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 837

launched with large forces of fresh troops, which, after a vigorous artillery preparation, hurled themselves upon the Russian trenches. After a couple of days of rather fierce fighting, in which the Russians lost very heavily, the first, second and third Russian lines of defense were taken, and the Russians were obliged to fall back on the whole front to the Strypa River, which runs north and south and parallel to the Zlota Lipa, already mentioned. The Russian troops, disorganized by disloyalty and pressed hard by the Austro-Germans, were driven back in great disorder another twelve miles to the western bank of the Sereth River and the railroad from Zloczow to Tarnopol. The town of Tarnopol, most of the railroad from Rohatyn to Trembowla, together with many thousand prisoners, much artillery and vast quantities of munitions and stores of all kinds, fell into the hands of the Austro-Germans.

WHILE these events were taking place on the Galician front, the Russians attempted a diversion between Krevo and Vilna, north of the Pinsk marshes in the district of Tsary-Bogetshi. Here, on July 23, they made an impetuous attack on the German lines opposite them on a five-mile front, and were successful in penetrating the German positions at points to a depth of two miles. But on the Germans bringing up reinforcements, the Russians wavered and the same conditions as on the Galician front developed, though on a smaller scale. The upshot was that the German counter-attack reoccupied the lost positions and even gained some ground at the expense of the Russians.

The British government has asked Parliament for a new grant of $3,250,000,000, the largest since the outbreak of the war. At the time of making this demand, Mr. Bonar Law stated that the average British expenditure was $34,000,000 daily now, and that he expected it to reach $40,000,000 daily before the end of the year.

The Canadian House has passed the conscription bill, which now goes to the Senate, where its passage is expected with less difficulty than in the Lower House.

On July 22, the Asiatic kindgom of Siam declared war on the Central Empires and their allies.

THE Austro-Italian front was calmer on its whole length during the week than for a long time previously.

On the western front an artillery battle in southern Belgium has been steadily developing in intensity and has now reached a ferocity rarely seen heretofore in the war. It is probable that this extraordinary artillery activity is by way of preparation for an offensive of some importance on this front, presumably by the British.

On the French portion of the front there was some fast and furious fighting. On the Chemin des Dames (Ladies' Road) there was hardly a moment during the week, in which, at some point, French and Germans were not in hand-to-hand collision. Some positions changed hands half a dozen times. Most military observers seem to consider that the object of these intensive German attacks along the Chemin des Dames is not so much to gain ground as to weaken the French. Farther to the east, in Champagne, between Rheims and Auberive, and on the west front of Verdun, there was also considerable intensive fighting of the same general character and with the same objects.

Outside of the submarine activities, which continue with the normal results of the past few months, there is nothing to chronicle on the sea.

Why I Lunch
On Puffed Wheat

A man on a train, a few weeks ago, told a friend why he lunched on Puffed Wheat. And we think that thousands of men will endorse his view.

He said, "It saves me a dull hour or two. The brain doesn't work well when the stomach is taxed.

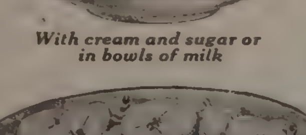
"Here is whole-grain food, steam exploded. Every food cell is blasted. I know Prof. Anderson, the man who invented it. And he tells me that no other process makes whole-grain so easy to digest.

"Then it makes a great dish. Note these bubble-like grains, thin and toasted. They taste like puffed nuts. And a dish makes a meal, because they are clear nutrition."

For the same reason—though he did not say it—they make an ideal night dish for a child.

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice
and Corn Puffs
Each 15c Except in Far West

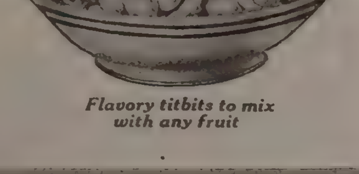
These are the premier breakfast delights—puffed to eight times normal size. Serve with cream and sugar or mixed with fruit.



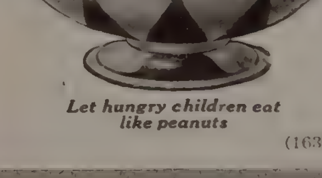
With cream and sugar or in bowls of milk

For breakfast or supper, float like bubbles in a bowl of milk. Salt or douse with melted butter for between-meal confections. Use like nut meats in candy or on ice cream.

Keep plenty on hand, and all three kinds, for there are no other foods like these.



Flavory titbits to mix with any fruit



Let hungry children eat like peanuts

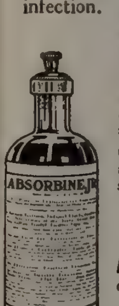
(1635)

At Training Camps

Muscles and ligaments that in civil life are little used are called into active service. The result is soreness and lameness. Prepare your muscles for the extra effort by a rub-down with Absorbine, Jr.,—this prevents the usual discomforts and you will be "fit" the next day.

Absorbine, Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

Stimulates and invigorates jaded muscles—heals and soothes. For muscles that have been strained or wrenched it gives prompt relief. After a long hike rest your tired, aching feet with a light application of this effective liniment. Absorbine, Jr., is also valuable for cuts and bruises as it is a positive germicide and prevents infection.



Absorbine, Jr., is clean, fragrant and safe to use — purely herbal. It is highly concentrated so that only a few drops are required at an application. For a rub-down a solution consisting of one ounce Absorbine, Jr., to a quart of water or witch hazel is sufficiently strong.

Get a bottle of Absorbine, Jr., today and keep it handy — it is health insurance of a high type.

$1.00 a bottle at druggists or mailed anywhere postpaid.

A Liberal Trial Bottle will be sent your address on receipt of 10c in stamps.

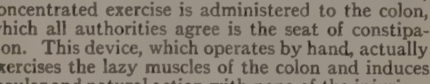
W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple St. Springfield, Mass.

New Discovery Removes Constipation!

Says Cathartics Are Dangerous and Habit Forming

THERE is now a new way to remove the cause of constipation, auto-intoxication, and the 95 percent of all human ills which result from intestinal congestion, without the use of habit-forming medicines or vigorous exercise.

This new discovery is founded on one of the oldest and soundest methods of treatment—massage. By means of a device known as the Kolon Motor, concentrated exercise is administered to the colon, which all authorities agree is the seat of constipation. This device, which operates by hand, actually exercises the lazy muscles of the colon and induces regular and natural action with none of the injurious effects of physics, at the same time strengthening the intestinal muscles. The Kolon Motor can be attached to any wall and is instantly adjustable to any height for adults or children. Recommended by physicians and used in leading sanatoriums. Let us send you free a most interesting and helpful book, "Colon Cleanliness," which has just been published, explaining the vital importance of keeping the colon free from accumulations of putrefying, germ-infested, disease-breeding toxins, and showing how and why the Kolon Motor solves the problem for the first time. Address Martin's Method Incorporated, Department 158, 105 East 30th Street, New York. A postal will do, but write to-day. Adv.



IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
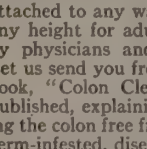
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.



FREE! "So-Handy" Sewing Bag To Your LADIES AID

Thousands of Societies have earned big money with the "BUCK" line of utilities. Why not yours? We make the wire frames. You make the bags and the money. One complete 50c "So-Handy" Bag absolutely free to your society, with full particulars of 18 fast sellers, by return mail. Send 10c to pay postage and packing.

RACINE WIRE WORKS, Dept. C Racine, Wis.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

SOON from thousands of homes all over this broad land boys, about whose future the daily life of thousands of homes has centered, boys who have been carried daily to the throne of grace by Christian fathers and mothers, will be reporting for military duty under the flag of their country. Many of them are Christian boys; many others have not yet yielded their hearts or their lives to Christ. Every soldier will receive a Testament from some one of the Bible societies. Many of them will find there an impetus which will move them to a decision, but even the power of the Word itself will prove insufficient in many cases unless the folks at home, without ceasing, assault the throne of grace by prayer in their behalf.

A member of the Prayer League in Pennsylvania writes that his son has given his heart to God since enlistment, and that besides his son, there is only one other Christian in the company. These boys have started a prayer meeting and have had four in attendance, while the rest of the company were indifferent and light-hearted, spending their time off duty in various unprofitable ways. Let us hope that the saving grace of Christ may redeem as many as possible of the men who go to fight America's battles abroad.

Mrs. W. A. M. rejoices in the manifestation of God's power in the cure of her mother, eighty years of age, who had been bedridden for three months, and an invalid for fifty years. The correspondent also suffers many bodily infirmities, for the cure or relief of which she asks the prayer of the League.

C. B. praises God for answer to prayer in relief of heart trouble from which his wife was suffering, and requests the prayers of the League for her complete recovery. Mrs. G. L. B. is an invalid, and the physicians have pronounced her case incurable. But she asks the Prayer League to pray to God for restoration of her health and conversion of her son; and she knows that God answers prayer, and has answered hers many times, two striking instances of which she relates.

Mrs. W. E. P. thanks God for many answered prayers. She asked the League to join in prayer for her mother, who has hardening of the arteries, and rejoices that the mother is better and slowly gaining strength. She asks a baptism of the Holy Spirit for the aged saint.

Mrs. W. M. H. writes that her husband suffered a great business reverse, so that he found himself almost penniless. They asked the Prayer League to pray that God would "make a way where there was no way." The sister writes: "It was wonderful how God opened the way for our success." A position was offered at high salary, and from unexpected sources came opportunities for advancement and recuperation of fortune.

Mrs. E. D. R. writes: "Just recently He has answered prayer and spared the life of our dearly loved baby; and I wish to make public acknowledgment of God's goodness."

Miss M. W. and Mrs. E. W. thank God that they are back in their old home, which they were forced to leave almost seven years ago. They ask the prayers of the League that they may recover from bodily ailments and be able to work.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Thomastown, La.; Menomonie, Wis.; Sulphur Springs, Ark.; Grand Saline, Texas; Anderson, S. C.

Mrs. A. L. B., Pitts, Ga., asks prayer that peace may be restored in the Baptist Church there.

Mrs. W. H. K. asks prayer that a child's mind may be restored; Mr. and Mrs. J. S. C., that daughter's mind may be restored; M. W., that mind may be strengthened; Mrs. T. A. G., that a brother's mind may be restored; A Subscriber, that a young man's mind may be restored; Mrs. W. T., that a relative's mind may be restored.

Four friends ask prayer that their sight may be strengthened: M. H., that mother's sight may be restored; Mrs. K. C., that sister's sight may be restored; M. C. L., that aunt's sight may be restored.

Two friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing for themselves.

Nineteen friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

E. B. asks prayer that a cousin may be cured of the liquor habit; L. M., that brother may be cured of the liquor habit.

Mrs. G. P. S. asks prayer to be cured and relieved of the drug habit, that the desire for it may be taken away; J. B. S., to be cured of the morphine habit.

Eight parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including A. M. B., that four sons may be saved; another, M. E. L. that four sons may be saved; five wives, their husbands; eighteen other relatives or friends; including Mrs. M. A. C., that soldiers and sailors may be saved.

Six readers ask prayer for special blessing for others; including F. M. G., that a minister's faith may be strengthened.

Forty-two ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives; including A Sister, that a mother may be cured without an operation; another, Mrs. W. H. K., that a child may gain the power of speech; twenty-eight friends, for healing for themselves; including Mrs. A. to regain the use of hand and foot; another S. B. C., to be cured of cancer; another, A Young Believer, to pass safely through an operation.

Nine friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Eighteen friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs; including two friends, who ask prayer for world-wide peace.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

A Friend, Richmond, Va.; Miss C. J., Charlotte, N. C.; S. D. M., Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. W. M., Rutledge, Tenn.; M. H., Pittsboro, N. C.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; Mrs. C. W. D., Clarksburg, W. Va.; I. B. P., Mount Pleasant, Mich.

Lutherans Moving Toward Union

EXTENSIVE plans are being carried out by the Lutheran Church of America in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the Reformation, which is usually dated from the day when Luther nailed his theses on the church door at Wittenberg, October 31, 1517. Jubilee gatherings, some of them reaching the high number of 15,000 in attendance and with choruses of a thousand voices, are reported from all sections of the country. Jubilee thank-offering funds are being raised, and large volumes of literature are going out from the publication houses.

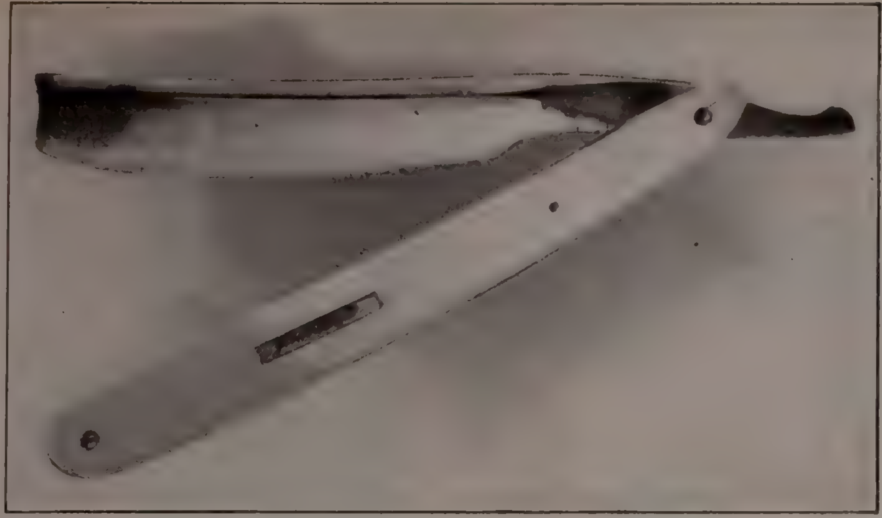
The most significant and effective features of the anniversary are the unification movements consummated and in process. On June 9, three Norwegian-speaking bodies, which for several years had been working together harmoniously, consummated their unification, when in St. Paul, Minn., they organized the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. The new organization has 1,257 ministers, 2,926 congregations, and 294,026 communicant members. It conducts its educational work by means of six colleges, two theological seminaries, eighteen academies, and one female institute. Its social service is carried on through the following Inner Mission institutions: one deaconess mother house, eight orphanages, six asylums for the aged, twelve hospitals, and five seamen's homes. Its foreign missions are at work in Persia, China, Africa and Madagascar, and it has a mission in Alaska. Within the body is an English conference, whose duty it is to care for the rapidly Anglicizing portions of the church. The Norwegian language is still used in a majority of the congregations.

The three general Lutheran bodies—the General Synod, the General Council, and the United Synod in the South, comprising almost a million communicant members—have for some years been working together through important committees, chief among which is the Church Book Committee. In many ways the spirit of cooperation and desire for unification has been making itself felt, and so the Joint Committee, appointed by the three bodies to prepare for the Reformation celebration, at its meeting in Philadelphia on April 18, decided that the time had arrived to take definite steps toward merging the bodies. The presidents of the three bodies were requested to appoint a Committee on Constitution for the consolidated body, to be called "The United Lutheran Church of America," and the boards of like character in the three bodies were requested to meet and devise ways and means for merging their interests and submit the plans to the Committee on Constitution. Both resolutions were carried out promptly, and after several meetings of the committee the proposed constitution was submitted to the General Synod at Chicago, June 22. The General Synod approved the constitution unanimously and enthusiastically, and recommended it to the District Synods for adoption. Its unanimous and decided action augurs well for the success of the merger. The constitution will be submitted in turn to the General Council and the United Synod in the South, and then, if approved, will be sent to the District Synods for adoption.

It is estimated that this process of adopting the constitution and the merging of the three bodies can be consummated in November, 1918. When this is accomplished, the body will consist of 3,439 ministers and 933,342 communicant members, with widely diversified church operations.

A Remarkable Conversion

THE following is the testimony of Mr. W. J. M. of Parkersburg, W. Va., who began a Christian life in the Union Tabernacle meetings conducted by Dr. Milford Lyon, three years ago: "When I reached Market Street, the crowd was going to the Milford Lyon Tabernacle meeting and it was cold. I was ragged and dirty and bent over from living forty-five years in hell. For some unaccountable reason I followed. Being a Catholic, I was afraid to enter, but the thought came to me that the 'cops' who were looking for me would never look here, and I went in. The choir and its fine singing brought me to a sense I had never experienced before. When the invitation was given, a young woman from the choir, asked me, "Do you know Jesus?" I roughly told her to beat it, and she went back to the choir discouraged. Then a clear picture of my past life rose before me. A cold sweat came over me. I pushed the people aside, hit the trail, put my hands in the air and told the Judge of judges that I surrendered. I'll never forget that night. I got a vision. I came clean to the Master and I fought Satan for two long years. Tonight I am saved by the precious blood of Jesus Christ. The last three years have been my happy days. My wife and family smile the days away and I am making an honest living. I have true friends where I never knew one before. I have had some wonderful experiences since I have been leading a Christian life. My cup runneth over, until I have had to ask the Lord to shut it off. Praise the Lord. Praise Him!"



The razor that King James left behind

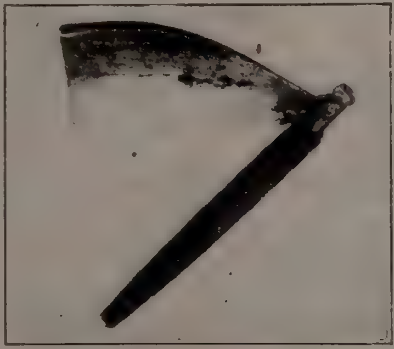
Making the Missionary's Work Easier

IT IS related that when King James II fled from the battle of the Boyne and the siege of Londonderry, in July, 1690, he carried with him among other personal effects a razor, hand-ground, but with very slight concave, if any, and made from hand-forged English steel at Belfast, Ireland. The handle is genuine ivory, with a heavy solid gold back. While the blade itself is of little or no value as compared with modern American-made razors, the handle has a valuation of approximately $25.

During his flight, the king slept one night in the house of Rev. John Dickey, at Carnone, County Donegal. In the morning, after he had shaved, he placed his razor in a drawer and forgot to take it with him when he left. This very interesting relic was kept in the Dickey family until 1859, at which time it was given to Mr. Samuel G. Bayne, a relative, now president of the Seaboard National Bank of New York City, who has loaned it to the manufacturers of Genco razors, as an exhibit.

Without question this old British razor was the last word in the grinders' art at the time it was manufactured, and its true value is best emphasized by comparison with a crude razor, such as is used by the Chinese even up to the present day.

The Chinese razor shown below was purchased from an ironmonger in Hongkong, for the equivalent of 10 cents in United States money. It was hand-forged from a piece of an iron horseshoe and attached to some piece of native wood with an iron ferrule. The native barbers who use these instruments of torture waylay their victims on the public highways, where they squat down in the street next to a building or under some convenient shade-tree. They then bring forth a bar of native soap and a crude shaving-brush. With these accessories they attack their victims. Some wit, observing that the Chinese who accepts Christianity at once has his queue shaved off with one of these tools, recommends supplying missionaries with American blades. Thus the natives could make the sacrifice of hair with much less sacrifice of comfort.



A choice Chinese blade

Samantha Meditates

Conitnued from page 845

suffer all the hardships, poverty, pestilence and crime that follers war. To keep still and be taxed fer money to carry on a undertakin' her soul loathes. I guess I know what wimmen's spear is in war, Josiah Allen."

Sez Josiah, "Wimmen can't understand such things. Their minds hain't built right, they hain't roomy enough."

"No," sez I sadly, "that's so, Josiah. My mind hain't built right to understand why great nations pledged to peace and justice should be wagin' such bloody warfare, so soon after a Peace Conference. Half the world tryin' to kill off the other half, fightin' on land, fightin' in the air, fightin' on the sea. Eighteen hundred years after Christ's message of peace and good will to men, each side prayin' to the God of Peace to be able to slaughter and destroy more than the other side—no, my mind hain't built right to understand it."

"I'm glad you feel your ignorance, Samantha. It is jest as I told you, a woman can't see a inch from her nose. You ort to look ahead and see the blessin's war brings. Lots of times you have to fight to keep other folks from fightin', and runnin' over you. Look at our country, Samantha, where would we be today, where would Jonesville be, if we hadn't riz up and fit? If we'd crouched down and be run over? But 'tain't no use arguin' with a woman. Her talk is so one-sided and sentimental that it kinder softens and tires out a man's brains."

And Josiah with a mean of dignity and wisdom, wound up the clock, let the cat out into the woodshed and went to bed, and I sot there for some time a meditatin' and a wonderin' where Truth wuz. Sometimes it is hard to know which way she's gone and foller her. Sometimes you think you ketch sight of her radiant face and shinin' garments, and foller on, and then agin you seem to lose sight on her, the mists rise so from low lands of ignorance and misunderstandin', and such huge shadders are cast from human wills and desires.

I looked out of the back winder where the moon wuz floodin' the orchard with its white light, and I sez to myself, but earnestlike, for I meant it: "Truth, where be you? I want to foller you. Where be you, Truth, and Right and Justice and Peace? You do seem to be hid, the hull on you; now where be you?"

But no answer come. The moon sailed on stiddy, knowin' jest where she wuz started fer and keepin' right on to its gole. I sithed. But onbeknown to me, sunthin' whispered to me, and like a warm hand enclosin' mine come a comfortin' thought. As sure as I sat there God was over all. He knew where they all wuz. Peace and Justice and Truth. He would rule over his own world. I didn't have to.

I sot there comforted.

NOW that the call is for National Economy, let women begin by saving themselves," says the Fels-Naptha Home Maker.

HOW can any woman expect to be bright and fresh after a day's struggle with a steamy wash boiler and hard scrubbing board?

But what a contrast is a wash day with Fels-Naptha! In cool or lukewarm water, Fels-Naptha works wonders. With ever so little rubbing the most soiled garment is cleaned of even the tiny dirt particles you can't see.

Follow the simple directions inside the red and green wrapper. Remember too, that only the whitest of white suds come from the clean-smelling "maple-sugar" colored bar of Fels-Naptha soap.

You will never know just how much Fels-Naptha can save you until you've tried it.

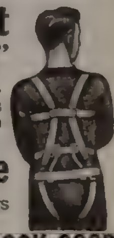
Fels & Co., Philadelphia

FELS-NAPTHA

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE Paul F. Skinner ON EVERY PACKAGE

SKINNER'S MACARONI
SKINNER MFG CO OMAHA U.S.A.



"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. "Worth more than a farm," says another. So testify over 100,000 Men and Women who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings comfort, health, strength and pep.

MAKES YOU FEEL GOOD AND LOOK GOOD

Replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens shoulders; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, etc., in both sexes. Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank and our very liberal free trial proposition. HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co. 171 Rash Bldg., Salina, Kan.

DAISY FLY KILLER PLACED ANYWHERE, ATTRACTS and KILLS ALL FLIES. Neat, clean ornamental, convenient, cheap. LASTS ALL SEASON. Made of metal can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DAISY FLY KILLER

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1983 Ry. Exch., Chicago

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

GALLOWAY'S Free Engine Book

Write me for your copy tonight and learn all about engine making and engine selling. Learn how to judge and select an engine that is best adapted for your own needs and uses. Find out all about weight, horse-power, bore and stroke. You can easily be fooled on engines, and I want to post you before you buy. I also want to tell, in this great engine book, how much I can save you with

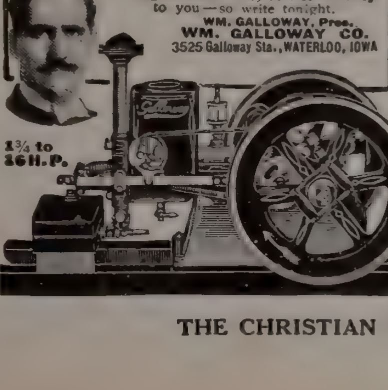
My Patriotic Prices

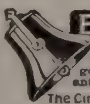
I want you to know that buying an engine from me is buying direct from the maker. Galloway is not a dealer, not an agent or jobber, but the manufacturer, which means that you buy at wholesale, at a saving of 25 to 40%. The money I save you on an engine you can keep in the bank or use it to buy some other necessity. And Galloway Engines must prove the best after tests and comparison. It's guaranteed or money back.

WRITE TONIGHT FOR THE BOOK

You'll be throwing money away if you buy any engine before you read my great free engine book. You should know all these engine facts. They're worth money to you—so write tonight.

WM. GALLOWAY, Pres.
WM. GALLOWAY CO.
3525 Galloway Sta., WATERLOO, IOWA





BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

A Notable Set of Books

A SET of six volumes, entitled "The Library of Christian Cooperation," containing the reports of the sessions and commissions of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, at its third quadrennial meeting at St. Louis, Mo., December 4–9, 1916, has just been issued by the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada. The contents of these volumes probably represent, more accurately than can be determined in any other way, the present state of Protestant thinking and action in the United States on the great questions of international relations, Christian unity, individual and social redemption, race problems, industrial reconstruction, and religious education. They form an invaluable reference library of present-day Christian literature. The set is published for the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America by the Missionary Education Movement. These books will be found equal to, if not better than, a library, being absolutely up to date on the foremost topics that relate to world progress at the present time. The price of the six uniform volumes is $5, carriage extra. Separate volumes, $1 each. Missionary Education Movement, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, publishers.

Young People's Topics for August 19

The Father's Care for Us

Epworth League Topic. Matt. 6 : 25-33; Ps. 103 : 13; 91 : 1; Deut. 33 : 27

FEW of us fully comprehend a father's care, and failing to understand earthly fatherhood, find it impossible to apprehend the fulness of the fatherhood of God. In all too many families, "Dad" is either a stern parent, or only the source of the things necessary for our daily living. If it is a new pair of shoes, we go to Dad for the money. If a good time is in prospect the expense is met by Dad's ever-ready pocketbook, and often we do not notice that Dad's clothes are a bit threadbare, or his own shoes patched, because he has preferred our happiness to his own comfort. Through all of our maturing years Dad's steady work and constant thought and prayer have been for us. He has seen to it that we were kept in school, that we were given opportunities greater than his own, and he has said little when, in our thoughtlessness, we sometimes complained at necessary denials of some of our pet plans. All of this our Heavenly Father is and more. He has promised that his children shall be clothed and fed, that they shall be strengthened and guarded, and that in the day when earth has ended they shall be with him. The sparrow knows that its breakfast is ready and it goes in search of it. It does not worry over the possibility that this particular morning its breakfast may be missed. If the sparrow, with its scant intelligence, can trust, how much more should we be able to understand the great heart of the Creator and trust him wholly, and worry not at all!

A Definite Purpose and the Success It Wins

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topics. I Kings 9 : 1-9

THE history of man is full of illustrations of this topic. Columbus was determined to sail westward to the Indies, and nothing could daunt his will. John Knox demanded Scotland of his God. Scotch Presbyterianism is the monument to his persistence. Washington fought on when others would have yielded. America owns him as "the Father of his country." This page might be filled with similar references to men who followed a definite purpose to success. Purpose is the key to destiny. The young man who enters business with no purpose except to hold a job may advance slightly, but is not likely to become a national figure in industry. The boy who goes to school with no other purpose than to get through without flunking may wake up later and be heard from; but he will always be handicapped by the lack of the learning he might have gained. The young person who merely joins the church in order to be known as a Christian, or to share its social life, will realize little of the power or of the sweet comfort of Christian faith. But he who with a definite purpose strives always to advance the Kingdom of Christ will succeed in his religious life and it is not unusual for such a one to succeed as well in the work by which he earns his daily bread.

The City of Emancipated Womanhood

Continued from page 833

academic courses. Silliman Institute, in the Philippines, has won a place for itself in competition with strong government schools, because its courses are adapted to the life of the Filipinos, and because the head of their industrial department is the biggest, and poorest educated, man on the faculty. He was not spoiled in formal psychology courses. He learned on the field, from men.

Poor old mother-in-law has had to stand for a lot, but in China she deserves it. Whatever the position of woman may be in the Orient, the Chinese mother-in-law is the "boss of the ranch" and the closest approach to an absolute ruler the young republic knows.

General Wu is a thorough Christian, but he has a mother-in-law, and until she becomes Christian he must be pagan, even though he carries his Bible everywhere he goes, and testifies for Christ at every opportunity. His first wife died and his concubine succeeded to the household throne. The general loved his "little wife" and wanted to make her his legal wife. She has managed the home for many years. But by losing a wife a man can't lose a mother-in-law, and the woman who had made the general mark time or stand at attention every time she spoke, decided that he must marry a woman of his station. He did not like the idea, and some say that he mentioned this to the real ruler of the household. He had become a little interested in Christianity after his first wife died.

But mother-in-law got busy and married him off to a nice lady of his own class. Meanwhile the whole family, except the mother-in-law, became interested in Christianity. The latest wifely addition to his family loves the other wife, and is willing to become a deaconness in the home, sacrificing wifehood for conscience' sake, although her position, according to the Chinese viewpoint, is much to be desired. But the mother-in-law refuses, and the general continues preaching lay sermons and inviting Christian preachers to his yamen, where his soldiers can hear the Gospel.

He is well-to-do, but he dresses his children in cotton garments and deplores luxury when so much of the world is still unsaved. He gives largely for spreading the Gospel, and wants to give up his latest wife and join the church. His home is one of perfect harmony, and the well-born woman who is to inherit his name and property is willing to sacrifice it all, so that he can obey the dictates of his conscience. But mother-in-law won't hear of it, and now the conversion of the czarina of the family is prayed for by half the Christians of the community.

There are in China to-day scores of high-class officials who want to join Christian churches, but who, before they learned of Christ, had two wives. They offer a real problem to the Christian churches in China, and no one has yet appeared who has any firm conviction and courage to meet the problem and settle it. Probably it cannot be settled in that manner. Whether Christian progress in China will be marked by scores of Hagars and Ishmaels remains to be seen. The tragedy of childless Sarahs and nameless concubines is current drama in China today.

KIUKIANG contains two lady teachers with ideas. Miss Honsinger and Miss Beggs have contributed more striking pictures to the mission press than any other missionaries I know.

Given a camera and a Chinese boy or girl and you have a pose. Fingers close together, chest up, eyes front, attention to business, stiff as pokers, the Chinese are the despair of the lovers of natural effects. Only the eager photographer knows the delight of the eye picture and the despair of the view he finally gets.

But these two resourceful women have spent hours in getting the effects they sought. There is nothing nicer than the smile of a Chinese girl, and there is nothing rarer than a picture that reveals the vivacity and charm of these same models of girlish shyness. In "I see you!" and the picture of the slide, they have caught the look that often lingers in the faces of Chinese girls, except when they face a camera.

On an adjoining lot there is a picturesque pagoda owned by the government, but the Rulison School teachers assert that they own the view of it. Several of the pictures that have been published have had the pagoda for a background. The Rulison teachers are very much attached to their pagoda, and never use it except for artistic purposes. Their care in securing attractive pictures has borne fruit in interest aroused in Chinese girls, and their example is a worthy one for those who send home the same old group views, where every pupil looks stiff and worried, and then wonder why the pictures of their beloved students aren't printed by a long-suffering press. Miss Honsinger and Miss Beggs not only have ideas but the patience and time to work them out.

Mrs. Thurston, of Ginling College, on being asked whether Ginling graduates would be sought for as wives, said: "As long as polygamy exists as a recognized feature of Chinese life, I shall not feel sorry if a few of our girls do not marry. Our aim is to train them as self-contained human beings, to be able to serve China directly."

When I think of the inspiring figure of Miss Gertrude Howe, and of the two she loves to call her "daughters," Miss Mary Stone and Miss Ida Kahn; when I think of the "two old maids," Miss Mary Stone and Miss J. V. Hughes, bringing up a family of eight children who were foundlings but are now most promising youngsters: when I think of grave General Wu, who would like to become a Christian, but dare not offend the mother-in-law who rules him: when I think of the sweet-voiced singers at Rulison School, and the more than two hundred women in Miss Hughes's school, who have definitely pledged themselves for hard but inspiring and useful Christian work; when I think of the graduate nurses from Danforth Memorial Hospital touring large districts with remedies for the poor and needy, and turning over all they earn for charity work, I cannot help thinking of Kiukiang as the Chinese city of emancipated womanhood, where Chinese girls have a wider outlook than that of a "little wife" or a high-class but childless wife, forced to share her home with the mother of her husband's children.

Kiukiang proves, to my mind, not only the equality of the sexes but of the races of the earth; for the one person whose influence there is strongest and whose life seems the richest is a Chinese old maid, whose feet, though unbound, are small, whose "family" are a credit to any one, and whose claim to old-maidship glorifies the sisterhood in China.

From the Firing-Line

EVANGELIST W. S. NICHOL, of Hood River, Ore., is conducting revival services in Lexington, Okla., and good spiritual results are expected.

Evangelist Z. O. Avery and party, of Bloomington, Ill., conducted a revival campaign at Shipshewana, Ind., which resulted in what might be called a "community revival." Among the converts were many business men.

Evangelist Edward D. Fellers has just closed a successful campaign in Cameron, W. Va., and is now in the midst of a great meeting in Weston, W. Va. His next meeting is at West Union, W. Va., after which he expects to go to Ohio.

Aylmer, Ont., recently had a notable revival. Services were held for five weeks in a tabernacle seating 1,500. Hanley and Fisher, evangelists from Chicago, Ill., being in charge of the work. The neighborhood prayer meetings each morning were a source of great blessing. The business men's meetings, conducted three mornings a week, from 10 to 10:30, added to the spiritual interest. A unique service was held in a cow barn, three miles east of the town, 175 men attending. There were 950 decisions for Christ made during the revival. Swearing ceased, gambling dens were broken up, and many drunkards were converted.

Do You Need More Money?

To help your husband—to help your children—to help yourself? We can show you an easy way that is dignified, honorable and profitable.

The happy, contented women shown above are all free from worry and with money coming in. Each of them has founded, with our help, a growing and prosperous business and every year sees each of them making more money. And these cases are by no means exceptional, for

In More Than 13,000 Cases We Have Helped ambitious, deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No previous experience is necessary—we show you how to make money in an easy, congenial and profitable way. We sell direct from the mill to the home through our local representatives, and our lines of hosiery and underwear for men, women and children are famous the world over.

Write today for our free catalog
It tells the whole story

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
Dept. 116 BAY CITY, MICH.
We have been in business here for more than 22 years

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

Eat More Butter! Save 2/5 Cost!
Easily made without machine. For explicit directions, send $1.00 to H. G. Torrence, Hilts, Calif.

WANTED

In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent The Christian Herald. This is

AN OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT

The Christian Herald BIBLE HOUSE New York

WAR CONDITIONS and the FRANKLIN CAR

A PROMINENT man has said that the things that will not stand the test of war conditions are not worthy to survive after the war. It is true that war needs, and the state of mind induced by the war, throw a new light on much that Americans have spent their money for.

Among these things is the short-lived car.

Cars have been built and sold on features, novelties, talking points, engine stunts.

One year the whole country talks about a car and next year its users condemn it as a "one year car."

Do not put all the blame on the manufacturer; perhaps his idea of business is to supply the people what they want. It is a much slower process giving them what they ought to have.

Economy Demanded in Motor Car Operation

There has always been a public for the long-service car. Practical, hard-headed men who, even if they buy a new model every year, are shrewd enough to see the relation between long life and used car value.

The second-hand value is especially high where there is the combination of strength, lightness and flexibility, because these things mean economy of operation and long life.

This is emphasized because there is a section of the public that has always associated strength and endurance with dead-weight and rigidity — the very things that pile up operating cost and wear out a car.

It is a fact that war conditions and the National Thrift are making a bigger market for the Franklin as the fine car of the strong, light, flexible type.

The big public is waking up to the truth about gasoline waste, tire mileage, friction loss and depreciation.

People keep right on buying cars—but they are thinking more about constructive service and use.

The automobile is a tremendous factor in American life and achievement, in national health and efficiency, in conservation of human energy, in the ready contact between men and their affairs.

Automobile owners want to use their cars more freely. They are impatient of weight, rigidity, excessive upkeep—all the old and arbitrary restrictions.

What do you, as an American citizen and automobile owner, think about this matter? Do you favor a restriction of use, or a restriction of waste?

Official Economy Tests Won by the Franklin

The Franklin has won every prominent official economy test ever conducted, and continued to win so long as the official tests were run.

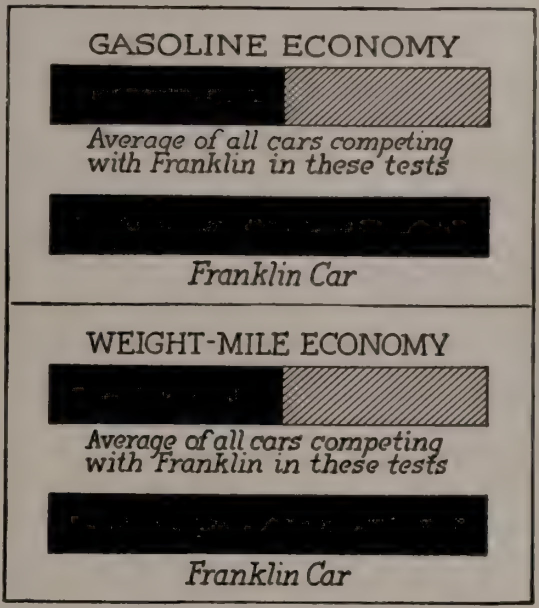
Two Gallon Efficiency Test, May 15, 1906, under the official supervision of the Automobile Club of America—won by the Franklin with a record of 87 miles. The Franklin average was 75 per cent above the average record of all competing cars.

Long Island Economy Contest, February 25, 1908, under the official supervision of the Long Island Automobile Club—the Franklin won over every contestant by doing 242 miles at an operating cost of only 1⅕ cents per mile. The costs of all other cars averaged 6 cents per mile—five times the Franklin operating cost.

One Gallon Efficiency Test, May 8, 1909, under the official supervision of the New York Automobile Trade Association, with twenty-one cars entered in competition — the Franklin Car went 36.6 miles on one gallon of gasoline and scored 105,408 weight-miles. The Franklin Car not only won the prize for the best score in its price class, but also the Willys' trophy for the best score irrespective of price class.

Buffalo One Gallon Economy Contest, July 11, 1909, under the official supervision of the Automobile Club of Buffalo—the Franklin set a world's record for gasoline economy of 46.1 miles on one gallon; 79 per cent more than the average of the other eighteen competing cars. The Franklin scored 135,902 weight-miles as against the best competing score of 86,612 weight-miles, and the average competing score of 64,495 weight-miles.

Fuel Economy Test of Franklin Cars, June 20, 1913, under the official supervision of the Automobile Club of America—a Franklin Roadster made a new world's mileage of 83.5 miles on one gallon of gasoline.



It is remarkable how these official economy tests are confirmed by the nation-wide experience of Franklin owners. The Franklin goes a given distance on one-half the gasoline consumed by the average fine car — and for the same yearly mileage costs about one-third as much for tires.

How Franklin Thrift Applies to the Enclosed Car

With their scientific light weight, resiliency and direct-air-cooling, the Franklin Enclosed Cars show within a mere fraction the same remarkable economy as the open models, and the same day-after-day mobility.

For any kind of touring the Franklin Enclosed models are ideal — affording protection from dust, glare and rain, freely ventilated, cool and restful.

This means that one car does the work of two—and the owner of a Franklin Enclosed Car gets his year-'round motor car service on practically half the initial investment of the man who has to buy one car for summer use and another for winter.

Touring Car	2280 lbs.	$1950.00
Runabout	2160 lbs.	1900.00
Four-passenger Roadster	2280 lbs.	1950.00
Cabriolet	2485 lbs.	2750.00
Sedan	2610 lbs.	2850.00
Brougham	2575 lbs.	2800.00
Town Car	2610 lbs.	3100.00
Limousine	2620 lbs.	3100.00

All Prices F. O. B. Syracuse

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY, SYRACUSE, N. Y., U. S. A.

TIMKEN
BEARINGS
Metal and Mettle

"It Seems As If I Knew Those Timken Folks"

That's the way we'd like you to feel whenever you read a Timken advertisement.

We are ordinary human beings like yourself, and would be glad to have you realize that Timken Bearings are made by a human organization.

We make our living by making and selling these bearings—just as you, too, have something to sell to others by which you gain your livelihood.

And no doubt you'll agree with us that in the mind of a true worker the money reward is not the whole consideration, by a long shot.

It's the work that counts, after all. You and we both like to feel that we are making a good record better, safeguarding standards of quality, performing a service to the community.

The man who grinds the cup or cone of a Timken Bearing to a fine accuracy, is really working to an ideal though he may not know it by that name. He is trying to make every piece so perfect that not one will be rejected when the inspector comes 'round.

Our metallurgists and the steel makers in the Timken Steel Mill are hard on the trail of perfect steel. They'll never find it, of course, no one will. But they have already produced better steel for motor car bearings than was ever made before—just because their minds are concentrated on that ideal objective.

The Timken engineers are insistent that each car shall have bearings that are exactly right in size, taper and other respects to suit the varying requirements of different installations—and their o. k. on every single installation is as necessary as that of the car-builder's engineers.

The remarkable mileage records of Timken Bearings are, in very large measure, due to the interest of a human organization in its life work, and to the pride each man takes in his personal contribution to Timken Quality. Write for interesting booklet, D-9, on motor car bearings. Sent free, post-paid, on request to

THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING COMPANY
Canton, Ohio

TIMKEN BEARINGS

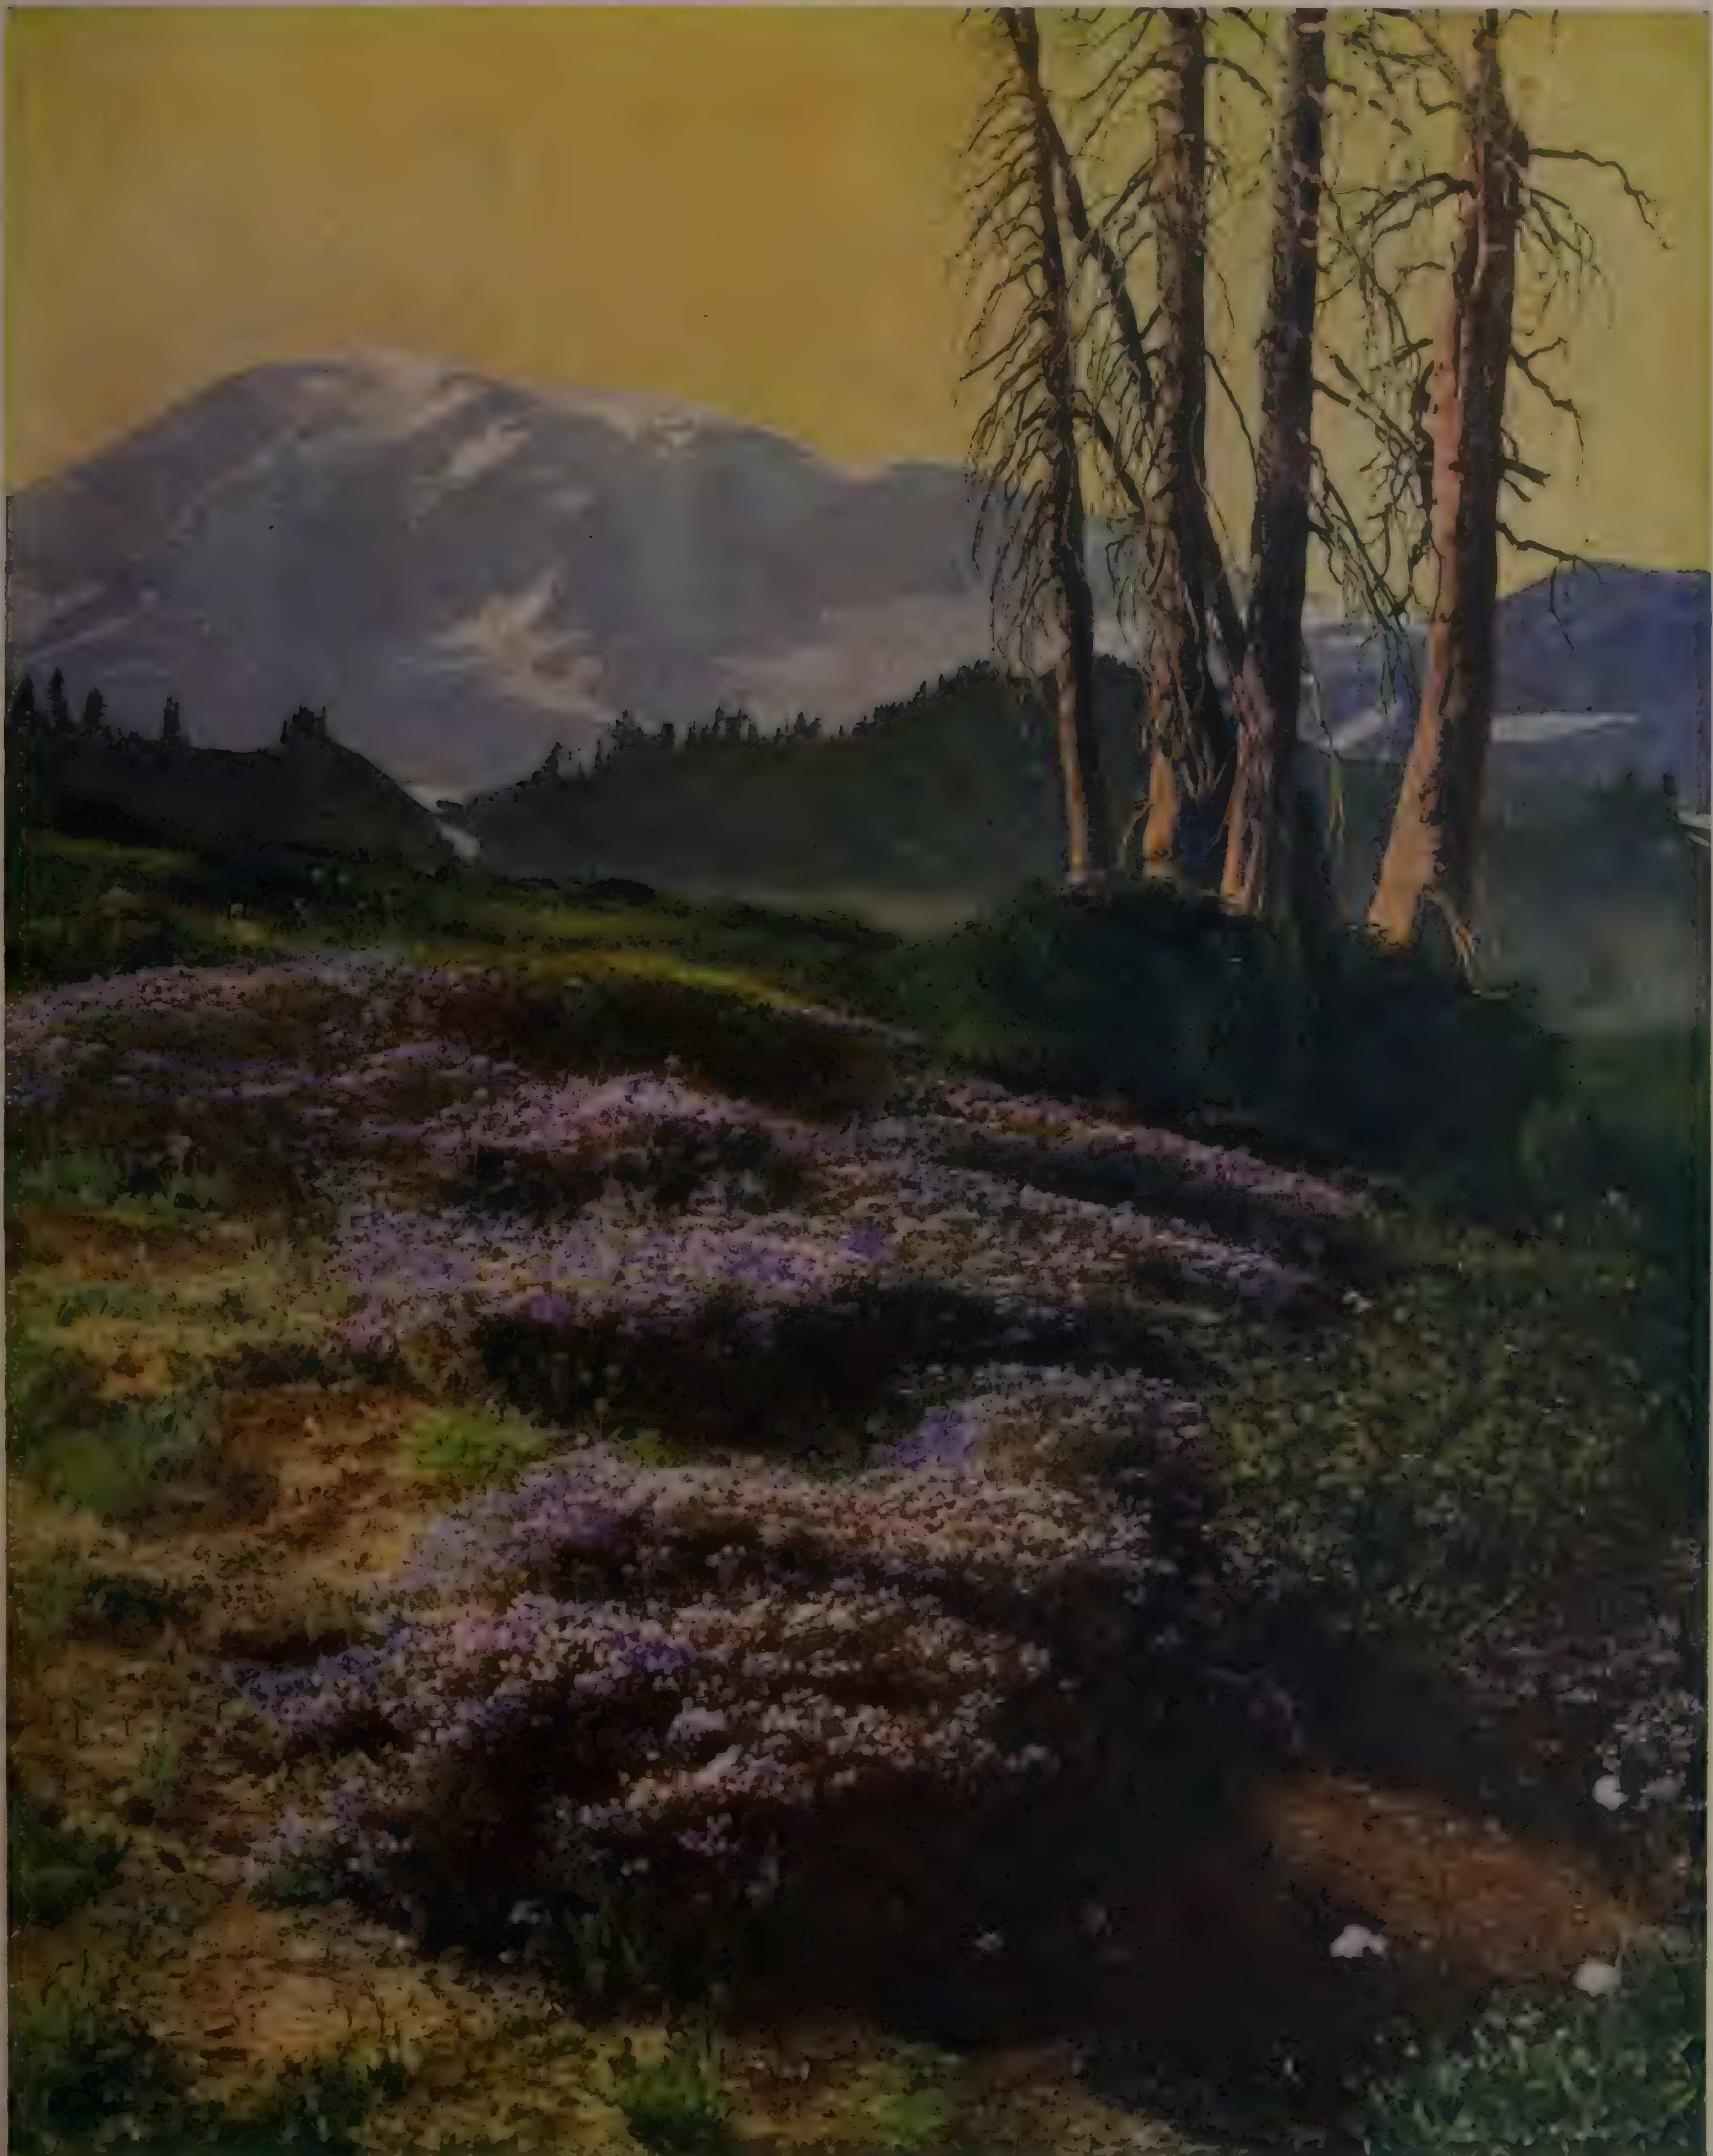
Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 15, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 33. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



(See description inside)

HEATHER, MOUNT RAINIER, NATIONAL PARK, WASHINGTON

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

F. M., San Diego, Calif. I wonder if you can give a reasonable answer to a question that ofttimes comes to me. Why do not the churches, or Christians in general, see the soon coming of the King whose right it is to reign, and whose Kingdom will embrace all the kingdoms under the whole heaven? Conclusive evidence from the Word of God points to that great event as not far distant. Nebuchadnezzar's forgotten dream was shown by Daniel as a great image representing four great world-powers which would exist and pass away, the fifth and last world-power or kingdom ruled over by the God of heaven. Now, it is but a question in history, which mostly any schoolboy might answer, to give the names of those four great world-powers which have come and gone, except the ten kings now reigning over the dismembered portion of the old Roman empire. Daniel goes on to say, "And in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (Dan. 2 : 44). This is the fifth and last kingdom the world will ever see. Soon it may be that the kings with their crowns will all be laid aside, and the King of Peace will assume his royal prerogative to reign.

We give space to this letter, because it is one of many of similar tenor that are coming to us every week. Our correspondent asks why the churches do not devote more attention to the great problems of prophecy. It is true, a large proportion of the churches ignore these subjects as in the domain of speculative theology. They are either ignored or dealt with superficially, both in the theological seminaries and in the denominational pulpits. Since the beginning of the present war, however, and especially within the last year, a great change has begun in the church's attitude toward prophecy. The conviction is forcing itself upon the minds of earnest Christians, clergymen and laymen, that we are now in the days of prophetic fulfilment. This long-neglected branch of spiritual investigation is being studied by thousands who find in it a new interest, and a large amount of literature on the subject has been issued. Pastors who formerly avoided prophecy are now becoming its most eager students. To meet this widespread demand for light on prophecy, we commend to all inquirers the remarkable series of articles by Dr. Gray, now appearing in the Christian Herald. The true expositor of Bible prophecy brings reverence as well as learning to his task. His exposition must be a spiritual illumination, else it is worthless. Fanaticism, dogmatic assumption and mere intellectual display have no legitimate place in such work. For these among other reasons, we regard Professor Gray's articles as of the greatest value and timeliness.

Reader. David was the youngest of a family of ten. His mother's name is not given in the Bible, but from the allusions to her in David's writings—chiefly in his poetry—it can be gathered that she was a godly woman. Both his parents lived till after David's rupture with Saul. (See I Sam. 17 : 12.) He traced his lineage to Ruth, and doubtless had in mind this connection of three generations back when he escaped to Moab and placed his aged parents in the care of the king (I Sam. 22 : 3).

Mrs. W. P., Port Huron, Mich. The original organization of the Red Cross was by an international conference at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1863. The conference agreed upon a treaty for a mitigation of the evils of war and recommended the formation in every country of a committee to cooperate with the hospital service of the armies in time of war. The treaty was ratified by forty-four nations, including the United States. This conference adopted the distinctive flag and badge, bearing a Geneva red cross on a white ground.

J. J. K., Minneapolis. The "high seas" are the uninclosed waters of the ocean. In law, they are the seacoast waters beyond the boundaries of the low-water mark and of local jurisdiction.

Mrs. A. F. R., Franklin, Neb. The exact dates on which the various signatures were affixed to the Declaration of Independence are somewhat obscure. The Declaration was adopted on July 4 by votes of all the colonies except New York, whose delegates were not then authorized to commit themselves to it. On August 2, all the delegates present signed; absentees signed later—McKean as late as 1781. Of the fifty-six signers, seven were not members of Congress on July 4, and of those who were present on that day, seven never signed.

Anxious, New York. How could Jesus fast forty days, or did he receive miraculous support during that period?

Matthew says that after our Lord had fasted forty days, he was "an hungered" (Matt. 4 : 2). This would seem to dispose, in a measure, of your suggestion that he had been given support during his fast. The numbers seven and forty have been used in a special way by the Jews. Dean Plimpton says that "prolonged fasts of nearly the same extent have been recorded in later times. The effect of such a fast on any human organism, and therefore on our Lord's real humanity, would be to interrupt the ordinary continuity of life and quicken all perceptions of the spiritual world into a new intensity." Olshauser says that the number forty was a sacred number with the Jews; but it does not follow that it is not to be taken literally.

JIM-DOG

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

HE wasn't, well, a fancy kind o' dog—
Not Jim!
But, oh, I sorter couldn't seem ter help
A-lovin' him.
He always seemed ter understand.
He'd rub his nose against my hand
If I was feelin' blue or sad,
Or if my thoughts was pretty bad;
An' how he'd bark an' frisk an' play
When I was gay!

A soldier's dog don't have much time ter whine
Like little pets a-howlin' at th' moon.
A soldier's dog is bound ter learn, right soon,
That war is war, an' what a steady line
Of men in khaki means.
(What, dogs don't know?
You bet they do! Jim-dog, he had ter go
Along th' trenches oftentimes at night;
He seemed ter sense it when there was a fight
A-brewin'. Oh, I guess he knew, all right!)
I was a soldier, an' Jim-dog was mine.

Ah, what's th' use?
There never was another dog like him.
Why, on th' march I'd pause an' call—"Hey, Jim!"
An' he'd be there, his head tipped on one side,
A-lookin' up at me with love an' pride,
His tail a-waggin', an' his ears raised high. . .

I wonder why my Jim-dog had ter die?
He was a friend ter folks; he didn't bite;
He never snapped at no one in th' night;
He didn't hate a soul; an' he was game!
An' yet . . . a spark o' light, a dartin' flame
Across th' dark, a sneaky bit o' lead,
An' he was . . . dead!

THEY say there ain't no heaven-land fer him,
'Cause dogs is dogs, an' haven't any right;
But let me tell yer this: without my Jim
Th' very shinin' streets would seem less bright!
An' somehow I'm a-thinkin' that if he Could come at that last stirrin' bugle call
Up to th' gates o' gold aside of me,
Where God stands smilin' welcome to us all,
An' I said "Father, here's my dog. . . here's Jim."
They'd find some corner, touched with love, fer him!

Mrs. E. J. S., Bronxville, N. Y. What value could attach to a birthright, that Jacob should consider it worth buying from Esau?

The incident related in Gen. 25 : 31 can be understood only through a knowledge of tribal customs prevailing in the East. The succession to the chieftainship of an Eastern tribe is an important matter, and the birthright entitled one to succession to the father in the rule of the tribe, a claim to the paternal benediction, a double portion of the father's property, and the position of domestic priest. Thompson says about this passage: "In the case of Jacob and Esau it is also to be remembered that they were twins, born at the same time, and Jacob no doubt felt that his brother had really no valid claim of precedence which should entitle him to the inestimable blessing." He also had in mind the fact that the covenant blessing was thought to attach to the birthright; but for this conception there is no good ground, since Jacob might well be the one in the spiritual succession and the rightful heir of the covenant, without being the firstborn son.

Doubter, St. Louis, Mo. Please explain I Kings 17 : 14.

The Speaker's Commentary says: "This is the first recorded miracle of its kind, a supernatural and inexplicable multiplication of food. This class of miracles offers peculiar difficulties to modern skeptics, who ask whether the senses and appetite were cheated, or whether new matter was created; or whether, finally, there was a transformation of previously existing matter into meal, oil, fish and bread. The sacred record does not enable us to answer these inquiries positively, but we may observe that if the last of the three explanations be the true one, the marvel of the thing would not be much greater than the astonishing natural chemistry by which, in the growth of plants, particles of water, air and earth are transmitted into fruits and grains of corn and so fitted to be human food. There would be a difference in the agency employed and in the time occupied in the transition, but the thing done would be almost the same." It should be remembered, however, that somewhat similar miracles are found in Elisha's multiplying the loaves and corn and oil (II Kings 4 : 6), and in our Lord's feeding of the thousands (John 6 : 9). With God all things are possible (Matt. 19 : 26).

A. J. T., Dover, N. J. Please explain II Cor. 3 : 14.

The hardening of men's hearts and minds, as in the case of Pharaoh, is a condition of divine judgment. God has removed the man so afflicted from the range of personal responsibility and has sentenced him to the judgment of having his mind hardened—become indifferent—to every good influence. In Paul's days, the Jewish race was under such a divine penalty. Its state of rejection of and antagonism to Christ is its race judgment; it is judicially deprived of all those privileges and blessings which the knowledge of Christ as Messiah involves. We must, however, distinguish between the responsibility of a race and that of the individual. When the message comes to him personally, he cannot give as an excuse for non-acceptance the blinding of the mind and hardening of the heart of his race.

German-American, Milwaukee, Wis. Will the Red Cross in the field take care of American soldiers of German descent?

Assuredly it will. President Taft is quoted on this subject as follows: "While we intend to furnish neither money nor supplies to the Germans, we propose to regard the Geneva Convention of the Red Cross as completely and perfectly binding on us, and that therefore on the battlefield or elsewhere, when the German wounded come within the operation of our Red Cross units, they would be treated with the same consideration as our own wounded and the wounded of our Allies." If the Red Cross will do this for the Germans, how much more so for the American of German descent?

Mrs. E. H., Hamilton, Ill., sends this little incident: "Some time ago I put a Christian Herald on top of a case of eggs to send to a hotel. One of the employees, a Greek, took it home and was so interested that he sent me word it had helped him greatly, and asked if I would let him have every number. With the hope and prayer that it may help him spiritually, I am doing so." This is good missionary work and may furnish a hint to other readers.

Mrs. C., Bridgeport, Conn. The two trees named in Genesis as in the Garden of Eden were of a sacred character, and there has been a vast amount of speculation concerning them. The tree of knowledge of good and evil was a test of obedience on the part of our first parents; while the other tree is regarded by commentators as having been the means provided by divine wisdom as an antidote against sickness and bodily decay. They were called by the Hebrews "the trees of the lives." Their physical as well as their spiritual connection has been a subject of endless discussion. Some held that the tree of life was a "sacramental tree," by the eating of which man in his state of innocence kept himself in covenant with God; while the tree of knowledge, being forbidden to the eater, was the tree of obedience.

Herman J. Sonnenberg, manager of the savings bank of Public School No. 14, New York City, writes us an interesting letter about the most perfectly developed institution of its kind. He says: "About six years ago my principal suggested the idea of a school bank, and remarked that, if I thought well of it, I might proceed to organize one for our school and he would encourage it. After making a thorough study of the subject I organized the savings bank of Public School No. 14 on February 20, 1911. Since then, in the six years of its existence, we have saved for our pupils, over and above all withdrawals, more than forty-five thousand dollars! This is all the more remarkable when you consider that our school is located in one of the poorest neighborhoods of New York. I thought this report would interest your readers." The figures given by Dr. Sonnenberg are indeed interesting, and may furnish an inspiration to public schools throughout the country. The amount received from depositors during the term February 1, 1917, to June 29, 1917, was $5,988.78, and the amount withdrawn during the term was $1,675.38. New accounts opened during the term numbered 541. The average to the credit of each account was $4.19.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

The hot sand, cooled a bit by the nearness of the sea, became the bed of thousands who fled from burning pavements and sweltering tenements

Prostration and Death in Heat Wave

AUGUST came in on an almost unprecedented wave of heat and humidity. Intense heat which endured for forty-eight hours or longer in all parts of the Middle Atlantic States, New England and the Middle States caused scores of deaths, while prostrations throughout the wide area of the heat wave were recorded by thousands filling the hospitals.

A maximum temperature of 98 degrees at Chicago caused 32 deaths and 300 prostrations.

Twenty-nine deaths, fifteen of them of babies, resulted from a temperature of 102 in Cleveland and many prostrations were recorded. It was the hottest day in sixteen years at Philadelphia. The mercury mounted to 101, and 39 lives were the toll. The prostrations totaled nearly 300. Manufactories shut down and expanded rails closed traffic on the elevated lines.

At Pittsburg eleven persons were reported dead. One man became crazed and committed suicide. The maximum temperature was 92 degrees.

At Detroit a dozen died and a score were prostrated. The thermometer there recorded a maximum of 104.

Factories closed at Providence, Springfield, Boston, New Haven and Poughkeepsie.

In New York City it was the hottest time in the history of the Weather Bureau, which covers forty-seven years. This was determined by its average night-and-day temperature of 89 degrees, with a maximum of 98, though many street thermometers went over the 100 mark. One hundred and forty deaths due to the heat were reported in Greater New York and its environs on Tuesday and Wednesday. Most of these were in the city itself. Prostrations were reported in many hundreds. In Brooklyn there were 480 ambulance calls within 48 hours, breaking all records. Several cases of insanity and suicide figured among the consequences of the fierce heat in and around New York. Horses died by the score, and the intense heat went further in its search for victims, and killed even dogs and cats. Streets were ovenlike in temperature.

As night came on, bringing no relief, people from the poorer quarters of the city, where brick and asphalt still radiated heat, fled to the parks for comfort. Every "lung" of the city, from Central Park to the smallest plot of grass, became a dormitory for the poor. Tens of thousands slept on the grass. Even there they found it hard to sleep, for at midnight the temperature was high for even midday. All night long men, women and children lay upon blankets spread upon the hot earth, under the glare of a brazen moon. For the first time in many years the docks of the city were also turned over to those made homeless by the heat.

Hundreds of thousands crowded the beaches about New York and jammed the cars and boats running out of the city. At Coney Island 200,000 people sought what little surcease there was, and all other waterside resorts were as overcrowded.

The deaths were for the most part of infants and persons well past middle age, while most of the prostrations were of persons at work. In one Brooklyn department store 100 girls collapsed.

Scores and then hundreds of business establishments closed. Shopping was paralyzed and all other business slowed down.

The children of the crowded tenement sections suffered most. Chips of ice from the ice wagons and cold water from the hydrants were their chief relief. At one fire station a hose equipped with a spray steadily rained cooling comfort for thousands of little ones who came from far and near to dance and sing in the shower.

Children's welfare organizations have been more or less overlooked in the last year when charitable citizens have made their donations. While millions of dollars have been given to big war relief socieities, the various fresh air funds have been hard pressed for money with which to carry on their work.

Eighty thousand little children in hot New York are clamoring for a breath of country air and a romp through green meadows. They are school children, reported to be anemic or otherwise run down and much in need of a summer outing. Many of the fresh air societies have been obliged to shut down their camps or restrict their hospitality.

"The Prohibited Book"

By
I. H. CAMMACK

OUR principal evangelistic helper, Señorita Profesora V., tells us that when she was about twelve years of age she was hungry-hearted and eager to know about God and her eternal destiny. But her precious Testament, secured with difficulty—doubtless from Penzotti, now of Buenos Aires—was ruthlessly taken from her by her zealous mother at the instigation of the cura, and burned, being one of the church's "prohibited books."

A night station on a missionary route in Honduras

Now her aged mother walks several blocks four nights of the week to be present at our meetings and Bible classes, to accompany and hear this same daughter expound the book she once burned.

A happy and blessed change! A great light has arisen where hitherto was worse than Egyptian darkness.

When we came here, less than three years ago, Señorita V. bought a neat India paper Bible that she easily carries everywhere, and from which she drank in the "Water of Life." Ever since, she has been God's witness to her people, and has read the "prohibited Book" through and through repeatedly. Soon this old and formerly fanatical mother was heard weeping in the night, and moaning, "Why was I ever taught to love the santos so?" Now this mother is reviled in turn as an "Evangelista." Señorita V.'s sister, began searching the Bible "to see whether these things were so," but unfortunately betrayed the fact in the confessional, and was reproved and denied further reading of the "prohibited Book." In the manuals of religious instruction in Guatemala, Nicaragua and San Salvador, the second Mosaic commandment, forbidding idolatry, is omitted. There is a glaring emphasis placed on the feast days, to the obscuring of Sunday. The dire effects of this are seen in that Sunday is converted into the greatest of their market-days, their day for lottery drawings, elections both municipal and national, military enlistments and rallies, excursions, theaters, cock-fighting, diversions and dissipations, while on the feast days are the great religious processions and demonstrations and fastings. To complete the Ten Commandments, they divide the Mosaic tenth, and their ninth is a virtual repetition of their sixth.

The general animosity of the local church to the Bible here is often manifested by a cura's following a colporteur and demanding of purchasers their Bibles, and then either tearing them to shreds or publicly burning them.

One day I encountered one of the most intelligent curas of the country, who asked me why I had come here. I asked him why he did not circulate the Bible among the people. He replied that soon after he first came, he did put out 100 or 125 copies of the New Testament; but he doesn't do it now, and he dares not do it, because here it is a "prohibited Book."

Of course, in a land of the "prohibited Book" there is an intellectual and spiritual want, "a famine, not of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." Thanks to the Bible societies, and the very few missionaries, some light is dawning, though, strange to say, Honduras has fewer evangelical missionaries today than there were nineteen years ago.

It seems especially difficult for the churches of the United States to see beyond Mexico. Not much wonder, perhaps; for doubtless Mexico needs five times as many missionaries as she has. And when eyes are lifted up to see these South American lands, it seems to happen that the vision skips Central America and falls upon South America. In these days of Pan-Americanism we see plenty of representatives of "big business" coming in, but not many representatives of the biggest and best business in the world. Pray for Honduras.

The Senate Passes National Prohibition Resolution

ONE of the most important moral events of any country or century was the passage of the national prohibition resolution by the United States Senate on August 1. The magnitude of the victory was a surprise to the friends as well as the foes of the liquor traffic. The vote was 65 to 20, or more than three to one in favor of the measure—eight more than the necessary two-thirds majority, if all the members were present and voting.

It was over 100 degrees on the street outside, and the crowds that thronged the galleries kept their fans busy; but the senators seemed comparatively cool, very few of them using the fans which they had on their desks. The mental and moral temperature of the Senate, however, was very much above 100 degrees, for the vote was the climax of a three days' spirited debate.

When the hand of the clock struck four, on the afternoon of August 1, the ten-minute speeches of the day ended and amendments to the bill were offered. Senator Phelan of California offered an amendment providing that the states might vote on nation-wide prohibition in the full sense, and at the same time on the prohibition merely of distilled spirits. This would have permitted the sale of wine and beer, but the amendment was lost by 55 to 26.

Senator Stone of Missouri offered an amendment providing compensation for all persons and corporations losing money or other valuable assets through the destruction of the liquor business. He advocated his amendment with considerable feeling. The Senate rejected the amendment, 50 to 31. The only amendment to the resolution which was adopted was that of Senator Harding of Ohio, which imposed on the states the obligation of making their decision one way or the other on the question of a bone-dry nation within six years.

Senator Borah of Idaho made an impassioned speech against this amendment, claiming that it was unconstitutional. He himself offered an amendment that the limit be ten years instead of six, which was rejected. The Harding amendment, making the time limit of six years, was adopted, 55 to 23, Senator Sheppard, the father of the bill, voting for it, as he claimed that a number of senators who otherwise would have opposed, agreed, with that condition, to vote for the bill. Then, with senatorial dignity, but with intense excitement in the hearts of the members, the roll was called on the resolution, sending the question of nation-wide prohibition down to the legislatures of the states for consideration and action. This was the resolution voted upon:

Section 1. The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution within six years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Section 3. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The affirmative vote, in which party lines were entirely disregarded, was as follows:

Democrats: Ashurst, Arizona; Bankhead, Alabama; Beckham, Kentucky; Chamberlain, Oregon; Fletcher, Florida; Gore, Oklahoma; Hollis, New Hampshire; Jones, New Mexico; Kendrick, Wyoming; King, Utah; Kirby, Arkansas; McKellar, Tennessee; Martin, Virginia; Myers, Montana; Newlands, Nevada; Overman, North Carolina; Owen, Oklahoma; Pittsman, Nevada; Ransdell, Louisiana; Robinson, Arkansas; Saulsbury, Delaware; Shafroth, Colorado; Sheppard, Texas; Shields, Tennessee; Simmons, North Carolina; Smith, Arizona; Smith, Georgia; Smith, South Carolina; Stone, Missouri; Swanson, Virginia; Thompson, Kansas; Trammel, Florida; Vardaman, Mississippi; Walsh, Montana; Williams, Mississippi, and Wolcott, Delaware—36.

Republicans: Borah, Idaho; Brady, Idaho; Colt, Rhode Island; Cummins, Iowa; Curtis, Kansas; Fernald, Maine; Frelinghuysen, New Jersey; Gronna, North Dakota; Hale, Maine; Harding, Ohio; Johnson, California; Jones, Washington; Kellogg, Minnesota; Kenyon, Iowa; Knox, Pennsylvania; La Follette, Wisconsin; McCumber, North Dakota; McNary, Oregon; New, Indiana; Nelson, Minnesota; Norris, Nebraska; Page, Vermont; Poindexter, Washington; Sherman, Illinois; Smith, Michigan; Smoot, Utah; Sterling, South Dakota; Sutherland, West Virginia, and Watson, Indiana—29.

The same resolution will now go before the House of Representatives, where, when it is considered, either soon or at the December session, it is regarded by friends of prohibition as fairly sure to have the two-thirds majority needed. The President's signature will not be necessary to make this measure a law. There are 26 dry states now; 36 are needed for the necessary three-fourths for ratification of the amendment. The six-year time-limit will be the occasion of a whirlwind campaign in favor of this national measure among the states, and the leaders in the prohibition movement believe they will need but four years to secure the number of states.

The vote in the Senate justifies the ability of a democracy to sense and abolish its own moral evils, however strongly entrenched with money or however colossal in political influence. It has proven that in a republic the votes of people as reflected in their representatives at the capital of a nation is all powerful and in this instance is right. The cause of humanity and national righteousness has taken a long step forward in this action of the Senate.

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART.

Where Sacrifice Meets Recompense

By PASTOR CHARLES WAGNER, Author of the Simple Life

A FRIEND in need is a fine thing. The Christian Herald and its readers have shown themselves such to me, and to those whom this time of great tribulation has brought to my attention.

If since the beginning of the war I have been able to give you and your readers only very rare indications of my gratitude, it has been due to the state of my health and the very heavy burden of work I have to bear. Happily, my health is being restored, and though sixty-five years of age, I have been able to do in 1916 and 1917 a large amount of work. Thanks for your good wishes. I hold to your one wish "that the years which remain to me in which to do work may be the best of all," and I pray to our Father in heaven to make the wish come true which you have expressed for me with so much affection.

I have spoken of the use that is being made of the relief fund which you send us for the Widows and Orphans of the War. We use it with economy and good judgment, and only in special cases. In that way it will last for a longer time. We have thought also that if up to the present time we have offered our aid to all without distinction as to faith, it might be wise from now on to reserve the better part of what we have left for Protestant families. Especially shall we help those who have suffered most deeply. In this class the northern provinces shall have a special place. The Protestant Relief Society will be our intermediary.

It will interest our benefactors to know some particulars concerning the cases to which the Christian Herald's gifts have been applied.

French orphans, some of them born fatherless, who have fallen into kindly hands

NATURALLY, all our young ministers have been mobilized. A number, while away, have undergone awful trials. Their churches have been destroyed and their families made homeless, sometimes having lost all their furnishings. Other ministers, living among very poor congregations, who were unable to pay any contribution, have had the worst anxiety for their wives and children. Here, for example, is a family of nine children, most of them quite young. We have been able to support them effectively and to assure them of the near future. Thus several ministers who are serving as litter-bearers, chaplains, or even plain soldiers, have had their minds set at rest as to the welfare of their families. Another case is that of a minister who died during the war. His very modest position was that of an ordinary auxiliary. The help his widow receives is extremely small. She is young and brave; but she has four children, to which is added a fifth. To avoid being compelled to work outside at such a time, we give her enough to remain at home until her infant is at least a few months old.

A soldier-minister has had the sorrow of seeing his town invaded, and his family led into captivity. He learns that they have been returned to their country, tired out and suffering; but, being a soldier, what can he do for them? We heard of his distress and we made an allowance from the Fund sufficient to give the returned captives a place to lodge and to care for their immediate necessities.

Here now are cases among artists, teachers, and other persons who make an honorable living in ordinary times, but many of them are now actually disabled and unfitted to take the employment reserved for the working class or the indigent. A sculptor aged seventy-five, who can view some of his works in our public squares, but who has no fortune now, finds himself reduced to a point where he has been compelled to open his heart to us. We have made sure that he receives enough to live decently. He lately found some little work and at once told us of it. We have come to the aid of poor teachers who were sick and without pupils. We have helped parents to leave at the seashore their sick children, who are being treated for maladies which needed the sea-air cure.

A POOR young girl who made a living by giving lessons, supported at the same time her old mother, a worthy woman, an Alsatian, all of whose modest revenues had been confiscated in Alsace. The girl died. We have helped the mother. Her two sons are both soldiers (one of them a prisoner). A poor old couple inhabiting a broken-down hut outside the village were found in a terrible situation. The husband was ill in bed and the woman worn out by prolonged fatigue. They believed themselves forgotten by God and man. I came to them and said, "God has sent me to you. Do not grieve; I shall not leave you." I told them that our American friends of the Christian Herald made my coming to the rescue possible. All who receive any part of the Fund you have kindly sent me are informed about it, so they have a feeling of brotherhood which passes over the limits of the frontiers of their country, and of a helpful kindness which seeks them out from afar to prove to them that they are being thought of.

But it is most largely the widows and orphans who receive assistance from us. At first their condition is sometimes terrible. The Central Committee of Protestant Orphans of the War has notified us of many pitiful cases and we have found others by our own means. Our own investigators have verified reports of conditions at the homes of those who appeal to us. Our first gifts of assistance to this class have drawn attention to our mission—the Foyer de l'Ame ("Home of the Soul"). They appealed to us in crowds. When the greater part of the original fund had been distributed, we preferred to adopt the new system (of which I wrote you in an earlier letter), which consists in no longer occupying ourselves with any except the most necessitous cases. To these we have been able to render more substantial aid. In several cases we gave small monthly allowances.

MADAME WAGNER and my daughter Susan have, at the Foyer de l'Ame, an employment bureau. We give mothers of families paid work to do at home, furnishing from our Fund linens and woolens. We also distribute eatables, dry beans, rice, etc., and thus help a great many. For the coming winter, I am even laying in a supply of wood in order to be able, if necessary, to give some means of heating to the sick. Last winter fuel was so scarce that the sick poor often suffered. For this special work I have funds from my own parishioners; but I have been enabled, thanks to the gift of the Christian Herald, to give the advantages of our organization to families which we could not help without that, and for this we are very grateful.

You have sent us, before this present remittance, 51,600 francs and 13,466 francs. The last remittance you sent amounted to 28,312 francs, and it has been deposited in bank, which pays us 3 per cent. Foreseeing a hard winter, we are going to leave this latest gift intact as much as possible, and will spend from it, during the fine season, only what is strictly necessary. It will be something to fall back on during the "bad days."

Since Palm Sunday, 1917, the people of France no longer regard America only as a friend who from afar pities the sufferings of those who are fighting for right, justice and liberty. America is going to bear her part of the crushing burden which has weighed heavily for three years upon our shoulders. Her presence at our side will not only be a comfort and a pledge of victory, but one more proof of the righteousness of our cause.

To you, dear Christian Herald, and to your readers, I send in our name a grateful greeting. May God be your Guide. CHARLES WAGNER.

Paris, June 28.

◆

Lutheran Jubilee Convention

"THIS convention has met under most extraordinary circumstances," said the Rev. F. Pfotenhauer, president of the Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and Other States, in his official address at the Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis. "In the world a dreadful war is raging, which has drawn nearly all the nations into the maelstrom. In the church preparations are being made to celebrate a great festival of thanksgiving—the 400th anniversary of the Reformation. Even in war times, the church is not to relax her efforts, but is to prosecute the work of the Lord with renewed zeal, just as the farmer redoubles his efforts to gather in his grain when the murky clouds impend, the lightnings flash, and the distant thunder rolls. In the midst of this scourge of war, the hearts of men are more and more being turned to the simple Bible faith of the Reformation."

More than 800 accredited delegates, representing 4,170 congregations in the United States and Canada, were in attendance.

Questions of great interest came up for discussion. The word "German" was dropped from the title of the "Missouri" Synod, because that body has been for a number of years bilingual, with English gradually forging to the front. The official title now is "The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and Other States," the words "Missouri" and "Ohio" indicating where the cradle of the Synod stood when it was organized in 1847.

The following absolutely necessary appropriations were made: $140,000 for educational institutions of Synod; donations of $112,000 from members of Synod for the colleges at St. Paul, Minn., Seward, Neb., Ft. Wayne, Ind., Bronxville, N. Y., and for the Seminary at Springfield, Ill., were gratefully acknowledged by Synod; $241,000 were appropriated for mission work at home and abroad. Synod now has 733 missions, the largest being in Brazil, Argentina and India. The recommendation that Synod appoint a Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains was unanimously adopted.

A meeting of lay delegates discussed synodical finances and a movement was started to liquidate the present indebtedness in the general treasury and the Building Fund. An organization was formed to be known as "Lutheran Laymen's League," which pledged itself to raise $100,000 by October 31.

The following congregations were received into membership: Zion, Kalamazoo, Mich.; St. John's, Farmington, N. Y.; Redeemer, Orange, N. J.; Peace, Scranton, Pa.; Concordia, Bronxville, N. Y.; Emmanuel, Adell, Wis. Forty-seven pastors and eleven teachers were also admitted to membership.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Pastor F. Pfotenhauer, Chicago, Ill.; First Vice-President, Pastor J. W. Miller, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Second Vice-President, Pastor J. Hilgendorf, Omaha, Neb.; Third Vice-President, Pastor F. Brand, Springfield, Ill.; Fourth Vice-President, Pastor H. P. Eckhardt, Pittsburg, Pa.; Secretary, Pastor R. Biedermann, Springfield, Ill.; Treasurer, Edmund Seuel, St. Louis, Mo. Detroit, Mich., was chosen as the convention city for 1920.

W. M. CZAMANSKE.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

ДА ЗДРАВСТВУЕТЪ
БЕЗПЛАТНОЕ НАРОДНОЕ
ОБРАЗОВАНІЕ

"Long live free public education" cries the banner raised by these Russian children, who marched to the Duma to plead for free public schools

FOOD BILL ALMOST READY. The Conference Committee of the Senate and House, after more than a week of discussion, finally reached an agreement on August 1 on the Food Administration Bill. After having agreed on all other points, the committee seemed to be hopelessly deadlocked over the provision inserted by the Senate for creating a congressional War Advisory Board. The Senate conferees, however, finally yielded to the House, and the amendment was dropped. The House conferees also succeeded in restoring the provision for a single food administrator, although the Senate had voted by a majority of 60 to 16 for a board of three men. The conference bill provided for the prohibition of distilled liquors and directed the President to commandeer all stocks in bonded warehouses and elsewhere, giving to the President also power to stop the making of beer and wine if he considered such action essential for the conservation of food products. The House promptly accepted the conference report, on August 3, 357 to 0, but it was predicted that the report would meet considerable opposition in the Senate, although final acceptance was also expected there.

UNCLE SAM'S BUYER. A War Industries Board of three members has been formed under the chairmanship of Frank A. Scott of Cleveland, who has been serving as chairman of the General Munitions Board. The other members of the Board are Lieutenant Colonel Palmer E. Pierce, Rear Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, Bernard M. Baruch of New York, Robert S. Brookings of St. Louis, Robert S. Lovett, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Union Pacific System, and Hugh Frayne, chief organizer of the American Federation of Labor. This board will supervise the expenditure of the billions of dollars which will be appropriated for the various expanded services of the national government. A Central Purchasing Commission of three members has been formed within the larger committee. Mr. Baruch, Mr. Brookings and Mr. Lovett will constitute this inner committee, which will serve in association with Mr. Hoover where the question of foodstuffs is concerned. The board is expected to act as a clearing-house for the war industrial needs of the government, to determine the most effective ways of meeting those needs and the best means and methods of increasing production, including the creation or extension of industries.

Just Wait a Week

SHALL we retain or lose our South American trade? Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, through whose eyes we saw Argentina in the Christian Herald of August 1, brings us next week the answer to this question in a striking story of commercial possibilities, and of national outreach in Argentina's near neighbor, Uruguay.

What would be Jesus' message to the city? Pastor Herman Prange of Minneapolis approaches it in next week's Christian Herald.

What of the Magdalens in heathendom? Maynard Owen Williams next week tells the story of the Door of Hope.

For nearly five months we have been following the Road to Understanding with Burke and Helen Denby. The end of the road of misunderstanding and heartache comes next week.

You have only three weeks to wait for "The Witness," Mrs. Grace Livingston Hill Lutz' strong new serial, watch for the Christian Herald of September 5.

IT'S UP TO THE WOMEN. President Wilson on July 29 issued an appeal to the women of the nation in city, town and country, urging them to take immediate steps, through the processes of canning, preserving, pickling, drying and storing, to avoid the threatened loss of great quantities of perishable fruits and vegetables. The National Volunteer Committee on the preserving of fruit and garden products, of which A. D. Lasker, of Lord & Thomas of Chicago, is chairman, is organizing the women of the nation for the conservation and preservation of food, which because of the shortage of tin containers will have to be largely done in glass jars. The women of New York State are also working with the State Commissioner of Food and Markets in an endeavor to organize a system whereby clubs of consumers will be organized to deal directly with organizations of producers. . . . The reserve banks have been authorized to make loans to growers of potatoes and to local dealers on the security of potatoes in storage.

PICKING AN ARMY. All of the exemption boards in the greater city of New York posted on July 30 the official calls to the individuals whom the draft had marked as the first to serve their country and the examination of possible soldiers began on July 31. Provost Marshal General Crowder demanded of every exemption board absolute fairness. The public was warned against any attempt to influence the boards. Employers were also appealed to to use conscientious and scrupulous caution in the preparation of affidavits declaring men subject to the draft to be indispensable to their organizations. Some disappointment was expressed by various officials at the result of the first few days' examination, due to the large number of rejections by the medical examiners, and also to the very large number of men who were accepted but who indicated that they would claim exemption under various pretexts. In the whole day of August 1, two boards in New York City examined 171 men, only 49 of whom could physically qualify and were willing to serve without making exemption claims. It has been expressly stated by the Provost Marshal General that in the matter of exemption "It is the interest of the nation solely that must be subserved." It goes without saying that a large number of exemption claims will not be allowed. As the examinations proceeded, fewer men claimed exemption and more declared their willingness to serve under the colors. In many of the cities, large alien populations threaten to force every American citizen in certain districts into the army on the first call, and some dissatisfaction has arisen over this situation. The Senate on August 1 took remedial action by passing the McCumber Resolution, calling upon the President to enter into negotiations with friendly powers looking to the conscription in the American army or navy of their nationals in the United States. The Senators were a unit in feeling that the citizen or subject of any of the nations at war with Germany could not be permitted to find refuge in this country, especially as he would profit personally by the labor scarcity caused by the turning of American manhood from

Continued on page 872

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

VI. The Place of the Church in the Plan of Redemption

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

THUS far in our studies, almost nothing has been said about the Church, and for the reason that we have been dealing chiefly with the Old Testament, in which the Church is not named. The Kingdom of God is there in evidence, the Church being reserved for the present age.

Paul refers to this interestingly in the last chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, at verses 25 and 26. He is speaking of his Gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ, and alludes to it as "the mystery which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made . . . known to all nations for the obedience of faith." In other words, it was not revealed in the Old Testament; but for reasons already touched upon, and to be more particularly explained later on, it was kept until the occasion and the need for it appeared, after the rejection of Jesus Christ as the King of the promised Kingdom.

In his Epistle to the Colossians (1 : 23–27), the same apostle touches upon it from another angle. In the sufferings incident to his ministry he is filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ for his body's sake, which is the Church." Of this Church he was made a minister according to a special "dispensation" or "stewardship" given him of God for the Gentiles, "to fully preach the Word of God." This fuller preaching meant the revelation of that "mystery which had been hid from all ages and generations, but now is made manifest to the saints." And if we ask what that mystery is, we find it to be the indwelling of Christ in his believing people.

Nor does this mean merely his indwelling in the believer as an individual, but, and because of that, his indwelling in the Church, considered as his mystical body, of which the individual believer is a member by faith.

Even more clearly does he express this in Eph. 3 : 3–9. This "mystery" had been given to him, Paul, by revelation, which in other ages had not been made known unto the sons of men. And as to its essence, it was this: "That the Gentiles [with the believing Jews] should be fellow heirs and fellow members of the Body and fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the Gospel."

II

A LITTLE reflection will lead us to see a kind of parallel here between Israel in the Old Testament and the Church in the New.

After the world may have been said to have rejected God, as instanced at the tower of Babel (Gen. 11), he then chose the nation of Israel (as yet in the loins of Abraham), to be his witness to the world and his instrument in the execution of his original promise of redemption (Gen. 3 : 15). (See our second study on "God's Covenant with Abraham.") And so now, after the world has again rejected him in the person of his Son Jesus Christ, he chose the Church, which is called the body of Christ (Eph. 1 : 22, 23), to be his witness to the world and his instrument in this later age for the execution of that promise.

In other words, the Church did not come into being until after the death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ. Its birthday indeed was Pentecost (Acts 2). So says the distinguished church historian and theologian, Dr. Philip Schaff, in his admirable catechism, where he puts and answers the question:

"Who founded the Christian Church?

"Our exalted Saviour, on the fiftieth day after his resurrection, by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon his disciples at Jerusalem. Refs.: Matt. 16 : 18; Acts 2 : 1–11; 1 Cor. 3 : 11; Eph. 2 : 20."

And to the same purport the Methodist standard theologian, Richard Watson, says, in commenting on Matt. 18 : 17: "The apostles who followed Christ may be considered as the elements of his Church at the time, but it could scarce be considered as constituted until after the day of Pentecost, when regular assemblies under apostolic direction were formed, the worship of God arranged, the Supper of the Lord administered, and the terms of communion mutually acknowledged. Christ therefore must be understood as speaking prospectively (i. e. in Matt. 18 : 17)."

We like the way Dr. Schaff expresses it, because the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was absolutely essential to the forming of the Church into the body of Christ. For example, in Matt. 16 : 18 we find Christ saying, evidently with reference to the future, "I will build my Church," while subsequent Scriptures show that he proposed to build it not from the outside but from the inside. As carrying out this thought, note that on the night in which he was betrayed he said to his disciples that the Holy Spirit who then dwelt with them would be in them (John 14 : 17). Again, after his resurrection he commanded them to remain in Jerusalem until they should be baptized with the Holy Spirit (Acts 1 : 5).

Is it not reasonable to suppose that the event at Pentecost, ten days after his ascension, was the fulfillment of both of these promises in one (Acts 2 : 1–4)? As they were then filled with the Holy Spirit, had he not come to dwell in them, and was not this equivalent to baptizing them?

Take Paul's testimony as to this, in I Cor. 12 : 12, 13. There he speaks of believers as being one body with Christ, and affirms that we were baptized into this body by one Spirit.

It was like this: The believers were all assembled with one accord in one place, ready to be made an organism, ready to be incorporated into Christ. He, the Head of the proposed organism, was on high, but he now sends down his Spirit to dwell in every one of them. His Spirit is one, and since he dwells alike in every believer, he necessarily unites them to the Head, and in doing so unites them one to another in the Head. Thus the body is formed, for "he that is joined to the Lord is one Spirit" (I Cor. 6 : 17).

NOW, this body of Christ has a particular, and, in a sense, a limited, work to do on the earth. Several of the Pauline Scriptures refer to it, but just now we choose Eph. 4 : 1–16. Passing over the opening verses, which instruct us how to keep this unity of the Spirit which Christ has made for us, we come to verse 7, where the gifts are spoken of which the Head of the body bestows upon the members. These are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers (verse 11). And for what purpose were these gifts bestowed? "For the perfecting of the saints," is the answer (verse 12). And why are the saints perfected? "Unto the work of ministering for the building up of the Body of Christ" (R. V.).

This last is deeply interesting. The apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, considered as gifts to the Church, are not in themselves an end, but only a means to an end. Their purpose is to equip the whole company of believers to engage in the work of Christian ministering, each according to his or her capacity. And the object of this general ministry on the part of all is "the building up of the Body of Christ" the increase of its membership, the completion of it as an organism, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (verse 13).

The "perfect man" in this case does not mean the individual man, but the corporate man rather. It means that MAN we conceive of when we think of Christ as the Head and the Church as his body. When that MAN is perfected, that mystical organism complete, in other words, when God has called out from among the nations all whom he intends in order to form the Church, then Christ shall have attained, and we in Christ shall have attained, the measure of the stature of his fulness.

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

DURING the whole of the past week, the Russian retreat on the Galician front from the north in the outskirts of Brody, to the southern boundary, between Galicia and Bukowina, continued completely unchecked. Only at scattered points and for brief periods did the Russians make any attempt to stop the advance of the Austro-Germans, and none of these attempts were crowned with more than momentary success. From the northern end of the Galician front as far as the river Dniester—a distance of approximately 175 miles—the Russian armies have now retreated completely from Austrian territory and fallen back on Russian soil, where they have been followed by the Teutons.

There was some expectation that the Russians would make an attempt to stand along the east bank of the river Sereth, but no stand of any importance was made by the Russians on this eastern bank, nor on the heights east of the river Obrocz, which form the boundary line between Galicia and Russia.

South of the Dniester river to the frontier of Bukowina, the story is much the same. The Russian troops have fallen steadily backward to the east and the indications are that the southern front of Galicia will probably be completely evacuated by the Russians and the whole of Galicia, for the first time since the beginning of the war, be in the possession of the Austrians.

Turning to the Crownland of Bukowina (which lies immediately to the south of Galicia, and on the east extends to the Russian frontier), the same condition of a general Russian retreat prevails. Driving westward along this entire front, on the northern end of their line, the Austro-Germans on August 1 had reached a point within a few miles of Czernowitz, the capital of the Crownland, which has so often changed hands during the war. From this point to the southern border of Bukowina the Austro-German line is steadily moving eastward.

In Rumania, the Russo-Rumanian troops have developed an offensive in the Casin and Putna valleys. These two valleys on the northwestern frontier of Rumania run westward into Transylvania and there the Russo-Rumanians have made considerable progress and have captured a dozen or so mountain villages, besides a considerable number of prisoners. It does not seem that this offensive can be long continued. As soon as the Austro-Germans to the north, moving eastward through Bukowina, reach the east frontier of the Crownland, it will be easy for them to turn south and seize the eastern ends of these two valleys. In the Galicia and Bukowina retreats, the Russian armies have lost very heavily, through desertion and capture, not only in men, but more particularly in artillery and in munitions of war.

The internal situation in Russia, as far as an organized or harmonious government is concerned, remains bad. Kerensky, after declaring that "the spector of anarchy needs to be obliterated," and that "stout hearts and stern hands are needed for the task," has summoned to Petrograd Generals Russky and Gurko, to whom he is expected shortly to add Generals Brusiloff and Korniloff, with the ultimate purpose, it is believed, of organizing these leaders as a supreme military council, with full authority over the army. The death penalty, which was abolished in the army in the early days of the revolution, has been reintroduced, and summary court martials are said to be inflicting this punishment on large numbers of Russian soldiers for insubordination, cowardice and desertion, in the effort to restore some semblance of discipline. The Provisional Government has called a convention of leaders of Russian opinion to meet in Moscow the 20th of August, as has also closed the Russian frontier to all arrivals and departures until August 15.

General von Falkenhayn, formerly chief of the German general staff has been appointed to the supreme command of the Turkish forces in Asia. There is no news of any interest from the war fronts in the Caucasus, Mesopotamia or Southern Palestine.

There has been much official discussion of "Peace" during the past week, notably by the German and Austrian premiers and also by Mr. Balfour and Mr. Asquith. While all this talk has lead to no positive results, nevertheless the fact that so much time and thought are being devoted to the discussion of this subject is regarded as a favorable omen. The financial markets of the world continue to act as though they were discounting the approach of peace.

Unimportant skirmishes and local artillery duels were all that took place on the Austro-Italian front during the week.

Submarine activity continues. During the week the British lost the old cruiser Ariadne of 11,000 tons, which was torpedoed and sunk, presumably in the British channel, which sinking was announced on July 30 by the British Admiralty. Thirty-eight of her crew of 677 officers and men were lost with the ship.

The Batavia II, which the Germans captured from the British in 1916, was recaptured by a British submarine off the Belgian coast during the week; but the submarine being unable to bring her into a British port, she was sunk.

On the British portion of the western front the artillery duel which was mentioned last week has been in progress all the week, though abating in intensity toward the close. According to the British, the Germans have concentrated the greatest number of guns in this region they have ever massed in any section on the western front, and are using them to their full capacity. Otherwise the only incident worthy of note was the capture by the British of the town of La Bassée. They were driven out by a strong German counter-attack. In this affair, both sides took some prisoners.

Continued on page 872

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

Noon-Time Prayer

ONE of the strongest evidences of the spiritual reawakening that has developed in recent years is the wonderful increase in noon-time prayer. A great multitude of godly men and women, having the world's burden on their hearts, have chosen the busiest time of the day in which to step aside, singly or in groups, for a brief communion with God. To consecrate a section of the middle of the day to this duty is wise and logical. In the diurnal routine, the noontide prayer is an oasis, a well in the desert, where the water issues from the eternal springs, giving new strength and courage.

The widely scattered Christian Herald Prayer League is not the only body of Christians who are banded together for united prayer at the noon hour. In every state, wherever "two or three are met together," their united supplications are ascending simultaneously to the throne of grace, for the world's redemption and for the overcoming of the evils that now afflict it. Some of these bodies are affiliated with church organizations, but there are many outside of denominational lines that have grown accustomed to the noon-time petition. There is a Prayer League connected with the Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church which takes the noon hour for its supplication. In the large body of Christians banded together as "Comrades of the Morning Watch," many find noon the most acceptable time to keep their pledge. The Christian Endeavor Society has recently issued an appeal to all Christians to unite with the members of that society in daily prayer at noon. The Christian Endeavor Prayer League is intended especially to help the President and the nation in the present crisis, and those in sympathy with the Endeavor are asked to pray as follows:

"For our nation—that its principles of liberty and justice, its love of freedom and its Christian ideals may be maintained; for cleansing from sin, national and personal; for the President and all who are associated with him; for the sailors and soldiers and all who in any way help in the defense of our country at home and abroad; for all who are engaged in the merciful ministry of caring for the wounded, the sick and the hungry; for our enemies that they may come to know the truth and seek peace; for an early peace founded upon righteousness, justice and love."

We may be sure that a lasting peace must be a righteous peace. We may be sure also that the sincere prayer of Christian hearts, earnestly desiring justice first, will prove to be a leaven in all nations that will work toward the lasting peace for which the whole world hopes.

Prohibition

HE would have been a bold man indeed who, six months ago, would have dared to declare his confidence in the passage by the Upper House of the National Legislature of a measure providing for nation-wide prohibition. Yet this is precisely what occurred in the United States Senate on August 1, when by 65 to 20 that body adopted the Sheppard resolution, calling for a vote of the legislatures of the forty-eight states upon a constitutional amendment for nation-wide prohibition, and requiring that the necessary three-fourths vote of the states must be taken within six years from the date of final passage by the House otherwise the resolution would die automatically.

The passage of the resolution is an index of the tremendous revolution in public opinion which the country has undergone. State after state has been swept into the dry line. So strong has the current set in that, at the time of writing, no one need be surprised if the resolution which now goes to the House should secure a two-thirds vote there, as it did in the Senate. Further, the resolution does not require the President's signature if passed by the House, as, being the joint product of conferees of both bodies, if the House adopts it it has all the effect of law. Even if the House of Representatives should fail to pass the measure, prohibition will still have scored a notable victory through the Senate vote. Even though the final outcome be deferred, all the forces of temperance will be energized with the confidence of coming victory.

Prohibition has won the day in Porto Rico—the first of the Latin-American colonies to go bone dry. Out of upwards of 160,000 votes cast, 99,775 were for prohibition. When it is considered that 70 per cent. of the voters in the colony are illiterate, the result is all the more significant as showing that the working classes fully realized the vital importance of the struggle to protect their country, their homes and their children from the liquor evil.

Never have the skies looked so bright to the friends of temperance as now. Never has the dream of a sober nation come so close to realization.

Censors Here and Elsewhere

A GOOD deal of fun has been indulged at the expense of the censorship in Washington, and we are not surprised at the report that Mr. Creel has recommended that the Committee on Public Information be relieved of any further censoring of newspaper dispatches. This we take to be a recognition of the fact that the censorship has resulted in a tangle so hopeless that nobody in official service seems to know just what the newspapers should or should not print. A striking illustration of how a censorship may become oppressive and pernicious can be learned from the experience of the Japanese newspapers. In Japan the general impression has been that a good deal of latitude was allowed to the press. This impression, however, was wrong, and the Japanese censor or Board of Censors has been conducting business with a vigor that might give points to our own censor. In a recent debate in the Japanese House of Representatives, the freedom of the press was keenly criticized by some influential members. A leading Osaka journal took the House sharply to task for making light of the mission of the press, when it should be acknowledged as the chief guardian of popular rights and constitutional government. The Osaka paper pointed out that freedom of expression is the basis of all other forms of freedom, and that every species of tyranny begins with the suppression of this fundamental liberty. Now, inquiry shows that since the Terauchi cabinet took office there have been no less than 300 instances of suppression among publications. It is recalled by the Herald of Asia, published in Tokio, that under the Okuma administration instances of suppression of the press for offenses against public peace and order totaled 487. From all of which it is quite evident that the censorship in Japan is not a sinecure. In our own case, public opinion has come to the unanimous conclusion that a censorship here is an anomaly, and that the decision as to what is or is not suitable for publication may be safely left to the honor of the American press, which is the natural guardian of the rights of the people. "The Liberty of the press is the true measure of all other liberty," is a saying that deserves to be remembered.

A Defense of the Pilgrim

"HAS not The Pilgrim's Progress," writes a reader, "done the world more harm than good? The Pilgrim, it seems to me, was simply living to save his own dear soul, and never tried to help any one else."

It may be doubted if many of us ever got any such view of Bunyan's great allegory. In man's right relationship to God and his fellow-men there is considerably more than can be put into any one book of mere human production. Indeed, there is a good deal more than is expressed in all literature.

Bunyan sought in the character of the Pilgrim to present the one idea of life which he considered the central force of right living. The fact that millions have derived inspiration and good purpose from his book is material proof that he sounded the depths of truth. The figure of the Pilgrim stands for courage, renunciation, persistence in the right, power to resist temptation, and the ability to see through the mists of the valley to the shining heights of the Delectable Mountains.

Bunyan necessarily used the crude religious language of his day and was limited by the narrow religious thought of his time; but, after all, he constructed an allegory that is as true now as when it was written. Floods and winds and frosts may turn the current and shift the bed of the stream, but its fountain source in the heart of the hills remains unchanged. And truth that springs from a righteous soul stays sweet through the ages.

Suppose the Pilgrim did seek only "to save his own soul." Helpfulness to mankind is an essential and inseparable part of that effort. Does not the blade of wheat climbing upward toward the sun, because it the better succeeds in this, bear better grain? Is not righteousness always of human helpfulness? We lift ourselves only in lifting others.

There is enough in the character of the Pilgrim to make the greatest allegory ever written by mere man. But it is only an allegory. It treats only of the strivings of the soul. For full interpretation it must be taken to the great Book of divine truth and to the great book of human life. To know the Pilgrim well, to sense fully his real meaning, we must place him in the conditions that confront us all every day. Perhaps he may thus furnish the key to many perplexities. He may put strength and gentleness into many a hand extended to the weak and erring.

Frugality Always in Season

PRUDENCE in expenditure, particularly now, is evidence of sanity, of right living and right thinking.

What we possess today is often but so much evidence of what needless things we did without yesterday.

Ready cash is the greatest moving force in the business world. It speaks with the loudest voice. It clutches things with the firmest grip. It commands the surest confidence in self and of others.

John Wanamaker's first pay was only $1.20 a week, and he walked four miles to and from work each day to save a part of it as a cornerstone for the gigantic fortune he has built. John D. Rockefeller still has the little book in which he kept strict account of every penny at a time when his salary was infinitely smaller than that of any of the vast army of men working for him today.

Not all of us can be Wanamakers or Rockefellers, nor want to be; but their experiences point out very clearly the way to money-making through money-keeping, and most of us can, if we will, go a reasonable length in that direction.

And for frugality there are other uses than getting rich. James A. Garfield, teaching school at $12 a month, saved money to carry him through college. Young Abe Lincoln denied himself comforts and walked fifty miles to buy a single book. The notable instances of frugality by which men have worked themselves up in the world would fill volumes. Most of the really great men of the past, and of the present, in all lines of endeavor, are self-made—made through their own self-denial, fixed purpose and helpful habits.

Stinginess and greed are to be abhorred. They are at the one extreme, while profligacy and carelessness are at the other. The golden mean of saving thrift is to be found half-way between.

Happy Old Age

A WOMAN has declared that at 106 she is in better health and happier than at any previous time in her life.

Surely, a woman who is healthy at 106 ought to be happy. She would have to be happy to be healthy.

None but a happy disposition could carry one through so many years. A gloomy temperament would strangle life out of the body long before the age of 106.

The human body can no more thrive in shadow than can a rose.

We live by desire to live. Enjoyment of and zest in life are a constant source of life supply.

Old age ought to be the happiest period of life, particularly for a woman. If she has kept her mind active and has wisely refused to settle into the dull rut that people always have ready for her, she can begin in old age to enjoy life in earnest.

In old age there is no more worry about the babies, no more suffering for others. The children are grown up, and, if her part has been well done, they are a prop and a solace to her. Grandchildren are a delight without the bitter constant worry.

The woman grown old in years should be at her best mentally. She is free to indulge her tastes, enjoy a good book and the conversation of genial minds.

Women retain their vitality and spirits longer than men do. The burdens of life fall from them gradually, and the peace of retirement from active duties comes upon them little by little and almost imperceptibly.

The man often must suffer at once the shock of laying down the business to which his life has been devoted, and afterward there is less to tie him to existence.

But the woman grows into her new condition naturally and she unconsciously adapts herself to it.

Insurance people hold the woman's life to be a greater risk than the man's until the period of maternal sufferings and cares are over. After that she is a better risk than the man.

The woman old in years but young in spirit is the sweetest blessing mankind knows.

If her life is not as sweet a blessing to herself as it is to others it is because she has failed to find pleasurable occupations in place of the enforced ones which have fallen from her.

There is nothing more pathetic than idle and dull old age. And nothing more beautiful and sweet than age that is active and alert and, in consequence, happy.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Woman Congressman Aids Women

MISS RANKIN, the woman representative in Congress from Montana, never misses an opportunity to befriend her sex. She recently engaged a woman detective and investigator to aid her in the campaign for better working conditions for the female employees of the Government Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Operating under an assumed name, she gathered evidence which Miss Rankin is to use in her coming demand for a congressional investigation of the bureau. The efforts of Miss Rankin for a shorter working day at the government engraving and printing establishment have already resulted in an order by Secretary McAdoo restoring the eight-hour day. A special committee named by the Secretary is expected to recommend other changes desired by female employees in the bureau. It is charged that many of the women were compelled to work twelve and fourteen hours a day. It ought not to be necessary to employ detectives or to institute inquiries to secure justice for women at the hands of a government like ours. It is a wrong thing to subject a man to too long hours of work, and to too burdensome a task; it is a still worse thing to grind a woman to long hours and excessively exhausting toil. We trust that it will be shown that as a rule in most departments of the government the women employees are treated justly. It is the proper thing for Congress as well as for the individual to remember this command: "Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant." (Deut. 24 : 14.)

Dog Stops Town Clock

THE big city clock in the 600-foot tower on College Hill, Atlanta, Ga., was stopped the other day by a dog. When City Timekeeper Williamson went to wind the clock, a dog followed him. The timekeeper left without noticing that he had locked the dog in the clock. For two days, without water or food, the dog whined and barked 600 feet above the city, but, of course, was not heard. Then people of the city, looking at the clock, saw that it had stopped, and some one notified the timekeeper, who went to see what was the matter. He saw the dog lying against the big pendulum, snarling savagely. A policeman brought the animal safely to earth. The dog did not know any better than to lie down beside the pendulum, and the man did not intend to shut the dog in; and yet between them they stopped the big clock and threw the city into inconvenience and more or less confusion. The town clock has to be constant, and its hands must tell the truth. The regulators of conduct for a community must also be constant and truthful. They had no clocks in Bible times. The sun shadowed the hours on the numbers on a dial. There is this reference to the method of keeping time: "I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the sun dial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward." (Isa. 38 : 8.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Priceless Reflector for Observatory

THAT world-famous mirror or reflector for the Mount Wilson Observatory recently arrived at its destination. It is 100 inches in diameter, thirteen inches thick, and weighs four and one-half tons. The rough cast was made in France in 1905, and it was brought to Pasadena, Calif., in 1909. The grinding began in 1911, and was completed in 1917. The start was made at the foot of Mount Wilson at 7:25 in the morning, and the trip up the mountain took five hours. The truck on which the valuable reflector was loaded had a special body constructed with hundreds of springs to absorb the slightest jar while under way. The truck was also geared very low so as to avoid any unnecessary jolts. Dr. G. W. Ritchey, the man who ground the lens, saw it safely to the foot of the mountain. During the trip this huge piece of glass was carefully guarded against any damage to it. In few departments of science has progress been more marked than in astronomy. The looking far out into the spaces, the bringing of myriads of worlds into view, the photographing of the stars, and the conclusions following the discoveries are the marvel of the centuries. The scientific world, which is indebted to the Mount Wilson Observatory, will feel a deeper debt of gratitude now that the mammoth reflector has been installed. The magnitude of the siderial heavens is thus placed in bold outlines against man's physical littleness: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" (Ps. 8 : 3, 4.)

Saintly Mother in Israel

MRS. JAMES PHILLIPS, who died at Thiells, N. Y., was for seventy-eight years an active Christian and church member. She was constancy itself in attending the means of grace, and in the practice of the homespun virtues and practical charities. For fifty years a teacher in the Sunday school, she loved children and kept young at ninety by joining in their plans and plays. A constant student of her Bible, she prized, next to it, the Christian Herald as a divine message. She was fond of nature, and loved her garden. When she could not go out to her church duties as before, she sat at home and with her needle worked for the missionary cause, so dear to her heart. The Master opened the gates when Mother Phillips went away. Though she fell asleep as sweetly as a child upon its mother's breast, she saw a vision which recalls what the martyr saw when he said: "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7 : 56.)

Prohibition States Bone Dry

IT was claimed that the Reed amendment to the Liquor Advertising Bill would make most of the prohibition States "bone dry." Attorney General Gregory has just issued a ruling which confirms that claim. This is the statement: "The Reed amendment makes it a Federal offense to 'cause intoxicating liquor to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes, into any State or Territory the law of which State or Territory prohibits the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes,' although the State law may not prohibit such importation or may specifically permit the importation of intoxicating liquors in designated quantities. Every form of transportation is forbidden whether by common carrier, by private conveyance, in baggage or on the person. The decision of the Supreme Court maintaining the validity of the Webb-Kenyon Interstate Commerce Amendment intimated that it was the duty of the Federal government to aid the States in maintaining rather than in nullifying their prohibition laws. The ruling of the Attorney General just issued indicates that the Federal government is going to aid the States in enforcing their laws. Over one-half of the population of the United States, by their laws, have merited the promise given to the children of Rechab, the first total abstainer: "Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me forever." (Jer. 35 : 19.)

Daughter's Strange Training

ONE of the strangest cases on record was that in the probate court of a western city. A multi-millionaire, his wife and little daughter were cited to the court on the charge of neglect of the education of the young child. The judge sat aghast as the mother admitted the truth of the complaint and, looking the magistrate squarely in the eye, said: "The girl of good breeding, good family and fortune has to fight for her man against chorus girls, cabaret dancers, actresses, singers, adventuresses, vampires, and coquettes, and the only way she can overcome these competitors is to beat them at their own game. A girl who can dance a little more daringly than another girl, with attractive grace, will touch the modern man's heart a good deal quicker than the girl who merely knows history and algebra and the girl who can win her way to many conquests has a better chance of making an agreeable selection of a mate than the young woman who blushes when a strange man speaks to her. My daughter is being educated on this theory." The mother declared that she had four tutors in her home teaching the little daughter the things she regarded of real importance in winning a husband. The judge finally directed the mother to see that the child spent not less than an hour each day studying arithmetic, grammar, spelling and history. This mother's notion of the training of her daughter is all wrong. It would be ridiculous if it were not so serious and dangerous. To neglect, utterly, the education which comes from books is little less than a crime nowadays; but to substitute for that education instruction in the light, silly, dangerous habits of gay society life is inviting disappointment, with possible disaster and sorrow. Most American mothers have good common sense, and appreciate the value of common schools and higher education, and the result is a class of young women, who honor their homes, bless society and make excellent wives, answering the injunction, "That our daughters may be as cornerstones, polished after the similitude of a palace." (Ps. 144 : 12.)

The Power of Christian Character

*A SERMON BY REV. C. A. MUTCH

TEXT—Job 1 : 8. "Hast thou considered my servant Job?"

IN the shaping of Christian character, there are many agencies at work—agencies that are God-given and God-inspired. There are agencies too that are malevolent in their origin, yet by resisting these certain qualities are developed without which no character could be complete. Many Christians credit the beginnings of their Christian life to a single agency, such as the prayers of godly parents, the influence of a pious friend, the ministry of a crushing sorrow, or the labors of a faithful pastor. But in this they are mistaken. Many influences were at work helping them to a right decision. Christian character is not the result of one, but of many forces working together under the direction of God. It is too big a thing to be the product of a single human agency. Each has had a thousand hands, a thousand influences shaping him into the divine image. But it is not of the forces working together in molding and shaping us until we come "to the fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ," but of Christian character itself as a force, that I wish to speak.

Christian character is the greatest force in the world, except God. Where genius, wealth. numbers, power fail, character wins. There is a majesty about it that compels respect. Men have yielded to its force whom nothing else could conquer.

MANY regard wealth as the greatest power in the world. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Brute force and wealth, however great their power, are not the masters of the world. They do not decide the destinies of men or of nations. They are not the guarantors of peace, of permanent prosperity, or of security from foes who are waiting the favorable opportunity to strike the fatal blow. No matter what materialists or cynics, agnostics or militarists may say to the contrary, character is master. In working out a true destiny, either of an individual or of a nation, nothing counts so much as those virtues which in their aggregate we name character.

Washington's superiority over the Revolutionary fathers came from a greater nobility of character. In private life, or as a public servant, he gave proof of his moral greatness and magnanimity of spirit which are legacies of priceless value to the American people. The name and fame of Washington will shine with increasing luster, not because he was a great general or a great statesman, but because he was great in the domain of character.

"If we are looking for a controlling purpose in life, what can be more comprehensive than this—nobility of character?" asks a forceful writer. If the politician would keep that purpose in view, he would be much more than a tool of vested interests and machine politics, the abuses of which are hoary with age. If he kept that purpose in view, he would do nothing on the principle of expediency. His first and only question would be: "Is it right? If it is right I'll do it; if not I'll let it alone." The story is told of a Roman senator who had been commanded to cast his vote against the interests of his country, and was also threatened with death if he disobeyed the imperial command. The old Roman, conscious of his integrity and that he had it in his power to serve his country, looked the emperor in the face and said: "Did I ever tell you that I was immortal? My virtue is at my own disposal, my life is yours; you do what you will, I shall do what I ought, and if I fall in the service of my country I shall have more triumph in my death than you in all your laurels." The virtue of this senator of pagan Rome, I fear, puts to shame many who now occupy positions of honor in the councils of the nation.

IF the man deeply immersed in business would keep this purpose in view, he would be no less a business man, but something more than a mere business machine. There is no monopoly here, but the toiler in life's activities can make nobility of character the purpose of his life with the assurance that each effort brings him nearer the goal. No matter how unfavorable the circumstances or how hard the conditions under which one labors, they cannot defeat him who has formed a right purpose and rigidly adheres to it.

Some one has said that the most inspiring scene in history is that of Luther before the Diet of Worms. He defied the Pope and his cardinals as grandly and successfully as Elijah defied the wicked Ahab, with his four hundred and fifty priests of Baal. In him were the moorings of Omnipotence and, of course, he won. "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life; as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee," was the promise of Almighty God to Joshua when appointed leader of Israel; and that promise is for all who will do right at all hazard.

Jesus was an absolute believer in character fashioned according to the divine standard. He himself is the standard and demonstrated that character is omnipotent. "No weapon in Jesus' view would be so winsome, so irresistible, as the Beatitudes in action." It is one of the mighty weapons that shall smite the kingdom of Satan to destruction, complete and eternal. It is itself a kingdom that has no end. It is a richer legacy to our children than gold and silver and precious stones. It is more enduring than the granite mountains, or the stars that gild the dome of heaven.

I REMEMBER that a merchant in the village near which I lived when a boy sold proprietary medicines of a certain medical school whose healing virtues were symbolized in a rather striking manner. The symbol of their curative power was a woman sitting at the side of a recumbent lion, caressing his head. Underneath were the words: "The mild power cures." So the follower of Christ uses no force, neither tradition, miracles nor sword, to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin, save the power of a redeemed life made mighty by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. He is to live as his Master lived, and by the persuasive power of a Godlike character conquer the world.

It is not the power of position, political or ecclesiastical; not martial genius, nor the outward pomp or circumstance of material power, that secures and establishes universal empire. There are men now living who have filled the highest offices within the gift of the people, who were cruelly assailed by every weapon known to political warfare; yet in spite of their enemies they came out of the conflict with their integrity unimpaired. There are men now in public life who are waging war against the same sinister influences, who are fighting the battles of the Lord in the field of politics and are winning. That they are astute politicians; that they are accomplished parliamentarians; that they are expert diplomatists, goes without saying; but the principal reason for their commanding influence will be found in their Christian manhood.

THERE is nothing quite so great as Christian character. It overtops and outreaches everything else. It spans the eternities. It is a mightier force than gravitation or the centrifugal impulse. All the planets of the solar system revolve around the sun, impelled by these two antagonistic forces. These mighty worlds and their satellites are held in the grip of those forces and are made to revolve on their axes and travel in their orbits with unerring precision. How the devout soul is thrilled when it gets something of a right conception of the wisdom and power of God, as these attributes are manifested in the majestic sweep of those worlds and systems of worlds through infinite space! But Christian character is a mightier force than gravitation or the centrifugal impulse, greater than the combined forces of the universe, more majestic in its operation upon the souls of men than the magnificent whirl of starry spheres, a sublimer revelation of God's infinite wisdom than all the material universe put together. After all, these worlds are mere matter and perishable; but character is spiritual and imperishable, and the difference between the two is infinite.

Perfect Christian character is but another name for true holiness, and that is the greatest thing this side the pearly gates. By it we become Godlike. In the holy man are the forces of Omnipotence. He is hid with Christ in God. He calmly bids defiance to the powers of evil and comes forth from every conflict more than conqueror.

---

* Pastor, First United Brethren Church, Ephrata, Pa.

"The Good Angel of the Immigrants"

EVERY day, summer and winter, through storm and sunshine, a quiet, little, thin woman has gone to New York's Immigration station to meet young alien women on their arrival. She is ready, the moment they set foot on American soil, to give counsel to any of these girls or women from lands afar who for some cause or other may be held in the detention rooms. For thirty long years this quiet little woman has been doing these little services. It is not to be wondered at that long ago she had justly earned the distinctive title of "The Good Angel of the Immigrants."

Alma Matthews, who has done this work through all these years, although still in the prime of womanhood, is the oldest missionary in point of service on Ellis Island. She is this by virtue of having been the first woman to take an active interest in the protection and guidance of immigrant girls. Her brother, Rev. James Matthews, was the first minister to attempt to preach in the streets of New York, and he used to make it a point in those early days to meet aliens on their arrival at Castle Garden. At that time Miss Matthews, then a very young girl, began to be personally interested in girls who had come overseas seeking their fortunes. She went to Castle Garden to meet almost every batch of immigrants as soon as they landed. Conditions then were not very favorable to the immigrants.

"YES, I had many problems caring for immigrant girls in those early days," said Miss Matthews. "Although our Immigrant Girls' Home began with only a few rooms over a store at 12 State Street, I used always to impress it upon the girls that it was their home and made them understand they would always be welcomed back. We had no conveniences; rats were running around everywhere. Yet girls who came to us then are even yet occasionally returning and telling me how much they enjoyed the Home while waiting for relatives or employers to claim them.

"Frequently we have girls called for by relatives who are unsuitable. Though our workers investigate each person before delivering a girl, once in a while these so-called 'relatives' are too shrewd for them. I now recall a young Finnish girl who was turned over to her sister, who had been in this country quite a long while. The sister gave good references, and had the appearance of being decently prosperous. The girl, on leaving, was given one of our cards, and urged to consider it her home whenever she wished to return. Next Sunday morning she rang the door bell, and begged to be protected from her sister and the latter's friends. That was one of the narrowest escapes. That girl had had to sit up all night and exert every faculty to prevent herself from becoming intoxicated or put under the influence of some drug. She had escaped from the house when the others succumbed to drink and drugs.

"Unless you have been working with immigrants, it is impossible to imagine the tricks resorted to to trap them. One woman who almost got one of our girls away went so far as to swear on the Bible that the girl was her cousin. Fortunately, the girl was brighter than the majority. She stuck to it that the woman was not a relative; that she had only one relative, who was living in Larchmont, N. Y.

"BUT in all my experience there has been nothing to compare with the condition at Ellis Island since the present war began. We were getting immigrants at the rate of 1,200,000 a year when the war commenced. Though those coming in dropped one-half during the first year, there never was a time when Ellis Island was so full as now. Not only did we have those coming in who were unfit to land, and others waiting to be deported when hostilities began, but numbers were being sent in every day from institutions in every section of the country.

"We were all at our wit's end when Commissioner Howe stepped in and threw open the lawns around the Administration Building to the detained immigrants and allowed them to go out two hours twice a day.

"What is going to happen after the war? I wish I knew. There is one thing, however, I do know—that, in recent years, the immigrants who have been landing at Ellis Island have been of a higher type than those of an earlier time. Of course there has been a wonderful change in their dress. When I first went into the work it was like going to the opera, the native costumes we used to see whenever a shipload of immigrants landed. Now, there are very few national costumes to be seen." LAFAYETTE McLAWS.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Spiritual Distinction

SUNDAY, August 19. Col. 4:6. "Let your speech be always with grace." In the apostle's word the counsel is limited to the ministry of our speech. But in truth it has a much wider application, and is so inclusive as to comprehend all the issues of our life. All the active expressions of the soul, whether of speech, or of looks, or of gesture, or of demeanor, or manners, or deed, are to be distinguished by a certain heavenly grace which is to bear witness that we are in alliance with the Lord of grace and glory. In the ranks of genuine aristocracy there is an air of fine breeding, displayed in unconsciousness and in natural ease, which tells the story of birth and high lineage. And in a far more distinguished sense the Christian is to reveal a grace which is one of the marks of the Lord Jesus, and which endows all the expressions of his life with an indefinable but most attractive charm. It is one of the birthmarks of the highest aristocracy, that lofty fellowship which is "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Let us see how this grace is revealed. I suppose that, of all difficult things, one of the most difficult is to be a graceful loser. Even in the comparatively small matter of games it is a very fine distinction to be able to lose with grace. But, indeed, to lose anything, and yet visibly retain the grace of the Lord Jesus, reveals a wonderfully arresting character, and the compelling charm is all the greater as the things we lose excel in value. To lose money and not lose one's grace is a noble attainment. To lose health and to keep the grace of the Lord Jesus is nobler still. To lose our loved ones, and in our dull bereavement to retain the holy grace like starlight in the night—that is surely the noblest of all. Yes, the people who can be graceful losers are marked with great distinction. They most evidently belong to the spiritual aristocracy.

And yet there is, perhaps, something higher still. A friend writing of Lord Elcho, who was killed in Egypt last year, gives this very impressive testimony: "He achieved the infinitely exacting role of felicitous winner incomparably well." That is a great phrase, and it is a great eulogium on the young soldier to whom warfare was a holy crusade. He was a felicitous winner! His finest triumphs were carried with a still finer grace. Everybody else shares in such triumphs; we feel they are ours as much as his. Some winners are very unattractive. Their success makes them proud, and pride is always exclusive, and no one wants to come near their fire. They have it all to themselves. But it is a very beautiful thing, and it is a commanding witness, when success of any kind does not mar us, and we are unspoilt by "the destruction that wasteth at noonday." When grace thus abounds in all the issues of our life the people who deal with us begin to inquire about our fountains, and they are led to the eternal spring, even to "the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

J. H. J.

The Tree of Life

MONDAY, August 20. Rev. 22:14. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." These words of the apocalyptic angel are not unworthy to be read in connection with the Beatitudes of Jesus. Who are the blessed? The poor in spirit, the pure in heart, the meek, the merciful, the conciliatory, the penitent, the obedient. Wherein is the blessedness of obedience? Access to the tree of life and entrance into the city of God. Human history begins in a garden—and ends in a garden. Better than the tree of knowledge is the tree of life, since its fruit is perennial, and its very leaves are healing. In a very real sense, the Cross of Christ is our tree of life. Some old artist painted the Crucifixion and represented a skull at the base of the cross. He had in mind the tradition that the cross on which Christ died was planted in the soil of Adam's grave, and the skull he pictured is Adam's skull. Through the intense symbolism of such art let us see the eternal. Sin drives us from every fair garden, but Christ brings us again to Eden. Paradise is Eden restored. Christ is the Adam of a newborn race. Though we derive our sinful propensities from the first Adam, we have a nearer spiritual ancestor in Christ. Through him we inherit title to the tree of life.

The blessedness of the obedient soul, let it be noted, is both present and prospective. Peace is ours before we enter in through the gates into the city, and satisfaction in the fact that already we have the right to enter in. Not yet may we enter fully into our inheritance, but the inheritance is ours quite as certainly as though we had already entered into it. We are "heirs apparent" to an inheritance that fadeth not away.

C. C. A.

Love

TUESDAY, August 21. I John 4:16. "We have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." The fundamental creed of Christianity, the Apostolic, does not specifically mention "love" as one of the tenets of our faith. Still the entire venerable creed is pitched in the key of love. Its statements are set forth, not as propositions for the intellect to grasp, but as endearing manifestations of the overweening kindness of God for the heart to relish. Love is the lowest term to which our belief as Christians is reducible. The creed of the believing heart would run somewhat like this: I believe that God has created me—that was love; I believe that he has redeemed me by his Son—that was love; I believe that he sanctifies me daily by his Holy Spirit—that is love. Love from beginning to end; love that takes account of every need of man; love utterly undeserved and bestowed on unworthy objects.

Love is the central fact of the true faith. Not that love, indeed, which unspiritual men frequently are heard to declaim upon—the few paltry deeds of charity which they have performed. It is not the love of man at all on which a Christian bases his faith, neither his love to God nor his love to his fellow men; but the love of God, the love which, as the words following our text show, gives the sinner a good conscience at the judgment seat of God, and then flows into our lives as a strong sanctifying element; a love that does not dally with sin nor coddle the sinner, but meets sin with a holy resolution to overcome it because of the love which came out of heaven to make unloving, cold, dead human hearts its dwelling-place and merge men, as it were, in God. W. H. T. D.

The Universal Tongue

WEDNESDAY, August 22. Acts 2:8. "How hear we every man in our own language wherein we were born?" This is not a strange occurrence, for every soul in communion with God hears him speak in the language in which it was born. The language of heaven is one universal tongue. An old Welshman, giving his testimony in meeting, said: "I do not understand how Jesus could be a Jew when he always speaks to me in Welsh." He who has redeemed us out of every kindred and tongue and people tells us of his love and life in one glorious spiritual language.

Music is a universal language; every one hears the voice of melody in the same language. "Home, Sweet Home" awakens similar emotions among all nationalities. Beauty is another voice that needs no translation in order to be thrilled by its unchangeable expression. These grandest gifts of our Father, being expressed alike to all, indicate the design of the Creator for the final brotherhood of man and the federation of all nationalities into his eternal kingdom. Oneness, unity, liberty and fellowship are words that God speaks alike to all.

The Christian singers of all ages will unite joyously in the song of Moses and the Lamb. It will be the culminating music of heroic souls in praising Almighty God in one glorious anthem. Music does not teach creeds, but love; it strikes directly to the heart; it elevates, ennobles and thrills the soul with holy praises and highest aspirations. Music is truth, playing on the harp of the soul, just like God's language of love. E. W. C.

Waiting on the Lord

THURSDAY, August 23. Ps. 27:14. "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord." There are many mental diseases, but the prevailing American mental disease is haste. Our practical motto is, "Accelerate." Men with nothing in particular to do, and nowhere in particular to go, put on speed and travel at the rate of sixty or eighty miles an hour, just to be going. "The world is too much with us night and day." We are too full of "creaturely activity." Multitudes of good people lie down at night too tired to pray. Many non-churchgoers have only this excuse, "I am too busy." We are paying too high a price for this haste. Domestic life is being robbed of many of its pleasures and comforts. Our minds are deprived of opportunities for culture by contact with books and music and art. The world passes before us and we lose its beauty because we are too absorbed in business to see. We can not study a landscape as we shoot across it at the speed of an express train. We can not hear the hermit thrush and catch the next car for town. We can not make out what God is trying to say to us in "pale-rose dawns" and golden sunsets, and keep up with the procession. We can not renew our strength without waiting on the Lord. It takes time to charge a storage battery. It must wait for its strength to be renewed. He was a saint who knew God well who said one morning, "I am to be more than usually busy today, so I must take more time than usual to talk to God and let him talk to me."

The irreligious and the unreligious use of the Sabbath is an increasing menace to our moral health. The Sabbath is the day for waiting on the Lord, but some prefer to wait on their customers or their clients or themselves, quoting in self-defense, "The Sabbath was made for man." Certainly it was, and for that reason it should be rightly used. The Bible was made for man, and for that reason it should be studied. The church was made for man, and hence should not be neglected. Prayer was made for man, and therefore it should not become a forgotten art. C. C. A.

Excuses

FRIDAY, August 24. Luke 14:18. "They all with one consent began to make excuse." An excuse implies guilt. It is the acknowledgment of an unperformed duty, with a request for pardon. Our capacity for action in a life full of limitations is such that we are occasionally forced to leave undone or defer doing what we ought to do. In such a case we feel justified in asking to be excused. But our excuses become insults to the party to whom they are offered when we exalt a minor duty above a great and essential one, when by our very excuses we minimize the importance of the one thing needful.

In the parable of the great supper earthly interests are set against the divine call of grace by the unwilling guests. Does the Lord, then, mean that in order to become Christians we must let weeds grow on our farms, suffer our cattle to perish, and break a lawful marriage engagement? Indeed not; all these things have the divine approval and do not in themselves conflict with the profession and practice of Christianity. Peter was engaged in plying his trade as a fisherman when the Lord asked for the loan of his boat, and Peter incurred no loss by suspending for a season his regular occupation. Godliness is profitable unto all things, and has the promise of this life and that which is to come. But foolish shortsightedness, carnal indifference, and plain aversion to holy things make men misunderstand completely in which direction their best interests lie. It is this materialistic, thoroughly secular spirit that the Lord attacks in the present parable. As a servant of the Lord and rejoicing in God's favor, how much better would the farmer have enjoyed his new field, the cattle-raiser his oxen, the newly-married the holy estate of matrimony! Justly the Lord of the banquet is angry at such ruthless contempt of his gracious overtures to sinners.

W. H. T. D.

Joint-Heirs

SATURDAY, August 25. Rom. 8:17. "And if children, then heirs; heirs with God, and joint-heirs with Christ." A dying judge said to his pastor, "If you and I were joint tenants on a farm, I could not say to you, 'That is your hill of corn and this is mine,' for we would have to share and share alike in everything on the place; and now, in this hour of my departure, I am thinking that Jesus Christ has nothing apart from me; everything he has is mine, and we shall share alike through all eternity."

Christ, the only-begotten Son of God, is heir to all the Father's wealth, while we, his wayward children, adopted by the new birth into the family again, become heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus to all the inheritance reserved in heaven. It is impossible for us to invoice our riches in him. We are heirs to the exceeding great and precious promises, heirs to the divine nature, to Christ's righteousness, for we are made the righteousness of God in him. We are heirs to mansions, thrones, principalities and powers, things present and things to come.

In order to enter this royal line of sonship, what are we to do? Simply be willing to be born of the Spirit of God. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." Every one that loveth is born of God. Everyone that doeth righteousness is born of God.

Have we arisen to this dignity of immortal sonship? Are we one in nature, character and love with Christ? Then we are joint-heirs to all his unsearchable munificence.

E. W. C.

BRIGHT SPOTS IN THE TRAGEDY OF

DESCRIPTION OF THE PICTURES

The officers and men of the conscripted German merchant ships are not prisoners of war; rather, as interned enemy aliens, they are enforced guests of Uncle Sam. Down at Hot Springs, N. C., a former hotel and its grounds has become their home for the duration of the war. Picture No. 1 shows the main building and a group of "guests". No. 2 is not a fairyland, just some rustic shelters which the sailor men have made from driftwood from the river. No. 3 shows two pawns in the game of war taking liberties with kings, but they are only chess kings

Picture No. 4 gets us nearer to real war. It is a 10 lb. loaf of "war-bread" baked by one of Uncle Sam's army cooks on the field of Gettysburg where part of the new army is being trained and equipped

© Underwood & Underwood

In No. 5 men of the coast artillery are studying the war game displayed on a relief map, a hostile fleet being shown in position to attack fortifications

© Harris & Ewing

No. 6 shows the interior of an enlisted men's bunk house at one of the aviation schools

© Underwood & Underwood

No. 7 is packed full of interest for "Sammy" somewhere, for the big boxes are being filled with "comfort kits" for our soldiers

© Underwood & Underwood

No. 8 While not a very bright spot, is at least safe. It shows the City Council of Rheims meeting in a champagne cellar, secure from bombardment

© Underwood & Underwood

R

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XXIII—Continued

THE PLOT THICKENS

MEANWHILE, hurrying away from Denby House was the doctor, his whole self a Hallelujah Chorus of rejoicing. His countenance was still aglow with joy when, a little later, he rang the bell of a West Hill apartment-house suite bearing the name, "Mrs. Helen Darling."

To his joy he found Helen alone; but hardly had he given her a hasty account of his visit to Burke Denby, and assured her that he was positive everything was working out finely, when Betty came in from the corner grocery store, breezy and smiling.

"Oh, it's Dr. Gleason!" she welcomed him. "Now, I'm glad mother didn't go with me to-night, after all,—for we'd both been out then, and we shouldn't have seen you."

"Which would have been my great loss," bowed the man gallantly, his approving eyes on Betty's glowing face.

"Oh, but ours, too,—especially mine," she declared. "You see, I've been wishing you'd come. I wanted to thank you for finding this lovely place for me."

"You like it, then?"

"I love it. Why, Dr. Gleason, you have no idea of the wonderful things that man— But you said you knew him," she broke off suddenly. "Don't you know him?"

"Oh, yes, very well."

"Oh, how silly of me!" she laughed. "As if I could tell you anything about antiques and curios! But hasn't he some beautiful things?"

"He has, indeed. But how about the man? You haven't told me at all how you like Mr. Denby himself."

Betty glanced at her mother with a roguish shrug.

"Well, as I tell mother, now that I've got him trained, he does very well."

"My dear!" murmured her mother.

"Trained?" The question was the doctor's.

"Yes. You see at first he was such a bear."

"Oh, Betty!" exclaimed her mother, in very genuine distress.

But Betty plainly was in one of her most mischievous moods. With another merry glance at her mother she turned to the doctor.

"It's only this, doctor. You see, at first he was so silent and solemn, and Benton and Sarah and Mrs. Gowing were so scared, and the whole house was so scared and silent and solemn, that it seemed some days as if I should scream, just to make a little excitement. But it's all very different now. Benton and Sarah are all smiles, Mrs. Gowing actually laughs sometimes, and the only trouble is there isn't time enough for Mr. Denby to get in all the talking he wants to."

"Then Mr. Denby seems happier?"

"Oh, very much. Of course, at first it was just about the work—we're cataloguing the curios; but lately it's been in other ways. Why, the other day he found I could play and sing a little, and today he asked me to sing for him. And I did."

Helen sat suddenly erect in her chair.

"Sing? You sang for Mr. Denby?" she cried, plainly very much agitated. "But you hadn't told me—that!"

"I hadn't done it till this afternoon, just before I came home," laughed Betty.

"But what did you sing? Oh, you—you didn't sing any of those foolish, nonsensical songs, did you?" implored Helen, half rising from her chair.

"But I did," bridled Betty. Then, as her mother fell back dismayed, she cried: "Did you suppose I'd risk singing solemn things to a man who had just learned to laugh?"

"But, ragtime!" moaned Helen, "when he's always hated it so!"

"'Always hated it so'!" echoed Betty, with puzzled eyes. "Why, I hadn't played it before, dearie. I hadn't played anything!"

"No, no, I—I mean always hated everything gay and lively like ragtime," corrected Helen, her cheeks abnormally pink, as she carefully avoided the doctor's eyes. "Why didn't you play some of your good music, dear?"

"Oh, I did, afterwards, of course,—MacDowell and Schubert, and that lullaby we love. But he liked the ragtime, too, all right. I know he did. Besides, it just did me good to liven up the old house a bit. I know Benton was listening in the hall, and I'm positive Sarah and the cook had the dining-room door open. As for Mrs. Gowing, she—dear old soul—just sat and frankly cried. And the merrier I sang, the faster the tears rolled down her face—but it was for joy. I could see that. And once I heard her mutter: 'To think that ever again I should hear music and laughter—here!' Dr. Gleason, did Mr. Denby ever love somebody once, and do I look like her?"

Taken utterly by surprise, the doctor, for one awful minute, floundered in appalled confusion. It was Helen this time who came to the rescue.

"I shall tell the doctor he needn't answer that question, Betty," she said, with just a shade of reproval in her voice. "If he did know of such a thing, do you think he ought to tell you, or anybody else?"

Betty laughed and colored a little.

"No, dear, of course not. And I shouldn't have asked it, should I?"

"But what makes you think he has?" queried the doctor, with very much the air of a small boy who is longing yet fearing to investigate the reason for the non-explosion of a firecracker.

"Because he said twice that I reminded him of some one, particularly with my hat on; and both times, afterward, he looked so romantic and solemn"—Betty's eyes began to twinkle—"that I thought maybe I was on the track of a real, live love-story, you see. But he hasn't said anything about it lately; so perhaps I was mistaken, after all. You see, really, he's quite like folks, now, since we've been working on the curios."

"And how are you getting along with those?"

"Very well, only it's slow, of course. There is such a mass of material, and so much to look up and study up besides. We're just getting it together and tabulating it now on temporary sheets. We shan't begin the real cataloguing on the final cards until we have all our material in hand, Mr. Denby says."

"But you aren't getting tired of it?"

"Not a bit! I love it—even the digging after dates. I'm sure you can understand that," she smiled.

"Yes, I can understand that," he smiled back at her. And now, for the first time for long minutes, he dared to look across the room into Helen Denby's eyes.

CHAPTER XXIV

COUNTER-PLOTS

IN thinking it over afterwards Burke Denby tried to place the specific thing that put into his mind that most astounding suggestion. He knew very well the precise moment of the inception of the idea—it had been on Christmas night as he sat before the fire in his gloomy library. But what had led to it? Of just what particular episode concerning his acquaintance with this girl had he been thinking when, like a blinding flash out of the dark, had leaped forth those startling words?

He had been particularly lonely that evening, perhaps because it was Christmas, and he could not help comparing his own silent fireside with the gay, laughter-filled, holly-trimmed homes all about him. Being Christmas, he had not had even the divertisement of his secretary's presence — companionship. Yes, it was companionship, he decided. It could not but be that when she brought so much love and enthusiasm to the work, as well as the truly remarkable skill and knowledge she displayed. And she was, too, such a charming girl, so bright and lovable. The house had not been the same since she came into it. He hoped he might keep her. He should not like to let her go—now. But if only she could be there all the time! It would be much easier for her—winter storms were coming on now; and as for him—he should like it very much. The evenings were interminably long sometimes. He wondered if, after all, it might not be arranged. There was a mother, he believed. They lived in an apartment on West Hill. But she could doubtless be left all right, or she might even come, too, if it were necessary. Surely the house was large enough, and she might be good company for his cousin. And it would be nice for the daughter. It might, indeed, be a very suitable arrangement all around.

Of course, if he had a wife and daughter of his own, he would not have to be filling his house with strangers like this. If Helen had not— Curious, too, how the girl was always making him think of Helen—her eyes, especially when she had on her hat, and little ways she had——

It came then, with an electric force that brought him to his feet with almost a cry:

"What if she were—maybe she is—your daughter!"

As he paced the room feverishly, Burke Denby tried to bring the chaos of thoughts into something like order.

IT was absurd, of course. It could not be. And yet—there were her eyes so like Helen's, and the way she had of pushing back her hair, and of lifting her chin when she was determined about something. There were, too, actually some little things in her that reminded him of—himself. And surely her remarkable love and aptitude for the work she was doing for him now ought to mean—something.

But could it be? Was it possible? Would Helen do such a fantastic thing—send him his own daughter like this? And the doctor—this girl had been introduced by him. Then he, too, must be in the plot. "A daughter of an old friend." Yes, that might be. But would Gleason lend himself to such a wild scheme? It seemed too absurd to be possible. And yet—

His mind still played with the idea.

Just what did he know about this young woman? Very little. What if, after all, it were Dorothy Elizabeth? And it might be, for all he knew to the contrary. She was about the right age, he should judge—his little girl would be eighteen—by now. Her name was Elizabeth; she had told him that, at the same time saying that she was always called "Betty." There was a mother—but he had never heard the girl mention her father. And they had dropped, as it were, right out of a clear sky into Dalton, and into his life. Could it be? Of course it really was too absurd; but yet——

With a sudden setting of his jaws the man determined to put his secretary through a course of questions, the answers to which would forever remove all doubt, one way or another. Meanwhile he would think no more about it; and, above all, he would keep his thoughts from dwelling on what it would be if—she were.

Having reached this wise decision, Burke Denby attempted to toss the whole subject from his mind—an attempt which met with sorry success.

BURKE DENBY plumed himself that he was doing his questioning most diplomatically when, the next morning, he began to carry out his plans. With almost superhuman patience he had waited until the morning letters were out of the way, and until he and his secretary were working together over sorting the papers in a hitherto unopened drawer.

"Did you have a pleasant Christmas, Miss Darling?" Careless as was his apparent aim, it was the first gun of his campaign.

"Yes, thank you, very pleasant."

"I didn't. Too quiet. A house needs young people at Christmas. If only I had a daughter now—" He watched her face closely, but he could detect no change of color. There was only polite, sympathetic interest. "Let me see, you live with your mother, I believe," he finished somewhat abruptly.

"Yes."

"Have you lived in Dalton long?"

"Only since October, when I came to you."

"Do you like it here?"

"Oh, yes, very well."

"Still, not so well as where you came from, perhaps," he smiled pleasantly.

Betty laughed.

"But I came—from so many places."

"That so?"

"Paris, Berlin, London, Genoa,—mostly London, of late."

"But you are American born!"

"Oh, yes."

"I thought so. Still, it is a little singular, having been gone so long, that you are so American in your speech and manner. You aren't a bit English, Miss Darling."

Betty laughed again merrily.

"How mother would love to hear you say that!" she cried. "You see, mother was so afraid I would be—English, or something foreign—educated as I was almost entirely across the water. But we were with Americans all the time, and our teachers, except for languages, were Americans, whenever possible."

"Hm-m; I see. And now you are here in America. And does your mother like it—here?"

"Why, I think so."

"And does she like Dalton, too? Perhaps she has been here before, though." The casual way in which the question was put gave no indication of the way the questioner was holding his breath for the answer.

"Oh, yes. She was here several years ago, she says."

"Indeed!" To Burke Denby it was as if something within him had suddenly snapped. He relaxed in his chair. His eyes were still covertly searching Betty's serene face bent over her work. Within himself he was saying: "Well, she doesn't know, whatever it is." Aloud he resumed: "And were you, too, ever here?"

"Why, yes; but I don't remember it. I was only a year or two old, mother said."

The man almost leaped from his chair. Then, sternly, he forced himself to work one full minute without speaking. A dozen agitated questions were clamoring for utterance, but he knew better than to give them voice. With a cheery casualness of manner, that made him inordinately proud of himself, he said:

"Well, I certainly am glad you came now. I'm sure I don't know what I should have done, if you hadn't. But, by the way how did you happen to come to me?" Again he held his breath.

"Why, through Dr. Gleason. You knew that!"

"Yes, but I know only that. You never did—exactly this sort of work before, did you?"

"No—oh, no. But there has to be a beginning, you know; and mother says she thinks every girl ought to know how to do something, so that she can support herself if it is necessary. And in our case I think—it is necessary."

Low as the last words were, the man's sensitively alert ear caught them.

"You mean——"

"I mean—I think mother is—is poor, and is trying to keep it from me." The words came with all the impetuosity of one who has found suddenly a sympathetic ear for a long-pent secret. "I can see it in so many ways—not keeping a maid, and being so—so anxious that I shall do well here. And—and she doesn't seem natural, some way, lately. She's unhappy, or something. And she goes out so little—almost never, except in the evening."

"She doesn't care to—to see people, perhaps." By a supreme effort Burke Denby hid the fever of his excitement and rejoicing within him, and toned his voice to just the right shade of solicitous interest.

"No, she doesn't," admitted Betty, with a long sigh. Then, impulsively, she added: "She seems so very afraid of meeting people that I've wondered sometimes if maybe she had old friends here and—and didn't want to meet them because—perhaps, her circumstances were changed now. That isn't like mother, but—Oh, I shouldn't say all this to you, Mr. Denby. I—I didn't think, really. I spoke before I thought. You seemed so—interested."

"I am interested, my dear—Miss Darling," returned the man, not quite steadily. "I—I think I should like to know—your mother."

"She's lovely."

"Are you—like her?" He had contrived to throw into his eyes a merry challenge—against her taking this as she might take it.

But Betty was too absorbed to be flippant, or even merrily self-conscious.

"Why, I don't know, but I don't think so—except my eyes. Every one says my eyes are like hers."

BURKE DENBY got suddenly to his feet and walked quite across the room. Apparently he was examining a rare old Venetian glass tear vase, especially prized by him for its associations. In reality he was trying to master the tumult within him. He had now not one remaining doubt. This stupendous thing was really so. She was his Elizabeth; his—Betty. Yet there remained still one more test. He must ask about her—father. And for this he must especially brace himself: he could imagine what Helen must have taught her—of him.

Very slowly, the vase still unconsciously clutched in his hand, Burke Denby walked back to the table and sat down.

"Well, as I said, I should like to see your mother," he smiled. "I feel that I know her already. But—your father; I don't think you have told me a thing about your father yet."

A rapt wistfulness came to the girl's face.

"Father! Oh, but I never stop talking when I get to telling of him. You see, I never knew him."

"No?"

Infinite longing and tenderness were coming into the man's eyes.

"But I know about him. Mother has told me, you see. So I know just how fine and noble and splendid he was, and——"

"Fine—he—was?" The words, as they fell from Burke Denby's dry lips, were barely audible.

"Oh, yes. You see, all the way, ever since I could remember, daddy has been held up to me as so fine and splendid. Why, I learned to hold my fork—and my temper!—the way daddy would want me to. And there wasn't a song or a sunset or a beautiful picture that I wasn't told how daddy would have loved it. Mother was always talking of him, and telling me about him; so I feel that I know him, just as if he were alive."

"As—if—he—were—alive!" Burke Denby half started from his chair, his face a battle-ground for contending emotions.

"Yes. But he isn't, you see. He died many, many years ago."

There was the sudden tinkling of shattered glass on a polished floor.

"Oh, Mr. Denby!" exclaimed Betty in consternation. "Your beautiful vase!"

The man, however, did not even glance at the ruin at his feet. Still, he must have realized what he had done, thought Betty, for, as he crossed to his desk and sat down heavily, she heard him mutter:

"To think I could have been—such a fool!"

CHAPTER XXV

Enigmas

NOT until Burke Denby became convinced that Miss Elizabeth Darling was not his daughter did he realize how deeply the thought that she might be had taken hold of his very life—how closely entwined in his affections she had become. From the first minute the electrifying idea of her possible relationship had come to him, he had (in spite of his determination to the contrary) reveled in pictures of what his home would be with a daughter like that to love—and to love him. Helen, too, was in the pictures—true, a vague, shadowy Helen, yet a Helen idealized and glorified by the remorseful repentance born of a bunch of worn little diaries. Then to have the beautiful vision shattered by one word from the girl's own lips—and just when he had attained the pinnacle of joyous conviction that she was, indeed, his little girl of the long ago—it seemed as though he could not bear it.

And, most anguishing of all, there was no chance that there was a mistake. Even if the incongruity of her description of her father as applied to himself could be explained away, there was yet the insurmountable left. With his own ears he had heard her say that her father was dead—had been dead for many years. That settled it, of course. There could be no mistake about—death.

After the first stunning force of the disappointment, there came to Burke Denby the reaction—in the case of Burke Denby a characteristic reaction.

It became evident, to some extent, the very next day. For the first time in weeks he did not work with his secretary over the cataloguing at all during the day. He dictated his letters, then left at once for his office at the Works. At luncheon he relapsed into his old stern silence; and in the afternoon, beyond giving a few crisp directions, he showed no interest in Betty's work, absenting himself most of the time from the room.

YET not in the least was all this consciously planned on his part. He felt simply an aversion to being with this girl. Even the sight of her bright head bent over her work gave him a pang, the sound of her voice brought bitterness. Above all, he dreaded a glance from her eyes—Helen's eyes, that had lured him for a brief twenty-four hours into a fool's paradise of thinking they might, indeed, be—Helen's eyes.

Burke was grievously disappointed, ashamed, and angry; and being accustomed always to acting exactly as he felt, he acted now—as he felt. He was grievously disappointed that his brief dream of a daughter in his home should have come to naught. He was ashamed that he should have allowed himself to be deluded into such a dream, and angry that the thing had so stirred him—that he could be so stirred by the failure of so absurd and preposterous a supposition to materialize into fact.

As the days passed, matters became worse rather than better. Added to his disappointment and chagrin there came to be an unreasoning wrath that this girl was not his daughter, together with a rebellion at his lonely life, and an overmastering self-pity. It was then that he began systematically to avoid, so far as was possible, being with the girl at all, save for the necessary dictation and instructions. This was the more easily accomplished, as the cataloguing now had almost arrived at the stage where it was a mere matter of copying and tabulating the mass of material already carefully numbered to correspond with the equally carefully numbered curios in the cabinets.

In spite of it all, however, Burke Denby knew, in his heart, that he was becoming more and more fond of this young girl, more and more interested in her welfare, more and more restless and dissatisfied when not in her presence, more and more poignantly longing to make her his daughter by adoption, now that it was settled beyond question that she was not his by the ties of flesh and blood. Outwardly, however, he remained the stern, unsmiling man, silent, morose, and anything but delightful as a daily companion.

To Betty he had become the unsolvable enigma.

At first she had supposed the man's sudden reversion to gloom and silence was a mere whim of the mind or a passing distemper of the body. But when day after day brought no light to his eye, no smile to his lip, no elasticity to his step, she became seriously disturbed, particularly as she could not help noticing that he no longer worked with her; that he no longer, in fact, seemed to want to remain in the library even to hear her read to him.

SHE was sorely troubled. Not only did she miss the pleasure and stimulus of his presence and interest in the work, but she feared lest in some way she had disappointed or offended him. She began to question herself and to examine critically her work.

She could find nothing. Her work had been well done. She knew that. There was absolutely no excuse for this sudden taciturn aloofness on his part. After all, it was probably nothing more than what might be expected of him—a going back to his usual self. Without doubt the strange thing was, not that he was stern and silent and morose now, but that, for a brief golden period, he had come out of his shell and acted like a human being. Doubtless it was under the sway of his interest in his curios, and his first delight at seeing them being brought into something like order, that he had, for a moment, as it were, stirred into something really human. And his going back to his original sour unpleasantness now was merely a reversion to first principles.

That it should be so vexed Betty not a little.

And when they were having such a good time! Surely, for a man that could be so altogether charming and delightful to be habitually so extremely undesirable and disagreeable was most exasperating. And he had been such good company! How kind he had been, too, when she had told him so much of her own life and home! How interested he had shown himself to be in every little detail, just as if he really cared. And now——

With a tense biting of her lip Betty reproached herself bitterly for being so free to tell of her own small affairs. She ought to have known that any interest a man like that could show was bound to be superficial and insincere. What a pity she should lose, for once, her reserve! Well, at least she had learned her lesson.

To her mother Betty said very little of all this. True, at the first, in her surprise at the remarkable change in her employer's attitude, she had told her mother of his reversion to gloom and sternness; but it had seemed to worry and disturb her mother so much that Betty had stopped at once. And always since then she had avoided speaking of his continued disagreeableness, and skillfully evaded answering pertinent questions. She told herself that she realized, of course, it was because her mother was so fearful that something would happen that this fine position, with the generous pay, should be lost. Dear mother—who thought she was hiding so shrewdly the fact of how poor they were!

THERE was something else that Betty did not tell her mother, also, and that was of her first peculiar and annoying experience with the woman at the newsstand at the station. It was about two weeks after Christmas that Betty had first seen the woman. Mr. Denby had asked her to go around by the station on her way home and purchase for him the December issue of Research. He said it was not a very popular magazine, and that the woman was one of the few agents in town who kept it for sale. There was an article on Babylonian tablets in the December number, and he wished to see it.

The station was not very far from her home, and Betty was glad to do the errand, of course; but when she arrived at the newsstand she found a most offensive person who annoyed her with questions—a large woman with unpleasantly prominent eyes and a wart on her chin.

"Yes, Miss, I've got the magazine right here," she said with alacrity, in reply to Betty's request. "But, say, hain't I seen you before somewheres?"

Betty shook her head.

"I don't think so," she smiled. "At least, I do not remember seeing you anywhere."

"Well, don't you come here often, to the station, or somethin'?" persisted the woman.

"No, I have never been here before—except the day I arrived in town last September."

"H-m; funny!" frowned the woman musingly. "I'm a great case fur faces, an' I don't very often make a mistake. I could swear I'd seen you somewheres."

Betty smiled and shook her head again, as she turned away with her magazine.

Twice after that Mr. Denby had sent her to this same newsstand for a desired periodical; and on both occasions the woman had been cheerfully insistent in her questions, and in her reiterations that somewhere she certainly had seen her, as she never made mistakes in faces.

BETTY had not told her mother of these encounters. More and more plainly Betty was seeing how keenly averse to meeting people her mother was, and how evasive she was in her answers to the questions the marketmen sometimes put to her. Instinctively Betty felt that these questions of the newsstand woman would distress her mother very much; so Betty kept them carefully to herself.

The conviction that her mother was fearful of meeting old friends in Dalton was growing on Betty these days, and it disturbed her greatly. Moreover she did not like a certain growing restless nervousness in her mother's manner, nor did she like the increasing pallor of her mother's cheek. Something, somewhere was wrong. Of this Betty became more and more strongly convinced. Nor did a little episode that took place late in January tend to weaken this belief.

They had gone to market—Betty and her mother. Lured by an attractive "ad," they had gone farther from home than usual, and were in a store not often visited by them. They had given their order and turned to go, when suddenly Betty found herself whisked about by her mother's frantic clutch on her arm and led swiftly quite across the store to the opposite door. There, still impelled by that unyielding clutch on her arm, she found herself dodging in and out of the throngs of customers on their way to the street outside. Even there their pace did not slacken until they were well around the corner of the block.

"Why, mother," panted Betty, then, laughing, "I should think you were running away from all the plagues of Egypt."

"I—I was—worse than the plagues of Egypt," laughed her mother, a bit hysterically.

"Why, mother!" cried Betty, growing suddenly alert and anxious.

"There, there, dear, it was nothing. Never mind!" declared her mother. But even as she spoke she looked back fearfully over her shoulder.

"But, mother, what was it?"

"Nothing. Just a—a woman I didn't want to see. I used to know her years ago, and she was—such a talker! We wouldn't have got home to-night."

"But we shan't now—if we keep on this way," laughed Betty uneasily, her troubled eyes on her mother's face. "We're going in quite the opposite direction from home."

"Dear, dear, so we are! We must have turned the wrong way when we came out from the store."

"Yes, we—did," agreed Betty. Her words were light—but the troubled look had not left her eyes.

To be continued

The Romance of "Spindle Top"

Our Petroleum Supply May Be Exhausted in Twenty-eight Years or Less Unless New Oil Fields Are Discovered

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

FROM the crest of Spindle Top hill, near Beaumont, Texas, the site of the discovery of the first great oil fields of the Southwest, I write of an industry which is of vital importance in our great war. Petroleum forms the very heart of our national struggle. In fuel oil it runs our great battleships, in lubricants it keeps our mighty industrial plants moving, and in gasoline it sends the motor cars to the line of march with munitions and all sorts of supplies. Gasoline engines carry the airplanes over the camps and the trenches, and show the gunners just where to shoot. All of our munitions, guns and armor plate, as well as our submarines, and every machine that has to do with the war are dependent in one way or another on the supply of oil that we get from the earth.

A nice bonfire. Fifty-five thousand barrels of oil on fire

Spindle Top is an excellent place to study the oil situation. From right under our feet have been taken forty-eight million barrels of petroleum, and this site was the beginning of the great Gulf Coast oil region and that of Oklahoma and Kansas, which have for a long time supplied a great share of the oil of the world.

Spindle Top is a low mound, a great inverted saucer, which covers an area of perhaps 200 acres. The mound is only about ten feet in height and all around it the land is a low, flat, marshy prairie. As we stand upon the hill we can see the buildings of Beaumont, five miles away. That was once a small lumber town, but petroleum has made it a city of 35,000. Those great streams of black smoke in the distance come from tank steamers filled with gasoline and fuel oil from its refineries. They are on their way to the battlefields of Europe. As we look about us we can see the tank farms of oil companies, with their mighty reservoirs standing out against the blue sky like the domes of some half-buried Oriental city. If we had X-ray eyes which could pierce the earth, to the north, south and west we should see mighty pipe lines which are carrying rivers of petroleum from the many oil fields of the Southwest to the great refineries located here and at Port Arthur, which is only a few miles away on the Gulf. This field is almost exhausted, but they are still pumping out the dregs of the fluid which once burst forth in such gigantic fountains that it astounded the world.

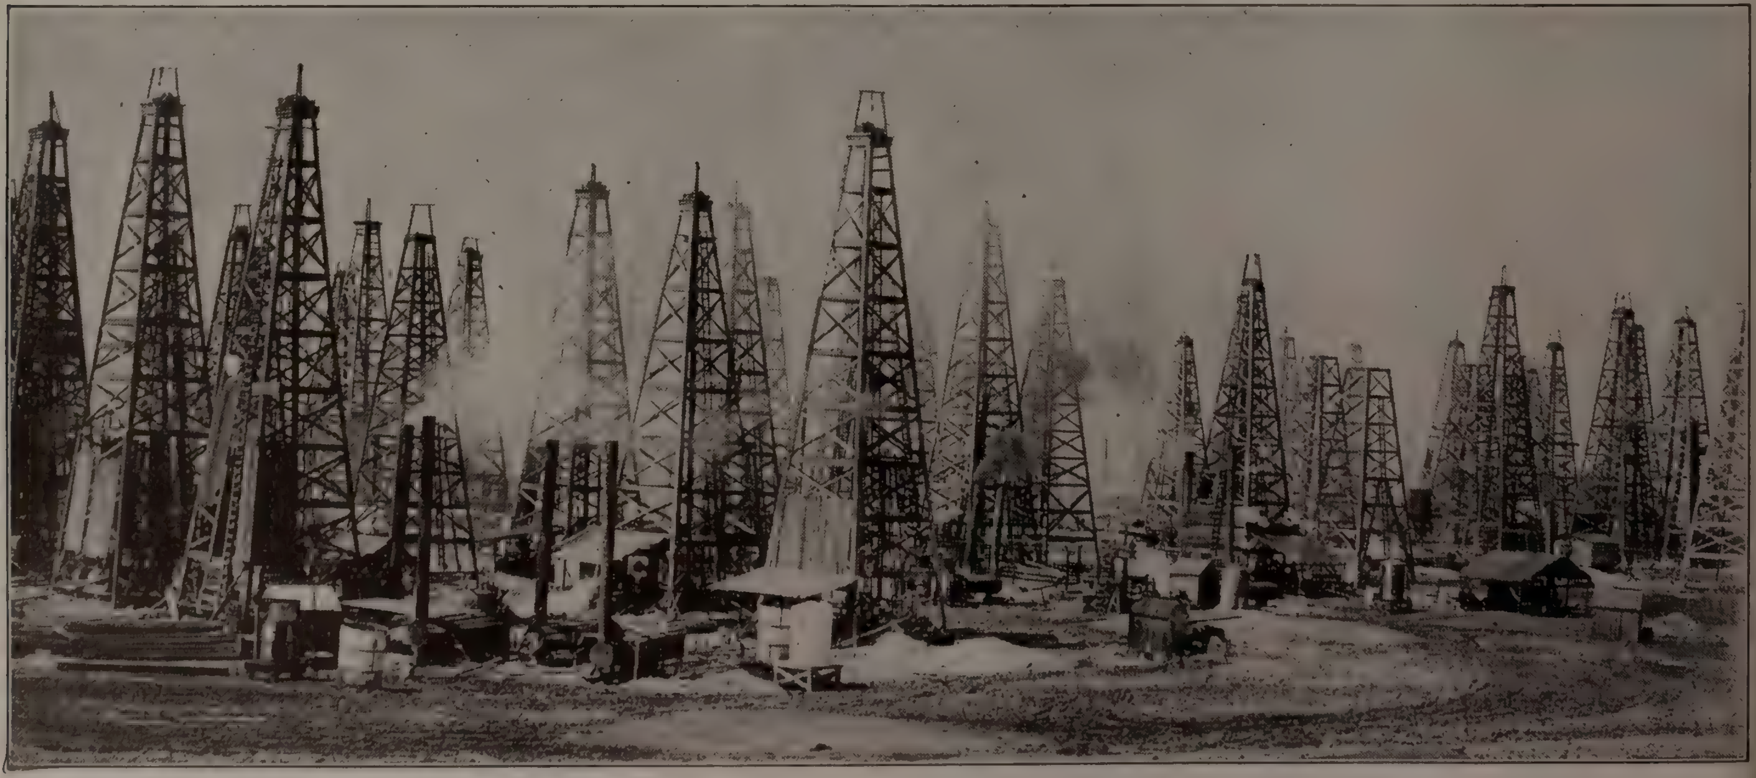
This is the story of the discovery of oil at Spindle Top as it was given me the other day by Captain A. F. Lucas, the well-known geologist and mining engineer, who now lives in Washington, D. C. Captain Lucas was the originator of the dome theory of the coastal plain; and he might also be called the father of the great oil developments of Louisiana and Texas which have given the country so many million barrels of petroleum. He was looking for oil in this region for some time before he sunk the well on Spindle Top. He had studied the geology of the low hills, then called islands, which rise here and there out of the flat marshy plains along the northern and eastern coast of the Gulf of Mexico. He had found under these hills beds of sulphur and salt, with indications of oil, and had concluded that they might be the sites of oil pools or reservoirs far down under the ground.

There were indications of oil at the surface of the Spindle Top mound, and before Captain Lucas drilled there, he took a lease on 5,000 acres from Carroll & O'Brien, owners of the property. This included about three-fourths of the hill, and he leased in addition about 27,000 acres of the prairie near by. His first well struck oil at 600 feet, but there was not enough to pay at that depth. He then tried to get capitalists to join with him in the exploration and finally interested J. M. Guffey of Pittsburg, with the understanding that they were to put down three wells. A well was then sunk within a few feet of the first, and the first great gusher came forth.

FOLLOWING the Lucas gusher more wells were put down and other streams of oil spouted into the air. One well produced 8,000 barrels in two hours, and another gave a million and a half barrels in ten months. Within three years after the discovery, more than thirty million barrels were taken from under this hill, and other millions have been pumped out since then. Altogether more than 1,200 wells were sunk, and it is estimated that enough has come out to cover the whole 200 acres with crude oil to a depth of twenty-five feet.

THE Spindle Top of today is almost deserted. There are less than a hundred derricks now standing, and the total output of the field is not more than 800 barrels every twenty-four hours.

Today a chain of red oil tanks hangs about Spindle Top Hill like a necklace of mighty rubies. The tanks belong to the great oil companies and their contents are valued at millions. The oil in them does not come from



A famous oil field. The forest of derricks on old Spindle Top Hill near Beaumont, Texas

Spindle Top. It has been piped here from the other great fields of petroleum which have been discovered since that of Beaumont was exhausted. Some of it is from northern Louisiana and some from northern and eastern Texas. A great deal comes from Kansas and Oklahoma. Oklahoma produced one hundred and five million barrels last year, leading the United States in its output of oil.

In addition to the tanks here there are tank farms at Port Arthur, on the Mexican Gulf, and there are great refineries at both places where the crude oil is turned into the many forms in which it goes to the market. It seems strange to speak of tank farms, but that is what these great collections of oil storage reservoirs are called. There are a number of them down here on the Mexican Gulf. They are used to store the crude oil as it comes in from the fields and also for the gasoline, kerosene, lubricating and other oils which form the products of the refineries while awaiting their shipment in the great tank steamers and tank cars which carry them to the market.

DURING my stay here I have gone through the Magnolia oil refinery. Including its tanks it covers about 450 acres, and the most of it is made up of great buildings filled with the finest of modern machinery. The refinery is now using about thirty thousand barrels of crude petroleum a day, much of which is brought here in pipes from oil fields as far away as the distance between New York and Pittsburg. It is making vast quantities of lubricating oil, fuel oil, kerosene and gasoline, in addition to other by-products. It is now producing ten thousand barrels of gasoline a day and it turns out enough of that fluid every fifteen days to run one of the cheaper motor cars from the earth to the sun, counting fifteen miles to the gallon.

During the various processes through which it passes, the oil is washed with soap and water again and again. Its impurities are precipitated and taken out. Some of it goes into kerosene, and that is again distilled and washed and some finally becomes gasoline, which is also washed. In the Magnolia refinery here I saw some of the largest washtubs in existence. They are steel tanks for laundering the gasoline to make it clean enough for your car. Each of these gasoline washtubs is as tall as a three-story house. It contains about seventy-five thousand gallons and the washing is done with caustic soda instead of soap. The suds rise to the top just as in the tubs of the laundry.

In making lubricating oil the stuff is run through hot water and cold water. It is cooked and is treated with chemicals, including sulphuric acid. In the making of paraffin the oil has to be frozen as well as boiled, and for this the refinery has an ice plant.

AT Port Arthur, on the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the oil spigot of the petroleum fields of our great Southwest, I learned that the output last year was almost three hundred million barrels, but even at that the prices have risen and the supply is all used. We now need petroleum, kerosene, gasoline, and lubricating oil as never before, and every patriot will aid the government in trying to save them. This is especially true as to gasoline. The demand for it on account of the war has reached enormous proportions, and it is now as important as gunpowder and shells. Great supplies are needed in France for carrying the troops, transporting the guns and taking munitions from place to place. It is also employed for the airplanes and submarines, and it is the only motor power of the automobiles in the field.

I am told here at Port Arthur that there is practically no gasoline in storage, and that the United States is not making more than enough to supply its own needs. Last year we had in operation just about three million auto cars, and this was the growth of only twelve years. In 1905 the number was less than one hundred thousand. During the first nine months of last year the cars increased in number more than three-quarters of a million. At the same rate of growth there will be a million more by the end of 1918.

Now, at a low average the annual consumption of every automobile is about five hundred gallons of gasoline, and at that figure it will take two billion gallons to supply the four million cars we have now. That is, we shall need about a half billion gallons more for this purpose than we were making in the whole country three years ago, and the demand for export is constantly growing. Meantime it behooves us all to save wherever we can.

THE demand for fuel oil is increasing rapidly on account of the war, and much of this is sold in so crude a state that many of the by-products of the petroleum are lost in the smoke. Fuel oil is now used by our largest battleships, and it is employed also in the navies of Great Britain and France. It is being consumed by many of our industries at home. Right near here are sulphur mines which use in the neighborhood of one million barrels annually, and the railways of Texas and Louisiana are now burning up eleven million barrels of such oil every year. The consumption of the whole country in 1916 was upward of thirty million barrels. The war demand for fuel oil is said to be greater than the war demand for gasoline, and the exports of such oil were about a billion gallons last year.

In addition to gasoline and fuel oil is the enormous demand for lubricants made from petroleum. This oleaginous fluid is the grease that makes the industrial world go round. Every kind of machinery, from the tiniest watch to the biggest steam engine, is lubricated with it. Special oils are used for high-speed engines and for the spindles of our cotton mills. There are oils for low-temperature ice machines, and others for the hot cylinders of gas engines. There is not a big gun that sends its projectile screaming through the air that does not move upon a coating of oil, and it is upon such lubricants only that we can keep moving the industrial machinery that supplies the demands of peace.

WITH electricity and gas one might think that the consumption of kerosene oil would diminish. This is not so. We are now using annually more than thirty-five gallons of coal oil per family, and we consume more kerosene per capita than any other nation in the world. The use of coal oil for lighting is increasing among the millions of Asia, and if China should ever use as much as we are now doing, its annual demand would be more than eleven billion gallons.

In fact, the consumption of petroleum is already so great that our supply will be exhausted within a very few years unless new oil fields are discovered. According to figures given to Congress in 1916, in a report from Secretary Lane, a consulting engineer of the Bureau of Mines estimated that our oil supply was enough to last only twenty-eight years.

We have now ten great oil fields in the United States. There is the Appalachian field, which takes in New York, Pennsylvania, southeastern Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee. This produced twenty-four million barrels in 1915. There is the Lima, Ind., field, which is producing four million barrels, and the Illinois field, which produces about eighteen million barrels. Going farther westward is the midcontinent field, consisting of Oklahoma and Kansas. It produced a hundred and six million barrels in 1915, and Oklahoma alone produced almost that much last year. Then there are northern Texas and northwestern Louisiana, which produced from eight to fifteen million barrels; the Gulf field, which produced twenty-one million barrels, and the California field, whose output is ninety million barrels and upward. There is some oil in Alaska, and also in a number of other states of the West, such as Colorado, Montana, Utah and Wyoming. Altogether the experts have estimated that we have between seven and eight billion barrels left in the ground, and that these lie under oil-bearing lands having a total area about as large as the state of Massachusetts.

We are using oil so fast that when the history of our times comes to be written there may be a period known as the age of petroleum.

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BLUE STREAKS

Boys and girls who ride on Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires do not go to Dad so often for tire money.

And fathers are pleased. For careful buying is one of the first lessons of good business.

Parents Welcome These New Savings On Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires

The Goodyear Blue Streak plan of making and selling better bicycle tires cheaper pleases every one—boys and girls as well as their mothers and fathers.

Economical buying is always sensible when the article bought does not sacrifice quality through the saving. And, especially so today when all America is practicing thrift.

The money saved by buying Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires at $3.25 each will come in very handy with prices of everything so high.

Why should any rider pay more when, for $6.50, he may own a pair of Goodyear Blue Streaks which in quality will match many other tires at $10.00 per pair? And Blue Streaks are usually better than tires selling at the same price.

Goodyear gives you these savings by making only one tire—standard quality, always the same. This cuts factory costs. Then Goodyear saves you more money by selling direct to the Goodyear dealer in your town. That cuts out the needless handling-profits that are added to other tires you might buy.

Make these savings yourself. You are entitled to them. See the Goodyear dealer in your town. Or write to The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio, for his address.

Durable Tires Mean More Miles

Goodyear Blue Streaks are built for maximum wear. They are rugged and strong. Tough treads give them extra long life. Two reinforcing, under-tread strips guard against punctures. And the two-ply tire body is of stout, enduring fabric. Goodyear Blue Streak wear will be a glad surprise to you.

No Side-Slips on These Non-Skids

Speed up, if you wish, on your Goodyear Blue Streaks. You needn't fear side-slipping any more, because the Goodyear non-skid tread takes care of that. Tough blocks of rugged rubber bite their sharp edges together and carry you safely. Press your thumb on the Blue Streak Tread. Feel the "bite."

Pedaling Is Easy on Lively Tires

There's no grinding leg-work on Goodyear Blue Streaks. These tires are made springy and active with light, pliant fabric. The two-ply tire body is laid in lively rubber. Your legs will thank you when you change from heavy, clumsy tires to these lively, resilient Goodyear Blue Streaks.

Smart Looks Help Your Wheel

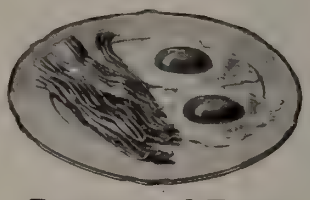
Then you have handsome appearance, too. Goodyear makes your Blue Streaks smart-looking to match the fine quality within. Look for the bright Blue Streak on the side. You can point proudly to these tires anywhere you go.

Boys everywhere are wearing Goodyear Bicycle Caps. Ask your dealer. They're especially popular with Bicycle Clubs—name of club printed on the cap.

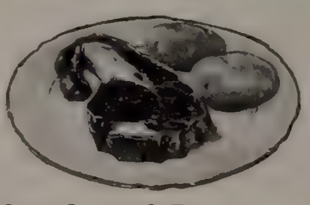
GOODYEAR
AKRON

Food Costs
Compared by Calories
The Unit of Food Value

Quaker Oats
Supplies 180 calories of nutrition for each one cent of cost.



Bacon and Eggs
Cost five times as much for the same amount of nourishment.



Steak and Potatoes
Cost five times as much. The average mixed diet costs four times as much.

Bread and Milk
Costs twice as much for a satisfying meal.

Nutrition, you know, is always measured by calories. Folks need on the average about 3000 calories per day.

Every woman, in these high-cost days, should judge foods on this basis.

Oats excel all other grains in calories per pound. They sometimes sell by the bushel for one-fifth the price of wheat.

In Quaker Oats—which is queen grains flaked—each cent buys 180 calories. The average mixed diet costs four times as much. Many a food costs ten times as much.

Every serving, on the average, divides your food costs by four. Yet this is Nature's supreme food, and in an extra-flavory form.

Quaker Oats
The Oat-Flake Dainty

Quaker Oats is the oat dainty. It is flaked from queen grains only—just the big, plump, flavory oats. We get but ten pounds from a bushel. But these rich grains, unmixed with small grains, give this exquisite flavor.

This extra grade makes all oat foods delightful. Use it in bread and muffins, in cookies and pancakes. Use it to thicken soups. Use it to cut your table cost.

Quaker Sweetbits
Try This Recipe

1 cup Sugar, 1 tablespoon Butter, 2 Eggs, 2½ cups Oatmeal, 2 teaspoons Baking Powder, 1 teaspoon Vanilla.

Cream butter and sugar. Add yolks of eggs. Add Oatmeal, to which baking powder has been added, and add vanilla.

Beat whites of eggs stiff and add last. Drop on buttered tins with teaspoon, but very few on each tin, as they spread. Bake in slow oven. Makes about 65 cookies.

12c and 30c per package in United States and Canada, except in Far West and South where high freights may prohibit

(1667)

The Captivity of Judah

International Sunday School Lesson for August 26
II Kings 25 : 1-21

The Harvest of a Nation's Misdeeds

By Rev. George D. Allison

HOW sadly the books of Kings and Chronicles close with the utter ruin of the nation whose history is traced with such devotion and religious zeal! What anguish must have been in the souls of the devout men who compiled these records! It seems true of the children of Israel, as Hosea said: "The more the prophets called them, the more they went from them." Willful disobedience to the will of Jehovah brought Judah to the catastrophe which we study today. All the sufferings threatened in the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, which Josiah had read with trembling, now broke like a thunderstorm about the distressed people.

We have to look into the writings of Jeremiah for the details of King Zedekiah's brief and troublous reign. There we see the ebb and flow of politics in Jerusalem and get the picture of a weak ruler, who was dominated by self-seeking princes. Zedekiah owed his throne and allegiance to Nebuchadnezzar, and Jeremiah never failed to urge that it would be folly to break his word. Obstinate politicians, false prophets and mistaken enthusiasts worked together to persuade the king, against his judgment, to plan treachery.

As a prophet had foretold, the Babylonians came and completed the pillage and destruction they had begun a few years previously (II Kings 24 : 10*ff.*). The wretched king saw his children slaughtered in his presence, and then his own eyes were put out, that the last frightful scene might torment him forever. The city was burned and its walls torn down. The Great Exile followed (586 B. C.). The leading men of every walk in life were carried to Babylon, and only the poor and ignorant were left. The Temple of Jehovah was singled out for utter ruin.

Nations Reap as They Sow

As we read the story, we find it a mighty object-lesson of the prophetic teaching that nations, as well as individuals, reap as they sow. Hosea's statement is become a proverb: "For they sow the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind" (Hosea 8 : 7). Less well known is his beautiful statement of the converse proposition: "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap accordingly in mercy" (Hosea 10 : 12).

What a strange inconsistency there is between the lofty flights of inspiration recorded in the prophets, and the sordid tale of idolatry and self-seeking in the Chronicles! Yet history repeats itself in this, and we find in every age and among all peoples the same contrast. We are so slow to learn. History records the fall of Babylon, Israel and Rome through luxury and intemperance and sin—yet all had their advocates of righteousness and self-control.

Just as the men of Israel came to a blind, unreasonable confidence that God would play favorites and exempt them from the consequences of their ill-doing, so modern nations have often gone their ways of greed and drink and conquest. Sometimes Americans have thought and spoken as though our land were exempt from the common lot. Surely the Bible, with its picture of the utter ruin of "the chosen people," ought to be a warning against national pride. What a nation does in the realm of character and life determines its destiny. The nation that sinneth, it shall die.

The Frightful Result of Self-Will

The national sin seems to have been a sort of headstrong self-will, a "stiff-necked" attitude, as Moses frequently called it, a certain inability to imagine themselves subject to the unchangeable laws of God.

How often we see it in individual lives! Every petty wrongdoer thinks he will escape the common fate of sinners. Each defalcator thinks that he will not be detected. Each libertine thinks he will not fulfill the proverb: "They that sow unto the flesh shall of the flesh reap destruction."

One of the most depressing traits in human nature is this perverse continuance in a course of wrong conduct, even when its consequences have been plainly shown. "What would Jesus do?" I have asked of men and women, boys and girls, in false positions for Christian believers. "I know what he would have me do, but I am not going to do it," has been the clear-cut answer more than once; and in so many cases the unreasoned, unexpressed attitude of the heart.

Therefore the God who has given the precious, dangerous gift of freedom lets us go in our self-will until its results, frightful oftentimes, bring us to our senses. Too late for many to be re-established, even as it was too late for the kings of Judah and the people of Israel.

The Blindness of Sinners

After all the warnings of the prophets, the Great Exile came unexpectedly to the bulk of the nation. The vivid object lessons of Jeremiah were mocked and unheeded until too late. The first Exile, the stripping of the temple, the dethroning of King Jehoiachim!—none of these was sufficient to make the people and their chieftains realize the imminent possibilities. It was with an awful shock and a sense of utter despair that they awoke at last to the ruin of their independent state, their exalted temple, their self-righteous populace.

Blind as men are to it, sin always means tragedy. This is not simply the experience of long ago. It is the sad certainty of today as well. We who are teachers and parents must strive to open the eyes of our boys and girls.

Temple and Home Share the Judgment

The interests of the temple had always been a storm center in Jewish life. Now the temple shared the general disaster. Its altars, so often desecrated by its chosen guardians, were now broken down by the alien.

Similarly, the homes of the rich and of the poor were alike given to the flames, the former being singled out, the latter as a matter of course. In times of national calamity and suffering the lines of class and caste give way, and rich and poor suffer together. What a pity that they could not have fellowshipped together in time of prosperity, in response to the urgent appeals of the prophets:

> "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!
> That lie upon beds of ivory and sprawl
> upon divans,
> That drink wine in bowls and anoint > themselves with the chief oils;
> But they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph;
> Therefore shall they now go captive > with the first that go captive!"

There can be no great political and social upheavals that do not profoundly affect both the church and the home. Here each had to be reconstructed on an entirely new basis. Today we are in another age of transition. The shock of the world war is upon us, and afterward many things will be different.

Our modern church and our Christian homes must prepare themselves to meet human needs and aspirations in the days that are before us.

Isaiah's doctrine of the remnant that remains—the seed of the future—was vindicated. The best people were carried to Babylon. There they were educated and broadened; greatly changed, but the noblest of them found a purer and a deeper faith than ever before. They eventually returned—"a people humble and meek." When they came back, it was with none of the old-time fierce, self-righteous pride.

The Exile threw Jewish thought back upon the unseen verities. It produced great psalms, deep philosophies, utter devotion to Jehovah and his worship. Idolatry never raised its head again among the Jews. The kingdom of the Spirit became the realm of their loyal devotion and song and study.

Purifying by Punishment

The penalties of God are always healing. The nation had proved its unworthiness and needed to be passed through the fire to purge its dross. The pure gold stands revealed afterward in Ezekiel and Ezra and Nehemiah. When earthly pride and wordly hope were taken away, the faith of Jehovah shone out more clearly than ever before.

May our God grant that the suffering of this present evil time may purify our nation, and all the nations of the world, of their materialism and their love of gold, and that it may work a new revival of the teachings of Jesus in all the earth.

Dark as was the outlook in 586 B.C., even Jeremiah, who had cause for gloom, had some gleams of hope for the future. Ezekiel arose after him to be a herald of hope, the forerunner of a new day. We do not see this in the Chronicles and Kings, which leave the blackness of the fall of Jerusalem unrelieved. But in the writings of the spiritual leaders of the race there is always a future. A remnant shall return, light shall break forth from Zion, Jehovah will visit his people, Jerusalem shall be redeemed!

Let us close this lesson with the optimism of faith and remember that, in the goodness of God, all the treasures of Jewish achievement in the realm of religion have been kept for the inspiration of the whole world.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary, World's Sunday School Association

Installing Sunday School Officers and Teachers

THE school that succeeds is the one that plans well in advance for important events. And now is the time to plan for a good fall start in many lines.

One of the most important things is to fire the officers and teachers with the spirit of consecration to their great work. It has been found by many schools that an installation or consecration service on the morning of Rally Day, or on the Sunday preceding Rally Day, is an occasion of great blessing in inspiring and uniting the workers. It gives them a vision of their task.

The Pilgrim Congregational Sunday School at Dorchester, Mass., has a very choice installation service, which might be followed with profit. The superintendents, in the church service, are first called to the front and by the pastor separately charged to the performance of their respective duties. The charge to the superintendent will prove suggestive:

"You, Mr. Superintendent, this church has elected to the responsible position of chief executive of its Sunday school. We look to you to plan the work of the school, and to put in operation the plans you have made. You are to lead us in our worship, to direct, in cooperation with the educational committee of the church, the course of study, to appoint competent executive officers for the business of the school, to select and supervise the teachers of the various classes, to inspire teachers and classes to honest study with open minds, to have the interest of every member of the school at heart, and to bend all to the end of a knowledge of the Bible, a confession of Jesus Christ, and an earnest effort to serve in his Kingdom. We look to you as an example in willingness in work, in readiness to sacrifice, to consistent Christian character, and enthusiasm for the works of God. Do you, with his help, give yourself to this service?" The superintendent and each officer responds to the charge: "I do!"

Then the secretaries, treasurers, librarians, leaders of choir or orchestra, and pianists, not forgetting the sexton, are called forward and each appropriately charged, and each responds.

Then in order are called the teachers, who each respond "I will" to the charge of the pastor, the choir singing a response after each "I will."

The charge to the intermediate department teachers will serve for illustration:

"Teachers of the intermediate department, it is given you to minister in the decision years, and great is your responsibility. Under your hands your pupils grow from boyhood and girlhood into early manhood and womenhood. It is the age of decisions, and like your Master, to you it is given to be the door through which the sheep shall pass into the fold of Christ and his Church, and out into Christian life and service for him. Will you, by your personal example and spoken word, by prayer without ceasing, give yourself to this holy task?"

Consecration hymns are sung during the service, including Miss Havergal's hymn, "Lord, speak to me that I may speak," and "Take my life and let it be." Teachers and officers join at the close in the consecration prayer led by the pastor. Sentences in this prayer follow:

"And now, our Father, we bring to thee for thy benediction these teachers and officers of our Sunday school, for they are the helpers of our homes and the builders of our churches. . . . Grant them patience and faith and responsibility. . . . Develop in our church and community the spirit of interest in and responsibility for its Sunday school, and may there be the fullest spirit of cooperation between the parents and teachers. May we all be one in our great common task, to present every man perfect unto our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Monarch of the Range

EVER since the days of the psalmist, we have been lifting up our eyes unto the hills, and the greater the hill the greater has been its power to lift us out of ourselves. America has many famous mountains, but Mount Washington in New England, Lookout Mountain in Tennessee, Pike's Peak in Colorado, Old Baldy in Southern California, and Rainier and Mount Hood upon the Northern Pacific Coast, have each their devotees and worshipers. Among them all, Rainier is perhaps the most unusual. Like Old Baldy in Southern California, it rises like a mighty monarch above the lower foothill ranges, seeming to thrust its mighty shape up from the plains, its summit crowned with everlasting snow, its sides seamed by eternal glaciers, and its base encircled by the evergreen forests through which in intricate gorges tumble and swirl and spume currents of water born of the dying glaciers.

Mount Rainier is the center of one of Uncle Sam's newest national parks, to which it has given its name. It is a living volcano, two craters on its summit still pouring forth steam and gas. Although it has had no eruptions in the memory of man, at some time in its history—before it was reduced to its present comparative docility—it gave itself a mighty shake and blew off some two or three thousand feet of the cone which once formed its crest. The mountain as it is today has a comparatively flat top, which is broken by the two craters, but it bears four summits. The highest, Columbia Crest, once thought to be the highest point in the Union, reaches an altitude of 14,408 feet. Because of the fact that the temperature is always below freezing, the top of the mountain is covered with drifting snows. The glaciers do not begin to form till at a point some 2,000 feet below the craters, where the heat of the sun begins to melt the drifts. There are six glaciers that stream away from the summit. Cowlitz and the Emmons are the largest, each measuring six miles in length. The Emmons covers eight square miles of ground and makes a continuous descent from the summit to the base, the crater rim having almost completely broken down under its heavy neve cascades. Winthrop Glacier—named for Theodore Winthrop, in whose romance of travel, "The Canoe and the Saddle," Tacoma (meaning "big snow") was first said to be the Indian name for the mountain—is distinguished by its ice cascades and domes. The glaciers of Rainier are not exceeded in extent anywhere outside of Alaska, but Alaskan glaciers are beyond comparison. In the summertime, Rainier Park offers every degree of temperature, from summer to winter, within a half-day's climb, and each year sees a greater number of tourists taking advantage of this, among the most beautiful of Uncle Sam's public playgrounds. Our cover picture well illustrates the summer contrasts, showing as it does the snow-capped peak glistening above a field of glowing heather.

FISK QUALITY

FISK

(World Standard)

Tire Sundries

Have the Confidence of Motorists Everywhere

—a confidence bred by years of thorough acquaintance with Fisk quality and dependability.

In the purchase of such products bear in mind that dependable quality is absolutely essential. A patch that won't stick is worthless—a cement that doesn't hold is worse than none at all. To spend money for sundries just because they are cheap is like buying shoes with paper soles.

Every Fisk Sundry made is backed by the Fisk trademark of highest quality and economy, and the pride of the manufacturer in maintaining this high standard of value.

When you buy Fisk Sundries you pay a trifle more in some cases—but you get what you pay for and you can bank upon the quality of what you buy. That is the essence of true economy and sensible buying.

This New Cementless Patch is an Evidence of Fisk Initiative in the Sundry Field

FISK MOLDED

—an aggressiveness that has been characteristic of the Fisk Company for nearly twenty years.

The Fisk Molded Patch is diamond shaped. It will cover a larger cut, but, because all waste rubber is eliminated, costs less. It has strength where strength is needed—built up heavy in the center. Can be applied easily and when you put it on your tube you know it will stick. Unquestionably the most efficient and best value cementless patch on the market.

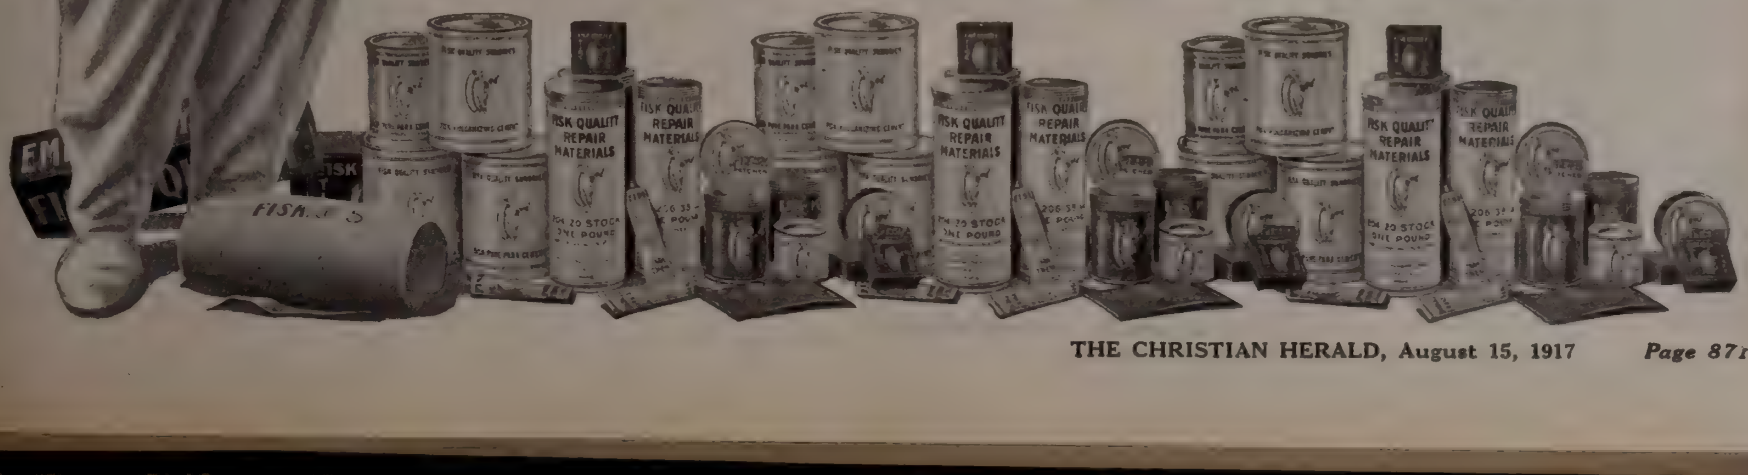
6 for 25c—A New Patch—A New Package—A New Price—6 for 25c

Fisk Sundries include besides the above:

Emergency Patches
Pure Para Cement
(in tubes, large and small cans)
Repair Kits
Tube Splices
Air Hose
Fabric Patches
Tire Tape
Fabrics
Air Bags
Air Valves
Bead Mould Filler
Flaps
Vulcanizing Cement
Uncured Stocks
Valve Pads
Bead Strips
Soapstone
Bead Cavity Filler

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

By 130 direct Fisk Branches in principal cities and by all dealers. Wholesale distributors in Texas, The Fisk Company of Texas—Houston, San Antonio and Dallas—and in Canada by Jos. Walker Hardware Co., Montreal; Breen Motor Co., Ltd., Winnipeg, Saskatoon; Fisk Tire Agency, Calgary; John Millen & Son, Ltd., Vancouver; and Dominion Automobile Company, Ltd., Toronto.



"Oh, it's just your nerves!"

MOTHERLIKE, clinging to the hope that "a good night's rest will right matters." But truthfully, isn't it more than a mere passing nerve irritation—are not the nerves really starving? Nature is signalling for help. And unless help comes . . !

Overstrain, worry or shock has used up the nerves' reserve. This, physicians affirm, must be replaced! And it should be done in the simplest, safest, most effective way—by giving those essential cell FOODS, albumen and organic phosphorus, in such a readily assimilable union as in Sanatogen.

For, as Lady Henry Somerset, the noted social reform advocate, says:

> "Sanatogen has an invigorating power on worn-out nerves, and gives tone to exhausted tissues to a surprising extent."

And Olive Schreiner, the novelist, says:

> "Nothing that I have taken in years has given me such a sense of vigor as Sanatogen."

How well Sanatogen gives this help, physicians in every land—21,000 have endorsed Sanatogen in writing—know from actual observation.

Is not this the best possible assurance that when you call on Sanatogen for help, it will not be in vain?

* * *

FREE SAMPLE OFFER

Sanatogen comes as a fine white powder which may be easily taken dissolved in water, coffee, milk, etc. Sample package sent FREE on request, together with the new "Text-Book on Sanatogen." The Bauer Chemical Co., 26F Irving Place, New York.

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

THE FOOD-TONIC
APPROVED BY SCIENCE

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere, in three sizes, from $1.00 up

Sanatogen
ENDORSED BY OVER
21,000 PHYSICIANS

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 858

industry into the army. It was felt that these men should either fight in the ranks of the United States army or go back home and serve in the army of their own nation. With the drafting of the national militia into Federal service on August 5, the United States government had under arms slightly more than 800,000 men. Arrangements have practically been completed by a committee of life insurance officials, cooperating with representatives of the Treasury Department, for a plan of insurance for American soldiers to replace the pension system. The plan will be laid before the President, and it will be necessary for Congress to pass a law before it can be established.

CONVOY FOUGHT U-BOATS. The official report of Rear Admiral Gleaves regarding the voyage of the first American troops and their convoy to France was made public by the Navy Department on August 1. The report shows that there were at least two encounters with submarines and a possible third, although in the third case there is merely a strong suspicion of the presence of a submarine. In one of the two encounters that did certainly occur, there was a strong probability that one U-boat was destroyed. But the "attack in force" reported by Mr. Creel in his rewriting of the first meager dispatches did not occur.

KAISER FOR DEFENSE. In a proclamation to the German people on August 1, Emperor Wilhelm assured them that "German blood and German zeal are not being gambled with for an empty shadow of ambition or schemes of conquest and subjugation, but in defense of a strong, free empire in which our children may live in security." He declared: "The enemy is stretching out his hand toward German territory, but he shall never have it." In an address to the army delivered at the same time, he declared that the third year of war had come to an end with the number of Germany's adversaries increased, but that their prospects of victories had not improved, and he told the soldiers: "Your lines are firm, protecting your beloved homes against the terrors and devastations of war." He commended the navy for its effective work, and declared: "Victory in the coming year will again be on our side. . . . Ours will be the final victory." He closed his address to the army thus: "The war goes on—it is still being forced upon us—but we shall fight for our existence in the future with firm resolution and unfailing courage. As our problems multiply, so does our strength increase. We are invincible. We shall be victorious." Addressing the House of Commons on July 30, Mr. Balfour declared: "We did not enter the war for any selfish purposes. . . . Everybody knows that we first entered the war to defend Belgium and prevent France from being crushed before our eyes. . . . Our purposes were completely unselfish. . . . We hope to see Europe freer and more stable." He said he did not think it necessary to restate the British war aims, but he expressed the belief that the peace of Europe could be secured only when Germany was made either "powerless or free."

BOOSTING THE TAX. The Senate Finance Committee in revising the war tax bill decided on July 31 to increase its total from $1,670,000,000 to about $2,000,000,000 by additional levies on intoxicants and on personal and corporate incomes, with possibly a small excise tax on sugar, coffee, tea, gasoline and firearms.

RESISTING THE DRAFT. Organized resistance to the enforcement of the selective conscription act has developed in the South and Southwest. At Dallas, Texas, fifty-three members of a "Farmer's and Laborers' Protective Association" have been indicted for organized resistance, while in three counties in Central Oklahoma negroes, Indians and tenant farmers are reported as arming for resistance. One band numbers about 300 and calls itself "The Working-Class Union." Another band of about thirty, heavily armed, has attempted to destroy railway bridges, and has taken refuge in the heavy timber. As this was written, sheriffs' posses were being organized and civilians were being armed and the National Guard was being held in readiness to enforce the law if need be.

SEIZE SEVEN HUNDRED VESSELS. It was announced on August 3 that the Shipping Board had decided to commandeer immediately all ships on the stocks in American shipyards and to hasten their construction. Seven hundred vessels, of more than 1,500,000 tons, were seized. It was also announced that Great Britain would increase the output of her shipyards to 4,000,000 tons a year.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. The National War Council of the Young Men's Christian Association has issued an appeal for books and magazines for the soldiers in France. . . . The members of the House of Commons on July 31 attacked Arthur Henderson, member of the British War Council, for visiting Paris in company with two other labor leaders to take part in a socialist peace conference. On the following day the question of possible delegates from British labor to the Stockholm conference appeared for a time to threaten the tenure of the cabinet. The British labor organizations are reported to feel that they might bring peace much nearer by sending to Stockholm delegates who, in cooperation with French and Russian delegates, might be able to bring the German delegates to see the prime necessity for further steps toward democracy in the empire, as a preliminary to peace. American labor has refused to participate in the conference. . . .Frank Little, a member of the Executive Board of the Industrial Workers of the World, who came into prominence recently when he warned the governor of Arizona that if he could not enforce the law the I. W. W. would take it in hand, was lynched by masked men at Butte, Mont., on August 1. He was reported to have made speeches in Butte, in which he had referred to United States troops as "Uncle Sam's scabs in uniform," denouncing the government bitterly and urging the men to shut down the mines in the Butte district. It had been charged that Little was a German agent, and he was said to have been under surveillance by the secret service. Leading I. W. W. agitators in the Ironwood, Mich., district, have been jailed. It is reported that the government intends to take summary action against the leaders of this organization, and which is accused of being furnished with German money to carry on a campaign against industry intended to cripple the United States government and its allies. Whatever the sins of the I. W. W. may be, however, the situation is only aggravated when it is met with such illegal acts as the Bisbee exile and the Butte lynching.

Progress of the War

Continued from page 859

On the French portion of the front fighting was rather violent and fairly continuous along the Chemin des Dames, north of the River Aisne. The most violent fighting apparently took place on Friday, July 27, and Saturday, July 28, in the vicinity of Hurtebise. On Friday the Germans attacked a French position south of Ailes on a two-mile front, and penetrated it to a depth of over half a mile, taking about 1,400 prisoners. Friday night the French delivered a counter-attack which regained a portion of the lost territory, but on Saturday and Sunday were compelled to fall back before fresh German attacks, which not only reconquered the ground recaptured by the French Friday night, but expanded the original German gains.

As this record closes, there comes the first news of a joint French and British offensive extending from the sea to La Bassée. In its first rush, this movement, which has as its objective the turning the German right flank, is reported to have taken 4,000 prisoners and to have captured ten villages. Reports are fragmentary, however, but undoubtedly one of the greatest battles of the war is opening.

General Erdelli, the military governor of Petrograd, was assassinated on August 3. On the same day, the entire Kerensky ministry with the exception of Vice-Premier Nekrasoff resigned. The ministry had been severely shaken by accusations of pro-Germanism against M. Tchernoff, Socialist and Minister of Agriculture, and by a complete failure of negotiations looking to the return to the cabinet of members representing the Constitutional Democrats. Later, after an all-night meeting of Delegates of the Workmen's and Soldiers' and Peasants' Councils had confirmed by a vote of 147 to 46 a previous vote of confidence in Premier Kerensky, all except M. Terestchenko, withdrew their resignations. This council also assured General Korniloff that he would have the drastic powers without which he refused to take over the chief command of the Russian armies.

Addressing this council, M. Nekrasoff declared: "A counter revolution exists and is growing day by day." Alexander Kerensky, by the vote of the council, is returned to the leadership of the Russian state with almost autocratic power.

The Root Commission returned to the United States on August 4. The members of the commission were reported as having faith in the final success of the democratic experiment in Russia. No official statement was made by the commission pending its report to the President.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

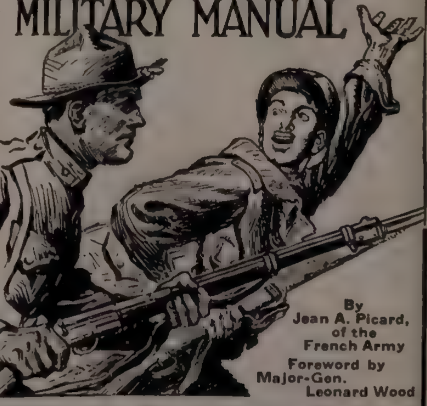
Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

CORTINA
FRENCH AND ENGLISH
MILITARY MANUAL



By Jean A. Picard, of the French Army

Foreword by Major-Gen. Leonard Wood

Make the Boy a Useful Present
if he's going to the Front

A short cut to Military French, French Army Organization, Aviation, Artillery, Infantry, Engineering, etc. Full page illustrations. With Phonograph Records if desired. Send for full information.

Learn on your own Phonograph

Spanish — French — Italian — German

CORTINA ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
Suite 1001, 12 East 46th Street, New York

Girls Who Made Good

VI. 'Fraid Cat

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

THE little Jones boy, who lived next door to her, started calling Madeline Berry "'Fraid Cat" when they were both very young indeed. He was a grubby-fingered little boy, with a great propensity for storing dead mice and fish-hooks and caterpillars and ginger cookies in the same pocket. And Madeline Berry was a dainty, pale little girl, who wore flowered sashes and smooth tiers of flaxen curls around her small, well-shaped head.

One cannot blame Madeline Berry for screaming at the caterpillar that the little Jones boy proudly, and quite without evil intent, gave to her. One cannot blame her for running away with her hands clasped over her dainty little ears. And, if one is fair, one cannot blame the little Jones boy for running after her with the offending caterpillar clutched tightly in his grubby hand. Little boys are like that.

"'Fraid Cat! 'Fraid Cat!" he called as he ran after her. "Oh-h, 'Fraid Cat."

Madeline Berry was scared. Her naturally pale little face was absolutely colorless. Pantingly, she ran up the steps of her house; with nervous fingers she bolted the screen porch door after her. And then, instead of standing behind the safety of it and sticking out her tongue at the little Jones boy (sticking out her tongue as, I regret to say, most of us would have done), she collapsed on the floor and burst into a paroxysm of tears.

"'Fraid Cat!" taunted the little Jones boy, as he walked shamefacedly away.

ALL the little boys called her "'Fraid Cat" after that. Children can be quite thoughtlessly cruel. And in a while some of the little girls followed her example. For Madeline Berry was a 'fraid cat! She was afraid to skate for fear that she would fall, and to swim lest she'd sink.

She was afraid to play tag at recess for fear her frock would be ripped. Once she wept copiously in school while we were having a particularly ghastly history lesson on the Spanish Inquisition.

It was after the history lesson that teacher spoke to me about Madeline Berry.

"She's very nervous, isn't she?" said our teacher.

School girls—particularly not very big schoolgirls—are prone to judge harshly.

"She's a 'fraid cat," I answered; "she's always been a 'fraid cat!"

"Don't you think," suggested our teacher, "that you children don't meet her half-way? Don't you think that you might be a little nice to her?"

We were walking home down the shaded streets. The sunlight sparkled on our teacher's hair, and I was of the age that worships quite blindly at the shrine of an idol.

"What shall I do?" I asked.

Our teacher squeezed my hand. "Why don't you go over now and play with her?" she suggested.

And so I went over to play with Madeline Berry. I found her sitting, quite disconsolately, on the steps of her porch.

"Don't you want to come over to my house?" I questioned. "I'll show you the nicest——"

Madeline came, and gladly. Her pale little face was very happy. When we arrived at my house, I led her toward the cellar.

"The game," I told her, "is 'pirates.' The cellar is a cave. And there's a ghost! See?" I took Madeline Berry's hand and led her down the dark, shaky steps. "That apple barrel is a treasure chest. An' that crate is a coffin!"

Madeline's little hand was cold in mine. Her voice shook as she answered me.

"Don't let's play here," she begged. "Let's go out in the sunlight. Let's not play here!"

When we were sixteen Madeline still shrank beneath the same title. She was still afraid of bugs, of strangers, of ghost stories, of unlighted rooms. We didn't see much of her.

And then one day we had a little talk in Sunday school on Fear. Our lesson had been "David and Goliath," and our leader—a very wonderful woman—was talking about David.

"I'm sure," she told us, "that David was afraid. He had every reason to be afraid. And yet his trust in God was greater than his fear. So he took a little stone, and——" she paused.

Madeline Berry was leaning foward.

"Do you suppose," she questioned, "that every hero feels—fear?"

"I'm sure of it!" said our leader. "I'm sure that Washington knew fear on the eve of Valley Forge. I'm sure that Lincoln must have, at some time, been afraid. I'm sure that Napoleon must have, too! Perhaps for a moment, on one night in a garden"—she paused again—"perhaps for one moment"—she repeated softly. . . .

It was a week later that Madeline volunteered to take a basket of food from our church to the poorest family in the worst part of town. I knew from her face that she was frightened, but she didn't say so. She took the basket and went steadily out. A week after that she got up in Young People's meeting and spoke. She had never dared do it before, and though her voice trembled, she went through with it. A few days later I saw her getting a volume of Poe from the library. It was then that I spoke.

"Why, Madeline," I said, "I didn't know you liked that sort of story!"

"I don't," Madeline answered me. "But, Margaret, I'm trying to conquer my fear. Every time I get a chance I'm doing something that's hard for me to do—like David!"

"Then," I questioned not very tactfully, "that's why you went to the slums with the basket, why you spoke in meeting, why——"

Madeline flushed.

"Yes," she answered me, "that's why. I've always been a 'fraid cat. But I'm not going to be any more. I'm going to have faith. And I know I'll win."

MADELINE BERRY did win. In little ways, at first, and then in bigger ways. But it was only when one day the Jones boy (no longer little) spoke of her that I realized how she had made good.

"Madeline," said the Jones boy, "is the bravest girl I know. We were coming home from a party the other night, past a saloon, and a drunken man reeled out. There was a little boy standing waiting on the curb, and the man cuffed him. 'Oh, daddy!' sobbed the little boy. 'Please——'

"Madeline Berry walked right over to that man. He was a big man, too, and she looked awfully little and pale and frightened. 'Don't-you-touch-that-child-again!' she said.

"I expected that drunken brute to strike her before I could get between them. But when he looked into her eyes, he cringed. 'Sorry, Miss,' he mumbled, and he slunk down the street. When I took Madeline's arm I felt that she was trembling.

"She was scared. And yet she dared speak to him. So I think that she's the bravest girl I know."

I laughed. And as I laughed, I wondered if the Jones boy remembered a certain caterpillar!

THERE is only one more chapter to the story of Madeline Berry. And it's a short chapter. For I said "good-by" to her the other day. She's sailing for France.

"I hate war!" she told me. "It terrifies my soul. But where there is such horrible suffering, some one must help. And so I feel that I have to go. They need me. . . . "

She wore a white frock. On the sleeve of it was a red badge of courage.

In the shape of a cross!

Won't Mix

The exhilarating joy of touring is insured against many an interruption by carrying an extra quart can or two of Havoline in your tool compartment.

Lubrication troubles simply won't mix with

HAVOLINE OIL

"It makes a difference"

The "difference" shows plainly in longer mileage on gas, smoother running, easier control, less depreciation, and longer life.

The sealed can is your certificate of uniform quality, full quantity, no waste or impurities, and all-Havoline.

Indian Refining Company
Incorporated
NEW YORK

Producers and Refiners of Petroleum

FIVE U.S. GALLONS NET
HAVOLINE
OIL
MEDIUM
INDIAN REFINING CO.
NEW YORK CITY

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
MACARONI
SKINNER MFG CO.
OMAHA U.S.A.

TO SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN AND INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to
CAPE TOWN, DURBAN,
BOMBAY, COLOMBO,
MADRAS, RANGOON
AND CALCUTTA.
FOR SAILING DATE, RATE
OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO
NORTON LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City.
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.

Help Save the Nation's Food on the economical, time-tried
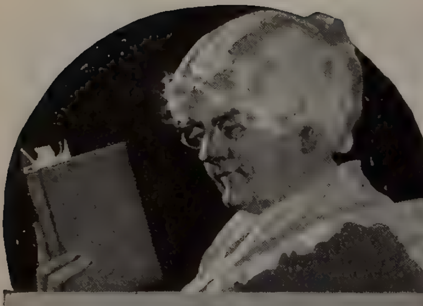
"GRANGER" EVAPORATOR
APPLES, PEACHES, CORN, BEANS
fruit and vegetables of all kinds, quickly dried in the "Granger." Delicious when served next winter.

NO SUGAR, NO CANS, NO JARS

You simply dry them, then pack them away in boxes. Evaporated fruits make the most wonderful desserts, cakes and pies. The "Granger" is the simplest and most practical family evaporator. Tested and approved by U. S. Government. Used on any stove, economical in fuel. Thousands in use. Save the surplus from your garden or buy fruits and vegetables when they're cheap and evaporate them. Order your "Granger" now—2 sizes, $6 and $12. You can save the cost several times over in one year on sugar alone. Write for FREE booklet 4—all about the Evaporator and all about evaporating, too.

GRANGE SALES ASSOCIATION, Lafayette Bldg., Philadelphia



Even She Had Corns

Until a Little While Ago She Thought Them Unavoidable

If you have corns don't blame yourself too much. Many an old person has had them fifty years.

Yet they have done what you do—pared them and used old-time, useless treatments.

But what folly it is when nowadays about half the world keeps free.

Just try one corn.

Apply a Blue-jay plaster in a jiffy. Then forget it. It will never pain again.

In two days take the plaster off. The corn will disappear. Only one corn in ten needs another application.

The cost is five cents per corn. The trouble is a moment. The results are sure.

You will laugh at the old ways when you try Blue-jay. You will wonder why people ever let corns hurt. Please start tonight. You have suffered long enough.

BAUER & BLACK
Chicago and New York
Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

Blue-jay
Stops Pain—Ends Corns
Sold by All Druggists
Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters

BUCKSKIN TIRES SAVE YOU MONEY

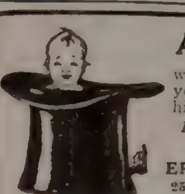
Thousands of car owners know this to be a fact. The reason is obvious—we sell direct from factory to you—saving you fully 30%. Moreover, Buckskin quality is of the highest. With every tire you get a 4000-Mile Guarantee

Send for free illustrated booklet and price list. Order a trial tire and if it doesn't live up to our guarantee, we will give you credit in full for the unexpired mileage.

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO.
East St., Carrollton, O.
Western Distributing Office 15
1436 South Michigan Ave., Chicago

WANTED—Women to become nurses. The need was never so great as now. We have trained thousands of women in their own homes. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—with actual experiences. Specimen lesson pages free.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.



A Happy Father

will be glad to receive from you a "Chase" baby card for his new heir.

For Sale Everywhere or Direct
Send for Catalog 230
ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway Street Boston, Mass.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by
MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Young People's Topics for August 26

The Bible a Missionary Book

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ps. 119 : 9–16
(Conquest Meeting)

THE Bible has a message for the world for lack of which the world is dying. In the Old Testament the Jew was urged to proselyte from among the nations about him, and the law provided ways and means by which the Gentile born could enter the fraternity of the sons of Abraham. Jonah was the first missionary. The New Testament is clear in the obligation it imposes on all Christians to disciple all nations. The last words of the ascending Christ commanded missionary enterprise. The first sermon of Pentecost was heard by men of every nation into which Jews had penetrated, and the early church was barely organized before Paul began his missionary journey, while the dispersion of the church and the beginning of persecutions sent the members broadcast over the world with the message of salvation. Every church of today is in part indebted to missionary effort for the beginnings of its life. Every nation of Europe and America that is called a Christian nation has become so because, at some period, some missionary preached salvation through the blood of Christ, perhaps in the Black Forest of Germany, perhaps in the Highlands of Scotland, or to English Druids, or to the native clans of Ireland, or to the Gauls of France. The Bible itself is a most potent bearer of its own message. A few years ago a man found one leaf of the Gospel of John in an ash-can in a South American city and could not rest until he had found the rest of the book. The result was a great mission work in a city which, before, had been very difficult of access.

"Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbor as Thyself"

Christian Endeavor Topic. Gal. 5 : 13-26
(Temperance Topic)

OUR neighbor has a right to expect of us conduct that will make life easier for him to live. If we stand before the world as Christians, the world has a right to expect of us an example inspired by the love of Christ; it has a right to expect that we shall be slow to take offense, that we shall be peacemakers rather than stirrers up of quarrels, that we shall be discreet in our conduct, that we shall not be found in unseemly revels, and that our speech shall not be marked by the maudlin foolishness of those who take just a little too much. There is much joy in the life of a Christian; there is a world of good fun at his command—fun that is all the better because it is clean, and not tinged with excess to any degree. In fact, real enjoyment can hardly be appreciated until the soul is at peace with God, until the life is purged of sin and of the fear of consequences which is inseparable from wrong-doing. Loving God, we shall love our neighbor, and our love should be sufficiently manifest so that he will find in it an invitation to the table of the Lord.

Echo Meeting for a Summer Institute or Convention

Epworth League Topic. Acts 14 : 27; 15 : 4; 21 : 17–20

SUMMER institutes exist for but one thing—to develop and train leadership. Those who attend these institutes hear messages of power, receive inspirations manifold and various, and come home fully charged with spiritual power. This meeting should give them an opportunity to pass on to those less fortunate the inspirations they have gained. The very opportunity to tell the story of the conference will crystallize in their hearts and lives the impulses to better living and the ideals for leadership which have been held up before them by institute speakers. Lacking this opportunity, the distractions of every day may so dim their new vision that they lose all the spiritual momentum gained by their vacation. The summer conference is a dynamo, charging each delegate and sending him home a live battery. But batteries lose their powers rapidly when not used, and so do delegates.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

"THEREFORE I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. And when ye stand praying forgive, if ye have aught against any."

In the great safety deposit vaults it is usual to have the locks so constructed that boxes can be opened only by two keys operated simultaneously. Neither alone will give access to the treasures within. In this answer to Peter Jesus gave to Peter and to the world the two keys to the treasures of prayer. One key is marked "Believe" and the other "Forgive." Faith and forgiveness are the twin keys to the Christian holy of holies. And the faith must be perfect faith that doubts nothing, and the forgiveness complete forgiveness that withholds nothing. It is not enough to forgive all but one. Perhaps that one has committed a grave fault. Perhaps he glories in the pain he has given. Perhaps he only awaits an opportunity to pile injury upon injury. But the Saviour says forgive, "if ye have aught against any." And without this key the prayer door will not swing inward, nor will the treasures it withholds flow outward. Is it a hard condition? It may seem so. But often true forgiveness and the kindness that goes with it have brought the hard offender to repentance for his fault, and thus a sundered friendship has been restored even as prayer was answered.

M. M. writes that prayer for rain to save famishing crops has been answered by a gentle, life-giving shower.

Mrs. H. J. A. tells of a church revived and souls saved in answer to prayer.

Mrs. T. R. G. asks prayer that she may be guided in her care of her baby, that the little life which now seems to hang by such a delicate thread may be spared. Three times before she has come to the League for prayer, when troubles threatened to be overwhelming, and each time she was able to praise God for prayer answered in victory.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Rowland, N. C.; Augusta, Texas; Ebenezer, Rockbridge, Va. (that many may be saved during revival); Cochron, Ga. (that many may be saved during revival).

R. M. C. asks prayer that pastor's mind, A Believer, that father's mind may be restored; six ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

Mrs. M. W. C. asks prayer that son's sight, H. M., that father's sight may be restored; eight friends ask prayer that sight may be strengthened.

Five readers ask prayer for restoration of hearing for themselves, friends or relatives.

Five readers ask prayer for special blessing for others; including T. R. L., that son who has gone to war may be brought nearer to Christ; Mr. and Mrs. W. P. E., that two sons who have answered their country's call may be spiritually blessed and return safely to their parents when war is over.

Twenty-two friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Forty ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives; including Mrs. E. K., that two daughters may be restored to health and strength; another, Mrs. F. H., that a mother may regain the use of limbs; another, N. S., that a preacher may be restored to health and strength; thirty-two friends ask prayer for healing of themselves; including Mrs. M. R., that health may be restored without an operation; another, Mrs. J. P. H., asks prayer to regain the use of arm; another, M. H., to be cured of lameness; another member, that health may be restored without an operation.

NEW-SKIN
For the Feet

To prevent skin-rubs, calluses, blisters, etc. Just the thing for the man in khaki

A medium sized bottle will be mailed by us post paid to any address upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps.

NEWSKIN CO. NEW YORK

Deformities of the Back

Greatly benefited or entirely cured by the Philo Burt Method.

The 25,000 cases successfully treated in our experience of over fifteen years is absolute proof of this statement.

No matter how serious your deformity, no matter what treatments you have tried, think of the thousands of sufferers this method has made well and happy. We will prove the value of the Philo Burt Method in your own case.

The Philo Burt Appliance on 30 Days' Trial

Since you run no risk there is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once.

The photographs here show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturing plaster, leather or steel jackets. To weakened or deformed spines it brings almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases. You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe the nature and condition of your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
T-207 Odd Fellows Bldg., Jamestown, N.Y.

STEWARTS IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
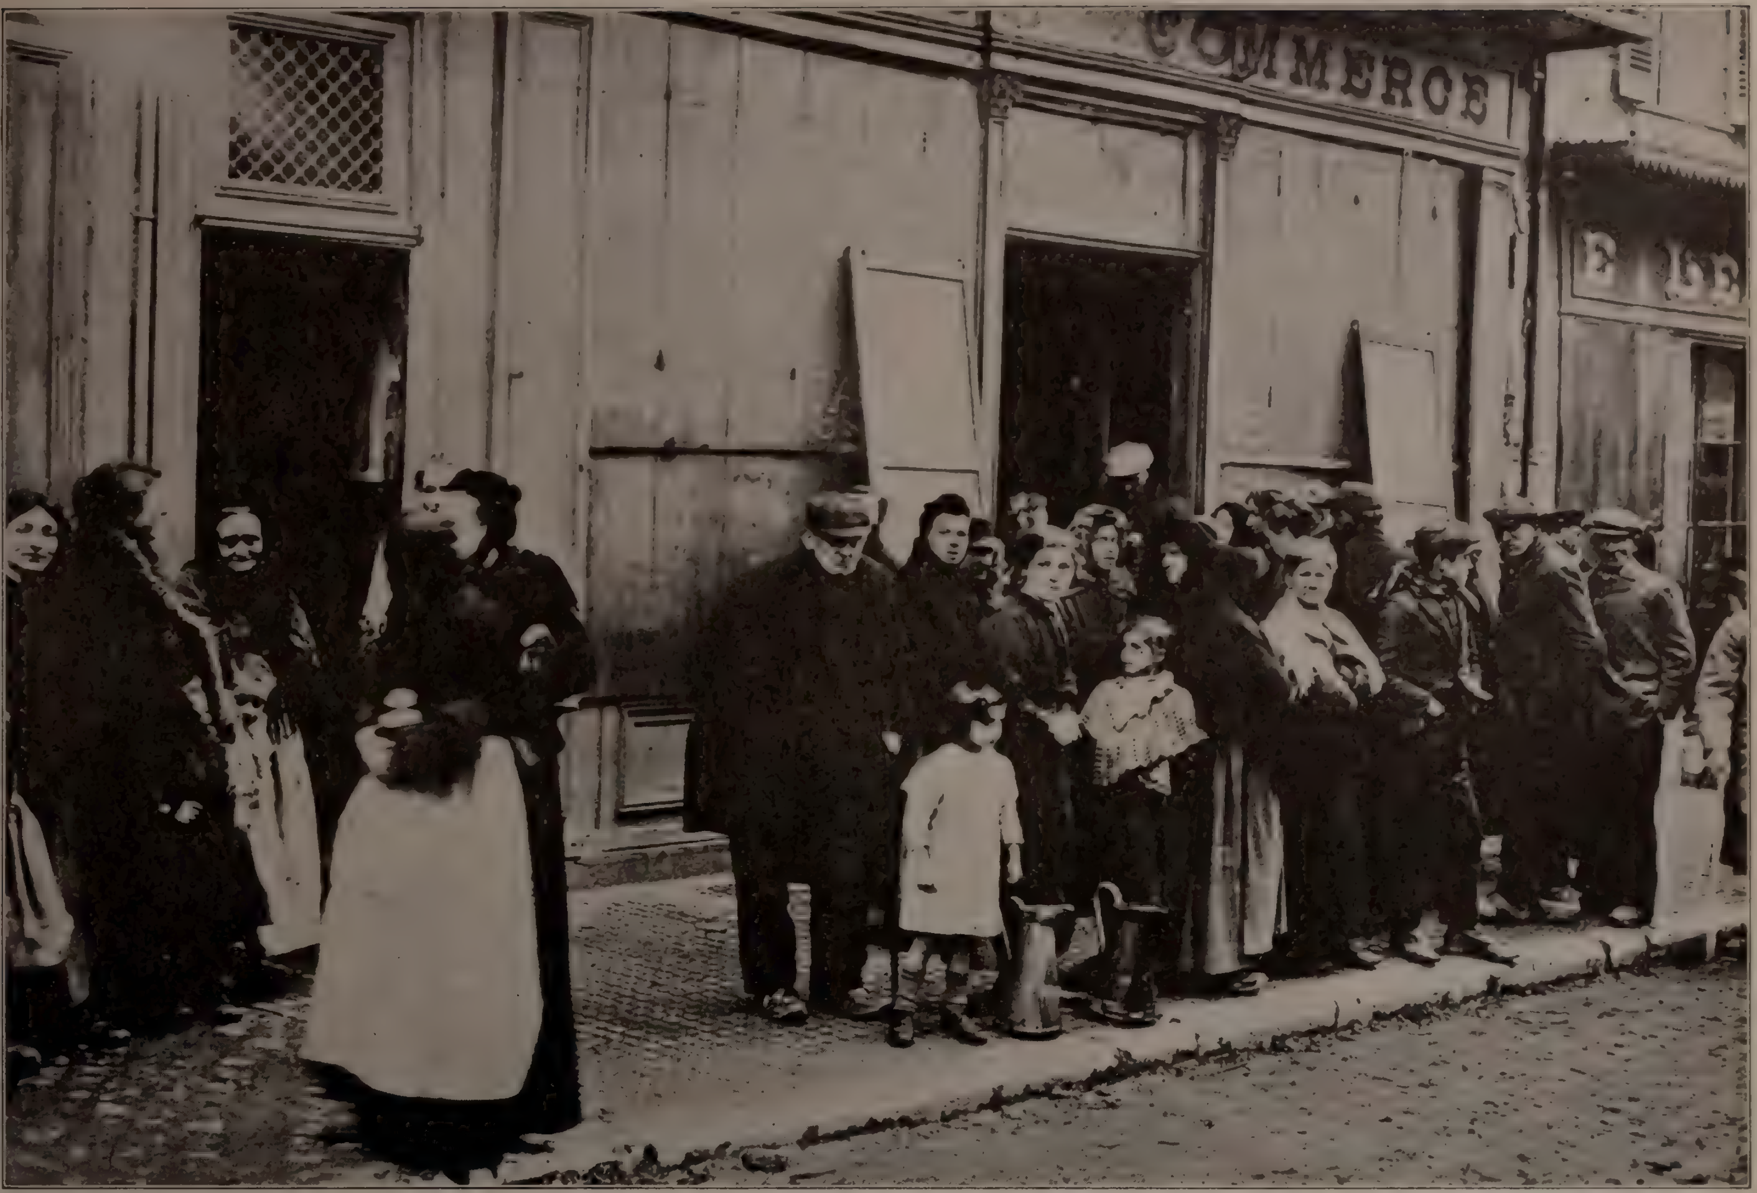
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.



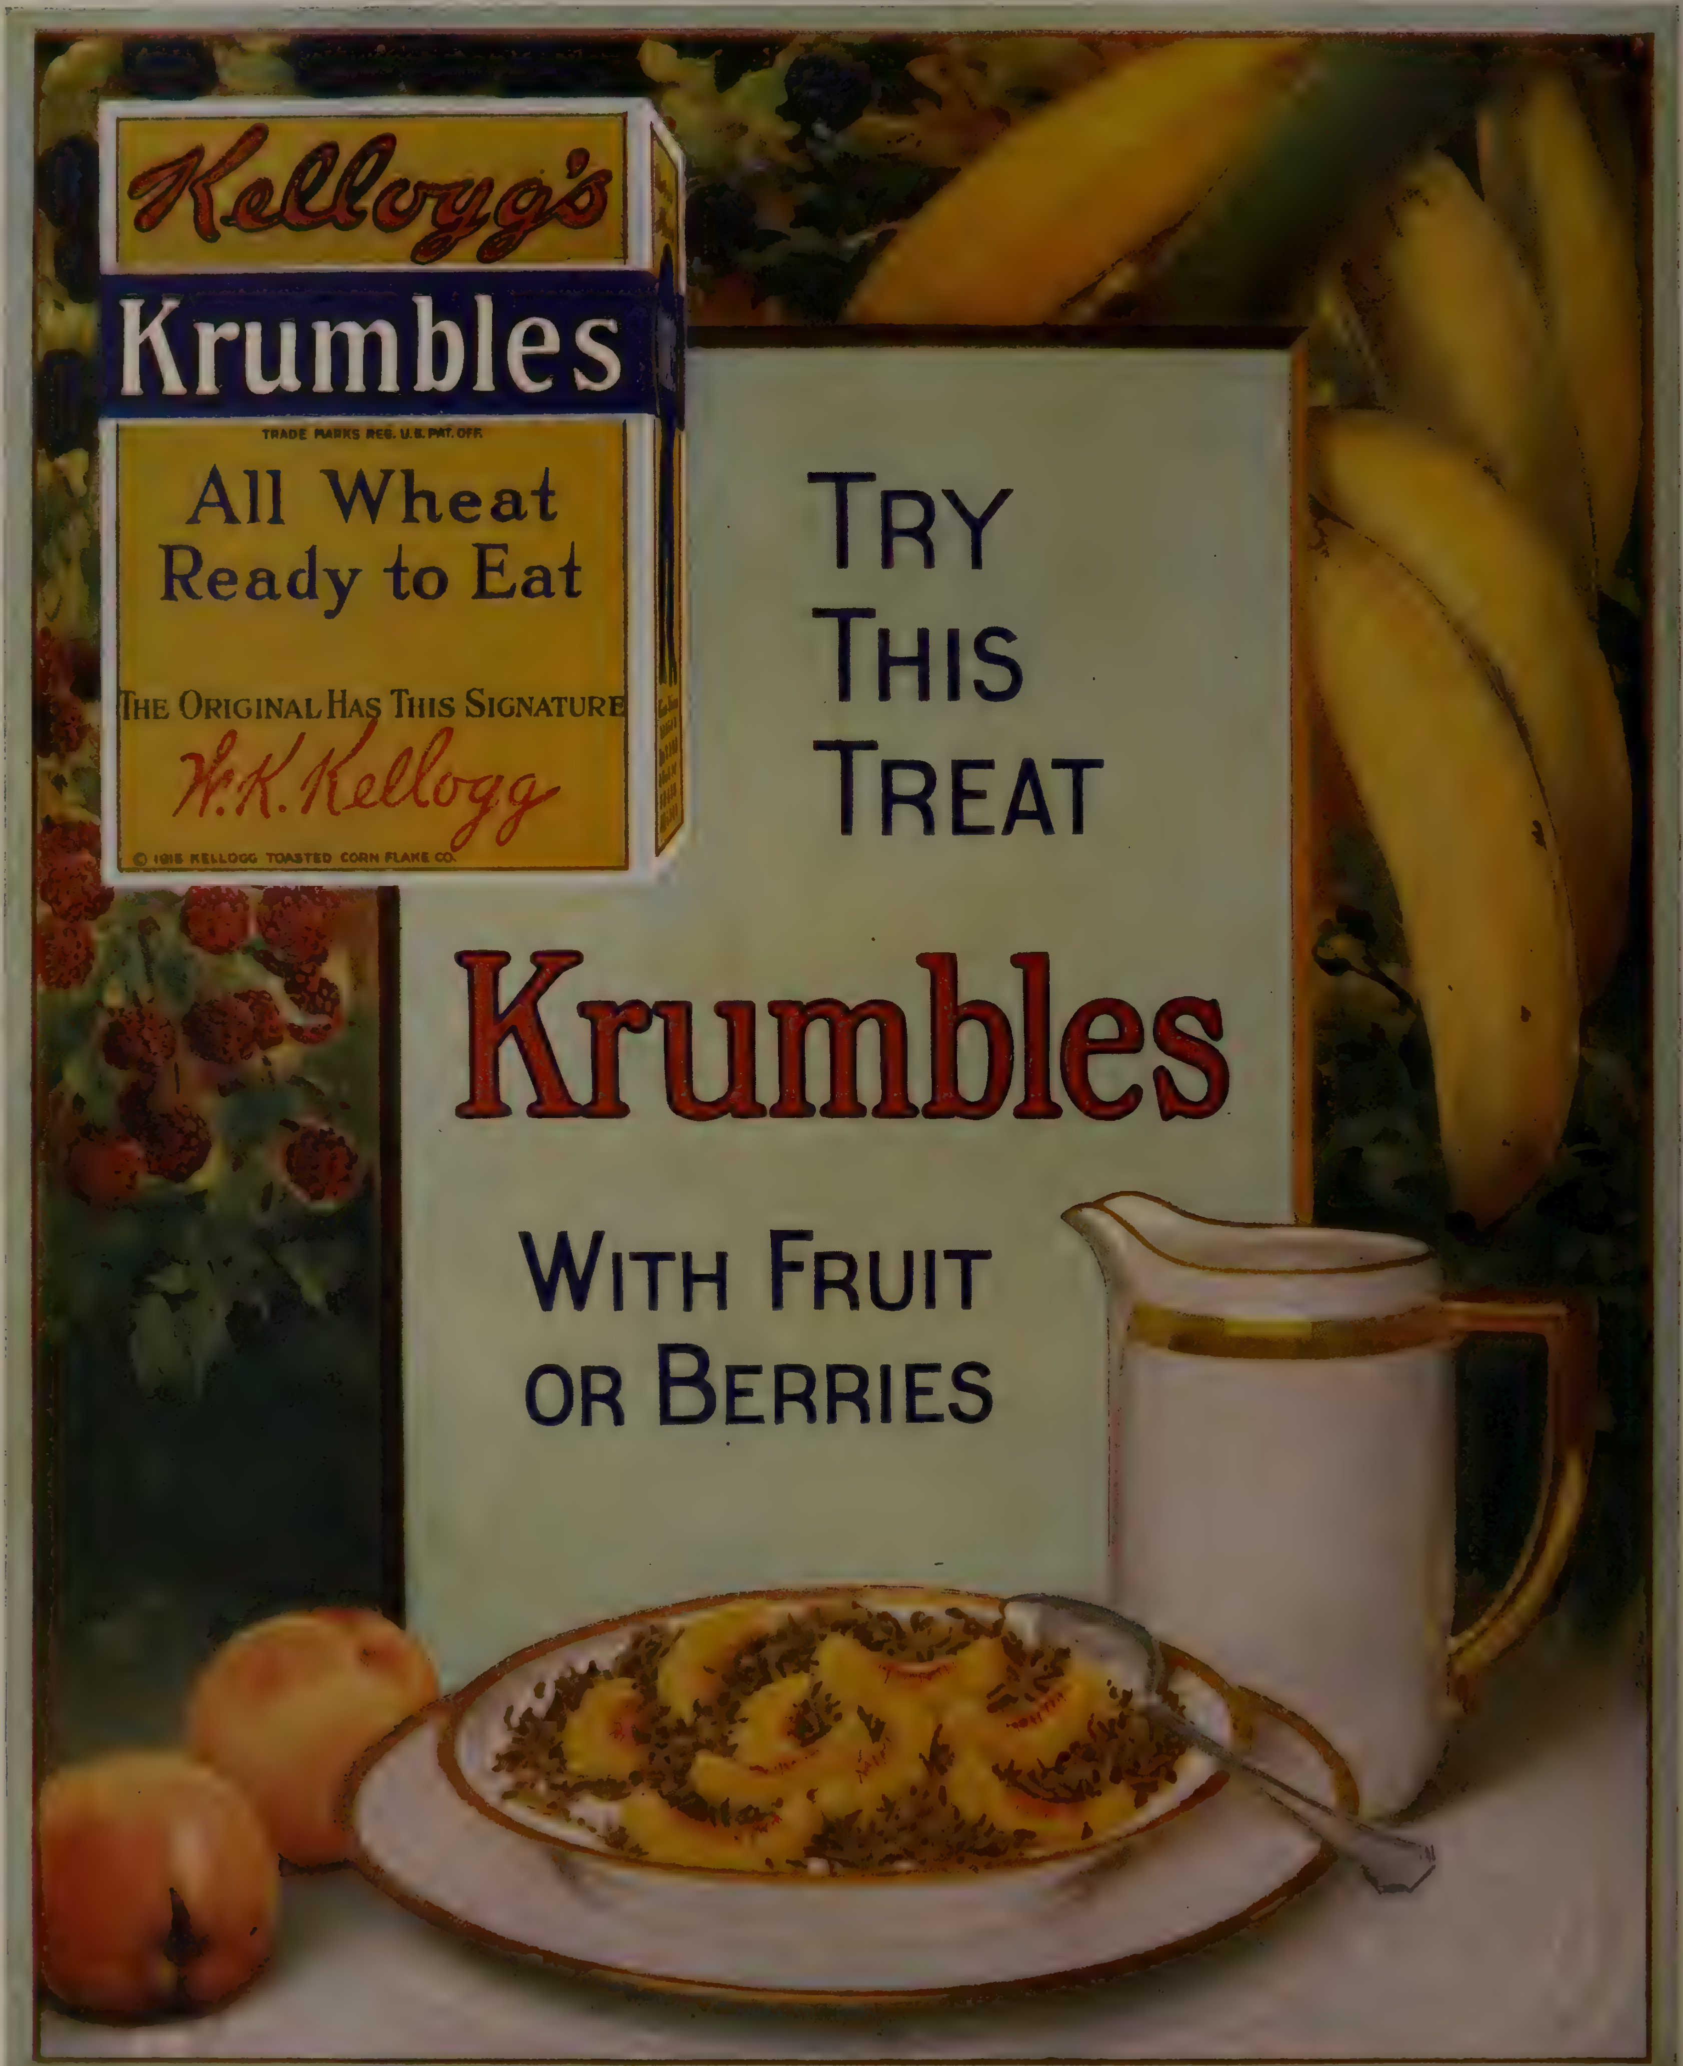
Waiting to be fed. Destitute residents of Noyon in northern France.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

M H S	$2.00
Ellen Shauck	2.00
Mrs W N Rundull	2.00
Mrs W N Dyche	2.00
Mrs A Kahl	2.00
P O Morris	2.00
Mrs Mary E Richards	2.00
Bertha Metzgar	2.00
Mrs John McQuaters, Sr	2.00
Harry J Anderson	2.00
Mrs C F Moseman	2.00
Mrs W H & Melvin Wrede	1.50
Friend, Piedmont, Kans	1.50
John Bennett	1.50
Z Haines	1.50
Mrs F M Hope	1.50
C P T	1.00
Miss Vern Milbank	1.00
Mrs Austin Miller	1.00
F A Cobb	1.00
H G Wilcox	1.00
Ed T Somervell	1.00
Miss Garretson	1.00
E B, Martins Ferry, Ohio	1.00
Subscriber, Needham Heights, Mass	1.00
—— and wife	1.00
E M Rullman	1.00
Flora A Reel	1.00
Friends, Coleta, Ill	1.00
Mrs H E S	1.00
Calvin W Price	1.00
Mrs L E Hicks	1.00
Minnie Davis	1.00
Reader, Rockford, Mich	1.00
Mrs Laura Borrell	1.00
Mrs J Githens	1.00
Sarah E Reisch	1.00
Amy V Arthur	1.00
Mary A Seiple	1.00
Mrs M C Wilburn	1.00
Nellie G Fulton	1.00
Mrs H E Greengress	1.00
Miss Hope	1.00
Friend, Ontario, Calif	1.00
Mrs S M Lovell	1.00
Mrs Jennie Ryan	1.00
Mrs W S Wallace	1.00
Mrs Ira Gardner	1.00
Friend, Germantown, Pa	$1.00
Mrs A E Nuss	1.00
Mrs J B	1.00
Reader, Flemington, N J	1.00
Miss E Florence Parks	1.00
Elinor I Thompson	1.00
Mrs Wm Skook	1.00
Mrs E F Rogers	1.00
Grace L Hoehn	1.00
——, Chambersburg, Pa	1.00
Mrs T C Johnson	1.00
Mrs J T Cribbens	1.00
Mrs L B Hughes	1.00
Clark A McBride	1.00
Mrs E R Mead	1.00
Mr & Mrs Edgar Hunt	1.00
Carl Stewart	1.00
Lynn Stewart	1.00
Clare Stewart	1.00
W M Wickham	1.00
"Batavia"	1.00
Mrs Mollie Shaffer	1.00
Miriam C Comerford	1.00
——, Wattsburg, Pa	1.00
Gartie Kirkpatrick	1.00
Mrs H F Adams	1.00
Wm H Day	1.00
Mrs G H H	1.00
—— Glens Falls, N Y	1.00
E S Rand	1.00
C E W	1.00
Mr Housework	1.00
Mary R Bispham	1.00
E C Krohne	1.00
Chas A Draeger	1.00
Mrs J O Jones	1.00
Gladys Shinn	1.00
Carrie B Boles	1.00
Geo Richert	1.00
Friend, Hastings, Mich	1.00
——, Danville, Va	1.00
John Boston	1.00
Mrs H E Edwards	1.00
Mrs W C H & Mrs E M R	1.00
Miss Clara A Marshall	1.00
W W Arthur	$1.00
Friend, Rootstown, Ohio	1.00
—, Roscoe, —Texas	1.00
Mrs John Traas	1.00
Mr & Mrs Carl Nelson	1.00
Mrs Clinton Eggleston	1.00
Rev O C Bliese	1.00
Mrs M B Henson	1.00
A E K B	1.00
A M B	1.00
E J McLeod	1.00
Mrs Sophia Ganschow	1.00
Subscriber, Topeka, Kans	1.00
Subscriber, Questa, N Mex	1.00
Mrs Fannie N Stephens	1.00
Reader, Brooklyn, N Y	1.00
Friend, Clarksville, Tenn	1.00
W A Park	1.00
May McNab	1.00
Mrs J B Ely	1.00
Wm Boynton	1.00
James D Acker	1.00
S A Maloney	1.00
Friend, McBain, Mich	1.00
Mrs W M McCarthy	1.00
Friend, Corry, Pa	1.00
Mrs M C Robinson	1.00
Friend, Connellsville, Pa	1.00
Mrs S Snehan	1.00
——, Fort Morgan, Colo	1.00
Clara Gordon	1.00
Mrs T Stewart	1.00
——, Albany, N Y	1.00
Julius Weber	1.00
Mrs A Neland	1.00
L M C	1.00
A E George	1.00
A M Shanklin	1.00
M D Townsend	1.00
Eber Bly	1.00
Geo Myers	1.00
Mrs Bunker	1.00
Mrs Peterson	1.00
Mr & Mrs Elmer Bly	1.00
Ida M Anderson	$1.00
F C Garrett	1.00
F Kepke	1.00
Fred McDowell	1.00
Naomi Griffith	1.00
Wm Rozelle	1.00
F Herriott	1.00
I A Bly	1.00
Margie Martin	1.00
O E Behm	1.00
B Croswell	1.00
W L Magers	1.00
M W Ahern	1.00
Geo Orloff	1.00
Mrs Smith Pedigo	1.00
M H Daniels	1.00
Friend, Marcellus, N Y	1.00
Mrs Gardner L Sturdevant	1.00
J R Culpepper	1.00
L B H	1.00
Mrs Geo Rickard	1.00
J M Beadles	1.00
Rev James A Lyons	1.00
Mrs C C Stedman	1.00
Mrs D Kramer	1.00
Mr Oscar Torell	1.00
Rev Oscar Sandahl	1.00
Mrs M E Logan	1.00
Mrs Olivia Hesson	1.00
Florence Clark	1.00
——, Delanson, N Y	1.00
Friend, Wells, Minn	1.00
V M Friend	1.00
Ed T Somerville	1.00
——, Cleveland, Ohio	1.00
Mrs Elmer Davis	1.00
M G Fowler	1.00
Mrs A L Weldon	1.00
——, Palmetto, Fla	1.00
L Maught	1.00
——, Phila., Pa	1.00
Miss Frances C Staples	1.00
Mabel O Weisley	1.00
Mary MacConnell	1.00
Mrs Grace E Johnson	1.00
A Neighbor, Fruita, Colo	1.00
Rachel M Sweeney	$1.00
Joseph Le Due	1.00
Mrs H S Baker	.50
Mrs A M, Okla	.50
Mrs C J	.50
Mary J Hensley	.50
Belle Dougherty	.50
R E Weaver	.50
M E & Olive C Young	.50
W L Croswell	.50
J H Cook	.50
Alex Quirie	.50
A M Emly	.50
Mrs A L McClaran	.50
"Poverty"	.25
Miss Rosetta B. Lucas	7.00
14th Inf & S S, Yuma, Ariz	23.83
Mrs Alex A Kelso	3.50
Julian Hatch	4.00
A J Siekmeier	10.05
Friend, Concord, N C	5.50
Friend, Sherwood Ore	4.50
Mrs J E Sherman	7.00
Mrs E B Osborne	4.00
Andrea Bernice Clemensen	4.00
North Cliff Farm, Culpepper, Va	4.00
Mrs J D Prideaux	4.00
Meth Epis S S, Watsonville, Calif	31.00
G Tessmann	4.00
Geo A Connolly	8.00
Mrs J Reed	6.50
Loyal Sons & Daughters Cl, Church of Brethren, Cloverdale, Va	6.00
Friend, Batavia, N Y	6.00
Priscilla Club, Trinidad, Colo	45.00
Tenth Ave Bapt Ch, Columbus, O	14.50
Mrs J W H	6.00
Golda Poffenberger	$4.00
Mrs P L Adams	6.00
S S Class, Independence, Mo	.65
Fourth Christian Ref Ch, S S, Paterson, N J	35.00
Valley Height S S, Prosser, Wash	7.00
Christian Assembly, Urbandale, Mich	63.87
Mrs Dell H Tillotson	8.00
Mrs H F Datesman	4.00
O E Gooley	4.00
Reader, of the S S Times	6.00
——, Owensmouth, Calif	5.40
S S, Afton, Va	7.00
Amy Barlow	11.10
Ladies' Aid, Clear Lake, Ia	18.00
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	17.00
T N Vanzer	8.00
Sugar Grove Christian S S, Dayton, O	15.11
Helen Hoffbuhr	.85
——, La Clede, Ill	.10
J B Ratcliffe	24.00
Geo E Vanderhoof	4.00
Winter Park Presby Ch, Wilmington, N Car	5.20
Danish Bapt Ch, Harlan, Iowa	154.25
Mother & Son, Tulare, S Dak	8.00
Troop No 1, Boy Scouts of America, West Chester, Pa	30.00
R M Judd	1.70
Churches, Dade City, Fla	8.00
John Kennedy & family	40.00
Mary B Hamilton	14.23
Abner Creek Bapt Ch, Spartanburg Co, S C	$4.65
Friend, Hartford, Conn	.20
——, Summit Hills, Pa	.75
D N Wolf	4.00
Mrs C L Schoonover	6.00
Mrs Samuel Harper	1.25
Friend, Birmingham, Ala	4.00
Mr E W Yeasting	6.00
James Cannon	10.30
May Buckingham	2.25
Mrs Margaret Vandevort	.26
Rev W B Harrison	11.00
W C Lowrey	2.65
Mrs Emma G Forsythe	.83
Richard Frohreich	2.65
Joseph Bowditch	13.19
Samuel Marshall	.33
"Onamio, Minn"	4.00
Mary Erhardt	.65
F B Layman	2.65
Mrs Elizabeth R Allen	1.35
Mrs H Burt	1.65
Mrs Ed Ijames	2.97
Ella A Smith	.40
Miss H L Whitney	.35
Mrs Mary C Bales	1.35
Mrs W P Rogers	11.32
Mrs Andrew Jager	4.00
Mrs Mildred C Best	.30
Benj Hartman	2.65
Union Christmas Entertainment Goshen, Va	9.17
Class 10, Presby S S, Apollo, Pa	6.50
J H Mawhinney	8.00
Nora M Lewis	.65
Alba Bellows	2.65
Mrs S Crouch	$1.65
Wm H McKnight	2.65
Mrs H W Johnson	2.25
W B Waff	2.65
Mrs Myrtle Hull	1.65
Mrs W W Alcott	2.65
Glover Community S S, Glover, Vt	8.00
Mrs John L Mayos	.35
Rose E Bankson	.65
Mrs Abbie A Dodman	1.10
Subscriber, Britt, Iowa	2.65
J M Clyne	8.00
Miss E B Hale	.35
F E Brand	.30
I H Stauffacher	3.75
Mrs Fisher Hyle	2.65
B E Wideman	8.00
Mrs B C Abbott	.75
Mrs W T Fox	.75
F W Schauer	8.00
Clara Meinitz	.35
Gus Buddenbam	2.65
Exie Estes	.35
I Girod	2.75
Chr Ref Ch, E Saugatuck, Mich	78.62
Friend, Elkville, Ill	4.00
John Le Davis	6.00
A G Klein	30.00
Lucy & Hope Miller	16.00
Wm T. Pechin	4.00
Holy Innocents Ch, Union Services, Lacony, Pa	35.88
Danish Norwegian Evangelical Free Ch, New Haven	125.87
West Union S S, W Union, Pa	6.00
"Friend, San Bernardino, Calif"	7.00
Friends, Warren, Pa	7.15
Miss Adele Cuendet	.20

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Send all gifts for this fund to the Christian Herald, 93 Bible House, New York City



Kellogg's
Krumbles
TRADE MARKS REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
All Wheat
Ready to Eat
THE ORIGINAL HAS THIS SIGNATURE
W.K. Kellogg
© 1916 KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.
TRY
THIS TREAT
Krumbles
WITH FRUIT OR BERRIES

Copyright, 1917, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co.

EVERY home in the land has a hearty welcome for Krumbles—the new whole wheat food, with its delicious flavor, and its high food value at a low price. Children like Krumbles, and it builds them up, because of the extra nutrition of Durum wheat, which is rich in protein and mineral salts. Krumbles is appetizing with cream or milk, and a special treat with berries, sliced peaches, or bananas. Look for this signature.

Originated and developed by Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Company, makers of Kellogg's—the original Toasted Corn Flakes.

W.K. Kellogg

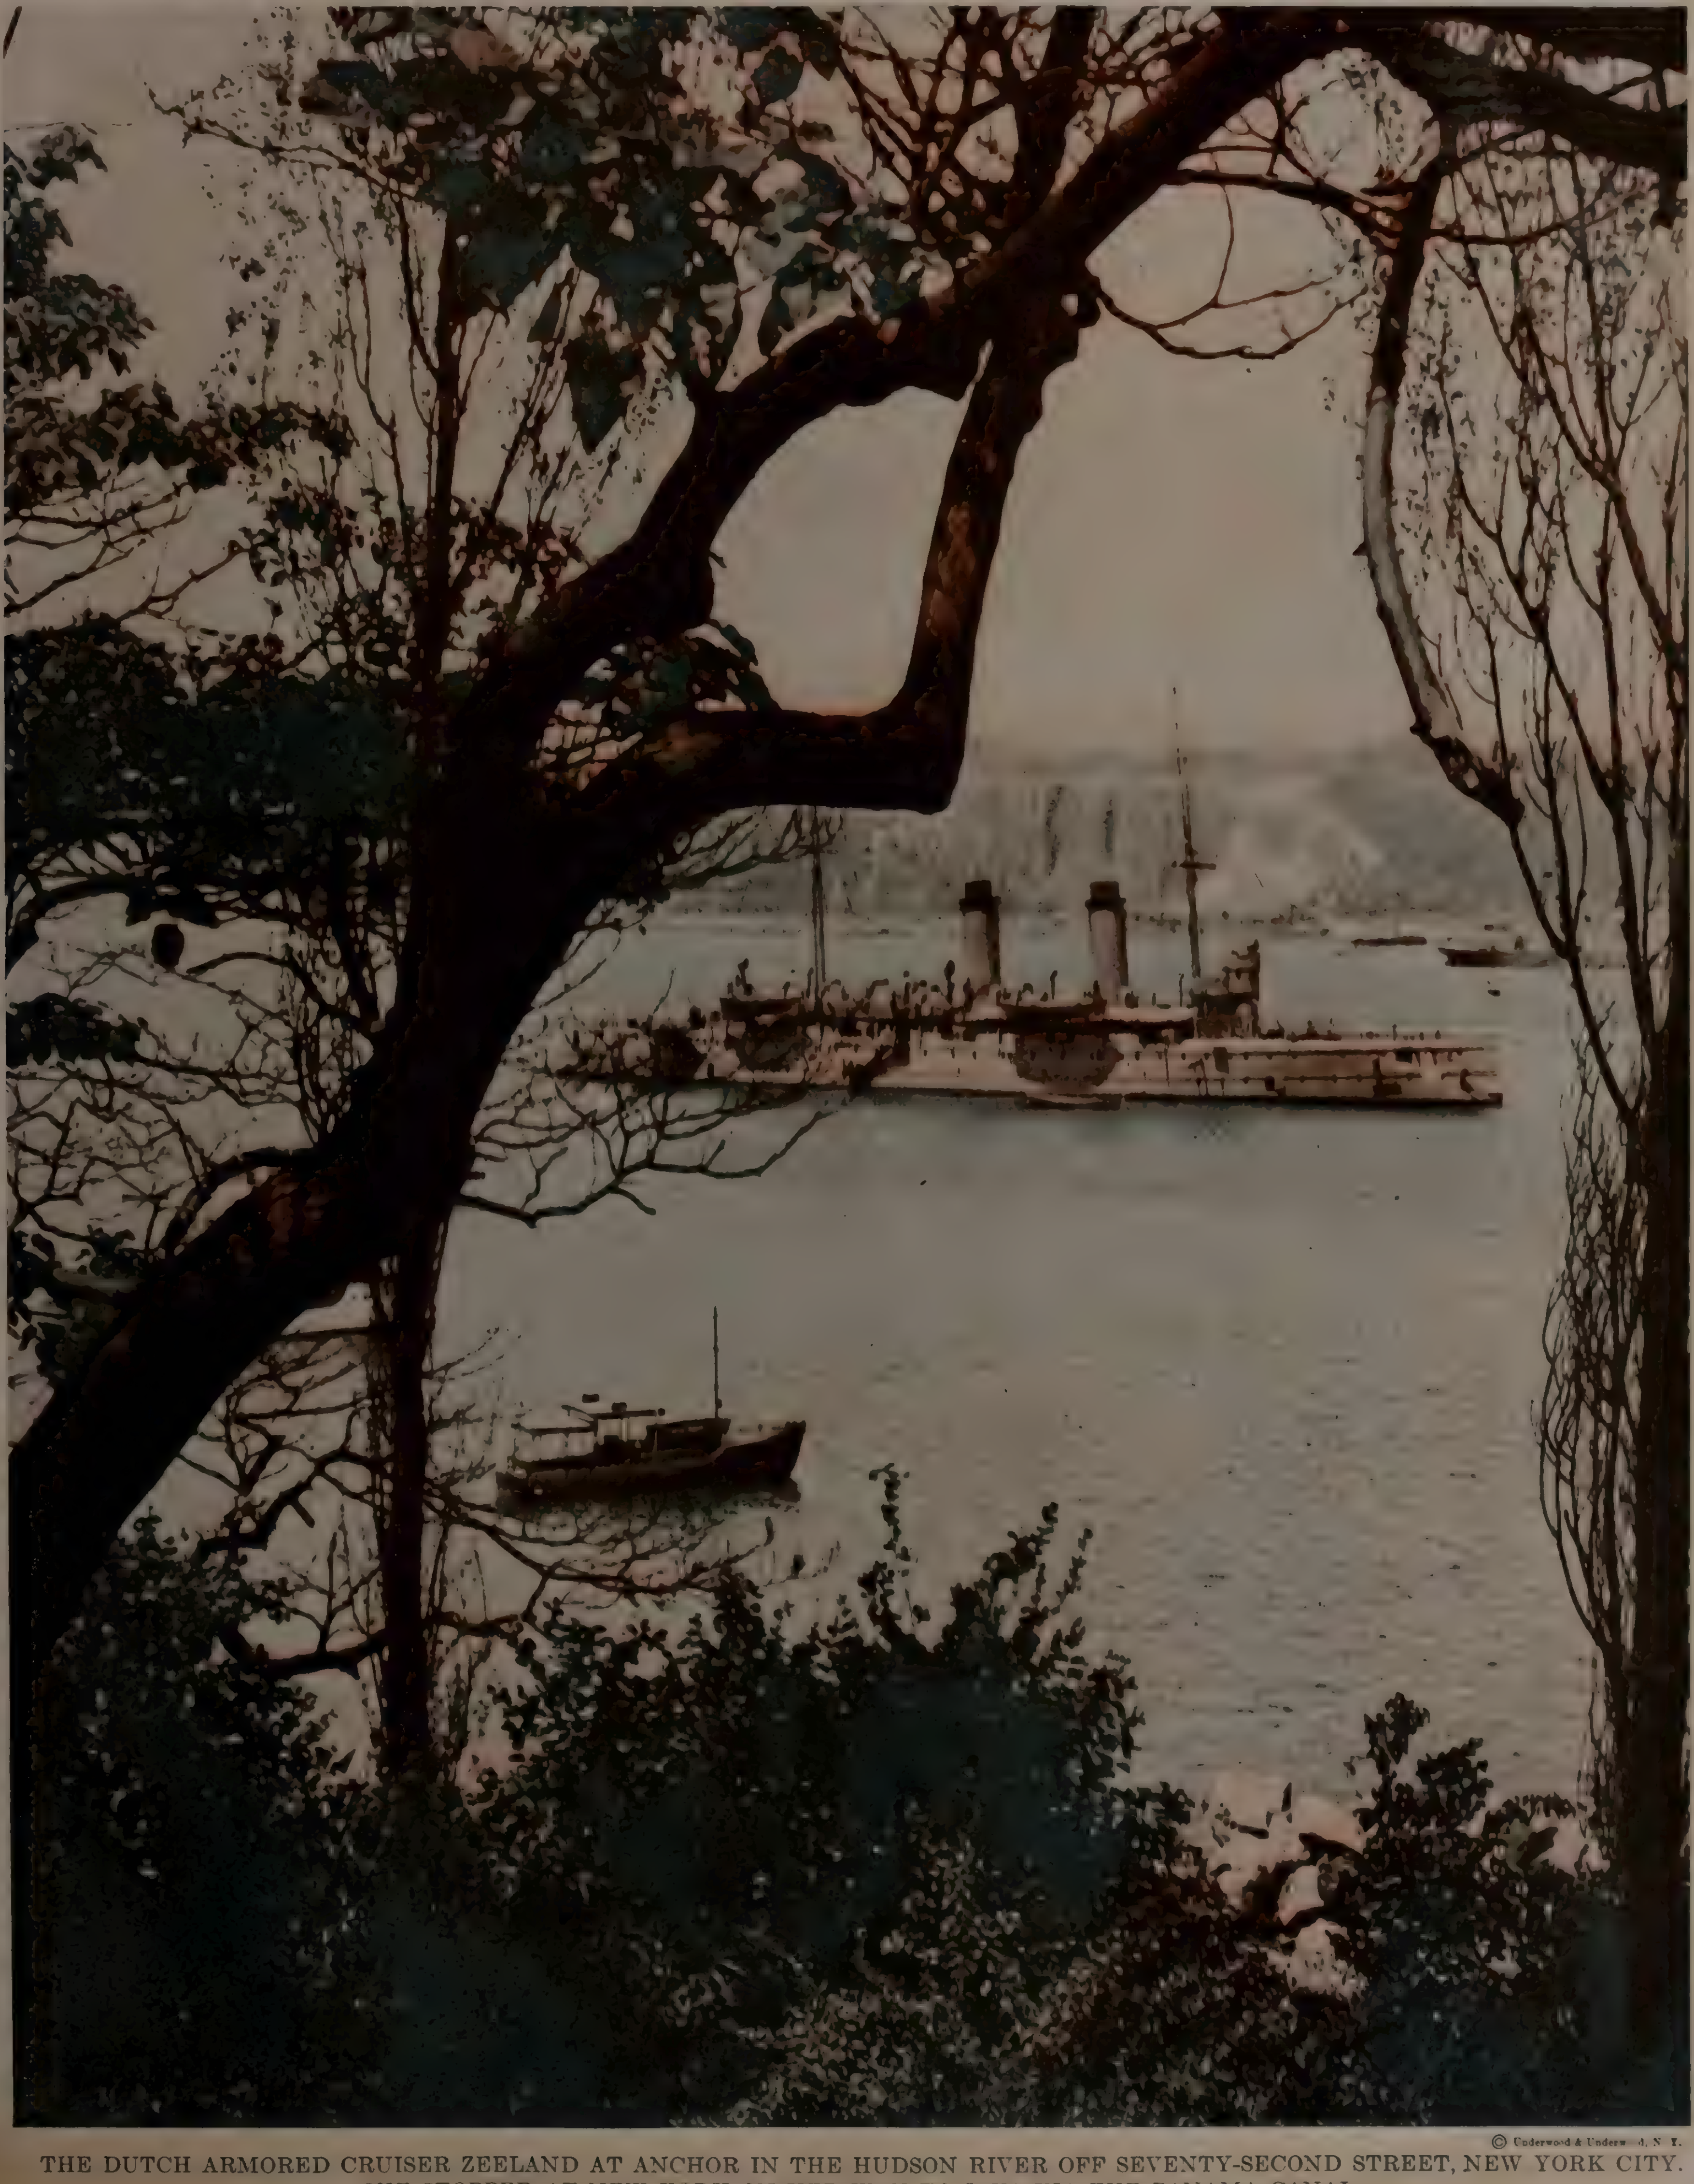
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, AUGUST 22, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 34. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



© Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

THE DUTCH ARMORED CRUISER ZEELAND AT ANCHOR IN THE HUDSON RIVER OFF SEVENTY-SECOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY. SHE STOPPED AT NEW YORK ON HER WAY TO JAVA VIA THE PANAMA CANAL.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

J. P. R., Bostonia, Calif. "I have a number of fig-trees which I grew from the seed, and it is a fact well known in California that the fig-tree does have flowers, and that the best figs raised must have those flowers fertilized by a small insect called a fig wasp or blastophaga, which has been imported from the old World into California.

A number of letters in a similar vein to the above have been received from other readers, including H. L. F., Annandale, N. J.; B. H. W. Deland, Fla.; G. W. S., Claremont, Calif.; Mrs. K. S. K., Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. C. K. F., Shell Rock, Iowa; Mrs. M. J. C., Georgetown, Ky.; R. M. S., Banning, Calif., and A. A. W., Pasadena, Calif., all testifying to the fact that fig-trees do have a blossom. A. A. W., says "there are four distinct kinds of flowers in figs." Our reader in Banning writes: "A flower is sure to precede the fruit. The only way to see the fig blossom is to destroy the bulb which later develops into the fruit. Break that open at the proper time, and you will find a whole bouquet of flowers." H. L. F. also dwells on this way in which nature has "hidden the flowers of the fig." "They are minute, upon the inner surface of a hollow receptacle, but easily to be seen with a magnifying glass," writes our correspondent in Deland, Fla. G. W. S. says: "The same belief (that the fig-tree was flowerless) caused infidels to laugh at poor ignorant Habakkuk for expecting any blossoms (Hab. 3 : 17), until it was discovered that the fig had many microscopic blossoms inside." "The fig," writes Mrs. C. K. F., "is not a true fruit, but a fleshy receptacle, with true flowers and seed lining the inside." It is clear from the foregoing that those who have assumed that the fig-tree is blossomless have not pursued their investigations far enough to discover the hidden fruit. One of our friends has sent us an opened fig-bulb, which shows clearly the tiny seed-pods crowned with the microscopically small but easily recognized blossoms, which fully bears out the statements of our readers quoted above.

F. G. M., Corvallis, Ore., writes—"Answering W. J. W. C., Santa Maria, Calif. (in the Christian Herald for June 30, 1917, page 2), you say: 'The predictions in Rev. 20 are still unfulfilled.' Reading them carefully, and also reading what the Lord said in Matt. 24, it seems to me that up to Rev. 20 : 9 at least has been fulfilled, or is now fulfilling. After the Middle Ages, does it not appear that our world had less trouble until now?—that the devil was 'bound' and 'shut up'? In the light of recent and present events (among the most awful in our world's history), is it unlikely that the devil is 'loosed out of his prison' and is again making all the trouble he can? Doesn't it look as though verses 8 and 9 are fulfilling, or soon will be? As to Rev. 20 : 4 and on to verse 7, this is the only place in the Bible I know of where this thousand-year reign of Christ with his martyred ones is mentioned. Please notice that this is a special reign; that it is with his saints who were beheaded and who had not worshiped the beast nor received its mark. It looks to me that those martyrs are the ones who reign with Him in this special thousand-year reign, and not we who have not suffered martyrdom and are not likely to. In this connection please note Luke 22 : 28-30 and Rev. 7 : 13-17. Is it impossible or unlikely that this special thousand-year reign is not taking place and has been for some time elsewhere than on this earth? Jesus in the Gospels does not speak directly of this special reign. Certainly, not to us. Only to his apostles. (Luke 22 : 28-30.)

L. C. C., West Asheville, N. C. Please explain Hebrews 10 : 26: Does this mean that one who sins wilfully, is lost?

In one sense every sin is wilful, because the sinner would not do it without the consent of his will. But the word has another meaning. It implies a deliberate and intentional act, which is different from an act to which a man is lured or deceived, or an act which he commits under some sudden and strong temptation. But if the sinner truly repents, imploring God's forgiveness for Jesus' sake; if he accepts him as Saviour and endeavors, with divine help, to live thereafter a Christian life, he will not only be forgiven, but will be kept from falling back into sin. This is the teaching of the Gospel, and it is exemplified in innumerable cases today. We have many instances everywhere of great sinners who have forsaken their evil ways and who are now living the new life, sustained by divine power. There is none who can go beyond the reach of the divine mercy, and God will always hear and answer the prayer of the earnest, penitent heart. We believe that there is no passage that excludes the truly repentant sinner from pardon. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews simply taught that there was no further sacrifice for sin than that which had been offered in the person of Christ. He was writing to Hebrews who, under the old dispensation, could bring another sin-offering when they sinned again. The Christian must revert to the cross, for there remains no other atonement, and if he puts that away from him he is without resource. The backslider who sincerely repents is encouraged to return and is sure of welcome. It is the one imperative duty he is bound to perform. Even Peter, who denied his Lord, was tenderly welcomed. As a father receives a child, who goes to him with confession and repentance, so God will receive the Christian who has fallen, but has renounced his sin and humbly pleads for forgiveness through Christ.

Out To The Fields They Go

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

OUT to the war the men must go,
Leaving their lands in the scorching sun;
Ah, their souls are sad, and their heads bow low,
For the lives that they leave are just begun!
But—men must fight in the world-old way
To the bitter close of the blood-red day—
To ease the world of its aching.

The women gaze o'er the idle fields,
O'er the idle fields in the scorching sun;
And well they know what the harvest yields
Will be their stay—and a sorry one!
So with hands untaught they mow the hay,
But ever their eyes look far away,
And their hearts are near to breaking.

Mrs. P. P., Sandia, Texas. The question in your letter, as to how all the world can simultaneously see our Lord's appearance, is one that is frequently asked. Dr. Gray, who is now writing on prophetic topics in the Christian Herald, will no doubt deal with this among other matter in the course of his articles.

N. W. M., Los Angeles, Calif. Are all and each of the commandments contained in the twentieth chapter of Exodus as binding today as ever, both to the Jews and Gentiles?

Although the Christian is not under the law but under grace, he is not free from obligation. The moral law has never been abrogated. You strive to keep all of the commandments out of love for God and the love of righteousness. These commandments were emphasized and given an even broader interpretation by Christ, who came not to destroy but to fulfil the law. The Gentile converts were not to be bound by the Levitical laws, but even under the law of love they were not under any less obligation to respect and yield obedience to the moral law, which is applicable to the whole human race. Love is higher than law, and Christ placed his followers under the obligation of love, inculcating a more perfect and willing obedience to the divine will in all things.

J. M., Dayton, Ohio. Alexander Feodorovitch Kerensky, who, through the vicissitudes of war, has risen to be dictator of Russia, is the son of a Slav father and a Mongol mother. There is said to be a strain of Jewish blood in him. If it be true that he is of that race, then it is one of the strangest outcomes of the war. It was a Jew who gave to Emperor Alexander the first inspiration of world-peace. Jews have been conspicuous in the liberation campaign, waged for the purpose of relieving not only their own race, but the whole Russian people, of oppression.

L. V. S., Washington, D. C., wrote recently to the Mail-Bag the suggestion that as many thousand women are now entering the employ of the government (a large proportion of them in Washington), something ought to be done by the government to look after the spiritual welfare of these new employees, who are strangers in the National capital. The suggestion, which was an excellent one, was referred to the Young Women's Christian Association in Washington. We have received a letter from Miss Florence M. Brown, general secretary of the Association, in which she writes: "A very great deal is being done to get the women coming to Washington directed to the churches of their choice. We have two young women in our building who are under my direction, but are engaged by a leading church, and they are securing through the government the names of the women. Then we are having them called in and directed. Much effort is being put into this. Many ministers are not taking their usual summer vacation." It is quite evident that the Washington Young Women's Christian Association is alive to the need of action and is doing its duty in the case.

M. E. T., Washington, D. C., writes: "I would like to submit the following additional answer to the question that was asked in the Mail-Bag about the way of salvation: There are four steps to salvation: (1) Faith, Acts 16 : 31, John 8 : 24; (2) Repentance, Luke 13 : 3, Acts 2 : 38; (3) Confession, Matt. 10 : 32, Rom. 10 : 10; (4) Baptism, Acts 22 : 16, Rom. 6 : 4."

J. J., New York. The Child Betterment Bureau in Washington has issued a warning against the use of arsenical poison as a means of getting rid of flies in the home. Dr. E. A. Sweet of the United States Public Health Service writes that "it is extremely dangerous to use arsenical poisons in the house, and there have been fatal cases of child poisoning through such compounds." Sticky fly paper is still the safest insurance against flies.

Rev. V. Kuusisto, Eveleth, Minn., writes: "I have translated into Finnish the article which appeared in the Christian Herald concerning the persecution among the Persian Lutheran Christians, and for that reason I forward small amounts for the poor Christians in Persia. May God bless your valuable support." The cooperation of our Finnish Evangelical Lutheran Friends of Suomi Synod is appreciated, and will doubtless prove a real service to a worthy cause.

Miss M. S. Dutcher, secretary of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Auxiliary of the Women's National Sabbath Alliance, writes: "The ladies at our last meeting wished me to write to the mayor asking that no drilling be done on the Sabbath Day. We are trying to preserve that day and keep it holy, and it seems to us that the enclosed message is of as much importance now as it was in 1862." The message referred to is this order which President Lincoln issued in 1862: "The President, Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, desires and enforces the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and naval service. The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiments of a Christian people and a due regard for the divine will, demand that Sunday labor in the army and navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity. The discipline and character of the national forces should not suffer, nor the cause they defend be imperiled, by the profanation of the day or name of the Most High."

F. Hudson, N. Y. We hold it to be the duty of every citizen, particularly at the present time, to give loyal support to the government.

M. A. W., Wilkes-Barre, Pa. A will made by the testator himself, if clearly expressed, in proper form and duly attested, is legal. It is always the wisest course, however, to have one's will prepared by a good lawyer.

S. B., N. C. We have no right to criticise any Christian denomination which may differ with us on nonessential points. Christ distinctly says, "I have other sheep" (John 10 : 16). Anyone who believes in Christ as Saviour, and who earnestly seeks to follow Him, is acceptable to God.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

The principal street in Pocitos, the seaside resort of Montevideo, where society promenades

Progressive Uruguay and Its People

President Viera's Views on American Relations and Trade Now and After the War

By CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

URUGUAY, with her 72,000 square miles, is about equal in size to all the New England States. This republic is also known as the Banda Oriental (which means East Side), so called in early days to distinguish it from Argentina, since this small country lay on the east side of the Uruguay River. Its flourishing capital, the fair city of Montevideo, is known as the Queen of the Plata, since on its southern side the Rio de la Plata pours its flood of waters into the South Atlantic in a river mouth one hundred and fifty miles in width. This city of the Uruguayans, with its 400,000 progressive people of Spanish stock, is said to have been named from the exclamation of an early missionary who, while far away at sea, on observing the hat-shaped mountain lying in the foreground, cried, "Montem video!" (I see a mountain!) Through this fine ocean port there are exported, year by year, all the products of the cattle industry, as well as cereals to the amount of $75,000,000, while there enter imports, chiefly of manufactured articles from Europe and the United States, amounting to considerably over $50,000,000.

Uruguay is also the land of flowers. Mr. W. H. Hudson in his fascinating book has called it "the purple land," because of the predominating flor morada, which covers the country with a carpet of rich purple. Here is a coming country, with temperate climate, a vast grazing land with upward of 45,000,000 acres, of which only about five per cent. is devoted to agriculture, because of the lack of population, there being only one and a half millions of inhabitants in a wonderful region of rivers and smiling lands capable of supporting fifty times the number. For grazing purposes, Uruguay is the most favored land in all of South America. Although the cultivation of wheat and maize especially is now advancing, the grass-lands are unsurpassed, and these now support for the world's food supply more than 9,000,000 head of cattle, 30,000,000 sheep, 800,000 hogs, 600,000 goats, and 500,000 horses.

IN this winterless land of wide prairies, with no mountains, deserts or earthquakes such as handicap the South American countries of the west coast, the Uruguayans have built in recent years a modern civilization distinctive, advanced, economically sound, thoroughly democratic, and characterized with a dignity and a hopefulness, a readiness to attempt new things, and a national audacity that reminds one of the United States. It is being learned more and more that the spirit of a nation is quite as important as its area in determining progress, and the present-day Uruguayans are sons of a fighting, sturdy strain of blood. By desperate struggle they wrested their independence from Spain, and with many wars with the early Portuguese, and later with Brazil, they have learned the value of free institutions. Her great patriot leader and fighter, General Artigas, is worthy of a place alongside the heroic American soldiers who liberated their countries. Although Argentina, the strong neighbor of Uruguay, also tried to annex her at various times, the spirit of this race conquered, and since the year 1828 Uruguay has been a sovereign state, with a constitution modeled on that of our own Republic.

During my interview with Dr. Viera, the republic's president, I learned of a unique arrangement in this country by which a student can pass from the kindergarten stage to the last moment of graduate work in the best technical school or university, without paying one penny for his tuition, text-books even being provided by the state. On this question of education President Viera revealed much enthusiasm, being justly proud of the nation's schools for adults founded in 1907, and placed under the public school administration, also gratuitous. These adult schools are open both day and night. There is also the school for backward children and the school for the professional training of working girls, directed by teachers educated for the purpose in Europe and North America. A national school of arts and trades is carried on directly in line with the national industries; and there is a department of secondary and preparatory instruction exclusively for women, the dean of which department is a woman, and all of the professors are likewise women. There is a departmental lyceum in each of the eighteen departments of the republic, and the special public lecturer, whose post resembles that of the public lecturer in connection with the public schools in the United States. In addition to the regular educational features my attention was also called to the national orchestra, consisting of sixty musicians, who, during the months of April and May, give daily concerts in one of the principal theaters of the capital and also visit cities of the interior for concert work. The original idea of this orchestra is aimed at the development of creative activity on the part of national composers, whose works are especially used by these musicians.

ONE'S first impression of the president of the republic of Uruguay is that he is one of the stoutest gentlemen one has ever seen in his life. In fact, he is often compared with ex-President Taft in this regard, though we much doubt whether the latter ever equaled President Viera's physical proportions. Since it is a law in Uruguay that the executive head of the republic cannot succeed himself without an intervening four years, the visitor will be told that the former president of Rooseveltian energy and tendencies, José Battle y Ordoñez, searched among his friends for a man sufficiently adaptable to carry out his plans and hold his seat until he could again be elected as President. In Dr. Viera he fixed upon a man who not only proved capable, but who has showed signs of individual independence, which it is said is not altogether pleasing to the former executive. Dr. Viera's present popularity with the people has led those politicians who seemed to desire him simply as a figurehead to become somewhat nervous. The discrimination of Dr. Viera came out when we asked concerning his attitude toward immigration and the labor problems of his country.

"To be sure," he said, "we want immigration here, but we want additional population of the right kind. Uruguay does not possess facilities and resources for manufacturing because of her lack of coal, wood and iron. The republic has, on the other hand, tremendous resources for the raising of live stock, and also for agricultural development. It is necessary to have our recruits chosen with a view to the kind of work which the nation needs. We do not require the vast influx of laboring population which Argentina and the United States, for example, have been receiving, since the time is not ripe for them, and furthermore they would find little congenial to their abilities in Uruguay."

I had been impressed with the lack of horses or horse-raising in Uruguay, which I had connected with this republic. Inquiring why Uruguay did not devote herself to the horse-raising industry, it was brought out in reply that in the time of revolutions—of which Uruguay had had her share in former days, but which were now things largely of the past—the revolutionists who were successful had a disagreeable habit of seizing the horses as a legitimate prey, which was naturally a discouragement to the farmer along this line of industry.

A SOMEWHAT unique feature of government is brought to the attention of the investigator in Uruguay in the collegiate presidency. This plan, which was strongly promulgated by Dr. Viera's predecessor, called for seven presidents instead of one.

"What," I inquired, "was the advantage expected to be gained from such an arrangement?"

"The idea," said the president," was to prevent the usurpation of power by one man whose views and procedure were practically unknown to the electorate previous to his occupation of the presidency. For example, the incoming president of Argentina is somewhat of an experiment, the people hardly knowing just what is going to happen when the untried man of a new party comes into power. This creates an uncertainty in business, and it is thought that if several men occupied the executive leadership of the country, the plan would make for stability and national certainty."

The first impression of such a plan is to excite considerable doubt as to any gain accruing to a republic in the way of unity or certainty by having seven men trying to run things rather than one, and the generally accepted belief is that Dr. Viera is a far less firm supporter of this policy than was his predecessor.

I asked the president the question which I had been placing before other chief executives and business men of these South American countries:

"What is your opinion concerning trade with the United States? Will the present business which the Uruguayans are carrying on with America, largely because it is impossible at present to trade with Europe, continue after the war?"

"We like the Americans," responded the president, "and we should like to trade with you, but the traditions and customs of doing business here are similar to those in other South American republics, and the manufacturers of the United States do not seem to understand these conditions, or at least they have not shown signs of adapting themselves to our modes of buying and receiving goods from abroad. There are many complaints at present from our people regarding shipments, packing, and manner of payment. It will depend largely upon the United States whether the bulk of the trade now being carried on with you is continued after the war or not. It is my private opinion that, unless some radical changes are made, this trade will return to Europe. Our people are by language and sentiment sympathetically united, especially with France, where the Uruguayans go for their holidays, and the easy adjustments which the Germans and the English have made in our favor in the past have formed traditions and associations of long standing. The Latin-American is peculiarly susceptible to traditions, and his conservatism and loyalty to people with whom he has been accustomed to trade are strong forces."

THE president of Uruguay impresses the visitor as being exceedingly human and capable of enjoying life in the variety of ways known to the Uruguayan. One is told that among his diversions he includes the joining of a party of friends and going out to a large estancia, where a real barbecue is held. There they gather about a great fire over which an ox is roasted whole, and each member of the party is armed with a huge knife with which a generous piece of the fresh roast is sliced off and eaten from the hand. I can testify from experience that roast beef never tastes quite so delicious as when eaten in this Gaucho fashion.

Unlike Brazil, Uruguay has strongly marked political parties; the Colorados (or Reds) and the Blancos (or Whites). These two parties date back to the early days of the nineteenth century, when the two leading Uruguayan generals who had fought in unison against the invasions of the Brazilians fell out and formed the two factions which have been responsible for the bloody civil wars of this small but heroic nation. General Rivera, riding a bay horse and leading his lancers, who carried red pennons on their spearheads, came to represent the towns, and especially the city of Montevideo; while General Oribe on his white charger rode before his white-winged cavalrymen, and stood for the countrymen, and especially the fierce, picturesque Gauchos, who were never happier than when in the saddle and tearing over the plains in pursuit of their hated rivals of the towns.

Interior of a Sombrero factory, one of Uruguay's industries

The story of these political contests is the history of a personal feud between two soldiers, enlarged into a permanent contest to get control of and to run the government. The partisan spirit is an inheritance from father to son and from mother to daughter, and while today the methods of constitutional government are employed for the most part, in place of the bayonet of fifty years ago, the antagonism is still no less real, and the feeling in the rural districts is still so strong that the man who by chance is found wearing a red necktie soon finds himself in trouble. Fortune has turned toward the Colorados during the past half-century, and the Blancos have furnished the vigilant opposition party to keep the men inclined to modern innovations and change alert to the desires of the plainsmen.

THE country is now emerging rapidly out of these old days of revolutionary warfare, when the insurgents' horses were captured, and each Uruguayan was a Gaucho in spirit and killed his man with as little compunction as, in these twentieth century days, the proud and dignified senator rebukes his opponent in cultured parliamentary speech in the senate-house at Montevideo.

There are in fact few of the republics of Latin America which can show more original and orderly reform movements, or a government with institutions better fitted to a particular people, than does the Banda Oriental, this beautiful land of sunshine and flowers, over which there has rolled for so many years such varied waves of chivalry and storm, of virtue and of crime. Despite her internal troubles, and wars with neighboring states, the Uruguayan tells you with pride that his nation has never definitely repudiated a single obligation, nor openly made a move which directly resulted in the continued depreciation of its credited claims. Uruguay has settled her liabilities in full, even when she might have followed the example of her sister states, Brazil and Argentina, whose foreign debts were settled at times in a manner inconsistent with the rules of modern economics.

In the Uruguayan republic the American dollar is at a discount, being worth at present about three cents less than the Uruguayan peso. There are more than a thousand different manufacturing firms in the country, in spite of the fact that the grazing industry furnishes the bulk of the revenue. I found here labor legislation that might be studied with profit by any nation—one provision making it impossible for a workman to toil for more than eight hours daily for six days in the week. No man can labor, in accordance with Uruguayan law, more than forty-eight hours a week, and a rest day is insisted upon. "We believe in a rhythmic round of toil," said an Uruguayan to me in describing this law, "which makes it possible to have five-sixths of the population working every day in the week, and one-sixth resting."

I FOUND here in Montevideo a wonderful modern system of docks. Lack of wharves made it necessary for landing of cargoes, formerly, by means of lighters, and the lighterage company for many years has been doing a large and lucrative business with a four million dollar investment in this excellent port. The government with one brave stroke has recently spent twenty-five million dollars for the construction of new dockage, which will accommodate fifteen vessels at one time. A severe fight was brought on thereby with the lighterage company, and the contest was carried as far as London, a boycott being installed against this port for a time with the hope that the government would yield to the powerful arguments of the rich lighterage company.

It is this life on the grassy undulating Uruguayan plains, among the picturesque Gauchos, or cowboys, of Uruguay, that lingers long in the memory of those who visit this attractive land. The Gaucho belongs to the open country and with his fine horse, with which he is always associated, his lasso strung to his saddle, his poncho, his maté and his gun, he is still to be found throughout the Banda Oriental, at times as fierce and ready for adventure as fifty years ago, when the majority of the Uruguayan population belonged to the Gaucho class. There is the same hospitality on the ranchos, free as sunlight, the same instinctive love for horses and cattle, the same poetic lyric strain in the music of the ever-present guitar, and the same strong and often lawless spirit of the freeman on the unlimited stretch of prairie.

With the coming of modern industries, and with the mixing of these sturdy and fine Spanish-Americans with the outer world, old-time traits may be changed, in part at least. The president, who is keen for the sending of Uruguayan students to study in the United States, told me that three of his boys were studying now in our northern country. Still, the Uruguayan is more than an imitator of other nationalities. He possesses rich inheritances, of which he is justly proud. He and his fine country have real contributions for the wider world into which Uruguay is now entering.

◆

Pearls of Pain

A New Parable

A MOTHER in the far East, who had given back to heaven her two little ones, was visited by a friend, who told her of a story of a rich king, who once gave a beautiful pearl to a poor woman. This treasure gave her exceeding joy; her chief care was to keep it safe.

One day, the king came and took the pearl into his hands and carried it away with him.

The lonely woman wept in her sorrow, fearing she had been unfaithful. Then the king came and gave her a diamond, filled with beautiful sunlight.

This she kept longer than the pearl, and it filled her with delight.

One day, the king said, "My daughter, give me the diamond; I have need of it."

She pleaded piteously, but at last yielded and her treasure was gone.

Soon after, the king invited her to his palace. On entering a beautiful room, she saw both the pearl and the diamond in splendid settings, far more brilliant than when she surrendered them.

Then the king said, "Look into this glass." She looked, and saw a crafty counterfeiter taking from her house the pearl and diamond, and putting in their place a base imitation.

The king said, "This would have happened if I had not removed the gems to my palace."

The sorrowing mother realized by this story that the heavenly Father knows when best to call the pearls of the household into his palace, where he may keep them safely for our homecoming. He sees what pearls of purity are forming in sorrowing hearts, when we are longing for the angel children. He knows in what a little while he will return them to our arms.

Is it not well to remember that we reap the best harvest when we sow in tears and that one day we will return, bringing our sheaves with us; that storms make us more quickly seek the harbor.

E. W. C.

Door of Hope for Chinese Girls

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

THERE is an element of unalloyed happiness as one enters the Door of Hope Children's Home at Kiangwan and sees the clean, fine-looking lot of girls who have been brought there to be saved from the sinful life of the Oriental.

The big dormitory, erected by Christian Herald readers, is divided into five parts, each of which constitutes a "family."

The system of Dr. Barnardo is not practicable in China, due to a difference in outlook regarding the relations of the different ages. In England the older orphans help the younger, and each group grows up as a family might, with the older serving the younger. But in China the reverse is the case. A child is the natural "fag" of her older brothers and sisters. The younger serve to lighten the burdens of the older, who are able to work them as hard as they desire. This has caused the division of the girls at the Door of Hope Children's Home into "families," in which all the girls are of about the same age.

Happiness is the keynote of the Children's Home, and it is only one who knows something of what heathenism means to burdened womanhood that can realize what these charming children have been rescued from.

The Foochow Road in Shanghai, near the "Far Country of the Prodigal Son"

In the Foochow Road district of Shanghai, known throughout China by Christians as the "Far Country of the Prodigal Son," women and girls of from fourteen years old upward are bought and sold by mothers, fathers, or other relatives—sold into a life more miserable than that of the social outcasts of other climes. But the rescued girls at the Children's Home are some of them only four years old.

THESE young girls when employed in "flower boats" or vicious resorts are dressed in scarlet costumes, in which they pour tea, sing the cute little songs which may be too lewd for translation, or wait on older girls who follow, perhaps through no desire of their own, the "oldest profession in the world." To hear them sing Christian hymns and play the happy games of pure childhood, one might think that their whole life was happy; but they are only a few, saved from what the many must bear. All the girls at the Children's Home are pure girls, and most of them enter when they are less than seven, so that their minds have not been stained by what they may have seen.

But even in the case of older girls of seventeen or eighteen, there is often little spiritual degeneration, and they quickly respond to Christian instruction and friendship, so that many of them become respected wives of respectable men. Some had entered their profession to save helpless parents from want, and no Chinese girl would dream of committing suicide because of loss of caste under such conditions.

In the very midst of this district there is a Receiving Home of the Door of Hope, to which girls who desire and are able may escape.

Several times a week there is the hurried patter of feet in the small room and a breathless visitor seeking refuge. Some have come laden with pearls of great price, and dressed in gowns of finest silk. Others have stumbled in, weak with disease and hopeless in their degradation. But all are given attention, and some are taken to the First Year Home, where they are trained away from the luxurious or morbid lives they have led, and are taught to cook, sweep and sew; at the same time they are taught of One who said to such as they, "Go and sin no more."

Not only is the Door of Hope a haven for those, but many girls flee to the Receiving Home when they first hear of plans to sell them into lives of iniquity, and not a few are thus rescued before it is too late. After a year in the First Year Home, if a girl shows good character she is allowed to enter the Industrial Home, where she can earn her food and clothes by her own efforts. From this home the finest families in Shanghai order beautiful embroideries and needlework, whose spotless purity betrays no sign of the suffering the maker had passed through or the thankfulness she wove with infinite patience into the finery that might have been hers if she had chosen. In the First Year Home, the girls make clothes for wooden-headed dolls, dressed to represent faithfully the various classes of Chinese society, which are sent to the four corners of the world. But there is so much demand for the needlework of the girls in the Industrial Home that little of the fine work goes outside of Shanghai. This branch of the work is entirely self-supporting.

Miss Dieterle, the superintendent of the Children's Home, especially emphasized the value she placed upon the individual support of the little girls in her Home, accompanied by the prayers of those who give for their training. Dr. T. F. McCrae, who personally handled the hundreds of thousands of dollars sent by the Christian Herald at the time of the great famine, gave me as his last message before he took his steamer for a year of rest in America, "Tell them we want their prayers. Money is important, but it is vastly more essential that we should have their prayers."

One of the canals which carry fertilizers to the fields and foods to the market at Shanghai

THOSE who are most closely in touch with the most difficult conditions continually mention prayer as the great asset of the Christian institution of education or relief. They have no other way of explaining the regenerations they witness than by God's grace. One of my most frequent thoughts is the wish that those whose humble gifts, accompanied by sincere prayers, have sown smiles in the great Eastern lands could be with me as I go from place to place reaping them. A smile is better than a universal language, for it not only conveys thought but expresses feeling. And the smiles I have seen during the last few weeks have thrilled me with a patriotism that the martial music of a military band can not arouse. To the American the mission field is the best place to experience the thrill of proper pride that comes from being a member of a worthy race. Patriotism in parts of America is a matter of flag-waving, bombastic oratory, or vaudeville trick. A song with "dear old U.S.A." in it is sure to be sung from Riverside Drive to Mott Street and from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon. When the acrobats reach into their belts, as they hang by their teeth far above the sawdust ring, and unfurl Old Glory, the applause is sure to come from oldest family and the newest immigrant as well. What would party politics do without frequent reference to "the Flag"?

I imagine the Stars and Stripes look as good to a world traveler as they do to those who always live beneath its protection, but the observer who investigates missions and American charities in poverty-stricken lands knows a thrill that seldom comes to those whose patriotism pictures our flag on warship or political banner. For the world-encircling smile of the rescued orphan and the Christian convert speaks a louder language of peaceful penetration than ever boomed from mighty cannon on a crimsoned field of war.

Going to market is the housewife's problem the world over. Here is the public market in Shanghai

We have heard so much about millions that we forget the individual soul. The student of missions in America has a perspective that the field worker can never have. With colored maps and descriptive charts he can survey great territories and study unoccupied fields. Christian mission work faces today two great problems—the securing of really large sums from those who can afford to pay, and the securing of potent prayers and loving interest on the part of those whose pocketbooks may be light but whose hearts are true.

But along with deep-laid plans for efficient Christianization of continents there must go prayerful efforts to save the individual soul. I know of no agency in Christian relief work more worthy than the individual gift for the individual dependent, backed up by an understanding friendship, spiritualized by potent prayer.

As institutions whose tendency is to prevent a dehumanization of missionary work, I know of none more effective than homes for the defective, and orphanages for the homeless. Relief work is only one part of the Christian movement. But it must always be the humanizing factor in any world movement in the name of the healing Christ.

Pope Benedict Proposes Peace

PEACE proposals made by Pope Benedict have been delivered to all the belligerent governments.

The Pope suggests restoration of Belgium, Serbia and Rumania and a peaceful solution of the problems of Alsace-Lorraine, Trentino, Triest and Poland.

The Pope's peace appeal proposes:

First—No annexations and no indemnities, except in special cases, such as Belgium and Serbia.

Second—The return to Germany of her colonies in exchange for the occupied departments of France.

Third—Freedom of the seas.

Fourth—Disarmament; and,

Fifth—The formation of a supreme court of arbitration for the settlement of future international disputes.

These proposals, which are strikingly similar to the proposals made by President Wilson last December, commanded the attention of Administration officials more than any international development of recent months.

The proposals were not unexpected to the United States nor to any of the Entente Allies. The possibility of a peace move was discussed with British Foreign Minister Balfour and Vice-Premier Viviani when the British and French official missions were in Washington. It was agreed that all the Allies, including the United States, should refuse to discuss peace terms while Germany occupied the territories she had taken by force, and thereby avoid what the Allied statesmen considered a "German trap."

Now the Pontiff's proposal presents the question in a somewhat different light, difficult, perhaps, to meet, because it offers to a war-weary world a hope for peace.

So far as Washington knows, the papal appeal contains no evidence of special sympathy with either cause, but is concerned solely with the high purpose of terminating the sufferings of mankind and the restoration of reason in international relations.

That a great wave of yearning for peace is sweeping over the world has been borne in upon the consciousness of Washington within the last few days by many striking evidences. The English parliamentary crisis over the question of the participation of English Labor representatives in the Stockholm conference has been the most spectacular of these signs. Though less dramatically brought to an issue, the defiance of the French government by both the Socialist and the Labor Party in France, and the resultant position of M. Thomas, has been scarcely less significant.

Reports from London indicate decided reluctance to giving up the German colonies. A high authority is quoted by the Associated Press: "The suggestion for the return of the German colonies is one which we will leave with perfect confidence to the consideration of the American people. Is it thinkable that hapless natives should be returned to a power which has shown herself so unfit to administer the affairs of subject races? If anything could be worse than Germany's record in Europe it is her record in the colonies. Is a permanent peace possible in Africa with Germany there? America is today the greatest hope of the Entente Allies for a stable peace. America is fresh and determined. She has vigor and backbone, youth and strength, and unlimited resources. She will not let Europe halt until peace on a stable and permanent basis has been definitely established. That is one great reason why every one of her allies should be overwhelmingly thankful that America now is with us."

Solution of the problems of Alsace-Lorraine, Trentino, Trieste and Poland by such methods as the Pope suggests is held in London to be impossible of attainment. In Alsace-Lorraine, for instance, assuming that Germany agreed to abide by the results of a plebeiscite of the two provinces, France would not accept such an offer.

The London Chronicle in an editorial says: "In any case the Allies will have to refuse. No other course is open to them if they are not prepared to throw away their future and stultify all those who died for them. Peace concluded at the present moment would inevitably reflect the present conditions, which, in consequence of Russia's temporary military eclipse, are more favorable to the Central Empires than has been the case for thirteen months and more favorable than the enemy can fairly hope ever to have them again. The best terms we could today get as to territory would, generally speaking, be the restoration of the status quo; but this formal restoration would leave unaffected the four great results provisionally achieved by Germany in the war, her conquest of Austria-Hungary, the solution of the Polish question in a sense calculated to bring the whole Polish nation (the sixth in Europe) within her circle of power, the destruction of Russia's position as a great power, and proof of German supremacy throughout Central Europe and the Balkans in such a way as to ensure her future omnipotence there."

Indicating the feeling in Germany, Mathias Erzberger, leader of the Democratic wing of the Catholic Party, whose attack upon the government in the Reichstag recently resulted in the fall of Bethmann-Hollweg, is quoted by a correspondent: "We will give up Belgium, evacuate France, of which we hold a tenth, throw our influence toward the giving back of Serbia and Montenegro, with the exception of Macedonia, on which Bulgaria has just claims, and we are willing to work for any reasonable solution for the establishment of an independent Poland, if the Poles themselves can ever agree what they want. We want our colonies back, we demand the right to work and prosper in peaceful development, we demand that there shall be no economic war after the war is over. An economic war would embody the germs of new strife. Aside from the Dobrudja, taken from Bulgaria by Rumania in 1913, which Bulgaria has a just claim to have returned to her, there are no demands for Rumanian territory. No indemnity to France, but there are no insurmountable obstacles toward assisting the restoration of Belgium in some form."

In Washington few senators seemed inclined to believe that the Pope's proposals would go far toward bringing the warring nations to end the world-conflict. Senators on the Committee on Foreign Relations were reluctant to comment, saying the matter was too delicate to discuss. This was the attitude taken by Senator Lodge, ranking Republican member of the committee, while Senator Stone, chairman of the committee, said he would talk about peace later on in the Senate. Senator Lewis of Illinois, the Democratic whip, said he was pleased over the action of the Vatican and hoped it would be productive of results.

"In every belligerent country the Socialists are gaining tremendously in power, and they are infinitely stronger today than in August, 1914. They are waging a campaign for peace by negotiation." So says the usually well-informed London correspondent of the New York Tribune. The New Republic of New York makes this comment: "The statement would not be true of the United States, in which alone the Socialist Party has condemned the participation of its own country in the war as part of an iniquitous capitalist class conspiracy. The official American Socialist organization has degenerated into a sect of hyphenates, and is henceforth hopelessly divided from the radical and working-class movement in this country. But unless all signs fail the contrary is true of Europe. The general popular desire for some relief from the sufferings caused by the war, the general desire on the part of the radical parties of all nations to tackle their formidable domestic problems before they become excessively difficult and acute, is creating a political condition which is profoundly modifying the disposition of all the governments of Europe. The heads of the governments may themselves be ready to take the chance of fighting on for another year, but they have to recognize the force of the growing demand for peace, and they are afraid to allow the Socialists to reap the benefit of being the only organization seeking to satisfy that demand."

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Wounded men are not necessarily incapacitated, but they may have to change their trade. These Canadian tradesmen have done their bit and survived their hit and are studying drafting, blue-print reading, shop theory and other subjects to fit themselves to return to the old shop as foremen

NATION WILL CONTROL FOOD. The Food Control Bill, after three months of discussion and conference, was finally passed by the Senate on August 7, the vote standing 66 to 7. A digest of the bill is given on page 897. The bill was engrossed, signed by the speaker of the House and the president of the Senate, and sent to the President, who signed it on August 10, and at once appointed Herbert C. Hoover as Food Controller. Mr. Hoover announced that the full power of the law would be used if necessary to curb speculations and that first attention would be given to wheat and flour. The bill passed after a somewhat stirring debate in which the majority of the members of the Senate upheld the policy of concentrating the power and resources of the nation in the hands of the government. Other senators, although a small minority, fought the bill consistently, declaring that the great measure of power thus concentrated in one hand bore an element of possible danger, and expressing the fear that the control exercised under the bill would bring about the complete disruption of the business structure of the country. Senator Lewis of Illinois, referring to hints made in the debate that certain senators were standing out against the bill through unpatriotic motives, said: "Senators, I beseech you that never again shall any senator impeach another senator as traitorous or un-American. There are no such in this membership. If there were, we would drive them from this floor. Certain senators oppose the Administration on certain measures. They may be wrong, but it is their constitutional right."

FOR FAIR PRICES. On August 7 the President visited in person the offices of the Federal Trade Commission, to which he has designated the task of determining production costs, and asked flatly what results had been accomplished. On the following day the War Industries Board announced that it would exert its powers to the fullest to end extortion. The Board will deal with all materials used in connection with the war. It will insist upon fair prices, both for the United States government, the governments of its allies, and the American consumer. Extreme care is to be taken, however, to insure that American raw materials, the price of which may be controlled by the Board, are not used for profiteering by foreign manufacturers.

ROOT REPORTS ON RUSSIA. The Root Commission which visited Russia reported to the President on August 8, making a written report which was not made public. The members of the commission, however, talked freely to the press. Mr. Root was quoted as saying that a republic was certain to be the final governmental structure in Russia. He explained the apparent ease with which the people had thrown off the forms of despotism and had taken up representative government, by the fact that eighty per cent. of the population was agricultural and that the peasant farmers had long enjoyed local self-government, while the district councils or Zemstvos had exercised even a slightly larger degree of self-government. On this foundation it was comparatively easy to erect a national popular government. Mr. Root declared that the extreme Radical Socialist element, which favored the destruction of all property, had been gotten under control, and he did not believe it would gain control against the forces of law and order. Mr. Root called attention to the fact that it took a long time to form the government of the United States, and he declared that the new Russian government had made remarkable progress in the short period of its existence. Mr. Charles Edward Russell, the Socialist member of the delegation, urged the sending of American troops to strengthen the morale of the Russians. (It is understood that Washington has considered sending troops both to Russia and Italy.) Mr. James Duncan and Major Washburn agreed that one great need of Russia is publicity regarding America's intentions in the war. Mr. Russell is quoted as saying: "The Russian people are not united at the present time; they are in such a frame of mind that they can easily be united, if the American people will only convince them that this nation stands solidly behind its allies in this war, and will not falter. . . . The whole question of the future of Russia now lies with the United States." The commissioners are agreed that the United States must be ready to support Russia by unqualified encouragement, moral, material and financial. Railroad rolling stock, rails and supplies are Russia's greatest need at present in the opinion of the majority of the commission, which reports that Russia has from 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 men and does not need more.

Beginning Next Week

FOR several weeks we have been talking about "The Witness," the story of a real man and his faith, written by Mrs. Grace Livingston Hill Lutz, which was to come. Next week the story will begin to speak for itself. The first chapter is the key to the story. You all know what to do with a key.

In "Mobilizing Nature's Forces," Frank Carpenter says more about oil and something about lumber, both very important these days.

Again we climb the peaks of prophecy with Dr. Gray. This time we see "The Anti-Christ, His History and Doom."

Turning to the sermon you will find a timely and most convincing message on "Justification," from J. Wilbur Chapman.

All this in next week's Christian Herald and more, too.

BRITISH LABOR AT STOCKHOLM. By a vote of 1,046,000 to 550,000, the British Labor Party on August 10 voted to send delegates to the Stockholm Consultive Conference. Disorder was reported to have marked the meeting at which the vote was tabulated, and the delegates of the Seamen's Union, which opposed the proposition, were said to have declared that they might prevent the delegates from going. In this vote the Labor Party reversed a previous decision. Arthur Henderson, Labor member in the Lloyd George cabinet, recently returned from Russia, urged the sending of delegates. He reported that the Russians desired a conference which should establish binding terms of peace, but that he had made it clear to them that only governments could negotiate terms, and he said: "Seeing that a conference was inevitable, I concluded that it would be inadvisable, perhaps dangerous, for the Russians to meet the enemy and neutral representatives alone. I recommend that the British attend, provided conditions satisfactory to us are arranged. Such a conference might be productive of much good." A suggestion was made that the Executive Committee urge American and Belgian Laborites to send delegates. Following his action in recommending to the British Labor Party active participation in the Stockholm conference, Mr. Arthur Henderson resigned as a member of the British War Cabinet. In favoring this participation, Mr. Henderson acted against the judgment of most of the other members of the cabinet, and contrary to their understanding of his own intentions. In accepting the resignation, Premier Lloyd George practically accused Mr. Henderson of acting in bad faith. On August 12 the French Socialist Party, after considerable discussion, decided to send delegates to Stockholm, but declared: "The Socialist Party does not go to Stockholm in search of a peace of compromise. . . ." The Socialists also demanded the condemnation of governments responsible for violations committed at the outbreak of the war, and declared for reparation.

CALL MEN TO SERVICE. Provost Marshal General Crowder on August 8 issued regulations under which the men of the new national army will be mobilized in their home towns and transported to the training camps. He also called for one-third of the quota of each state to report for training on September 1. The men will be mobilized at the

Continued on page 893

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

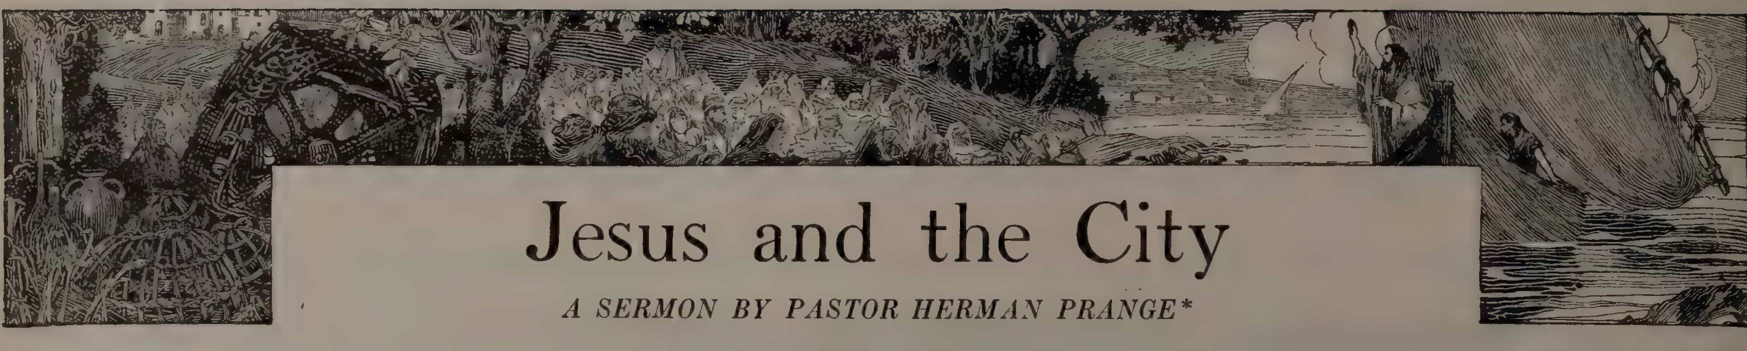
EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



Jesus and the City

*A SERMON BY PASTOR HERMAN PRANGE

TEXT—Luke 19:41. "And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and went over it."

CITIES are truly the nerve centers and the storm centers of the world. Every city is a great heart, throbbing with life and sending out good blood or bad through its thousand arteries of activity. To save the cities goes a long way in saving the world.

Jesus drew nigh to Jerusalem. It was to him a wonderful field for labor. Cosmopolitan in its population, this great city was visited by people from every nation under heaven, as we see from the list at Pentecost. To this day the church finds in the various cities its most important and most difficult field for work. This familiar and pathetic Gospel lesson, might therefore well serve the purpose of stimulating our city work, as it brings to our notice the remedy for the city's bleeding wounds. Let us then accompany Jesus, drawing nigh to the city, considering what he saw, and what he did.

A magnificent sight it must have been, as Jesus crossed the brow of Mount Olivet and saw the domes of the ancient city of God loom up before him in the distance—a sight which, as we well know, caused the heart of every Israelite to leap with joy. But Jesus had more than this external view. He saw the whole city. Not a thing on its streets, in its houses, or in the hearts of its inhabitants, was hidden from him. He saw Jerusalem's glory and its shame; its joys and its sorrows; its sin and its suffering; its wealth and its poverty—indeed, everything that the eye of the Omniscient could penetrate was open to his view.

He saw the awful contrasts which every city furnishes. He saw the sanctuaries for the worship of God and the palaces of vice for the service of Satan; faces radiant with the peace of godliness, and faces scarred with the ugliness of sin; men and women by the hundreds toiling and watching to save the lost, and other hundreds even more passionately seeking to entrap the innocent and lure them to death. If we could see our own city as Jesus saw Jerusalem, what unutterable contrasts would confront us! The joyful and the sorrowful are there; men are dying there, men are being born. Men are praying—and on the other side of a thin partition, men are cursing. The proud man of wealth prolongs the day in his heavily cushioned parlor, while wretchedness shivers hunger-stricken in its lair of straw. Gay mansions are full of light and music and high-swelling hearts, while in the condemned cell the pulse of life beats faint, and bloodshot eyes look out through the darkness for the light of a stern last morning. In dark cellars villains make ready for their vile work, while overhead sit politicians plotting and playing their game, whereof the pawns are men. Riot cries aloud and staggers and swaggers in his rank dens of shame, while piety gathers at the solemn altar to obtain pardon for its sins. The voluptuous and light-hearted whirl in the dance, while the mother, with streaming hair, kneels over her dying infant, whose parched lips only her tears now moisten. All these and many more, heaped and huddled together, with nothing but a little carpentry and masonry between them—such contrasts, both moral and physical, lie hidden under the cover of the city.

AGAIN, Jesus beheld the city. He saw the best type of piety. The religion that stands the fire-test of the city is pure gold. There is a kind of country religion that will not bear transportation into city life. There are hundreds of men in the city today who were useful as church members, deacons, trustees and Sunday school teachers in the country church, but now they are utterly worthless. The currents of the city air quickly extinguished their flickering candlelight.

We complain of much sham religion in the city, yet there is here also the highest type of faith, self-sacrifice, devotion to truth, sympathy with suffering humanity—in a word, love for God and man. Under the stress of great temptation, there is developed the finest type of Christian character in the world. To stand with a smile upon your face at the stake to which you are chained, and from which you cannot get away, may be called heroic. But the Christian heroism rises higher. To stand unchained, with perfect power to go away—to stand held only by the invisible chains of higher duty, and so standing, to let the fire creep up to the heart—that is the truer heroism which the city demands and produces, by the grace of God.

At the side of this best type of piety, Jesus saw the worst type of wickedness. The surface of the city is white with the leprosy of sin. It is here that you find the way of the sinner, the council of the ungodly and the seat of the scornful—the very synagogue of Satan. It is the extreme wickedness of the city, breaking forth in festering boils on the civic body, which has always troubled the city's conscience. It has troubled philanthropy; it has troubled the lawmakers; it has troubled the press. As the hurricane leaves a thousand fallen witnesses behind to mark its track, so the great river of sin, as it rolls through city life, leaves its pile of ruins here and there as melancholy monuments to show where it has been. If the wrecks of character, faith and health which the city produces during the short span of one year could be made visible and brought together in one heap, the whole air would become heavy with evil odors.

Society at large, indeed, cares nothing about the guilt of sin, but the terrible stench of rottenness which rises from sin worries the city greatly. That is an eyesore that spreads before its very door. And it is a loathsome thing to leave there. So the city must do something! And this is what it does: In one corner it builds a prison—this will rid it of some of its annoyance; in the other corner it plans a madhouse—the sore may fester there unseen; in the third corner it lays out a potter's field. Prison, madhouse and potter's field are just so many aprons which the city wears to protect itself against the filth of its sin.

FINALLY Jesus saw, as he beheld the city, the best institutions and the worst. There are scores of institutions for the redemption of the lost, the reclaiming of the erring, the raising of the submerged, the betterment of the people; hundreds of churches, pointing with their spires heavenward, with a large percentage of their membership true and tried, seeking to be of some service to the world. Every form of sin and suffering has called forth circles of earnest men and women who are pledged and organized to stay its ravages. Here are to be found organizations for helping the orphan, the sick, the wandering, the criminal. Even the newsboys and the bootblacks are not forgotten. There is more giving and freer giving in the cities than anywhere else on the globe.

But side by side with these noble institutions are the combined forces of evil, the organized kingdom of sin, displaying Satanic cunning and energy. A score of forces pull man downward, to one force that draws him upward. The streets are full of man-traps, deep as the bottomless pit. Gambling is rampant. Harlotry does not wait for an invitation. The low saloon asks no questions, but gives a welcome to all. And who could enumerate the thousand and one powers of organized evil operating under the guise of amusements? Language cannot overstate the depravity that exists under our very eyes in this twentieth century of enlightment and progress, in the organized forces of evil.

These are but a few of the things that Jesus saw and still sees, as he drew nigh to the city. Beholding the city, he wept over it. As the city with its agony came before him, it broke his heart and moved him to tears. The cry of his sorrow mingled with the hosannas of the multitude and hushed them into silence.

THE politician sees in the crowd that throngs the city streets so many voters; the merchant regards it as furnishing so many customers; the manufacturer counts it for so many hands. Jesus saw in it so many immortal souls that might be raised to heaven, but could sink down into hell. His tears were not those of a mere patriot, anticipating calamity to his country, but the tears of a Saviour over the self-destruction of his own chosen people whom he had come to redeem. "Thou hast not known the day of thy visitation. It is hidden from thine eyes; thou hast not known the things that belong to thy peace." He had come to them, but they had refused to receive him. He had brought to them his gospel, but they had despised it. He had set them an example, but they had ignored it. He had thrown open to them the gates of heaven, but they had refused to look within. He had called them, but they had gone, one to his farm, another to his merchandise. He had mourned to them, but they had not lamented. Now the day of their salvation was drawing to a close, and they were not redeeming the time. To him who realized the final destiny of those who fail to impose the time of gracious visitation, the situation was appalling. To him who knew that to gain the whole world and to lose one's soul was all loss and no gain, the case was desperate.

In like manner, grief must fill our own hearts, as we observe the surging masses of our cities. Living for the most part in utter forgetfulness of God, and neglecting the one thing needful, they are bringing upon themselves a swift destruction. Counting the blood of Christ a base thing, they are stopping up the only well of salvation. To stand betimes on a busy downtown corner and watch the passing crowd "seeking they know not what, yet pursuing it fiercely," one might well give way to sympathetic tears. Many indeed are applying their hearts unto wisdom; but the majority know not the things that belong to their peace.

IT is our own Henry Van Dyke who has written of the lights and shadows of city life:

The cities are scattered over the world like ant-hills;
  Every one of them is full of trouble and toil,
And their makers run to and fro within them.

"Abundance of riches is laid up in their store-houses,
  Yet they are tormented with the fear of want;
The cry of the poor in their streets is exceeding bitter.

"Their inhabitants are driven by blind perturbations;
  They whirl sadly in the fever of haste;
Seeking they know not what, they pursue it fiercely.

"Beside every ant-hill I behold a monster crouching.
  This is the ant-lion Death.
He thrusteth forth his tongue, and the people perish.

"O God of wisdom, thou hast made the country:
Why hast thou suffered man to make the town?

"Then God answered, Surely I am the maker of man,
And in the heart of man I have set the city."

BUT Jesus was not content simply to weep and lament; he at once set about remedying the evil. He went into the temple and drove out all those who made it a den of thieves. Taking note of the existing evils, we are not to spend our time in fruitless tears or bitter denunciations. We are to be prompted to action. And the work of thoroughly cleansing the church of God is the first work to be taken in hand. "Let the judgment begin at the house of God." With the channel of Christ's redeeming power choked by sin and error, how can the waters of salvation flow out into the world? A church that neglects to keep its own skirts clean by putting into practice a divinely commanded discipline in faith and morals will labor at all city reforms like a man with a broken back. If Jesus were here with his whip of scourging, he would begin in the church. He would drive out all those who teach the commandments of men in place of the oracles of God; who have forsaken the fountain of living water, and who direct men to the broken cisterns which hold no water; who feed their flock with the store of human opinion and wisdom, instead of the Bread of Life, Christ crucified, the power of God unto salvation. He would cast out men who are saints on Sunday and devils during the week. He would drive out the man who teaches in the Sunday school and swears at his clerks in his office. He would drive out the man who praises God with a loud voice as he sings from his well-bound book during divine service, and who during the week grinds the face of the poor. He would drive out the woman who comes to church to show her finery and spends the week debauching the young by setting an example of vanity. In a word—he would drive out all men and women who are simply whitewashed, without being washed white.

FINALLY, Jesus continued to teach daily in the city. How pitifully foolish and vain are all human schemes for the betterment, reform and cultivation of the sin-cursed city! Men are very ingenious, but none has yet brought forward a successful plan for a real uplift of humanity. Laws will not do. Mere outward reforms will not suffice. What the city needs is the life-transforming Word of God. The Gospel, and that alone, is the power of God unto salvation.

And, like Jesus, we should preach it daily. The forces of evil are at work day and night. We need not less of Sunday worship, but more of weekday work for Christ. We need a revival of seven days' religion! When every Christian has become a living epistle, spreading the seed of the Gospel, there will soon spring up in the midst of our cities a bountiful harvest.

---

*A leading Lutheran pastor of Minneapolis, Minn.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Old Tackle and the New Presence

SUNDAY, August 26. Luke 5 : 4. "Launch out into the deep." The disciples had just washed their nets after a fruitless night. The labor of washing the nets is light when we have had a splendid haul; but washing the nets when we have not caught any fish is a fearfully wearying task. Walking the long street when we have plenty of remunerative work is one thing; walking the same street when we are looking for work takes the very spring out of body and soul. Labor, infused with a spirit of disappointment and depression, is always burdensome toil. And it was after they had been engaged in this sort of cheerless work that the Master came upon his disciples. They were washing ineffective nets! And Jesus said unto Simon "Launch out into the deep!" What! After the fruitless night, after toiling for nothing? The same thing over again. No, it is not the old thing over again. It is certainly the old tackle, the old nets, and perhaps the old methods; but it is the old equipment with a new Presence, the immediate Presence of the Lord. "And they inclosed a great multitude of fishes."

Have we not had similar happenings in our own experience? In much of our service we have been very busy, but no business has been done. We have had all needful equipment, and we have had the right sort of nets, but we have caught nothing. The organization was seemingly perfect, but there was nothing to show for the work. Perhaps we were out on the waters without Jesus. We had forgotten nothing except the Lord, and when we have forgotten him we might as well have left everything behind. Suppose we take the old tackle and the neglected Presence! The old nets are all right; only let us cast them at the command of the immediate Lord, and we shall have miraculous revelations of power and grace.

And is there not some counsel here for theological students? One of the most perilous periods in a minister's life is the preparatory season when he has nothing to do but study theology. It is possible to go out on that fine quest without the Lord. They are noble waters to fish in, but we may catch little or nothing. At any rate, we may go through the seminary and gain no pearls of great price. In this preparatory labor of getting ready for service Christ must be in the boat or nothing will come of it. It must surely be a wonderful thing to study theology in the personal companionship of the Lord! Such fishing in those deep waters must haul in vital treasure.

And so it is with us preachers. We sometimes go on our great journeys without Christ, and we have disappointing and tiring endings. The tackle is all right; we throw the nets all right, but the vital Presence is missing, and we pitiably fail. "With Christ in the vessel I'll smile at the storm." We shall do much more than that! We shall do great work in the stormy waters, for hath he not said, "I will make you fishers of men"? J. H. J.

Opening the Door to God

MONDAY, August 27. Rev. 3 : 20. "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." The figure of Jesus standing outside a door, lantern in hand, weary and waiting for an invitation to enter, is a familiar one in song and art. The rhetorical figure by which God is represented as entering human life only by the cooperation of the human will is entirely true to our knowledge of human personality.

> "Our wills are ours, we know not how;
> Our wills are ours, to make them thine."

It may be true, as Samuel Johnson told Boswell, that argument is all against the freedom of the will, but that experience is all for it. Certainly normal experience confirms the doctrine of human freedom. It is not blasphemy to think of ourselves as capable of defeating the very will of God. If God were to force our wills, not only should we cease to be independent personalities, but God himself would cease to be the God of reason and become the God of force. There is a door to my heart, and the door is locked on the inside, and the key is in my keeping. I may not be able to do much I may be very weak and very unworthy, but I can open the door. And how much may come into my life by that simple act! Weakness may open the door to strength, ignorance to wisdom, poverty to wealth, and sin to the Saviour.

There is a suggestive reading of the last verse of the 50th Psalm. It is a former Princeton professor's classroom translation: "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me, and prepareth the way by which I may further manifest myself unto him." Opening the door to God is simply preparing a way by which he may further manifest himself to us. C. C. A.

Hostility to Christianity

TUESDAY, August 28. I John 3 : 13. "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." Is it really possible that the world should hate a true Christian? Let us give the question a little different turn: Is it possible that men can be possessed of a mind of which it is truthfully said that it is enmity toward God? How was it possible that men slew the good and gentle Jesus? Surely, the servant is not above his Master. If any have indulged the illusive hope that their path through life as Christians would be a holiday journey through smiling meadows with a stop here and there among pleasant folk who would give them a very cordial reception, they have not read their future as Christians aright. The Lord whom we follow has said: "Ye must be hated of every one for my name's sake." The ill-will to which Christians are exposed is the continuation of that disfavor which the Lord himself encountered on earth.

It is well to be forewarned, and to look an unpleasant issue straight in the face. The world will never conquer and destroy the imperishable faith of Christianity. Truth is mighty, and it will prevail. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the ensign of victory that is set up among the nations of this earth: it will never be taken down. But in its initial contact with the men of this world Christianity has ever encountered a natural spirit of hostility. The method of its progress has been that it has changed that hostility by the conquering grace of God into friendliness, that it has prevailed upon the naturally proud heart of man to accept the seemingly humiliating terms of saving grace, and has quickened a new hope in hearts that had abandoned themselves to despair and for that reason were reckless opponents of the merciful efforts of God to reclaim them. Undismayed and unsurprised by the disfavor which they meet in a world that is naturally incapable of appreciating true happiness, Christians should pursue their work for Christ among their fellow-men. The world's hatred should only fan the fires of their love into brighter flame. W. H. T. D.

Faith or Family?

WEDNESDAY, August 29. Matt. 10 : 36. "A man's foes shall be they of his own household." As much as the Bible exalts the home, the family and the relationship between kindred, yet truth and righteousness live in a higher realm. The soul of man must stand alone before God in the final judgment. He must therefore be willing to sever all human ties if necessary to his salvation. Paul and the early martyrs forsook home and friends, suffered the loss of all things to win Christ. It is a blessed fact that though human hands may murder the body, they cannot touch the soul. The loss of a soul is the catastrophe of the universe.

If we deny our Lord for the sake of harmony among our kindred, he will deny us before the Father and the holy angels. In separating the righteous from the wicked, it is sometimes necessary to endure conflict between those of your own household. When right and wrong meet, they occasion strife. A child may feel compelled to defend himself and his family against a drunken, maniac father, or to defend his soul against an infidel parent. Holiness and sin are ever antagonistic principles, so that sometimes the sword of justice will cut through households. E. W. C.

A Soldier's Creed

THURSDAY, August 30. Matt. 8 : 8, 9. "The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." This Roman soldier had a creed. He had it before he saw Jesus. He was a Gentile convert to Judaism. Hence, his religious creed must have included the fundamental doctrines of Judaism. He believed in God, in God's holiness, unity and spirituality. He believed in man as the child of God, subject to God's government. In some vague way, he believed in immortality. He believed in the spiritual value and content of life. All this he believed before he saw Jesus. Now he adds to that creed a new article. He accepts a Man, a specific individual, known as Jesus of Nazareth, as a prophet of God, a teacher sent from God, a physician of incomparable power, capable of doing what can be done only by supernatural power.

Moreover, he perceives by swift spiritual intuition the transcendent goodness of that Man. This explains the Roman captain's humility: "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof." This is a fairly complete creed: Faith in God, faith in man as a child of God, and faith in Jesus Christ as the revelation of God. Such a creed will support a man in life, through death, and for all eternity. Think of the logical fruitage of such a creed. If a man be a child of God, he must live as such. If Jesus Christ be God made manifest, we must accept him as our spiritual authority. Doubtless this soldier's creed grew as the years passed by. Living creeds must grow. So Paul's creed expanded from the time he saw Jesus and was blinded by the radiance of the sight to the time he shivered and strained his weak eyes to read and write in the perpetual twilight of the dark, cold, underground dungeon. He went from strength to strength until he appeared in Zion. To believe in Christ may seem a small thing, but it is not. It is the broadest basis the human mind can apprehend. All that makes life beautiful, all that gives large definition to life, all that makes death radiant with hope, grows out of our belief in Christ. C. C. A.

Kept by the Power

FRIDAY, August 31. I Peter 5 : 10. "The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, establish, strengthen, settle you." Every prayer must have warrant in some divine promise, or it is futile. The same apostle who makes the perseverance of the saints the subject of his prayer in this text has declared to them: "Ye are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." Jesus is represented to us as the Author and Finisher of our faith. When God begins a good work in us, he intends to complete it. The operations of divine grace are no doubtful ventures. God means to save men to the uttermost.

In times of adversity the outlook into our future often becomes clouded. Anxious questions arise as to our ultimate fate. Will we be found in believing union with Christ in the moment of our death? May we not fall away from him in the very last moment? We remember that the Lord asked the question, whether at his return he would find faith on earth. These questions would have to fill every Christian with dire unrest, if he were to look for the ability to persevere in himself alone. When the waves and billows of temptation and doubt rise against him, he will probably go under like Peter. How comforting, then, is the fact that there is a preserving grace! With the apostle we may approach the throne of grace with all confidence, beseeching God to make firm whatever is frail and weak in us, to steady us in our waverings, so that we may attain the goal, the eternal glory unto which we have been called. W. H. T. D.

The Great Choice

SATURDAY, September 1. Matt. 6 : 24. "No man can serve two masters." "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The wise man builds upon a rock; the foolish upon the sand. They that be wise shall shine with the glory of God, brighter than the stars. The foolish shine with the glory of gold. The wise enter the narrow life; the foolish, the broad way to death. The wise take no anxious thought for the morrow; the foolish make every provision for earthly things.

There can be no real compromise between good and evil; no third or neutral position regarding moral questions. He that is not for Christ is against him. Every one must choose as Moses did, who chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Joshua cried out, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," and Elijah exclaimed, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" We must decide which road we will take, up the rugged Hill Difficulty or down the gilded path to ruin. If we follow him whose footsteps were stained with blood, up Calvary, we shall reach the realms of light; while away downward is the night that knows no morning. "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Abraham Lincoln said regarding slavery, "A house divided against itself cannot stand; it will become all the one thing or all the other. This government cannot endure half slave and half free." Neither can an individual morally occupy such an anomalous position; he must choose for God or Satan, holiness or sinfulness, forever and ever. E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The World's Need of Christ

IN periods of unusual planetary activity, the telescopes of the astronomers are all directed skyward. In times of great moral and social upheaval and world change, we find the minds of thoughtful men instinctively turning to the only Source from which light and knowledge can come. Thus, the literary output of the last few years is a remarkable illustration of the fact that the human mind in extremity turns toward God as the Solver of all mysteries, the Healer of all sorrows and the Rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Seeking God is the devout task of serious minds today more than in any previous period of recorded history. He had been forgotten by the great majority and his holy statutes were remembered more in the breach than in the observance.

In the foreword to a remarkable book, bearing the title, "The Christ We Forget," issued simultaneously in the United States and Great Britain, P. Whitwell Wilson, the author, makes this candid avowal: "Before the war, it seemed almost unnecessary to find time for the Bible. Many of us were making money, others were busily earning it. Our children were getting on nicely at school. Certainly there were grave evils, like drink, and bitter social inequalities, and rancorous political quarrels, and reckless extravagances, which gave us uneasy twinges of conscience. But we drifted, in tens, hundreds of thousands, from public worship. We ceased to pray. We quietly laid aside the Bible. Then—suddenly—we were brought face to face with facts which we had forgotten. One of those facts was Death; another was Pain; another was Hatred; another was National Duty; another was Suspense. We learned that life is not a game, but a grim, heroic combat between good and evil.

"For this crisis we found that we were unprepared. Men and women fled for refuge, in some cases, to spiritualism, crystal-gazing, and fortune-telling. Pleasure and Romance played their part as comforters. Lives that had been frivolous were consecrated to war work. And there was the growing splendor of national unity and personal sacrifice. Hopes of a better dawn have encouraged us. We are sure that Faith will return.

"Yes—but Faith in what? Faith in Whom? In our hearts we know that we want something far deeper than treaties, and Someone far stronger than sovereigns and statesmen. We need a revival—a new birth of life—a resurrection."

And this is the universal conclusion. Human society, with its aggregate of one billion seven hundred million members, has been shaken to its roots by the gigantic moral and physical upheaval. It now realizes that it had been attempting, all these past years, to sidetrack the omnipotent God. It had been shelving the old Bible which reveals his will and discloses the divine plan of world redemption. Now it begins to comprehend that if men would ever again find pardon, peace and happiness, they must seek them through prayer, repentance and obedience. And there is only one way—the way of the Cross! Until Jesus Christ is accepted as Saviour, the world cannot know God.

In "The Christ We Forget" we are reminded that nearly two thousand years ago, at the time of the First Advent, problems troubled the world similar to those that trouble it today. Then, as now, there were the sore burdens of war and taxes:

"To Cæsar, the world consists of rich people and poor people, who may be liable for tribute money, and possibly for military service. . . . In our Lord's more searching census the hungry and the thirsty are enrolled, the pure in heart, the heavy-laden and the martyrs. War does not mean that the Prince of Peace has failed. It means that, in time of peace, the Prince is forgotten; and if peace be again granted to the children of men, woe to our race if better use be not made of it." And we are reminded that "earthly potentates have always distrusted and oppressed the common people," . . . while Jesus "trusted himself entirely to those who worked for their living." He even chose them to co-operate with himself in the setting up of his kingdom in the hearts of men.

No one can read "The Christ We Forget" without being greatly helped. It is a most timely and compelling presentation of the greatest of all themes—the world's need of Christ.

Sunday School Attendance

CORRECT statistics of the numbers inside and outside the Sunday schools of the United States are very difficult to obtain. There are no official figures showing what proportion of the population of the country is juvenile. At the same time, Sunday school statistics fail to show satisfactorily what portion of the attendance is juvenile and what part adult.

The difficult task has been acceptably achieved, however, by the American Sunday School Union, and the figures show that of the 56,554,470 who may be regarded as of Sunday school age not more than 22,466,971 are on Sunday school rolls, including those under religious instruction by Catholics, Jews, Latter Day Saints, Christian Scientists, and many other bodies in ways somewhat parallel to the work of Protestant evangelical Sunday schools.

Of the 34,087,499 persons of Sunday school age who are not attending Sunday school, 16,702,878 are in the rural sections and 17,384,621 are in the cities.

These figures are merely approximate; exactness is not claimed for them. But to any candid mind they show in a most impressive way how vast is the work that remains to be done by the Christian churches of the United States if the young people of this generation are to be brought under the right influences and taught those principles of the Word of God on which our security, progress and real prosperity as a people depend.

The Food Control Law

THE most drastic and far-reaching legislation ever enacted by Congress is embraced in the Food Control Bill, urged by the President, long debated, and now become law.

The measure establishes during the war broad government control over foods, feeds, fuels, fertilizers, tools, utensils and equipment required for the production of all such products designated "necessaries." The President is authorized to enter into any voluntary arrangements, create or use any agency or agencies, to accept services of any person without compensation, to co-operate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the government, and to co-ordinate their activities.

Comprehensive powers are given in the bill, passed as a war measure, to assure adequate supply and equitable distribution of the named necessaries, to facilitate their movement, to prevent, locally and generally, scarcity, monopoly, hoarding, injurious speculation, manipulation or private control affecting supply, distribution and movement.

Provisions of the bill fix a minimum price for wheat beginning next year at not less than $2 a bushel, provide for coal and coke price-fixing, commandeering and government operation of factories and mines producing necessaries, for government purchase, sale and requisition of various necessaries, and for Federal licensing of agencies producing and handling them.

The prohibition provisions prohibit manufacture and importation of distilled liquors for beverages during the war, authorize the President to suspend manufacture of malt, fermented and vinous liquors or to limit their alcoholic content, and "authorizes and directs" the President in his discretion to commandeer distilled beverages in bond or stock when necessary for redistillation into alcohol for military or other public defense purposes, or to conserve foodstuffs.

The Food Survey Bill, prohibiting hoarding or gambling in foodstuffs, which had been held up by the Administration for three months to force food control, immediately followed the Food Control Bill into enactment.

The powers granted and the situation created are unprecedented, not only in our own country but in any other. It is far beyond what England, France, or Germany has attempted in this line. It is nothing less than the paradox of practical state socialism under autocratic control. The argument and support all lay in the fact that it is a war measure strictly, justified only by extreme emergency.

Setting Up Moral Safeguards

IT must be a gratification to a very large number of our people to be assured that the civilian heads of the army and navy feel the heavy responsibility that rests upon them for safeguarding the morals of the men in camp and on shipboard. Secretary Daniels, following the example of Secretary Baker, has placed himself on record on this subject. In a recent communication to the public he says: "The young sailor and soldier of today will form no small part of the nation's very life-blood in the times of peace following. To consider now their moral as well as their physical well-being is not the narrow view; it is the broad view, the big, farsighted view of things." He assures us that he has no patience with those who sneer at any measures to keep our young men sound in mind as well as in body, for "morale and morals, in the long run, are synonymous." He holds that this government, from every standpoint, has a duty to protect these youths, so that when the present crisis is over, it can say to the mothers of the country: "We return your sons, made strong by suffering, made wise by discipline; no longer youths but men, tried in the fierce flame of war, as worthy of their place in your family circle as they were when they left home."

Theoretically, this looks very promising; but Mr. Daniels assures us that it is a theory which is being rapidly translated into practice. He instances the case of Newport, which "represented in its viewpoint and its morals the careless indifference of so many of our cities toward those who are strangers within their gates, as to what they did to occupy their time. . . . Into this careless, thoughtless summer resort were suddenly placed some thousands of young men, fresh from their homes, free from all restraints they had known." The Newport authorities did not worry over the situation, although there was a moral undertow, the dangers of which many must have known. Secretary Daniels tells how he took the matter up with the state authorities, who referred it to the Newport officials for a report. They seemed mildly surprised and frankly admitted that there were gambling-houses and vicious resorts, but probably "no more than usual." Immediate demand was made upon the governor to suppress the gaming joints, illicit drinking-places and dens of vice, that temptation might be removed. Newport has been swept clean, and Secretary Daniels assures us that "so will it be everywhere where enlisted youths are stationed, if it lies within the power of this government to make it so."

Let us hope that the campaign for clean living and good morals, inside and out of all the camps and naval stations, may be kept up vigorously. It is not only good as a war measure but at all times.

The Cost of Being Late

A YOUNG Kentuckian has lost a big fortune by being twenty minutes late in keeping a business engagement.

The cheerless old fellow with the scythe always gets all that is coming to him. And there is many a bad scar on our fortunes where he has had to prod us up to the mark.

Time is cheap, and we are apt to think we can filch it as we will. But it is always ourselves we rob, not time.

Maybe you can waste your own time by being late in keeping engagements and feel that the loss, if any, is your own affair. But it also is the affair of the man you keep waiting. You waste his time, too. If your time is worthless, maybe his is not. He may conclude that his time is worth more to him than you are.

In many cases it may not matter much. But one never knows until afterward whether it matters or not. And through false politeness we are usually assured that it does not matter even when it does.

Only the idle and careless, whose time is of the least value, can afford to waste it by looseness in keeping engagements.

It may be hard to acquire the fixed habit of always being on time, but it can be done, and it is worth while to do it.

Great business men have this habit. Men of great affairs, whose time is most completely taken up, are usually on time. It is they who know best the value of time and the importance of saving it by being prompt.

A New Serial Next Week

IN "The Witness," the new Serial which begins next week, Mrs. Grace Livingston Hill Lutz has produced a vital, dramatic, heart-searching story. In the first chapters a college prank ends in a fatal but not useless sacrifice. One eye-witness of the tragedy, a young collegian, sees a vision, and he returns to his schoolmates to fight for his faith against unbelief, and against the spirit of that kind of good-fellowship which too often serves only base ends. How he "won out," not only in the remaking of his own life but the life of his school, is told in the chapters that follow. The whole story snaps with the vigor of youth. It is a man's story, yet not exclusively so, as it is one women may read to advantage. In it a page of a student's life is painted with which few people may be familiar, yet it is a page which explains many a failure of lives that college should have fitted for worthy service.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Connecticut Blue Law Repeal

BLUE laws were brushed aside, August 5, throughout the state, and Connecticut celebrated its first open Sunday in 300 years. For three centuries only drug stores could be open Sunday. But now bakeries, ice-cream parlors, milk stations, fruit stands, tobacco stores, newsstands, and automobile shops were all open and did a thriving business. The motion picture theaters were stormed in many places by the big crowds who were out for a good time. One section of the new act allows amateur baseball and other sporting events to take place on Sunday, provided no admission fee is asked. Rifle ranges may also be opened. The reaction from the old blue laws of New England to the liberalized Sunday laws, in imitation of the Continental Sabbath, is a mistake and a grave moral danger. God's law, giving one day in seven for rest for man, and a day of peaceful and orderly worship for those who desire it, is recognized in the Sunday laws of the Christian nations of the world. To weaken these laws and give the day over to pleasure, mirth or dissipation, is not only a sin before God, but a serious menace to the perpetuity of our free institutions. The principle underneath the stated period for rest and worship is so deep that the Almighty incorporated it thus in the Ten Commandments: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." (Ex. 20 : 8.)

Boys Profitable Farm Hands

SATISFACTORY reports from the various states, telling of more and more boys going on the farms and making good, indicate in some degree the progress which the Boys' Working Reserve of the Department of Labor is making. Mr. Hall, who has responsibility in the matter, reports details. Eighty boys who went to farms in Arizona in five weeks' work at chopping and thinning cotton, have earned $3,000, out of which they paid $1,600 for board, leaving them a net earning of $1,400. These boys thinned and hoed nearly 1,000 acres of cotton, to the great satisfaction of the owners. This work of the boys at this time is most commendable. They must be careful, however, not to overwork, and their employers must also be cautious about that. Many a farmer's boy has been broken down permanently in health by trying to do a man's work before he is old enough or strong enough. The boys and girls of today are doing glorious work in the fields of spiritual farming. There is great need of more farm hands, young and old, in the spiritual harvest. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." (Matt. 9 : 38.)

Dies Aged 110 Years

MRS. ANNA POUDER, one of Baltimore's most noted inhabitants, died in that city at the age of 110. Until the last she retained a clear memory of the many stirring events through which she had lived—her recollection bridged the years from before the visit of Marquis de Lafayette to Baltimore until the year in which she died. She had lived through seven wars and remembered them all. On her last birthday, May 7, the Marquis de Chambrun, a great-grandson of Lafayette and a member of the recent French Commission to America, sent her his personal greetings and compliments. The message was sent through Mrs. J. Charles Linthicum, wife of the Baltimore Congressman. When she received the card from Marquis de Chambrun, she related again her recollection of his great ancestor's visit. "There was a procession," she said, "and lots of decorations, a public reception and a military review. There was an escort of citizens and soldiery and many bouquets were presented to the General as he rode through the city in his barouche alone." The repetition of that procession and review under sadder circumstances, when, in July, 10 years later, a memorial funeral celebration was held in the illustrious General's memory, was another of her recollections and she recalled Waterloo distinctly. Mrs. Pouder was a devout Christian, and for sixty years had been one of the most beloved and honored members of St. Mark's Lutheran Church of Baltimore. Her old age was green and beautiful, and there was no death to her, only a heavenly translation. What was said of Abraham, who lived 65 years longer than she, can be said of Mother Pouder. She "gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age." (Gen. 25 : 8.)

© International Film Service, Inc

Last Horse-Car Gone

THE other day New York City witnessed the passing of its last horse-car. Fifty-three years ago, when George Opdyke was mayor of New York, and goats browsed along what is now Riverside Drive, the people were startled to learn that a company had been incorporated to operate a car-line through the most populous and select streets. When the first car of the Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry line pulled out and went gliding along behind a team of horses, tinkling the bells attached to them, the people looked at it with pride and said, "See what a wonderful progress New York is making!" Now the once popular horse-car has become a thing of the past. For several years the cars have been run at a loss. The horses were too slow, the cars were shabby, and the people would walk rather than wait for them. The total receipts for 1916 were $178.80. This year they have been only $103. It cost $4,000 a year to keep the line in motion. The company ran the cars to preserve the franchise. On July 26 the line was abandoned and, amid some ceremony, the last car was taken off and the tracks will be torn up. Manager Hedley of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and other officials of the company rode on the last trip. The driver, James Cusack, had held his job for forty long years, and the conductor, Thomas O'Brien, had had his position of trust for thirty years. The ox-cart was better than walking; the buggy was better than the cart, the town 'bus was a step in advance, and then the horse-car ran the 'bus out, and then the cable pulled the cars, and then the trolley, and now the subway express goes from above the Harlem through the length of Manhattan Island under the East River and to the Atlantic Ocean at the rate of a mile in two minutes. It is likely that even the subway may be too slow for our grandchildren, and they will take the local airplane for long-distance trips in the city, and the express for Chicago for dinner. This progress in transportation has been matched by that in nearly every other field. All of the progress is tributary to man's better mental and moral development, and the perfection of Christ's kingdom in the earth. The chariots of Bible times were the best means of public transportation on land. When Pharoah pursued the escaping Israelites, "he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them." (Ex. 14 : 7.)

Saved from Burning Creek

PLUNGING head first into a pool of blazing gasoline, William Landis, a powerful young swimmer, the other day saved the lives of three children in a launch encircled by the flaming fluid spread by an explosion over a large area. Hearing the screams of the children, Landis plunged into the water, dived deep under the ring of flame, and came up right against the boat. He splashed the water hard, and the waves carried the burning oil away from the launch, and the children were saved from the shocking death which threatened them. The same heroism in ordinary life is seen every day somewhere; that which forgets its own life to save others. In many instances the hero loses his own life in rescuing those in peril. Christ taught that the highest value of life was to risk it for others, and himself died to save us. "But to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us." (I Thess. 5 : 9, 10.)

Jews Mourn Jerusalem's Fall

"AND so it was that Jerusalem fell, and we became a people without a country, wanderers over the face of the earth." This was the refrain of the orthodox rabbis in the synagogues of the country the other day, when their congregations assembled to commemorate with solemn prayer the anniversary of the fall of Jerusalem. It was a day of fasting and lamentation, because it was on this day, 1848 years ago, according to the Hebrew calendar, that the Romans destroyed the temple in Jerusalem, pillaged and massacred the inhabitants, and brought the Jewish nation to an end. The orthodox Jews claim that their prophets promise a restoration of the nation, and some of the rabbis say that the Holy Land will be their possession in the near future. The constancy of these Jews in their love for Jerusalem is voiced by that of the Hebrews of old in captivity: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." (Ps. 137 : 5, 6.)

Resuscitated After Shock

A MAN connected with a power company in one of the large cities, the other day was apparently killed by accidentally touching a wire carrying a current of 2,300 volts. A lineman immediately ran to him, took hold of the ankles of the limp body, lifting it until the whole weight rested on the neck, and letting it fall. He then took a pair of connectors and hammered the soles of the injured man's feet without removing his shoes. Another lineman pulled out the tongue, to begin the Schaefer method of resuscitation, when the man came back to life. He was taken to the hospital, where he recovered entirely, though he had to nurse some severe burns. The man was not dead but only apparently so. When the spirit has gone from the body, no human power can bring it back. Jesus was divine and restored the dead to life. "And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, arise. And he that was dead sat up and began to speak." (Luke 7 : 14, 15.)

GLIMPSES OF THE CONFLICT THAT DOMINATES THE WO

DESCRIPTIONS. No. 1. British submarine at torpedo practice, but the wake of the projectile would look the same if its purposes had been hostile. No. 2. A lesson in knitting soldiers' comforts. No. 3. A striking picture of Camouflage, the art of concealment. Here a French road is completely screened from enemy eyes. No. 4. Material for Uncle Sam's new army waiting for examination by reac side

Fra
No.
Chi
in to

Picture No. 1. © International Film Service

Picture No. 5.

ID

3

4

pt n board. No. 5. A British "tank" cti , and infantry which may fight be-6 he sort of fellows who are going to ap about a veteran of the Spanish War.
of ne new national army on parade in g 4. No. 8. British transport truck of agdad, Mesopotamia, reported soon te by a Turko-German army.

l P e from Underwood & Underwood

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XXVI

The Road to Understanding

IT was on a gray morning early in February that Betty found her employer pacing the library from end to end like the proverbial caged lion. When he turned and spoke, she was startled at the look on his face—a worn, haggard look that told of sleeplessness—and of something else that she could not name.

He ignored her conventional morning greeting.

"Miss Darling, I want to speak to you."

"Yes, Mr. Denby."

"Will you come here to live—as my daughter?"

"Will I—what?" The amazement in Betty's face was obviously genuine.

"You are surprised, of course; and no wonder. I didn't exactly what you call 'break it gently,' did I? And I forgot that you haven't been thinking of this thing every minute for the last—er—month, as I have. Won't you sit down, please?" With an abrupt gesture he motioned her to a chair, and dropped into one himself. "I can't, of course, beat about the bush now. I want you to come here to this house and be a daughter to me. Will you?"

"But, Mr. Denby!"

"'This is so sudden!' Yes, I know," smiled the man grimly. "That's what your face says, and no wonder. It may seem sudden to you—but it is not at all so to me. Believe me, I have given it a great deal of thought. I have debated it—longer than you can guess. And let me tell you at once that of course I want your mother to come, too. That will set your mind at rest on that point."

"But I—I don't think yet that I—I quite understand," faltered the girl.

"In what way?"

"I can't understand yet why—why you want me. You see, I—I have thought lately that—that you positively disliked me, Mr. Denby." Her chin came up with the little determined lift so like her mother.

With a jerk Burke Denby got to his feet and resumed his nervous stride up and down the room.

"My child,"—he turned squarely about and faced her,—"I want you. I need you. This house has become nothing but a dreary old pile of horror to me. You, by some sweet necromancy of your own, have contrived to make the sun shine into its windows. It's the first time for years that there has been any sun—for me. But when you go, the sun goes. That's why I want you here all the time. Will you come? Of course, you understand I mean adoption—legally. But I don't want to dwell on that part. I want you to want to come. I want you to be happy here. Won't you come?"

BETTY drew in her breath tremulously. For a long minute her gaze searched the man's face.

"Well, Miss Betty?" There was a confident smile in his eyes. He had the air of a man who has made a certain somewhat dreaded move, but who has no doubt as to the outcome.

"I'm afraid I—can't, Mr. Denby."

"You—can't!"

Betty, in spite of her very real and serious concern and anxiety, almost laughed at the absolute amazement on the man's face.

"No, Mr. Denby."

"May I ask why?" There was the chill of ice in his voice.

Again Betty felt the almost hysterical desire to laugh. Still her face was very grave.

"You—I— In the end you would not want me, Mr. Denby," she faltered, "because I—I should not be—happy here."

"May I ask why—that?"

There was no answer.

"Miss Darling, why wouldn't you be happy here?"

Genuine distress came into Betty's face.

"I would rather not say, Mr. Denby."

"But I prefer that you should."

"I can't. You would think me—impertinent."

"Not if I tell you to say it, Miss Betty. Why can't you be happy here? You know very well that you would have everything that money could buy."

"But what I want is something—money can't buy."

"What do you mean?"

No reply.

"Miss Darling, what do you mean?"

With a sudden fierce recklessness the girl turned and faced him.

"I mean that—just that—what you did now, and a minute ago. The way you have of—of expecting everybody and everything to bend to your will and wishes. Oh, I know, it's silly and horrible and everything for me to say this. But you made me do it. I told you it was impertinent! Don't you see? I'd have to have love and laughter and sympathy and interest and—and all that around me. I couldn't be happy here. This house is like a tomb, and you—sometimes you are jolly and kind and—and fine. But I never know how you're going to be. And I'd die if I had to worry and fret and fear all the time how you were going to be! Mr. Denby, I—I couldn't live in such a place, and mother couldn't either. And I— Oh, what have I said? But you made me do it, you made me do it!"

FOR one long minute there was utter silence in the room. Burke Denby, at the library table, sat motionless, his hand shading his eyes. Betty, in her chair, wet her lips and swallowed convulsively. Her eyes were frightened—but her chin was high.

Suddenly he stirred. His hand no longer shaded his face. Betty, to her amazement, saw that his lips were smiling, though his eyes, she knew, were moist.

"Betty, my dear child, I thought before that I wanted you. I know now I've got to have you."

Betty, as if the smile were contagious, found her own lips twitching.

"What—do you mean?"

"I mean that your fearless little tirade was just what I needed, my dear. I have expected everything and everybody to bend to my will and wishes. I suspect that's what's been the matter, too, all the way up. I thought once, long ago, I'd learned my lesson. But it seems I haven't. Here I am up to the same old tricks again. Will you come and—er—train me, Betty? I will promise to be very docile."

Betty did laugh this time—and the tension snapped. "Train"—the very word with which she had shocked her mother weeks before!

"Seriously, my dear"—the man's face was very grave now—"I want you to talk this thing over with your mother. I am a lonely old man—yes, old, in spite of the fact that I'm barely forty—I feel sixty! I want you, and I need you, and—notwithstanding your unflattering opinion of me, just expressed—I believe I can make you happy, and your mother, too. She shall have every comfort, and you shall have love and laughter and sympathy and interest, I promise you. Now, isn't your heart softening just a wee bit? Won't you come?"

"Why, of course, I—appreciate your kindness, Mr. Denby, and"—Betty drew a tremulous breath and looked wistfully into the man's pleading eyes—"it would be lovely for—mother, wouldn't it? She wouldn't have to worry any more, or—or——"

Burke Denby lifted an imperative hand. His face lighted. He sprang to his feet and spoke with boyish enthusiasm.

"The very thing! Miss Darling, I want you to go home and bring your mother back to luncheon with you. Never mind the work," he went on, as he saw her quick glance toward his desk. "I don't want to work. I couldn't—this morning. And I don't want you to. I want to see your mother. I want to tell her—many things—of myself. I want her to see me, and see if she thinks she could give you to me as a daughter, and yet not lose you herself, but come here with you to live."

"But I—I could tell her this tonight," stammered Betty, knowing still that, in spite of herself, she was being swept quite off her feet by the extraordinary enthusiasm of the eager man before her.

"I don't want to wait till tonight. I want to see her now. Besides"—he cocked his head whimsically with the confident air of one who knows his point is gained—"I want a magazine, and I forgot to ask you to get it for me last night. I want the February Research. So we'll just let it go that I'm sending you to the station newsstand for that. Incidentally, you may come back around by your mother's place and bring her with you. There, now surely you won't object to—to running an errand for me!" he finished triumphantly.

"No, I surely can't object to—to running an errand for you," laughed Betty, as she rose to her feet, a pretty color in her face. "And I—I'll try to bring mother."

IT was in a tumult of excitement and indecision that Betty hurried down the long Denby walk that February morning. What would her mother say? How would she take it? Would she consent? Would she consent even to go to luncheon—she who so seldom went anywhere? It was a wonderful thing—this proposal of Mr. Denby's. It meant, of course—everything, if they accepted it—a complete metamorphosis of their whole lives and future. It could not help meaning that. But would they be happy there? Could they be happy with a man like Mr. Denby? To be sure, he said he would be willing to be—trained. (Betty's face dimpled into a broad smile somewhat to the mystification of the man she chanced to be meeting at the moment.) But would he be really kind and lovable like this all the time? He had been delightful once before—for a few days. What guaranty had they that he would not again, at the first provocation, fall back into his old glum unbearableness?

But what would her mother say? Well, she would soon know. She would get the magazine, then hurry home—and find out.

It was between trains at the station, and the waiting-room was deserted. Betty hurriedly told the newsstand woman what she wanted, and tried to assume a forbidding aspect that would discourage questions. But the woman made no move to get the magazine. She did not seem even to have heard the request. Instead she leaned over the counter and caught Betty's arm in a vise-like grip. Her face was alight with joyous excitement.

"Well, I am glad to see you! I've been watchin' ev'ry day fur you. What did I tell ye? Now I guess you'll say I know when I've seen a face before! Now I know who you are. I see you with your mother at Martin's grocery last Sat'day night, and I tried ter get to ye, but I lost ye in the crowd. I see you first, then I see her, and I knew then in a minute who you was, and why I'd thought I'd seen ye somewheres. I hadn't—not since you was a kid, though; but I knew yer mother, an' you've got her eyes. You're Helen Denby's daughter. My, but I'm glad ter see ye!"

Betty, plainly distressed, had been attempting to pull her arm away from the woman's grasp; but at the name a look of relief crossed her face.

"You are quite mistaken, madam," she said coldly. "My mother's name is not Helen Denby."

"But I see her myself with my own eyes, child! Of course she's older lookin', but I'd swear on my dyin' bed 'twas her. Ain't you Dorothy Elizabeth?"

Betty's eyes flew wide open.

"You—know—my—name?"

"There! I knew 'twas," triumphed the woman. "An' ter think of you comin' back an' workin' fur yer father like this, an'——"

"My—what?"

IT was the woman's turn to open wide eyes of amazement.

"Do you mean to say you don't know Burke Denby is your father?"

"But he isn't my father! My father is dead!"

"Who said so?"

"Why, mother—that is—I mean—she never said— What do you mean? He can't be my father. My mother's name is Helen Darling!" Betty was making no effort to get away now. She was, indeed, clutching the woman's arm with her free hand.

The woman scowled and stared. Suddenly her face cleared.

"So that's her game! She's keepin' it from ye, I bet ye," she cried excitedly.

"Keeping it from me! Keeping what from me? What are you talking about?" Betty's face had paled. The vague questions and half-formed fears regarding her mother's actions for the past few months seemed suddenly to be taking horrible shape and definiteness.

"What! Do you mean ter say that you don't know that Burke Denby is your father, an' that he give your mother the go-by when you was a kid, an' she lit out with you an' hain't been heard of since?"

"No, no, it can't be—it can't be! My father was good and fine, and——"

"Did she stuff ye ter that, too? I tell ye 'tis so. Say, look a-here! Wan't you down ter Martin's grocery last Sat'day night at nine o'clock?"

"Y-yes."

"Well, wan't you there with yer mother?"

"Y-yes." A power entirely outside of herself seemed to force the answers from Betty's lips.

"Well, I see ye. You was tergether, talkin' to the big fat man with the red nose. I started towards ye, but I lost ye in the crowd."

Betty's face had grown gray-white. She remembered now. That was the night her mother had run away from—something.

"But I knew her," nodded the woman. "I knew she was Helen Denby."

"But maybe you were—mistaken."

"Mistaken? Me? Not much! I don't furgit faces. You ask yer mother if she don't remember Mis' Cobb. Didn't I live right on the same floor with her fur months? Hain't yer mother ever told ye she lived here long ago?"

Betty nodded dumbly, miserably.

"Well, I lived next to her, and I knew the whole thing—how she got the letter tellin' her ter go, an' the money Burke Denby sent her——"

"Letter! Money! You mean he wrote her to—go—away? He paid her?" The girl had become suddenly galvanized into blazing anger.

"Sure! That's what I'm tellin' ye. An' yer mother went. I tried ter stop her. I told her ter go straight up ter them Denbys an' demand her rights—an' your rights. But she wouldn't. She hadn't a mite o' spunk. Just because he was ashamed of her she——"

"Ashamed of her! Ashamed of my mother!"—if but Helen Denby could have seen the flash in Betty's eyes!

"Sure! She wan't so tony, an' her folks wan't grand like his, ye know. That's why old Denby objected ter the marriage in the first place. But, say, didn't you know any of this I'm tellin' ye? My! but it does seem queer ter be tellin' ye yer own family secrets like this—an' you here workin' in his very home, an' not knowin' it, too. If that ain't the limit—like a regular story-book! Now, I ain't never one ter butt in where 'tain't none of my affairs, but I've got ter say this. You're a Denby, an' ought ter have some spunk; an' if I was you I'd brace right up an'—Here, don't ye want yer magazine?"

But the girl was already half-way across the waiting-room.

IF Betty's thoughts and emotions had been in a tumult on the way to the station, they were in a veritable chaos on the return trip. She did not go home. She turned her steps toward the Denby Mansion; and because she knew she could not possibly sit still, she walked all the way.

So this was the meaning of it—the black veil daytimes, the walks only at night, the nervous restlessness, the unhappiness. Her mother had had something to conceal, something to fear. Poor mother—dear mother—how she must have suffered!

But why, why had she come back here and put her into that man's home? And why had she told her always how fine and noble and splendid her father was. Fine! Noble! Splendid, indeed! Still, it was like mother—dear mother—always so sweet and gentle, always seeing the good in everything and everybody! But why had she put her there—in that man's house? How could she?

And Burke Denby himself—did he know? Did he suspect that she was his daughter? Adopt her, indeed! Was that the way he thought he could pay her mother back for all those years? And the grief and the hurt and the mortification—where did they come in? Ashamed of her! Ashamed of her, indeed! Why, her little finger was as much finer and nobler and— But just wait till she saw him, that was all!

Like the overwrought, half-beside-herself young hurricane of wrathfulness that she was, Betty burst into the library at Denby House a few minutes later.

The very sight of her face brought the man to his feet.

"Why, Betty, what's the matter? Where's your mother? Couldn't she come? What is the matter?"

"Come? No, she didn't come. She'll never come—never!"

Before the blazing wrath in the young eyes the man fell back limply.

"Why, Betty, didn't you tell her——"

"I've told her nothing. I haven't seen her," cut in the girl crisply. "But I've seen somebody else. I know now—everything!"

From sheer stupefaction the man laughed.

"Aren't we getting a little—theatrical, my child?" he murmured mildly.

"You needn't call me that. I refuse to recognize the relationship," she flamed. "Perhaps we are getting theatrical—that woman said it was like a story-book. And perhaps you thought you could wipe it all out by adopting me. Adopting me, indeed! As if I'd let you! I can tell you it isn't going to end like a story-book, with father and mother and daughter—'and they all lived happily ever after'—because I won't let it!"

"What do you mean by that?" The man's face had grown suddenly very white.

Betty fixed searching, accusing eyes on his countenance.

"Are you trying to make me think you don't know I'm your daughter; that——"

"Betty! Are you really, really—my little Betty?"

At the joyous cry and the eagerly outstretched arms Betty shrank back.

"Then you didn't know—that?"

"No, no! Oh, Betty, Betty, is it true? Then it'll all be right now. Oh, Betty, I'm so glad," he choked. "My little girl! Won't you—come to me?"

She shook her head and retreated still farther out of his reach. Her eyes still blazed angrily.

"Betty, dear, hear me! I don't know—I don't understand. It's all too wonderful—to have it come—now. Once, for a little minute, the wild thought came to me that you might be. But, Betty, you yourself told me your father was—dead!"

"And so he is—to me," sobbed Betty. "You aren't my father. My father was good and true and noble and—you——"

"And your mother told you that?" breathed the man, brokenly. "Betty, I—I— Where is she? Is she there—at home—now? I want to—see her!"

"I shan't let you see her." Betty had blazed again into unreasoning wrath. "You don't deserve it. You told her you were ashamed of her. Ashamed of her! And she's the best and the loveliest and dearest mother in the world! She's as much above and beyond anything you—you – Why she let me come to you I don't know. I can't think why she did it. But now I—I——"

"Betty, if you'll only let me explain——"

But the great hall door had banged shut. Betty had gone.

Betty took a car to her own home. She was too weak and spent to walk.

It was a very white, shaken Betty that climbed the stairs to the little apartment a short time later.

"Why, Betty, darling!" exclaimed her mother, hurrying forward. "You are ill! Are you ill?"

With utter weariness Betty dropped into a chair.

"Mother, why didn't you tell me?" she asked dully, heartbrokenly. "Why did you let me come here and go to that house day after day and not know—anything?"

"Why, what—what do you mean?" All the color had drained from Helen Denby's face.

"Did you ever know a Mrs. Cobb?"

"That woman! Betty, she hasn't—has she been—talking—to you?"

Betty nodded wearily.

"Yes, she's been talking to me, and—Oh, mother, mother, why did you come here—now?" cried Betty, springing to her feet in sudden frenzy again. "How could you let me go there? And only to-day—this morning, he told me he wanted to adopt me! And you—he was going to have us both there—to live. He said he was so lonely, and that I—I made the sun shine for the first time for years. And afterwards, when I found out who he was, I thought he meant it as a salve to heal all the unhappiness he'd caused you. I thought he was trying to pay; and I told him——"

"You told him! You mean you've seen him since—Mrs. Cobb?"

"Yes. I went back. I told him——"

"Oh, Betty, Betty, what are you saying?" moaned her mother. "What have you done? You didn't tell him that way!"

"Indeed I did! I told him I knew—everything now; and that he needn't think he could wipe it out. And he wanted to see you, and I said he couldn't. I——"

An electric bell pealed sharply through the tiny apartment.

"Mother, that's he! I know it's he! Mother, don't let him in," implored Betty. But her mother already was in the hall.

Betty, frightened, despairing, and angry, turned her back and walked to the window. She heard the man's quick cry and the woman's sobbing answer. She heard the broken, incoherent sentences with which the man and the woman attempted to crowd into one brief delirious minute all the long years of heartache and absence. She heard the pleading, the heart-hunger, the final rapturous bliss that vibrated through every tone and word. But she did not turn. She did not turn even when some minutes later her father's voice, low, unsteady, but infinitely tender, reached her ears.

"Betty, your mother has forgiven me. Can't—you?"

There was no answer.

"Betty, dear, he means—we've forgiven each other, and—if I am happy, can't you be?" begged Betty's mother, tremulously.

Still no answer.

"Betty," began the woman again pleadingly.

But the man interposed, a little sadly:

"Don't urge her, Helen. After all, I deserve everything she can say, or do."

"But she doesn't understand," faltered Helen.

The man shook his head. A wistful smile was on his lips.

"No, she doesn't—understand," he said. "It's a long road to—understanding, dear. You and I have found it so."

"Yes, I know." Helen's voice was very low.

"And there are sticks and stones and numberless twigs to trip one's feet," went on the man softly. "And there are valleys of despair and mountains of doubt to be encountered—and Betty has come only a little bit of the way. Betty is young."

"But"—it was Helen's tremulous voice—"it's on the mountain-tops that—that we ought to be able to see the end of the journey, you know."

"Yes; but there are all those guide-boards, remember," said the man, "and Betty hasn't come to the guideboards yet—regret—remorse—forgiveness—patience, and—atonement."

There was a sudden movement at the window. Then Betty, misty-eyed, stood before them.

"I know I am—on the mountain of doubt now, but"—she paused, her gaze going from one to the other of the wondrously glorified faces before her—"I'll try so hard to see—the end of the journey," she faltered.

"Betty!" sobbed two adoring voices, as loving arms enfolded her.

THE END

Profits and Patriotism

THAT prices and profits in steel and other narrowly held accessories are still "joy-riding," while the mass of labor "drags itself on its knees," is strikingly shown in figures arrayed by William Hard in the New Republic.

"In the year 1913," he writes, "the United States Steel Corporation, after paying all expenses of operation and of maintenance and of depreciation, and after also paying all interest-charges on bonds and mortgages, still had $81,000,000 for stockholders' profits. Out of this $81,000,000 it paid seven per cent. on its preferred stock and five per cent. on its common (which once was water), and then still had $30,000,000 for surplus. The year 1913 was therefore a good year, and the sum of $81,000,000 for stockholders' profits was a good sum. In the year 1916 the sum for stockholders' profits, instead of being $81,000,000, was $271,000,000. The year 1916 was more than a good year. It was a fat year, fat with a great fatness. The year 1917 is apoplectic. Its market is a diseased market. The prices of the year 1916, when compared with the prices of the year 1913, were high. The prices of the year 1917, when compared with the prices of the year 1916, are monstrous. In the middle of the year 1913 the price of billets at Pittsburg was $26.50. In the middle of the year 1916 it was $42. In the middle of the year 1917 it was $100. The rise from 1913 to 1916 was $15.50. The rise from 1916 to 1917 was $58. The billet stage of manufacture is one of the middle stages. The plate-stage is one of the end stages. Plates are supremely important because of their use in cars and ships. In the middle of the year 1913, when billets were $26.50, plates were $33.60. In the middle of the year 1916, when billets were $42, plates were $73. In the middle of the year 1917, when billets were $100, plates were $200—and more. That is, the margin between the billet-stage of manufacture and the plate-stage, for cost, and for profit on cost, in 1913 was $7.10, in 1916 was $31, and in 1917 was $100—and more. Let us suppose, wildly, that the cost of proceeding from the billet-stage to the plate-stage is twice as great now as it was four years ago. The price of that proceeding, granted by the market, is fourteen times as great."

SOMETHING of the effect upon consumers is pointed out by Mr. Hard: "The citizens of Minneapolis, for their annual necessary supply of street-pipes, for which in 1915 they paid $420 a unit, are now paying $1,284. Will anybody pretend that the income of the citizens of Minneapolis, the income of our citizens in general throughout the United States, can possibly be increased to correspond to such increases in prices?"

The limping gait of labor increase is sharply contrasted with this swift run of increasing profits: "In the year 1913 the United States Steel Corporation paid out, in salaries and wages, to all employees, high and low, $207,000,000. In 1916 it paid out $263,000,000. That is, for every dollar that went to employees in 1913, the amount that went to employees in 1916 was $1.27. But for every dollar that went to stockholders in 1913, for dividends and surplus, the amount that went to stockholders in 1916 was $3.34. Will anybody pretend that the gain for labor was in harmony with the gain for capital? And will anybody pretend that the wage-advances and the salary-advances of the first half of the present year have kept pace, have come anywhere near keeping pace, with a price-market in which, for instance, during the eleven weeks immediately succeeding our declaration of war, the price of billets advanced $25—an amount nearly equal to the whole price of billets four years ago?"

THE utter futility of the mild methods of remedy thus far attempted and the crying necessity for a drastic check to the condition are expressed by Mr. Hard in these ringing words: "Let the Food Administration tell the working man's wife how to spread a pat of butter over a week. Let the Red Cross and the Red Cross's Director of Civilian Relief send her an extra pat of butter now and then to compensate her, while her husband may be sick, for the loss of the earnings of her boy who is in France. This is a revolutionary war. The flag emerging from it is the red flag of the blood of all the peoples and of their hope of a world cleansed and redeemed. One of the profoundest reasons why many professional revolutionists do not like this war is that it is a competitor—and a successful one. It strikes torrents of daring and of change from a rock-face from which their puny hands drew only trickles."

◆

Britain's War Food Prices

THE following statement of the percentage increase in the prices of staple articles in the United Kingdom since the beginning of the war is taken from the London Times.

Article	Large towns, (population over 50,000) Per cent increase	Small towns and villages Per cent increase
Beef, British Ribs	81	79
Thin flank	122	100
Beef, chilled or frozen—
Ribs	108	101
Thin flank	147	122
Mutton, British — Legs	75	74
Breast	124	99
Mutton, frozen— Legs	114	106
Breast	173	152
Bacon (streaky)	82	77
Fish	161	116
Flour	100	110
Bread	103	91
Tea	70	67
Sugar (granulated)	174	170
Milk	63	59
Butter—Fresh	70	76
Salted	67	73
Cheese	121	122
Eggs (fresh)	83	72
Potatoes	162	123

A Modern Dorcas

By PROFESSOR H. A. FISCHER

Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

I BECAME acquainted with her some seven or eight years ago. My daughter and I were conducting a Sunday school about eight miles from Wheaton, our home, in a village named Roselle. This village at the time had no church, no Sunday school, no religious services. In going to this place we passed through the beautiful rural village of Bloomingdale, about a mile and a half nearer to Wheaton than Roselle. Bloomingdale has been a thriving hamlet. When the railroad came to this region, Roselle was made a station and increased, while Bloomingdale decreased or barely held its own.

There had been two prosperous churches in Bloomingdale, the Congregational and Baptist. When the railroad failed to pass through Bloomingdale, one by one the English-speaking citizens of the village and the farmers of the neighborhood sold their places and moved away. After a while the Congregational church sold its house of worship to a German church and disbanded. The Baptists kept up their organization, but the number of members continued to decrease until only a few were left, including Mrs. Ryan. When I first met her she was teaching a few children in a Sunday school conducted in the Baptist church building, after regular services had been suspended and I had accepted an invitation to talk to them. Thus began our acquaintance.

AFTER a few years a German Lutheran church was built in Roselle and a Sunday school started in it. I had stopped going there. Then a Macedonian call came from the friends who had been carrying on an adult young people's Bible class in the vacant Baptist church at Bloomingdale, to come over and help them. One of my sons and I did so, carrying on both Sunday school and preaching services. Mrs. Ryan was a very faithful attendant at these services whenever her health permitted. She enjoyed them, and took great delight in helping them in every possible way. She seldom spoke about herself, but I learned from her neighbors and from some of her relatives certain facts about her life which here follow.

Louisa Geiger was born in 1838 in Germany. When fourteen years of age she came to America, the land of opportunity, and lived about three years in Philadelphia. Then, at seventeen, she came to the neighborhood of Bloomingdale and worked in homes helping the farmers' wives in their many duties. While engaged in this service she went to a camp-meeting some six or seven miles away and had a remarkable religious experience, which fashioned her whole subsequent life. Soon after, at the age of twenty, she was married to Mr. Roger Ryan, and with him she lived in happy wedlock more than twoscore years. He usually attended her church with her, and before he died she felt assured that he, although a member of a different communion, was a child of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

MRS. RYAN joined the Baptist Church in Bloomingdale in 1875 and remained a member of it until her death, although for a number of years no Baptist Church services were maintained. Quite frequently she had the pastor of the Baptist Church in Wheaton come and celebrate the communion service with the few remaining members of her church in the neighborhood.

Not long after we began our religious services at Bloomingdale, I was detained from going one Sunday, and my son returned from the place with a message from Mr. John H. Roehler, an old resident of Bloomingdale, who was Mrs. Ryan's efficient and faithful financial adviser. The message requested me to come and see him, and, as it turned out, Mrs. Ryan with him. The latter had a great desire that some permanent arrangement should be made for carrying on religious services in the English language, which we had undertaken. Several consultations, at one of which her trusted lawyer was present, led to the drawing up of her will. Since her husband's death, about fifteen years ago, she usually lived alone in her pleasant little home, which was always kept neat and in perfect order. Her modest income not only sufficed for her simple wants, but enabled her to translate her benevolent wishes into kind, helpful deeds. In her charities she was frequently inspired and guided by the Christian Herald, which she read for years and caused to be sent to others. Her desire to be helpful extended to those near her and those far away; to children, to young people, especially students "working their way" through school; to old people; to the poor. She tried, too, to help reform movements, and for several years kept up her membership in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

MRS. RYAN'S will shows all of these characteristics. She remembered relatives, members of her church and other churches, the local cemetery association and the German church. These were her "Jerusalem." An orphanage and old people's home about seven miles away was her Judea, and is to receive $500, "for the benefit of aged persons." The Bowery Mission and Christian Herald Children's Home of New York, the Keswick Colony of Mercy of New Jersey and the American Sunday School Union are remembered with $200 each. Her personal effects, such as clothing, furniture, books, pictures, etc., are to be distributed by Mr. Roehler, her executor, according to instructions given to him orally or in writing; one of these being that her clothing is to be sent to the orphanage and Old People's Home above mentioned. Her home, with a substantial cash legacy, is to go to a niece of her husband who had been specially kind to her and had taken care of her in her last sickness. To carry out her twofold desire to help keep up religious services in English in Bloomingdale and to help students struggling to get an education, she left $5,000 to Wheaton College, to establish two funds, one of $3,500, the income of which is to help pay a teacher's salary in the college who shall conduct undenominational Protestant religious services in English in the village of Bloomingdale, and the income of the other fund of $1,500 is to help pay the college expenses of a student of Wheaton College, who shall, as an officer or teacher, help carry on an undenominational Sunday school or Bible class in the village of Bloomingdale. The remainder of the estate is bequeathed to Wheaton College to assist deserving students in obtaining an education.

HOW much she gave away during her lifetime it would be impossible to tell, because she gave, as she lived, simply and unostentatiously; but her gifts were frequent and thoughtfully bestowed.

Mrs. Ryan died June 25. One of the requests she made shortly before her decease was that there should be no flowers at her funeral. She wished to have the services simple, and said she would greatly prefer to have her friends give to the poor the money that flowers would cost.

At this particular time, when many are in danger of becoming censorious and suspicious of their German-speaking neighbors, it will be well to think of this German Christian who, in her childhood, came to this country and tried faithfully to do her share of service to others and to help bring in the kingdom of Christ on earth.

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

OWING to the sudden oncoming of bad weather after a day of battle, the Anglo-French offensive in the Ypres sector of the western battle line (the opening of which was alluded to last week with the statement that one of the great battles of the war was beginning) came to an abrupt close. The inclement weather continued for several days, and on the return of clearer days the offensive was not immediately resumed. This fact, however, is readily explainable, since, unless an offensive is continuous after its initiation, it inevitably loses its momentum—a very important factor. Furthermore, the delay in pressing an attack home after its development gives the defense knowledge of the exact point at which the attack will be made, and allows time to bring up additional forces to meet it.

During the day that this offensive lasted, the French and British captured some ten villages and took about 6,000 prisoners and some artillery. The plan of the offensive, however, is believed to have been much larger in its objective than the results achieved, and was probably designed to extend from Ypres all the way to the sea, having really as its primary objective an advance along the coast to, and the capture of, Zeebrugge, the German submarine base. Had this objective been gained, it would very materially have affected the German submarine campaign.

The ground captured lies mostly in a half circle to the north and northeast of Ypres, and was repeatedly fought over in the first two years of the war. The maximum depth of the advance was about one-half to three-quarters of a mile on a front of perhaps four miles. After the first day, however, German counter-attacks recovered a portion of the advance, but part of the ground thus lost was later regained.

On the rest of the front held by the British there have been the usual trench raids, grenade fighting, etc., the only permanent result being that, north and northwest of Lens, the Canadians have succeeded in driving their lines forward a couple of hundred yards or so nearer to that important colliery center.

On the French portion of the front, the fighting has been at times very heavy along the Chemin des Dames. The most important episode took place on August 1, when the Germans made a thrust near Cerny which was successful to the extent of capturing a couple of thousand French prisoners and thirteen guns. Other thrusts by either side took place on this road nearly every day, none of the results modifying the main lines. Farther east in Champagne, the Argonne and on the west front of Verdun in the region of the Avocourt wood, there was more or less fighting, with no results of any moment.

General von Falkenhayn, former chief of the German general staff, has arrived in Asia Minor to direct the Turkish campaign this autumn on both the Caucasian and Mesopotamian fronts.

Vague rumors of peace continue. These do not seem to have any really substantial basis, but it is astonishing how widespread the feeling is in Europe, outside of official circles, that the war will not continue many months more. The European stock markets show distinct signs of being influenced by this feeling. Unless the war does cease soon, many of the European countries will have a very hard winter, particularly in regard to coal. This necessary article is now selling at $90 wholesale in Italy, $84 in Sweden, and at similar prices in Norway and Denmark. Some of these countries have considerable supplies of wood, but even in Sweden—perhaps the most abundantly supplied of all—wood is up to $20. France is also very short of coal, and England does not seem to be able, both on account of the lack of ships and of labor, to help her very much. If these conditions obtain in August, what will they be in December?

On the eastern front the disintegration of the Russian army continued practically unchecked, Galicia and Bukowina having been completely cleared of the Russians, and the Teutons having penetrated into Podolia and Bessarabia, the two Russian provinces lying to the east of these Austrian crown lands.

The Teutonic forces on the Galician front seem to be concentrating their offensive efforts in the sector between the Dniester and the Pruth Rivers. The Pruth divides Rumania from Bessarabia, while the Dniester forms the northern and eastern boundary of that province. In the intervening space between these rivers run such railroads as Bessarabia boasts, the most important of which connects Jassy with Odessa. At the northern extremity, Bessarabia is about forty miles wide, which gradually increases until, when its southern coast line on the Black Sea is reached, a width of about 100 miles is attained. Rather sparsely populated, but very productive, the country produces wheat and other cereals, in addition to fruit and wine, as well as cattle in considerable quantities. The province in ordinary years produces far more foodstuffs than it can consume, and this fact probably today gives it additional value in Teutonic eyes. Completely unfortified, the terrain presents few if any military obstacles, and an invading army could move from north to south with its flanks splendidly protected by the two rivers mentioned above. In addition, it would be a highroad to Odessa. Odessa, considered as an objective, would be valuable probably only to the extent that its possession would menace the safety of the Russian Black Sea fleet, which could retire farther to the eastward to Sebastopol, etc. An advance southward through Bessarabia would also have the advantage from the Teutonic standpoint, in combination with a northward movement of von Mackensen's line on the Sereth, of threatening the destruction of the Russo-Rumanian armies now engaged in the defense of Moldavia.

The weekly report by the British government of the results of the submarine campaign again shows an increase, twenty-one vessels of more than 1,600 tons having been sunk, as well as two of less than that tonnage. These figures would indicate a loss of about 107,000 tons in the past week by the British. Although 1915 was not a particularly bad year for the British mercantile marine, as far as submarine activities go, figures are now at hand which enable us to judge with some accuracy as to the influence the submarine exercised on British commerce and on the movement of vessels in and out of British ports in that year. For example, in 1913 there came from all parts of the world 1,309,874 travelers to United Kingdom ports; in 1915 only 447,270. In 1913, 1,184,412 left the same ports; in 1915, only 431,080. In 1913, the total tonnage entering these ports was 82,149,000; in 1915, 55,356,000; leaving in 1913, 82,661,000; in 1915, 51,142,000. It may safely be presumed that the 1916 figures drop much lower than those of 1915, while those of 1917 will hardly be much more than 60 per cent. of the figures of 1915. [These figures should be considered in the light of the fact that much British tonnage was taken over by the Admiralty and does not therefore appear in the port records and that civilian pleasure travel was practically nonexistent.

New cabinets were formed both at Berlin and Petrograd on August 6. Dr. Edward von Kühlmann, German ambassador to Turkey, became Secretary of Foreign Affairs in place of Dr. Alfred Zimmermann. Dr. Kühlmann is reported to be an opponent of the ruthless submarine war. Dr. Karl Helfferich remained as Vice Chancellor.

In Petrograd Alexander Kerensky succeeded in winning the confidence of the Constitutional Democrats and in establishing a cabinet, Kerensky himself remaining as premier and holding the Ministry of War and Marine. M. V. Nekrasoff remained as Vice-Premier and Minister of Finance. M. I. Terestchenko remained as Minster of Foreign Affairs; M. Absentieff, a Social Revolutionary, lately released from the penitentiary, became Minister of the Interior; while M. Tchernoff, Socialist, who had been cleared of charges of pro-Germanism, remained as Minister of Agriculture.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 883

camps by September 5. This will place 251,900 men in training. It was also announced on August 8 that claims for exemption would be submitted to rigorous investigation; that exemption would not be allowed because of dependents where other support was available. On August 9 the physical requirements for the men examined under the draft law were materially relaxed. Organized resistance to the draft is reported as decreasing. The Provost-Marshal General's office announced that men resisting the draft would be tried by court martial as deserters, and might be executed if found guilty. The regular army reached its full war strength on August 8, enlistments since April 1 totaling 183,898. It was announced officially that in securing this number of men, together with the increased personnel of the navy and marine corps, 1,750,000 men had volunteered.

To Pay Our Bills. The Senate on August 8 took up the consideration of the War Revenue Bill, which, as reported by the committee, provides for taxes expected to produce in the next fiscal year $2,006,790,000. The estimated expenditures for the year are $5,693,958,000, which does not include loans to Allied nations. The total amount of revenue available under existing law is estimated at $3,750,500,000.

Bumper Crops. The Department of Agriculture on August 8 predicted a corn crop surpassing any ever grown before, which it was estimated would reach over 3,000,000,000 bushels. The wheat crop, both winter and spring, is estimated at about 653,000,000 bushels about 13,000,000 more than last year's crop. The department is planning in close cooperation with the agricultural colleges and authorities in the states of Kansas, Ohio, Oklahoma, Indiana, Illinois and Oregon for an increase of eighteen per cent. over last year in the acreage to be planted this coming fall to winter wheat. It is expected to secure the planting of 47,337,000 acres of winter wheat and 5,131,000 acres of rye.

Fragments of News. The Red Cross has been completely reorganized on a military basis. The two chief officers of the American Red Cross, Henry P. Davidson, chairman of the Red Cross War Council, and ex-President William H. Taft, chairman of the Central Committee, will have the rank of Major-General. Military titles were given to facilitate the discharge by the Red Cross of its authorized function. The Red Cross was reported on August 7 to have purchased 1,000,000 pounds of knitting-wool to be knitted by American women into garments to protect American soldiers and sailors from the cold this winter. . . . The members of the Hotel and Restaurant Conservation Committee on Food Administration, at a recent conference with hotel men in New York, arranged for the barring of veal from hotel tables for the duration of the war. Calves are to be grown for beef. Hotels and restaurants are expected to have two meatless days weekly, Tuesdays and Fridays. Bread and butter portions are to be reduced and all stale bread, toast and trimmings are to be sterilized and made over into war bread. The public will be encouraged to use more poultry, ducks and fish, and the use of canned goods, when fresh articles are in season, is to be discouraged. . . . Prohibition leaders in the House of Representatives agreed to the postponement until the December session of consideration of the resolution for the prohibition constitutional amendment which had passed the Senate. . . . "Not to destroy, but to build; not to wound, but to heal"—with this motto in mind, American Quakers, exempted from the draft by reason of their conscientious opposition to the war, will take an active part in the campaign already instituted by the Quakers of England in the work of reconstruction behind the firing lines in France. The work consists in the reassembling of families, the rebuilding of homes, and the restoring of community life in devastated towns. . . . Great Britain is building a fleet of standardized steamships of about 8,000 tons capacity, the first of which was expected to be put into service during the month of August. . . . The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief reports that the cargo of the Cæsar, the "Christmas ship" which was forced by war conditions to take refuge at Alexandria, had been sold for $130,000, and that the proceeds would be sent to Beirut and used in the purchase of relief supplies. . . . Liberia, the negro republic on the coast of Africa, was reported on August 7 to have declared war on Germany. . . . The Russian provisional government refused to acknowledge Finland's independence, and sent a manifesto to Helsingfors dissolving the Landtag, pending a general election on October 1, to which it will submit its own law reorganizing Russo-Finnish relations. It was declared that the fate of Finland would be decided only in agreement with the Russian people. A majority of the Finnish people were reported as willing to recognize the validity of the position of the provisional government. . . . An expedition of Chinese soldiers under American officers was reported on August 9 as proceeding to Tabul in the Province of Chili, 160 miles from Pekin, to rescue twelve missionaries of the American Board and twelve other foreigners who were besieged there by Chinese bandits. . . . Secretary McAdoo on August 10 advised leaders in Congress that he considered a bond issue of $6,000,000,000 necessary. He urged legislation at this session to authorize such an issue, and suggested that the bonds bear interest at four or four and one-half per cent. . . . It was reported from Washington that the government would continue for an indefinite period to exercise in full the powers of the Exports Council, and that when the present embargo to northern neutrals is lifted, supplies will be permitted to enter those countries under the most severe restrictions. . . . Accused of conspiring to assist men to escape service in the new army, two members of local exemption board No. 99 of New York City, and a citizen whose son had been exempted, were arrested on August 12. . . . Senator La Follette on August 11 introduced into the Senate a resolution calling for a definition of the war purposes of the government, and suggesting that restoration of devastated territory be accomplished through a common fund, to which all belligerents should contribute. Senator King of Utah countered La Follette's move with a resolution calling upon Congress not to make peace with Germany until the principles enunciated by President Wilson, in his speech before Congress last April, or according to the resolution until the German government has "acknowledged and expiated its crimes and shall seek terms upon which it may be admitted to a community of civilized and enlightened states."

Neōlin
TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
Better than Leather

Neōlin Soles wore eight months without any signs of wear.

Neōlin Soles are completely superior to any leather soles. Synthetically compounded for extreme wear resistance they are breaking sole-wear records for millions. And setting new records in low shoe-bill cost.

Take this letter for an example:

Dear Sirs: May 21, 1917

"Being a business woman with home responsibilities, I am anxious to make my salary go as far as possible.

"Now the shoe problem has been with me, for the past two years, an expensive one indeed, for good looking shoes are so expensive and last such a short time. So I resolved to try Neōlin.

"I bought a pair of shoes with Neōlin Soles for $5 last September, 1916, and have worn the shoes steadily ever since. I love their comfort, and am amazed to see that the soles show no signs of wear yet. I am simply delighted with the Neōlin Soles and would not think in future of going back to leather soles."

(Signed) HAZEL HEWES,
Commonwealth Ave., Houlton, Me.

Be careful to look for the name Neōlin underneath. Only so can you protect yourself against imitation soles intended to look like Neōlin Soles.

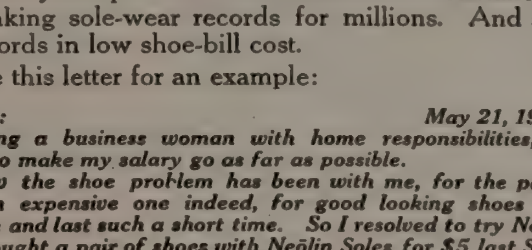
Neōlin Neither Rubber Nor Leather

Because Neōlin is not rubber or near-rubber. It is lighter than rubber. It will not crack or peel or warp like rubber. Nor draw the feet like rubber. Neither is Neōlin a substitute for sole leather. It outranges it too far. It is waterproof as sealskin. And grip-sure and buoyant, and resilient, too. It makes the sidewalk feel like felt. It won't swell from wet. It will keep you foot-trim in rainy weather by making heavy-foot rubbers unnecessary.

Every woman's and man's and child's shoes will be better for these Better-era Shoe-soles for all-season, all-weather wear. In black, white, tan. Mark that mark; stamp it on your memory: Neōlin

—the trade symbol for a never changing quality product of

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, O.



Neōlin Sole worn one-sixth throughin 33days—on right foot of experimenter.

Leather Sole worn clean through in 33 days—on left foot of experimenter.

"We are advertised by our loving friends"

A Mellin's Food Boy

Harry J. Highfield,
Scranton, Pa.

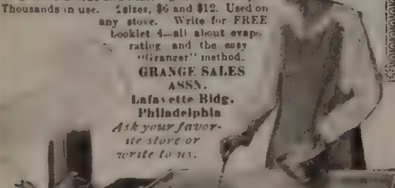
Mrs. L. E. Highfield writes:

"I certainly recommend Mellin's Food very highly.

"My son was a very delicate baby and owes his young life to Mellin's Food."

Send today for a Free Sample Bottle of Mellin's Food for your baby.

Mellin's Food Company
Boston, Mass.



Dry Your Fruits and Vegetables
on the time-tried economical
"Granger" Evaporator

Do "your bit" for Uncle Sam and practice economy. What you don't eat now, save for winter meals.

The "Granger" does it—easy to run, child can do it. Takes
No Sugar, No Cans, No Jars
"Granger" Evaporated vegetables are wholesome and delicious. Evaporated fruits make wonderful desserts, cakes and pies. The "Granger" is the simplest and most economical household drier. Tested and approved by U. S. Government and State Agricultural Depts. Thousands in use. 2 sizes, $6 and $12. Used on any stove. Write for FREE booklet 4—all about evaporating and the easy "Granger" method.

GRANGE SALES ASSN.
Lafayette Bldg.
Philadelphia
Ask your favorite store or write to us.

WANTED

In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent The Christian Herald. This is

AN OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT
The Christian Herald BIBLE HOUSE New York

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

The Shepherd of Captive Israel

International Sunday School Lesson for September 2. Ezek. 34

Ezekiel's Message of Hope

By Rev. George D. Allison

WE are allowed but one lesson on the great prophet of the exile, and we must endeavor to gain some insight into his ministry to understand his message in this great chapter. Ezekiel was carried to Babylon with the first captivity in 597 B. C., along with King Jehoiachim and many others. His early prophesyings are chiefly directed against the bad leaders of Judah, who were ensuring the total wreck of their ship of state. He warned the exiles against indulging false hopes of a speedy return, and urged repentance both in Jerusalem and on the River Chebar, where he labored.

When the fall of Judah was complete, Ezekiel began to preach the reconstruction. He condemned the nations who had so cruelly treated the Jews, and called all the faithful to a new enthusiasm in worship. He was a priest by vocation and nature, and planned for an elaborate ritual in the restored temple. He began as a denouncer of sinners and ended as the consoler of repentant exiles. No doubt, outward comfort was his lot in Babylon; but he never forgot his responsibility for moral leadership in the fight against idolatry and immorality. As time went by, he was esteemed more highly, and his teachings dominated later Judaism to a large extent.

A Denunciation of False Shepherds

Our chapter takes for its key metaphor the relation of shepherds and sheep, as an allegory of moral leadership in church and state. Ezekiel saw clearly that it was the shortsightedness of the rulers that had ruined Judah. They had ruled for their own profit and advantage, not for the welfare of the flock. Even in a modern republic, it is hard to find office-bearers who will regard public office as a sacred trust; but in the Oriental monarchies of long ago corruption was all but universal.

"Woe to the shepherds that feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the sheep?"

This is a message still needed in the modern world. Too many of those who have been given, or have seized, power are using it in such a way as to merit Jesus' denunciation of thieves and robbers. The whole world is convulsed today with a struggle between autocracy and democracy. A little group of autocratic rulers provoked a world-war, which they imagined would increase their power. They cared not for the sheep. They used their people for their own selfish ambitions.

We have also in our own land, as well as abroad, our captains of industry who control the very food and shelter of multitudes. How many of them show the shepherd heart? How many are heeding the injunction laid by Christ upon his most capable followers, "Feed my sheep"? In this time of need some of them are exploiting the sheep, fattening themselves with enormous profits, displaying the spirit of hirelings. "Behold, I am against those shepherds, and I will require my sheep at their hand," saith the Lord Jehovah.

The Penalty—No Longer Shepherds

Ezekiel knew that the captivity had fallen with heaviest severity upon the rich and the great. It was a just penalty. They had abused their stewardship and therefore might no longer be stewards. "I will deliver my sheep from their mouth, that they may not be food for them."

Such has ever been the fate of the false shepherds of history—"thieves, hirelings, robbers, wolves," as they are called by Jesus in the tenth chapter of John. The French revolution was an example of the fate of shepherds who had preyed upon their sheep. We in our own day have begun to see the shaking of thrones and the falling of crowns once more.

There can be no more wicked betrayal of trust than for spiritual teachers and shepherds to use their leadership for selfish gain. What a denunciation John Milton poured upon such "pastors" as were not pastors at all! "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." So he called the false shepherds "blind mouths"! Eaters, instead of feeders of others! Blind when they should have the vision and insight to know what is best for the flock. Christian ministers and priests, army chaplains and evangelists, have at times come under this condemnation in the past. May all who have spiritual responsibilities just now show themselves to be men of the true shepherd heart, and not time-servers or place-hunters.

Paul, you remember, once advised a certain group of Christians not to be teachers, many of them! It was because he feared they would not make good shepherds. How about you, Sunday school teachers? Are you making good? Or are Ezekiel's heavy words true in our schools and communities: "My sheep became a prey, because there was no shepherd; neither did my shepherds search for my sheep"?

A Vision of the Good Shepherd

Now, Ezekiel turns to that sweet theme of the Bible, "The Lord is my Shepherd." He paints for us a beautiful picture of the shepherding of our God. When the shepherding of men fails in blood and sorrow, then the Almighty comes to seek and to save. He is able to gather together the distressed and scattered. He comforts the suffering and the bereaved. He comes to heal the sick, to strengthen the weak, to reclaim those that have gone far astray.

Verses 11 to 16 constitute a psalm of the Shepherd of Israel, and should be read together as such. He promises guidance, especially in the dark and stormy days. He promises good pasture and a good fold, but above all a Good Shepherd. The political and social note is seen again at the close: "I will feed them in justice."

The Shepherd as a Judge

But now the prophet turns to the palpable fact that there are great differences among the sheep, and that justice will require judgment upon the wrongdoers. "And as for you, O my flock, behold, I will judge between sheep and sheep." And the first item in his judgment concerns the luxuriousness and waste of the well-to-do, who have added thereby to the burdens of the poor! As in America today, so in Israel long ago, the high living of the wealthy made hardship for the workers. "Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have fed upon the good pasture, but ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pasture? And to have drunk of the clear waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?"

Just as the stronger rams will monopolize the best drinking-places, and as the foolish sheep will leave the waters fouled for others, so do the strong men monopolize the means of subsistence of the community, and the wasters spoil more than they use. The books of Amos and Micah ring with denunciation of these very things. No true shepherd can look lightly on such inequalities and such unbrotherliness. Whether he be a preacher of religion or an officer of the government, he will not tolerate abuses in the fold.

It is not strange that there should be strong censure of the rich in the prophetical books. Ezekiel rightly portrays God as judging between "the fat sheep and the lean sheep," because too often the fat have robbed the lean. In the New Testament we find James speaking as plainly, when he condemns those who have lived "delicately" and "taken their pleasure" while their brethren suffer. This, too, is a message for the times.

The Prince of the House of David

As Ezekiel portrays the care of Jehovah for his flock, he naturally has a faithful and true under-shepherd as the King of Israel. He calls this Messianic Prince David, that is, a ruler like David, who still lived in Jewish thought as the ideal king. Ezekiel utters the promise on behalf of God that his servant David shall reign over them, and under this beneficent rule they should be reunited.

The Blessings to Come

So the chapter closes with visions of blessings to come, when the exiles shall be restored and their land reclaimed from every evil influence. Like all the other men of the Bible, Ezekiel looked forward. To him, the golden age was ahead. When many of the expatriated Jews recounted the glories of the past, he turned their thoughts to the future. When they recalled David, he pointed on to another David yet to come.

Even in a material sense, these predictions were largely fulfilled. Was not Judas Maccabeus a valiant and just shepherd of Israel? There were days of peace and of plenty in many a succeeding century.

But spiritually their value is supreme. We are never to be pessimistic. In the darkest hour we can confidently trust in our heavenly Shepherd. If we are like Ezekiel, we can "sing the song of the Lord in a strange land," for Jehovah has not forgotten his people. Even in the hour of their punishment for sin, he yearns over them like a Father.

So the exiled Ezekiel is one more "prisoner of hope." He cheers us today when the world groans as a consequence of blind and selfish shepherding. He encourages us to believe that God has by no means given us up, but that "joy cometh in the morning."

God's ways seem dark, but soon or late
They touch the shining hills of day.
The evil cannot brook delay,
The good can well afford to wait.

Christ, the Shepherd of the Lord

It seems almost as though Jesus must have had in mind this great message of Ezekiel's on "Shepherds True and False" when he uttered his discourse in the temple at the Feast of the Dedication. Christ fulfilled for us the prophets' dreams in an actual human life of shepherding. For us all is transformed by the Shepherdhood of our Redeemer.

The Lesson Outlined for the Teacher

SHEPHERDS TRUE AND FALSE

Ezek. 34

I. The False Shepherds of Israel (verses 1 to 6).
    They have fed themselves and neglected the sheep.
    They have preyed upon the sheep.
    They have allowed them to be scattered by wolves.

II. The Sentence of Jehovah upon False Shepherds (verses 7 to 10).
    He is against such shepherds.
    He will require his sheep at their hand.
    He will take away their shepherdhood.

III Jehovah the True Shepherd (verses 11 to 16).
    Seeking the lost, gathering the scattered.
    Restoring to their fertile pastures.
    Ministering to their varied needs.

IV. The True Shepherd Judging the Sheep (verses 17 to 22).
    The quarrelsome and selfish rebuked.
    Those who waste and spoil checked.
    Fair play insisted upon.

V. The Coming Shepherd (verses 23 to 31).
    The hope of a Messianic King and Kingdom.
    Realized in the Lord Jesus Christ and his Kingdom.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Observe Rally Day

THE last Sunday in September or the first or second Sunday in October is usually observed as Rally Day. A rousing Rally Day requires adequate preparation. Here are suggestions and tested plans:

1. The Committee on Special Days, with the Superintendent, should plan out the day some months in advance as to theme, program, publicity, decorations.

2. The Superintendent should send to each teacher and officer a letter about three weeks before Rally Day, urging effort for 100 per cent. attendance in every class, attendance at the teachers' meetings succeeding Rally Day and cooperation in prayer for scholars and homes.

3. A unique post-card or letter invitation should be sent to the scholars. This card may contain a picture of the school building or School Assembly, the invitation printed in colors. The invitation may be a challenge or may arouse curiosity. Sunday-school supply houses have unique cards. Plans used are the telegram notice on a Sunday-school telegram form; subpoena form as a summons; train and station plan, urging all to be aboard on time and naming program stations; Camp Fire reunion form; home-coming call; mobilization day order.

4. The local newspaper should have a well-written weekly article on Rally Day plans, on Saturdays for three weeks preceding Rally Day, to arouse public interest.

5. Many schools observe the week preceding Rally Day as Rally week, for conference and prayer reunion of teachers, parents' night, and afternoons and evenings for department rallies.

6. At the church service Rally Day morning, the officers and teachers should be seated in a body. The pastor should preach a special sermon for teachers and a consecration service should follow.

7. The decorations may include cut and wild flowers, corn stalks, autumn leaves, banners and flags, and the theme for Rally Day worked out in a prominent place.

8. A Rally Day goal in attendance and new members should be set as an incentive for effort.

9. A roll call of classes should reveal the 100 per cent. classes, and these should be honored.

10. Very often, some souvenir of the day is given in form of a button, bookmark, badge, card or program.

11. Some definite forward movement should be instituted and cards distributed to the scholars to pledge co-operation in such plans. This pledge may include such goals as daily Bible reading, teaching, new members, visiting, singing or reciting, assisting on Committee work, or a decision for Christ, or as a personal worker for souls.

12. The program will center about the theme. If the theme is Mobilization Day, a ship's name may be selected for the school, the Superintendent will be the Commander, the Pastor the Chaplain, the Orchestra the ship's band, school the crew, the new goals the battle orders (such as Every Scholar a Christian, Every Class a Missionary Force), and scripture and song will smack of the sea.

The train plan calls for a ticket form from Vacationville to Homeward terminal, some of the intermediate stations being Roll-call Station, Welcome Point, Primary Station, Engineer's orders (Superintendent), address from the road's president (Pastor), refreshments (23rd Psalm), hot-box preventive (offering). "Go forward," Exodus 14, is a good theme for Rally Day.

Bible Rally Days will include scripture selections relating to rally days under Moses, Joshua, Solomon, Ezra, the Disciples, and so forth.

13. After Rally Day, there should be a prompt visitation of all scholars who may have been absent on Rally Day, so that the last member of the school may be gathered in. The new scholars brought in through the Rally Day effort should be introduced at the Sunday service or at a week night new scholars' social. In one school, a new goal was selected for each quarter following Rally; say, for the first quarter, "Ingathering," the second quarter, "Evangelizing," the third quarter, "Organization for Service."

Saving Two Mission Centers in Russia

*By PASTOR WILLIAM FETLER

IN the issue of the Christian Herald of July 25 I was privileged to describe our great joy at the forming of the first American independent Missionary and Educational Society to work in Russia. In that statement I appealed to the readers to help us to save the Golgotha House in Riga, which was the first State Church building to be obtained for the preaching of the pure Gospel. On August 1 (Russian calendar) the debt on that church had to be paid. The letter from the elders and deacons, begging for help, reached me only about the first of July, so I had not more than one month to raise the necessary amount of $9,000.

But I know that nothing is impossible to the Lord, so I started to pray, and asked other friends to pray also. We also began to mention the need to several of the Lord's people. Now I am glad to report that the Lord has more than answered our prayers. After the appeal in the Christian Herald, somehow I got enough faith to believe that the Lord would send us not only enough for the Riga church, but also sufficient to pay the whole of the debt on my large headquarters in Petrograd, the capital of the Russian republic, from which I was banished three years ago. That indebtedness amounted to $20,000 in time of peace, but now, owing to the cheapness of Russian money, only $10,000 was necessary to clear it off. When the same friend who pledged the first $1,000 toward the Riga church heard of my hopes as to the Petrograd property, he immediately telegraphed me: "If you raise balance of cash to pay debt on Dom Evangelia (the name of the church, meaning the "Gospel House"), then my wife and I will raise two thousand dollars toward that debt. Now go to it and clear both houses of debt. You can do it!" I indeed felt that I could not do it, but that my divine Master could. So relying upon his blessing we went to work on both properties, to clear them of debt and thus to start the new Russian Missionary Society free of debt.

During this brief month we have seen much of the Lord's goodness. The widow of a Baptist minister in South Carolina, hearing of the need, though herself eighty years of age and in need, sent $100 for the Russian brethren and sisters whom she had never seen, but who she felt were her near spiritual kin. A number of other friends rallied with gifts large and small. Towards the end of July, when we were still several thousand dollars short, the same friend who had first come to our aid telegraphed us again, saying: "If I send one thousand more, cannot you get the other two thousand to save Riga church? How much more needed for Petrograd?" But one need scarcely be surprised at the missionary energy of such a man. When I was on my first visit to the United States over six years ago, this steward of the Lord generously gave a thousand dollars or more to help build the Dom Evangelia. Then I found out, that he is one who makes it his business to find deserving causes, and to help them. I found also that he supports over seventy missionaries, evangelists, colporteurs, etc., in various parts of the world. In those generous acts he does not want his name to be known.

At the time of this writing, we have received cash and pledges of $8,020 toward the $9,000 needed for Riga, and $7,231 toward the $10,000 for the Petrograd church. We praise the Lord for his goodness in this matter, and trust that the remaining amounts will come in before long. All additional gifts can be sent to the Christian Herald, in which journal's hearty cooperation we have every reason to rejoice.

The Lord pity the balky Christian who has to be talked to in seven different tones of voice and patted on the back before he will go on his Lord's errands.

A streak of fat—a streak of lean
With latest goodness are between Swift's "Premium" Bacon
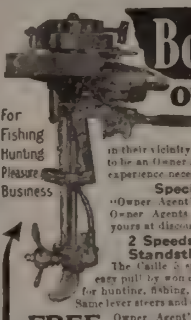
Swift's Premium
STRICTLY SANITARY—NOT TOUCHED BY HAND

TO SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN AND INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to
CAPE TOWN, DURBAN,
BOMBAY, COLOMBO,
MADRAS, RANGOON
AND CALCUTTA.
FOR SAILING DATE, RATE
OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO
NORTON LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City.
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.

EAT SKINNER'S
THE BEST
MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
MACARONI

FREE! "So-Handy" Sewing Bag To Your LADIES AID
Thousands of Societies have earned big money with the "BUCK" line of utilities. Why not yours? We make the wire frames. You make the bags and the money. One complete 50c "So-Handy" Bag absolutely free to your society, with full particulars of 18 fast sellers, by return mail. Send 10c to pay postage and packing.
RACINE WIRE WORKS, Dept. C Racine, Wis.



OWNER AGENT
Hundreds of Caille owners have asked to become our agents in their vicinity. We are going to give every one a chance to be an Owner Agent and sell Caille motors. No selling experience necessary. No office or shop needed.
Special Owner Agent Offer
"Owner Agent" discount to one in each community. Owner Agents easily sell 1 to 12 Cailles a year. Get yours at discount now, sell all you can.
2 Speeds Ahead—2 Speeds Back or Standstill Without Stopping Motor
The Caille 5 speed Motor Starter operates with quick easy pull by women and children. So flexible it can be used for hunting, fishing, pleasure, business, in fresh or salt water. Same lever steers and controls. Best materials, fully guaranteed.
FREE Owner Agent's Special Discount, Catalog, booklet "Installation, Operation and Care of 2 Cycle Motor and Equipment." All absolutely free. Act quickly—NOW.
CAILLE PERFECTION MOTOR CO., 288 Caille Building, Detroit, Michigan
Inboard Marine Motor Catalog on request. Give dimensions of boat.

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

Champion Toledo
Dependable Spark Plugs

Every Ford car is an advertisement for the efficiency of Champion Spark Plugs. They have been standard Ford equipment since 1911.

Because the spark plug is so important, avoid the risk of substitutes by making sure they say Champion on the porcelain as well as on the box.

Champion Spark Plug Co.
Toledo, Ohio

Champion X
Price, 75 cts.

CHAMPION
X
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF
Champion X has been standard equipment on Ford cars since 1911-more than 2,000,000 cars all over the world

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1988 Ry. Exch., Chicago

PATENTS That Protect and Pay Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN. 53 Owen Building. Washington, D. C.

CHIROPODY The growing profession where demand far exceeds the supply. Dignified, pleasant, remunerative. One year course with degree of Doctor of Surgical Chiropody, Day and evening classes. Meets State board requirements. Write for free catalog. Fall term begins September 3rd.
ILLINOIS COLLEGE OF CHIROPODY
1321 N. Clark Street, - - CHICAGO

RAISE BELGIAN HARES For Us
HUGE PROFITS easily and pleasantly made. We furnish stock and pay you $6.00 a pair and express charges for all you raise. Contract and book "Fortunes in Hares," 10c. Nothing free.
NATIONAL FOOD & FUR ASSOCIATION
Dept. 46. 557 12th St., MILWAUKEE, WISC

Get the Genuine and Avoid Waste

The General All-Around Cleaner

An Hour to Spare

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

ALTHOUGH I pass the New York Public Library at least twice a week—pass it with an admiring glance that takes in the great columns, the marvelous sculpture, and the placid stone lions at either side of the entrance—it never, before yesterday, occurred to me to go inside for a matter-of-fact voyage of inspection and discovery. I had, perhaps twice in my life, gone through the doorway, and then I had gone in a most casual way to look at some special exhibition and to leave immediately after. The New York Public Library had always seemed more like a landmark than an institution to me.

And yet, yesterday, on my way to an appointment, when I discovered that—through a mistake—I had a spare hour on my hands, I turned almost instinctively to the great white stone building. Perhaps it was because I was on the corner of Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue that I turned that way; perhaps it was because I had a pad and a pencil in the case under my arm and knew that, in the Library, there would be a quiet table where I might write. Perhaps it was because, when one has an hour—no more, no less—to waste, there aren't many things that one can do! At any rate, I entered the Library.

THERE may have been a crowd there. I don't know, for the place is so vast that a large crowd makes a very small showing. I was conscious of a number of softly moving figures in the hall — pleasant-faced girls in white blouses, rather old men in gray uniforms, and quiet folk who carried volumes under their arms.

"Where," I asked one of the men in uniform, as I paused, undecided, in the main passageway, "can I find a place to write?"

The man looked slightly puzzled at my request. And then his face cleared.

"I guess," he told me, "that you'd best go to th' big readin'-room—on th' top floor. There'll be plenty o' tables—there!"

I went to the big reading-room on the top floor—which was the third. I passed, in the process, two art galleries and a musical library room. Two artists were at work in one of the galleries, and I paused, for a moment, to watch them. It seemed strange that the tall artist in the flowing Windsor tie and blue crêpe smock was not doing such fine work as the little quiet chap with spectacles, who wore a conventional collar and a gray flannel suit. The artist who looked like an artist had a rather exotic habit of stepping back and glancing, with narrowed eyes, over his half-finished work. The other artist never moved far away from his vivid canvas.

"He's grand, isn't he?" A girl—evidently a schoolgirl—pausing well behind the blue smock, made the observation to her chum. But—

"That's good work," murmured a man in a frock coat who paused beside the little artist's easel.

I WENT on to the main reading-room. It was one of the largest and quietest rooms I have ever been in. Far at one end there stood an information desk facing a wide bench, and all down the length of it there were long tables with chairs at very comfortable intervals.

I did not want a book, and so, instead of going to the information desk, I seated myself at the nearest table and began to write. It was only for a moment, however, that I could write. For something in the half-uncanny stillness jerked my eyes from my paper. I looked up. . . .

Half the world, I think, is represented in the reading-room of a public library. The sunlight fell dustily across the hair of a little Spanish girl next to me who struggled with a great dictionary. The same sunlight touched the sensitive hand of a Chinese boy—a slim hand that held an impressive looking volume. The man across the table from me—an old man with lines of sorrow in his face—chuckled like a youngster over the latest copy of an illustrated comic weekly, and a commonplace little woman sat with flushed cheeks over a volume of musically Oriental poetry.

It was a very quiet room. And yet, somehow, I could not concentrate—could not write. It seemed silly that I should attempt to put imaginary characters on a blank sheet of paper when so many very real characters were living bits of their lives in front of me.

A girl came in, draggingly, through the wide-swung door. I saw, with a start, that she was terribly crippled; that her foot was misshapen, and that there was a hump on her back. Wearily she walked to the information desk and asked for a book. Although I was at quite a distance from her I could almost hear her sigh as she sank on the bench to wait for the volume she had chosen. When it came she took it rather tenderly in her hands and hurried over to the seat beside me—hurried as fast as she could hurry. I saw by glancing furtively at her that she was reading a vivid travel book. And I knew that she and her soul were adventuring out in a land of palm trees and coral islands.

IT WAS a very quiet room. And yet two children, in a far corner, read fairy tales in an excitement that was almost noisy. Their eyes were bright, and their cheeks were crimson-touched with the mystery of a dream world. I knew that they were seeing visions that I, too, had seen—and that I might never see again.

There was a schoolboy studying history, and there was a stenographer looking up business methods and efficiency. There was a young mother in a shabby little suit, with a woolly toy dog under her arm—a young mother who had stopped in for a hurried glance at the latest novels—and there was a very old woman who looked, with intensely interested eyes, at the colored pages of a French fashion book.

And then, in the corner, with their heads ever so close together, I saw a man in the olive drab of a soldier and a girl who was young and slender and sweet. They were reading from the same volume, and as my hour was over I rose—in curiosity—and sauntered past them on my way to the door. It was a volume of poetry that they were reading, for "Love Lyrics" was printed in gold on the scarlet cover of it. As I half paused in front of them, I saw the girl touch the man's hand very shyly but, oh, very tenderly, and they looked up simultaneously from the page and smiled deep into each other's eyes. And I knew that the red battlefields of Europe were infinitely far away from them.

So I went by them into the hall—past the galleries where the two artists still painted, down in the elevator, and out, at last, between the two great lions that stood guard in such a placid way. And as I looked back at the impressive building standing whitely in the sunlight, I knew that I would never think of it, again, as nothing but a landmark. For I knew that, to many hearts, it was as an oasis in a desert place.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

PRAYER is a certain refuge for hearts overborne, a certain source of strength and guidance and ultimate deliverance. In the days of the Civil War, when the Union was torn with fratricidal strife, President Lincoln several times called upon the people of the North for days of prayer and fasting. Lincoln loved the Union; he sought only the right, nor did he want the nation to be guilty of injustice. Therefore he called the people to prayer in order that the righteousness of God might, through the nation, bring justice with peace to North and South.

In the Prayer League mail this week, two letters urged President Wilson to follow Lincoln's example and call the nation to its knees. One letter by a member in Florida assures the President that "we, the Southern people, are with you in heart and are praying that God's mercies and blessings be over and about you, especially for his Holy Spirit to direct you. We know that you are praying, and believe that you are trusting in the Lord to guide you in word, thought and deed." He urges the President to send to the nation a call for prayer.

As Americans we cannot but believe that in this conflict we are right. As Christians we should pray that America may become in the hand of God the instrument whereby justice and righteousness may be made to prevail, and the world be restored to the healing arts of peace. We should pray constantly that the nation may be kept pure in its purposes and righteous in its judgments. Political influence and the power of money and the canker of self-interest, all of these threaten both the conduct of the war and the life of the nation. It remains with the people of God to guard America against these internal foes which are in themselves more dangerous than any external enemy, and to keep in close touch with the God of nations, in order that America may serve the purposes of heaven among the clashing interests of men.

Louise J. Bear, a member of the Winnebago Indian Tribe at Winnebago, Neb., read in Matt. 18 : 19 the promise that if two shall agree as to any petition it shall be done for them. Therefore she asks the Prayer League to pray [for her tribe "that we all become converted and be true followers of Jesus Christ, that he may reveal himself to us, and to pray for our camp meeting, which will be held here on the last week of August, that many may be truly converted and that our church will grow."

E. M. S. begs the earnest prayers of the League for "a daughter whose ideas of duty and life seem contrary to Scripture."

A. E. T. asks the prayers of God's people for "a dear boy who, until he entered his teens, was as near perfect as possible. But a blow or a fright suddenly seemed to change him, and at times he develops a dual personality, and if continued will make much trouble for himself and his friends. He is fifteen. Do pray he may be restored to his normal condition and soundly converted."

Mrs. F. N. K. asks prayer for a granddaughter who was placed by her Protestant father in a convent when three years old, and who now wishes to become a nun. All of the girl's relatives are Protestants. The same sister asks prayer for a crippled friend, and more abundant faith for herself.

Prayers are asked for revival of religion at:

Beaver Falls, Pa.; Sharon, Tenn.; Pattonsburg, Mo.; Edgerton, Mo.; Gresham, S. C.; Toronto, Canada; Winnebago, Neb.

Mrs. E. M. S. asks that a minister be sent to a little church needing a faithful pastor.

Mrs. F. E. B. asks that Congress may by a great majority vote for prohibition.

A Troubled Mother asks prayer that son may be cured of the liquor habit and return home; J. B. W., that a loved one may be cured of the liquor habit; S. and C. J. F., that two young men may be cured of the habit; a Reader and Miss L. C. each ask that a friend be cured of the liquor habit. C. R. H. asks that her nephew overcome the morphine habit.

Thirteen friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing; including Mrs. M. J., who asks that grace be given them to settle a quarrel which threatens to break up their home.

Seven readers ask prayer for special blessings for others; including Mrs. J. P. D., for divine guidance for two boys who have enlisted in the army; and E. M. S., for soldiers leaving home, perhaps never to return again.

Twenty-two parents ask prayer for the conversions of their sons, including Mrs. H. R., that four sons and their wives be saved; Mrs. J. O. D., that three sons may know Christ as their personal saviour; ten wives, their husbands; forty-six other relatives or friends, including Miss B., who asks prayer for her whole family, and B. A., for five brothers and a friend.

Twenty-nine friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters; including Mrs. L. D. M., that the officers of the church may pay pastor's salary.

Thirty-four friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs; including six friends requesting prayer for world-wide peace; M. J. P., for rain; and three friends who desire the reconciliation of loved ones.

Mrs. J. D. L. asks prayer that brother's mind and aunt's mind be restored; Mrs. E. N., that mother-in-law's mind be restored; L. L. F., that daughter-in-law's mind be restored; M. B. T., that brother's mind be restored; and Mrs. M. D. W., that son's mind be restored.

Fifty-two ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives; including M. H. M., that her daughter may overcome a defect of speech and brother be cured of tuberculosis; E. B., that brother may be healed of tuberculosis; Miss V. E. G., that rector's wife may be restored to health and strength; Mrs. R. J., that babies be cured of a skin disease; Mrs. C. G. K., that son be cured of nervous prostration; E. W. McC., that a mother be cured of headaches.

Twenty-eight friends ask for healing for themselves, including A. A. H., that health be restored without an operation; and V., that an operation may be avoided.

Three friends ask for the restoration of hearing for themselves and friends or relatives.

Eleven friends ask prayer that eyesight be restored and strengthened.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. L. I. S., Trenton, N. J.; C. B. F., Fultonham, Ohio; R. E., Lore City, Ohio; C. J. F., Hammond, Ind.; Mrs. A. H. M., Napanoch, N. Y.

The Church Federation Idea

A STORY of the accomplishment of a great work is simply told by Dr. Elias B. Sanford in "The Origin and History of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America," a book of more than 500 pages, published by the S. S. Scranton Co., Hartford, Conn.

Dr. Sanford was a leader in the organizing of the Federal Council, giving many years to the task, and he is now its Honorary Secretary. No other man has such comprehensive and sympathetic knowledge of the slow development of forces which has resulted in this successful movement. He traces back the church federation idea to some of the springs that fed the rivulets of spiritual life, which in their gathered volume and power were to become the great stream of a nation-wide and a world-wide influence. Early in the nineteenth century strong interdenominational organizations came to their birth in the founding of the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society and the American Sunday School Union. Near the middle years of the century are found the springs of life and thought, which culminated in 1908 in the founding of the Federal Council.

The account is rich with personal reminiscences and deft characterizations of leaders who had parts in the great movement.

Exercise or Bran

Exercise much, or eat a daily dish of bran food. Otherwise, you will need drug laxatives.

Plenty of vegetables will help. But the best way to keep fit is a daily dish of Pettijohn's. You will never go without it when you try it for a week.

It means a better breakfast and a better day.

Pettijohn's

Rolled Wheat—25% Bran

A breakfast dainty whose flavory flakes hide 25 per cent unground bran.

Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent fine patent flour with 25 per cent bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe.

Both sold in packages only.

(1644)

The Act of Congress Which Is to Insure Food at Fair Prices

THE Food Control Bill which was passed by the Senate August 8 provides for the production, conservation and distribution of foods, feeds, fuel (solid, liquid and gaseous), fertilizers, and tools and machinery for their production, and for the prevention of speculation.

No employee of the government can participate in the awarding of any contract in which he or his relatives or business associates are interested.

Wilful destruction of foods, etc., to enhance price or restrict production, and combinations to restrict production or distribution, as well as the exacting of excessive prices, are forbidden.

The President may license the importation, manufacture, storage, mining or distribution of commodities, may revoke such license, and may fix charges and profits.

Any person who wilfully hoards any necessaries shall be punished by $5,000 fine or two years' imprisonment, and such necessaries, when seized, shall be sold by order of any district court of the United States.

Wilful destruction of necessaries and combination for restriction of production, enhancing of price, etc., are forbidden.

The President is authorized to requisition supplies for the army and navy on payment of just compensation therefor.

The President is authorized to purchase, store, and sell at reasonable prices, wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes, at a minimum price if such minimum price shall have been fixed, and any money so received may be used as a fund for further carrying out this provision.

The President is authorized to requisition and take over for use or operation by the government any industry for as long as such operation may be necessary.

To regulate speculation the President is authorized to prescribe regulations governing exchanges, boards of trade, etc., which may be required to keep records and make returns of their transactions.

The President, to stimulate the production of wheat, may fix guaranteed prices for the various official standards of wheat. He is also authorized to purchase, store and transport wheat, and to sell or deliver it to any person or to any of our Allies' governments.

From and after thirty days from the date of the approval of this act no foods or feeds shall be used in the production of distilled spirits for beverage purposes. Neither shall there be imported into the United States any distilled spirits. The President may also limit, regulate or prohibit the use of foods or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes, or he may limit the alcoholic content thereof.

The President is authorized to commandeer distilled spirits in stock or in bond for redistillation, the resulting alcoholic product to be used in the manufacture of munitions.

The President may fix the price of coal and coke, and regulate its production, sale, shipment, storage, distribution, etc., such power to be exercised by him through the Federal Trade Commission; and he is authorized to take over and operate [mines or plants during the war or as long as he may think necessary. Or he may require all producers of coal and coke to sell the products only to the United States.

The Federal Trade Commission shall, if the President shall have decided to fix prices, fix and publish maximum prices for both producers and dealers in any commodity, such maximum prices not to be construed as invalidating existing contracts.

The President is authorized to procure such stocks of nitrate of soda as may be necessary and available for agricultural purposes during 1917 and 1918, and dispose of the same at cost.

This act shall cease to be in effect when the war shall have terminated.

◆

Called Higher

Mrs. George E. Worden, Plasteroo, Va.; Mrs. E. J. Talbott, Georgetown, Texas, 75 years; Mrs. Samuel Smyth, King City, Calif., 86 years Mrs. Harriett Kyle, Pleasant Plain, Iowa; Mrs. Job W. Sexton, Laingsburg, Mich., 76 years; Mrs. A. G. Potter, Dwight, Ill., 83 years; Mrs Elizabeth C. Gardiner, South Pasadena, Calif., 77 years; Mrs. P. F. Ivy, Williston, Tenn., 86 years; Mrs. Myers, Nashville, Tenn., 82 years; John McDonnell, Lacona, Iowa, 63 years; Mrs. Mary Jane Lewins, Cleveland, Ohio, 74 years; Mrs. Harvey H. Young, Beallsville, Pa., 77 years; Henry Hayward, Bridgeport, Conn., 73 years; Mrs. L. Pearson, Celina, Ohio, 67 years; Mrs. John Cole, Stillwater, Okla., 64 years; Mrs. Louisa Hazlewood, Elco, Ill., 79 years; Mr. James Moore, Covington, N. Y., 80 years; Mrs. Ellen Nicolson, Livingston, Wis., 83 years; Mrs. H. T. Chester, Syracuse, N. Y.; Mrs. G. K. Davidyan, Philadelphia, Pa., 45 years; Mrs. L. Mabel Hotchkiss, North Yakima, Wash., 61 years; Mrs. Anna A. Perkins, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. John Williamson, Portland, Ore.; Mr. J. O. Jones, Akron, Ohio, 62 years; Mrs. Sarah Strong, Akron, Ind., 82 years; Rev. U. R. Constant, Lawrence, Kan., 85 years; Mrs. Sarah E. Morris, Selkirk, N. Y., 83 years.

RED SNAPPER PLANT FOOD

WITHOUT WITH

WHICH KIND OF PLANTS DO YOU GROW?

THE difference between the above plants is the difference between SUCCESS and FAILURE. Start two plants at the same time in the same size pots and with the same kind of soil. On one use 1 teaspoonful of "RED-SNAPPER" Plant Food in a quart of water every two weeks, and on the other use plain water. The result will be as above. Pictures tell more than words. "RED-SNAPPER" is not merely a stimulant but an actual plant food—rich and nourishing—creating a wonderful growth of foliage and a luxuriant profusion of flowers almost beyond all expectation

Order Direct If Dealer Cannot Supply You

Grocers, druggists hardware dealers and florists sell Red-Snapper products. If your dealer cannot supply you send us 50 cents. We will send a large 2-lb can of Red-Snapper Plant Food prepaid, including an 8-oz package of plant tonic to sweeten the soil and give plants a quick start. If you will tell us your dealer's name we will send you free our valuable flower booklet, "House Plants and Flower Gardens; Their Care and Culture." Red-Snapper Plant Food is sold also in 12½ lb. sack for florists and gardeners at $1.50

For hungry plants use Red-Snapper Plant Food
For sickly plants use Red-Snapper Plant Tonic
For plant insects use Red-Snapper Plant Soap

DEALERS—Write for Our Introductory Sales Proposition.

Dept. E5 National Plant Food Co. (5)

Stock on hand at following places—use nearest address:
General Office, Eau Claire, Wis. Factory, Pensacola, Fla.

AGENTS WANTED to sell our Soldiers and Sailors Pocket Bibles and Testaments. Less than one inch thick and weighs only 11 oz. French Morocco cover, flap and button. Gold edges and gold flag. Portrait holder in back cover, name of regiment will be engraved in gold. Canvassing outfit free. Big sales.

G. R. BALDWIN & COMPANY
400 Fullerton Building, Saint Louis, Mo.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

BERNARD-HEWITT & CO.
Desk F68, 424-434 So. Green St.
CHICAGO, ILL.

Please send me your new Fall Style book with 70 samples free—finest blue serges and advanced styles in smart tweeds and mixtures—also full details of your special lining offer.

Name..............................

Address..............................

....

MAIL COUPON

For Fall and Winter STYLE BOOK

70 SAMPLES FREE

High Grade Blue Serge Suit $15
Made to Measure only
GUARANTEED ALL WOOL

A SPECIAL proposition to introduce the wonderful values offered by our system of tailoring. We have no agents—no dealers—no traveling salesmen—our values make their own customers—and once a Bernard-Hewitt customer, always a Bernard-Hewitt customer.

Thousands of business and professional men, college men, men in all walks of life the country over, wear and enjoy Bernard-Hewitt fine made-to-measure clothes. We want you, too, as a regular customer, and, as a special inducement to secure your first order, will line your suit with a guaranteed

WE PAY SHIPPING CHARGES

$4 SATIN LINING FREE

This suit is strictly hand tailored to your individual measure, from the very finest all-wool blue, light blue, black or gray serge, in any of the latest styles you may select and by the very best tailors in this whole city.
If you don't care for a serge suit, our Fall catalog, which we will send, contains generous samples of the latest fabrics, plain and fancy mixtures ($15.00 to $32.50), unusual values all. The satin lining goes with any selection.
All we ask is that you make a trial of our system, that you learn how easy it is to take your own measure and save money on every suit. We take all the risk, you none, for this is our

Take Your Own Measure —Save $10

GUARANTEE

Complete Satisfaction or Refund of Money

unless you are more than pleased in every particular—in fit—in style—in workmanship and materials. Could anything be fairer? Write today—wear tailor-made clothes of exceptional style and value—dress better and save money.

SEND TODAY FOR YOUR COPY OF OUR BIG BOOK

Our big new Fall Book is ready for you—contains 70 samples latest woolens—also lowest prices on men's hats, shoes and furnishings. It is your guide to correct and economical clothes buying. Mail coupon above or send postcard for your copy.

Please mention Christian Herald so that we can identify this special offer.

BERNARD-HEWITT & COMPANY
424-434 So. Green St. Desk F68 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Is Your Truss a Torture?

Are you suffering the discomforts of rupture without any hope of relief? Then get the Brooks Rupture Appliance on free trial and know again the comforts of a sound man.

The automatic air cushion of the Brooks Rupture Appliance is held against the ruptured spot by a heavy elastic band. This air cushion clings closely without slipping or chafing. Guaranteed to comfortably retain the hernia at all times. The appliance may be washed without any injury. Draws and binds together the parted tissue and gives nature a chance to knit them firmly.

You need suffer no longer the discomforts of a steel truss. As specialists of 30 years' experience we have perfected a comfortable, sure relief from hernia in the Brooks Rupture Appliance. Endorsed by thousands of physicians.

SENT ON TRIAL

The Brooks Appliance is sent on free trial to prove its worth—you are the sole judge of its merit. Made to your measure. Durable—cheap. U. S. War Dept. has bought our appliance for 9 years.

Don't suffer any longer. Write today for catalogue and measure blanks.

TRADE MARK C.E. BROOKS

BROOKS APPLIANCE CO.
398D State St. Marshall, Mich.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

GALLOWAY'S
Free Engine Book

Write me for your copy tonight and learn all about engine making and engine selling. Learn how to judge and select an engine that is best adapted for your own needs and uses. Find out all about weight, horsepower, bore and stroke. You can easily be fooled on engines, and I want to post you before you buy. I also want to tell, in this great engine book, how much I can save you with

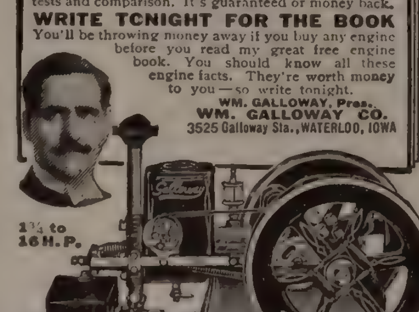
My Patriotic Prices

I want you to know that buying an engine from me is buying direct from the maker. Galloway is not a dealer, not an agent or jobber, but the manufacturer, which means that you buy at wholesale, at a saving of 25 to 40%. The money I save you on an engine you can keep in the bank or use it to buy some other necessity. And Galloway Engines must prove the best after tests and comparison. It's guaranteed or money back.

WRITE TONIGHT FOR THE BOOK

You'll be throwing money away if you buy any engine before you read my great free engine book. You should know all these engine facts. They're worth money to you—so write tonight.

WM. GALLOWAY, Pres.
WM. GALLOWAY CO.
3525 Galloway Sta., WATERLOO, IOWA



Young People's Topics for September 2

My Favorite Hymn (Tell Why)

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ps. 33:1-22. (Musical Consecration Meeting)

SINCE ancient days, before the tabernacle was pitched in the wilderness, the song of the believer has risen in sweet harmonies to the praise of Jehovah, and faith in Christ has brought to the service of worship a great body of songs more or less spiritual and more or less human, but all capable of helping the weary heart or the straying feet or the burdened mind to find peace with God and the salvation that comes through Christ. "Rock of Ages," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," Luther's great hymn, "A Mighty Fortress," "Lead, Kindly Light," "There's a Wideness," "Safely Through Another Week," and perhaps a hundred others, have become established as a part of the worship of song of the Christian world. Evangelism has brought us "Work, for the Night is Coming," "Bringing in the Sheaves," and, more lately, "Brighten the Corner" and "If Your Heart Keeps Right." Some of these appeal by the catchiness of their measure and set our feet going, even as they quicken our hearts. But if the heart is quickened we need not worry over the unregenerate feet. What is your favorite hymn? If you have a favorite, it is such because at some time it has helped you over a hill of difficulty, or pulled you out from a depth of misery, or helped you to meet temptation or to serve another, or has just brought comfort where nothing else availed. The story of why it is your favorite may trespass upon the holy of holies of your heart and may glisten with tears partly shed; the telling may open your heart wide, perhaps to folks who never knew you had one; but this meeting, if it meets with the response it may, may well be the most heart-searching of consecration meetings, for we are borne nearer to heaven upon the wings of song.

Has Summer Playing Brought Leanness to Your Soul?

Epworth League Topic. Ps. 106:12-15; Jer. 8: 18-22; I John 1:9

HUMANITY needs play. Play develops a child and prepares him for the serious problems of maturity. Men and women need play in order that the serious problems of maturity may be carried with that degree of cheerfulness which is necessary to ultimate success. The life without play is like a picture of dark clouds and no sunshine; but a life that is all play is like sunshine without shade, and it withers away in impotence. Summer is a great play time; we golf, we play tennis, we motor, we canoe, we swim, we climb mountains, we see nature at her best. Some of us seek to get in touch with nature's God, but many hide under a ready conversation about the beauties of nature, a lurking consciousness that their own souls are not quite in tune with the perfect work of the Creator. "The summer is ended and we are not saved." We have "lusted exceedingly" and God has "sent leanness" into our souls. Thus, perhaps, our summer has really been wasted. It may yet be saved if we come humbly and penitently to the Saviour, confessing our sins; for he is just and righteous to forgive them. With our heart right, we will be ready to carry into the work of the winter much of blessing that we did not know we had found in the play of the summer.

How Porto Rico Went "Dry"

By HARRY A. RELYEA, San Juan

A WONDERFUL thing happened when to the growing number of "dry" states was added Uncle Sam's colony and newly recognized territory—Porto Rico. The advent of this new member into the Prohibition column marks an unprecedented situation.

The people of this country are Latins, proverbial for their liberal attitude toward the use of liquor. The per capita consumption is small compared with similar territories in the United States, and drunkenness and the more serious evil effects of the traffic are little seen, so that the usual appeal against the brutality of the business could not be made. Seventy per cent. of the voting population is illiterate, and therefore presumably susceptible to the sort of campaigning employed by the liquor advocates, who received generous support from local and foreign sources, and spent money liberally. On the other hand, the Prohibition funds were almost negligible, scarcely sufficient for adequate advertising. Under these conditions, and with but eighteen years' history under the Stars and Stripes, Porto Rico nevertheless cast 100,000 "dry" votes to but 61,000 "wets."

There was no time for a definite prolonged election campaign. The election was held Monday, July 16, under the Prohibition referendum of the recently enacted Jones Bill, which measure granted citizenship and territorial rights to Porto Rico. The result was a surprise even to the Prohibition leaders.

The government officials and big business interests offered the most active and formidable opposition outside the liquor distillers themselves. There was very little business organization among the Prohibition defenses. As one newspaper afterward aptly put it, "Nobody for Prohibition but the people." To most people the psychology of the situation appears an enigma. "Why? How?" is the question asked everywhere. The result was not due to the immediate campaign, although the Prohibition Committee—for the most part composed of native residents—did excellent work. The victory is the culmination of eighteen years' undiscouraged and unceasing efforts on the part of those forces whose work naturally favors temperance. These are three: The public school, the Protestant Church, and the women.

While the American school system has not reached directly the majority of present voters, yet through the children it has had a remarkable effect upon the parents, and upon their home life and attitude toward public morals.

In many places it was boasted openly that in this issue the Protestant Church, the most decidedly and openly active organization in the field, was deciding its fate on the island. From results it would seem that the Protestant forces have a long lease on the future.

As to the third of these factors, the women, a single illustration will suffice. Two young men of the peon class were asked by their employer if they had voted. "Yes," the elder replied, "early this morning mother knocked on our door and said, 'Come, boys, get up and go vote the Coco.'"

◆

Among the Workers

THE National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. of the United States is raising a fund of $6,000,000 for its spiritual and welfare work in the war; $4,500,000 has been already subscribed, and it is expected that the fund will total $5,000,000 by September 1.

A "BIBLE REVIVAL" has been in progress in the province of Pampanga, in the island of Luzon, Philippines, under the leadership of Rev. E. L. Honsley. Twenty-six circuits are worked in three allotments, the pastors of all the circuits uniting on one allotment, during which Bibles are donated or sold in house-to-house visits, and the people are drawn into the Sunday school, and often into the church.

THE police records of Buenos Aires show that there are 5,000 abandoned children on the streets of that city. An influential magazine, El Mundo Argentino, is doing its best to awaken the public to a sense of the neglect to which these children are subjected. Scores are picked up on the streets and taken into the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

——, Petersburg, Texas.	$200.00
"In His Name Evanston, Ill"	150.00
Mrs Olivia C Roseveare	50.00
Mrs Emma C Sterrett	50.00
W A Henry and Sisters	50.00
E F Settle	25.00
H G Phillips	25.00
Janet Spaugh	25.00
Elizabeth Spaugh	25.00
Walter Spaugh	25.00
Mr & Mrs W T Spaugh	25.00
Mrs Mary E Rathbone	25.00
Mr & Mrs E C Shields	25.00
Frank Warner	25.00
Mrs Sarah Holmes	20.00
Stephen De Jong	20.00
Florence M & E Carrie Sabold	20.00
Friend, Wayne, Nebr	20.00
Mrs M Moon	20.00
Sam Wiley	20.00
Wm Chaplin	20.00
Mrs E Hubbs	20.00
Mary H Baird	20.00
J W Williams	15.00
Mr & Mrs W E Roberts	15.00
Misses Bertha, Ida & Lina Burkhardt	15.00
Wola Circle, King's Daughters, Brooklyn, N Y	15.00
Thos Sebens	15.00
S M Carnahan	15.00
"Two of His disciples"	15.00
Mrs C A Warhanck	15.00
M Estelle Files	10.00
Mr & Mrs John Goebel	10.00
C J Smith	10.00
Mrs R A Divine	10.00
Mrs Atherton Clark	10.00
Mrs H S Capstick	10.00
Mrs A H Bartlett	10.00
Mrs Mary Patzkowski	10.00
Annie Watson, Sr	10.00
C M Stiefvater	10.00
Mrs C W Moore	10.00
Mrs J W Kennon	10.00
Atwood Collins	10.00
Sarah W Cushman	10.00
Mr & Mrs John Hall	10.00
Mrs N H Rogers	10.00
Lucius E Bates	10.00
L H Lord	10.00
"In Memory of Mrs A Baker"	10.00
Elizabeth & John Anthony	10.00
A N Erlandson	10.00
Mrs M B Olmsted	10.00
M E Getzendaner	10.00
R Thorstenson	10.00
Arthur J Raley	10.00
A G P & Wife, Huron, Kans.	10.00
J C Wilhelm	10.00
Mrs Sue M Haag	10.00
S S, Alamo, Calif	10.00
Friends, Westogue, Conn	10.00
Henry Leyh	10.00
Geo Ravn	10.00
Elizabeth Johnson	10.00
Hayes & Alice Conway	10.00
"Friend of the Needy"	10.00
Thankful, Reading, Mich	10.00
Judith A Dodge	10.00
A Mottaz	10.00
Lizzie Grau	10.00
Mrs Ritta Northcote	10.00
F V Edwards	10.00
John Groher	10.00
Chas E Pugh	10.00
The Downie Family	10.00
"S N M"	10.00
Everett F Collins	10.00
First Ref Ch, Passaic, N J	10.00
Friend, Wilmington, Dela	10.00
Mr & Mrs J W Huntzberger	10.00
Julius Grosse	10.00
Friend, Fort Wayne, Ind	10.00
C W R	10.00
Otto Grosse	10.00
Mrs Grace Ashcraft	10.00
Thos Rutherford	10.00
Mrs Sarah Littlefield	10.00
Mr & Mrs A B Orth	10.00
L P Holston	$10.00
John Abkes	10.00
C W Peter	10.00
Mrs C S Abbott & Mrs John Ruvenacht	10.00
Jas E Hastings	10.00
Chas Nelson	10.00
Charles Cramer	10.00
Miss Mary F Potter	10.00
Mrs K M Hardy	10.00
Rev J L Boyd	10.00
Lee Burler	10.00
Mrs Rachel Watts	10.00
——, Newberg, Ore	10.00
Jane R Williams	$5.00
——, Kalamazoo, Mich	5.00
Miss J M Marot	3.00
Percy Hadley	3.00
Mrs E S Schrick	3.00
Mrs W O Colton	3.00
Henry Schaefer	3.00
Mrs M L Lidhall	3.00
Mrs M E Hodsden	3.00
Inasmuch, Hancock, Wisc.	3.00
Mr & Mrs James Beggs	3.00
Mrs W A P McDonald	$2.00
M J Angell	2.00
Friend, Beverly, Mass	2.00
Mrs B McWhorter	2.00
——, Lansing, Mich	2.00
Edward Peters	2.00
Mrs R Lester	2.00
Mrs Hemleben	2.00
G H Gibson	2.00
Friend, N Brookfield, Mass	2.00
Mrs W W Showkey	2.00
Mrs W W Jaquith	$2.00
E C Bechtolt	2.00
Miss Mary J Noyce	2.00
Mrs Lucy Bennett	2.00
Louis De Lancet	2.00
Geo W Craig	2.00
Mrs Hattie Bennet	2.00
Mr Thos Robertson	2.00
Mr & Mrs B E Rawlings	2.00
Martha C Dunn	2.00
J A Anderson	2.00
Edith Finster	$1.00
"Alice"	1.00
W J Bricker	1.00
Mrs R Cunningham	1.00
Mrs C G Chase	1.00
Friend, Middlebury, Vt	1.00
——, Belmar, N J	1.00
Mrs Alex Townsend	1.00
Henry West	1.00
——, Croons Sta, Md	1.00
Mrs J M Thomas	1.00
Mrs L O	1.00
——, Osceola, Mich	$5.00
Mr Jacob Cuppola	5.00
Chas Shedd	5.00
Lulu Marshall	5.00
E K, Atlantic City, N J	5.00
H Maltas	5.00
Mrs L Lewis	5.00
Mrs C Wilner Wirts	5.00
F W Steiner	5.00
Young Ladies Aid & Missy Soc, St Paul's Ev Luth Ch, Columbus, O	5.00
Mrs H S Terrell	$5.00
Miss Emma Ward	5.00
Irene I Taylor	5.00
Mrs A R Seely	5.00
A L Stoneman	5.00
Boyd Mehrling	5.00
Mrs G M Campbell	5.00
P J W, Newton, Kans	5.00
Mrs W F Mitchell	5.00
Mrs Bays Osborn	5.00
A M, Paterson, N J.	5.00
Cornelia Smith	5.00
A C Hintage	5.00
Robert E Urell	5.00
B J M	5.00
X X X	5.00
B Henry	5.00
M H Cox	5.00
Mr & Mrs J E Springer	5.00
Friend Fargo, N Dak	5.00
Mrs W H Cuthbert	5.00
Mary L Tompkins	5.00
C A Hagaman	5.00
Mrs A Rietveld	5.00
S R A & L Z B	5.00
Isaac H Grant	5.00
R Hodgman	5.00
Henry Harriger	5.00
Lillian Nicholson.	5.00
Mrs Lydia A Carmichael	5.00
John La Huis	3.00
G W Baker	3.00
Mr & Mrs Geo M Reeves	3.00
Mr & Mrs J C MacKilbys	3.00
Mrs George Dean	3.00
Mrs E & M E W	3.00
——, Los Angeles, Calif	3.00
Mrs C R McDowell.	3.00
—— Dayton, Wash.	3.00
B T Costain	3.00
Mr & Mrs R E Busch	3.00
Thos G Donaldson	3.00
Mrs Daniel P Smith	3.00
Henry Winker & Family	3.00
Mrs T T Townes	3.00
Mrs Florence Ginn	3.00
Mrs C M Coopers	3.00
S S Cl, Morton Federated Ch, Peoria, Ill	3.00
Mrs Elizabeth Hotchkiss	3.00
Mrs A K Jones	3.00
A H Worrall & Sister	3.00
Eleonora S Moyer	3.00
Friend, Wenham, Mass	3.00
Elmer E Hubbard	3.00
Mr & Mrs C L Heinz	3.00
F C Cammack	3.00
J M Duff	3.00
"A Retired Minister," Derry, N H	3.00
Mrs A H Campbell	3.00
School Children, Silver Lake Park, near White Plains, N Y	3.00
Mrs N Van Hyning & Daughter	3.00
Mrs O Eurall	3.00
M F Rossman	3.00
Hans J Johnson	3.00
L H Lord	3.00
Bertha A Rodes	3.00
——, Placerville, Idaho	3.00
Mrs Augusta J Sears	3.00
G W Kerstetter	3.00
Mrs R C Chambers	3.00
Lewis Moring	3.00
Mrs S Ballard	3.00
B M Winters	3.00
John F Miller	3.00
Mrs Samuel G Vail	3.00
Mrs H M Deakyne	3.00
Mrs Fred D Markle	3.00
Mrs L K Bowers	3.00
——, Salem, N J	3.00
Geo A Summer	3.00
J A Pierce	1.00
Mrs D H Caldwell	1.00
Mrs O G Wilson	1.00
"Unknown"	1.00
Mrs C Henry	1.00
"Dakota"	1.00
B B B	1.00

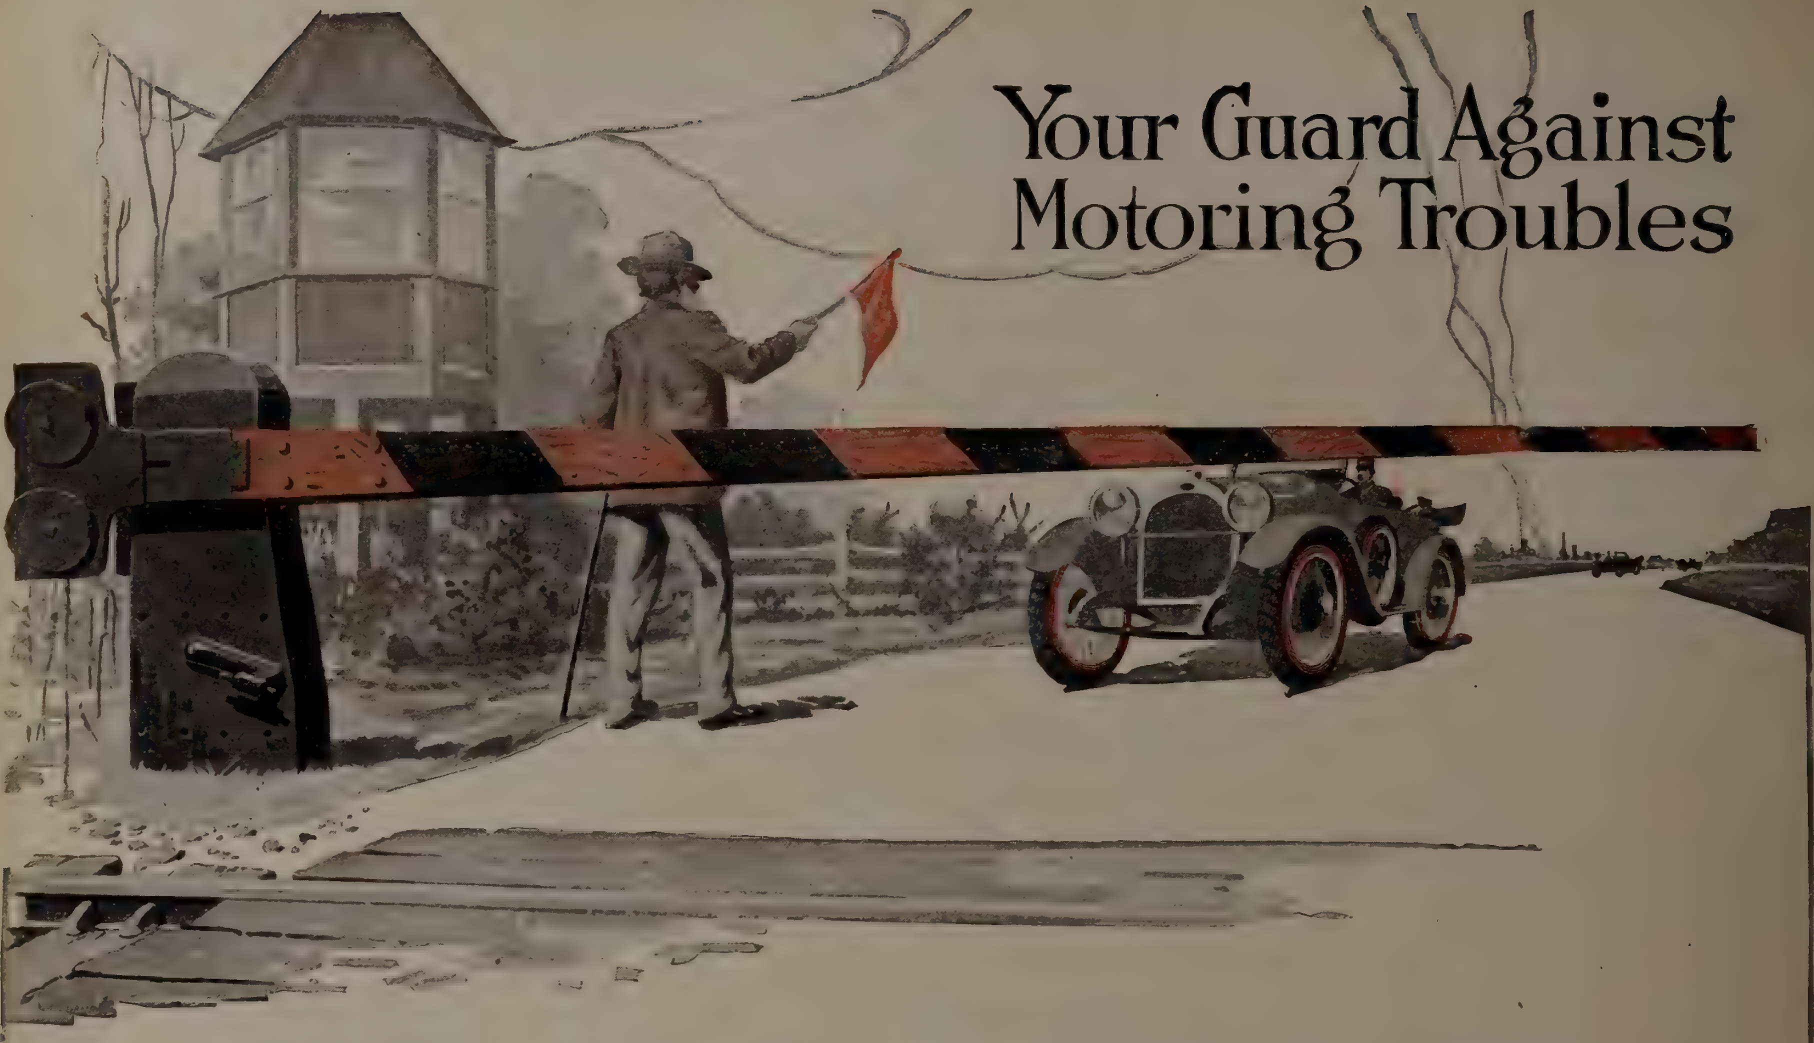
Only a cup of cold water, but it means more than that to the German prisoner, the French stretcher bearer and the world

Rev R H Barr	5.00
Rose Valley Union S S, Trout Run, Pa	5.00
Grace M Swertfager	5.00
Clara, Belfast, Me	5.00
S M Ramsey	5.00
Mr & Mrs W F Martin	5.00
J E Oman	5.00
Bennett E Seymour	5.00
J Y Bettys	5.00
Miss F Sorensen	5.00
Wm S Lowry	5.00
Elizabeth M Pollock	5.00
E W Lester	5.00
Mr & Mrs J E Springer	5.00
John F Ludwig	5.00
Mr & Mrs Henry Leyh	5.00
Mrs M J Beckett	5.00
Mrs R C Van Eman	5.00
Friend, Copper Center, Ala	5.00
Mrs P B Owen	5.00
Herman Giese	5.00
W W Clogston	5.00
H & K A Y	5.00
James Rumney	5.00
Mrs Walter Nunn	5.00
Mrs R C James	5.00
Wm Atkinson	5.00
Miss Ludwig	5.00
Mrs S B Hubbell	5.00
M L	5.00
Miss Addie D Hurtin	5.00
A B Hurtin	5.00
Wm Ayers	5.00
J F Ellis	5.00
——, Mullen, Ida	5.00
Mrs E H Rowland	5.00
M J Warrenfeltz	5.00
Nels. Gunderson	5.00
Julia Wright	5.00
Mrs T E Warren, Jr	5.00
——, Echo, Minn	5.00
Mrs Peter Jensen	3.00
A W Wilder	3.00
Friend, Newark, N J	3.00
Prescott Gillilan	3.00
M W	3.00
Miss Abbie Rice	3.00
Miss E S Rowland	2.50
John Numi	2.50
W C Wiester	2.50
Mr & Mrs A Cunningham	2.50
J H Frazell	2.50
M E S S, Batavia, N Y	2.50
Annot Lyle Kerr & Sisters	2.50
S S Cole	2.50
Mrs Emma G James	2.00
Mrs M L Marshall	2.00
Mrs Helen Shannon	2.00
Mrs Emily Banks	2.00
Wm Reul	2.00
Frederick C Frese	2.00
W H Kirk	2.00
Mr & Mrs Ferris	2.00
P Eilskov	2.00
J F Hambleton	2.00
Friend, Tiona, Pa	2.00
Mrs W A Spillman	2.00
Bernhard Nikkel	2.00
G E Nighthart	2.00
Eugene Hotchkin	2.00
Mrs R V Hollenberg	2.00
Mr & Mrs C W Crozier	2.00
Mrs A M Brokaw	2.00
A D Lough	2.00
Mrs C W Treverton	2.00
Rev Francis Joyner	2.00
Mr & Mrs J G Herr	2.00
Mrs Julia Eckert & Miss Caroline Richert	2.00
M O K	2.00
J J Parker	2.00
Friends, Kenmore, N Y	2.00
Mrs M H	2.00
Geo Chmelar	2.00
R E Smith	2.00
Sarah Van Nest	2.00
Jane W Yarnale	2.00
Mrs Wm Johnston	2.00
Wm Greenwood	2.00
Mrs D W & Miss Edna Jones	2.00
Annie Widmayer	2.00
W H Boulter	2.00
Ira Clynick	2.00
W F Kilgore	2.00
Geo Shirer	2.00
Mr K J Koskimen	2.00
Mary Hummel	2.00
J H McCartney	2.00
Kate E Kerr	2.00
——, Royal Oak, Mich	2.00
Friend, Marshalltown, Iowa	2.00
Mrs Lucy H Peabody	2.00
Christiana Thomson	2.00
Mrs R S Tucker	2.00
Effie I Pugh	2.00
Mrs A R Britzuis	2.00
Miss R Evangeline Landes	2.00
Mrs P L Farrah	2.00
Mrs W H Fitze	2.00
W S Graham	2.00
N D McCoole	2.00
Mrs R A Willcox	2.00
Miriam V Petran	2.00
John H Fray	2.00
Mrs W H Wideman	2.00
Friend, Baltimore, Md	2.00
I R Vandewater	2.00
Conrad Babler	2.00
L N Gray	2.00
S A Johnson	2.00
Mrs M S Dawson Greig	2.00
——, Anderson, Ind	2.00
Maria Weyl	2.00
Friend, Lyons Falls, N Y	2.00
Margaret Little	2.00
E H Bowie	2.00
——, Barre, Vt	2.00
Friends, Oakland, Calif	2.00
Mrs Hattie McKinnon	2.00
Mrs Louisa Wilcox	2.00
Mr K A Sarviranta	2.00
Mrs Ada Switzer	1.50
Lillian Skelton	1.50
J T Comstock	1.50
Presby S S, Clay City, Ky	1.50
Mrs W M Frantz	1.50
Mrs B Olson	1.50
Emil Eklund	1.50
Mrs M N McKenney	1.50
Mrs Ella Maughimer	1.50
J C Vining	1.50
J M Head	1.50
Jos L Black	1.50
E Chard	1.00
Ruby McArtney	1.00
Mrs Alice Tewksbury	1.00
Mrs C W Merriweather	1.00
Mrs H Phillips	1.00
Ella Barton	1.00
John L Hoffman	1.00
John E Davis	1.00
E B, Martins Ferry, O	1.00
Rev A B Norrell	1.00
Mrs Marguerite Donnenwirth	1.00
Mr & Mrs T W Jacobs	1.00
Mrs G M Noah	1.00
Anne Hurley	1.00
Mrs Samuel Harper	1.00
Friend, Southwick, Mass	1.00
Mrs H C Logsdon	1.00
Mrs Miller	1.00
T G Ellis	1.00
Mrs Lola Ellis	1.00
B, St Louis, Mo	1.00
——, Hillsdale, Mich	1.00
Mrs E C Stanchfield	1.00
——, Greeley, Colo	1.00
Rev Giles B Cooke	1.00
Mrs E E Powell	1.00
Rev F Aug Lillehil	1.00
Josephine Van Dyke	1.00
J S Dick	1.00
J D Shanklin	1.00
"Friend Mary"	1.00
Hugh Graham	5.00
Mr & Mrs Daniel Heimlich	5.00
Jessie Williams	5.00
R N Woolford	5.00
Mrs A N Warner	5.00
Agnes Kennedy	5.00
W H Slabaugh	5.00
A S Rupard	5.00
A W Nelson	5.00
Miss Henrie Beard	5.00
Mrs J M T	5.00
Edwin Dingman	5.00
Margaret Garwood	5.00
C E Cronenwett	5.00
Mrs Lilian Tuttle	5.00
Mrs Eliza D Knoblaugh	5.00
N W Merrill	5.00
S W C	5.00
J L Stevenson	5.00
O H Burford	5.00
Mrs H F Wettlaufer	5.00
Mrs F C B	5.00
Friend, Millersville, Pa	5.00
Mrs Gray	5.00
A L Whitcomb	5.00
Miss Frances Baldwin	5.00
Mrs A Van Domselaar	5.00
Lillian A Evans	5.00
Mrs Paul Allen	5.00
Mrs J H Rice	5.00
H S Kenyon	5.00
Mrs Dan R Rogers	5.00
J J C	5.00
John F Dusing	5.00
Ole Aufinson	5.00
Francis Hollister	5.00
Lucretia B Lacy	5.00
Mrs C F Bridge	5.00
Mrs Martha Marley	5.00
E. L., Clifton, N Y	5.00
Mary A Chase	5.00
M E Becker	5.00
Mrs J A Watkins	5.00
Ida Emling	5.00
Mrs A D Ropp	5.00
Miss Lizzie Elliott	5.00
Minnie Seibold	5.00
Lydia Seibold	5.00
N E Lord	5.00
Mrs Elizabeth Eppich	5.00
Mrs G A Kirkland	5.00
Anna Godberson	5.00
Mrs E B Young	5.00
Minnie Anderson	5.00
Mrs L Brooks	5.00
Mrs F B Palmer	5.00
H O Williamson	5.00
——, Newberg, Ore	5.00
S E Rosedale	5.00
Mrs Frank Gibson	5.00
Jos Sallie	5.00
Julia A Benson	5.00
Margaret MacMillan	5.00
Miss Henrietta Woodman	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Send all gifts for this fund to the Christian Herald, 93 Bible House, New York City

Your Guard Against Motoring Troubles



ACCIDENTS will happen. They cannot be prevented. No one knows the day nor the hour of the day that will bring tack or nail or glass into contact with your tires. But, one can protect oneself from the long delays that those accidents may occasion. And the big helps in emergencies are Firestone Accessories.

Firestone Cementless Tube Patches are excellent examples of how much Firestone quality counts in "first aids." Easiest to apply. Always stay put. Tab on protecting muslin permits quick removal for motorists in a hurry.

The Firestone accessory line includes Hook-On Boots for Clincher or Straight-Side Tires, Lace-On Boots, Blow-Out Patches, Cure-Cut, Cement, Air Pressure Gauges, Tire Tape, Tire Mica, etc.

They embrace every emergency need. They provide first quality "first aid" when tire accidents threaten to delay. Your garage can provide you.

FIRESTONE TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY
Akron, Ohio Branches and Dealers Everywhere

Firestone
ACCESSORIES

"Firestone"
"CURE-CUT"
MANUFACTURED BY THE FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.
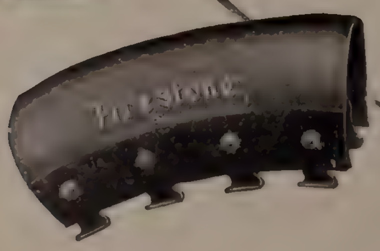
AKRON, OHIO.



"Firestone"
CEMENTLESS
FIRESTONE
FIRESTONE
FIRESTONE
FIRESTONE

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 29, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 35. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photo by Earle Harrison

SUMMER DAYS AND DAISIES

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

ANXIOUS INQUIRER, Chicago, Ill. "Does Phil. 1 : 15 teach that preaching from wrong motives can be acceptable to God, or effective in the salvation of men?"

Archdeacon Farrar removes the difficulty suggested by the apostle's references. The apostle, he points out, is writing in a confidential way to the friends he loved so well at Philippi. He was at the time of writing a prisoner; but they must not suppose he was the apostle of a ruined cause, or that his imprisonment was a sign that God's frown was on his work and that it was coming to naught; on the contrary, he wants them to recognize that his misfortunes have been overruled by God to the direct furtherance of the Gospel. The majority of the brethren had been stimulated by his bonds to a divine confidence which had shown itself in a yet more courageous daring than before in preaching the Word of God. Some of them preach Christ out of genuine good will, but some tell the story of Christ insincerely, out of mere envy and discord. The former are influenced by love of him; the latter announce Christ out of partisanship with base motives, thinking to make his bonds more galling. Perhaps the day had been when Paul might have denounced them in tones of burning rebuke; but he is already the prisoner, though not yet Paul the Aged. He had learned, and he was learning more and more, that the will of man, even in a holy cause, worketh not the righteousness of God. He had risen and was rising more and more above every personal consideration. What mattered it whether these preachers meant only to insult him and render his bondage yet more galling? After all, in every way, whether with marked design or in sincerity, Christ is being preached, and therein I do—aye, and "whatever angry feelings may try to arise within my heart—I will rejoice."

Bible Student. Is the allusion to one bed for a family in Luke 11 : 7 to be taken literally?

Eastern people have no bed chambers or beds. They sleep at night in the rooms they use by day. They lie down in the clothes they wear by day, except the outer robe. They sleep on mats which are kept in a cupboard during the day. Among the poorer classes, it is not infrequent for a whole family to lie together under one large quilt, parents sleeping in the same chamber with their children. The allusion in the passage quoted may well be literal.

Mr. Joseph R. Gregg, a reader in Columbia, Pa., sends these observations on Anger and Resentment, which merit the attention of all who are disposed to be quick-tempered and to nurse grudges: "The passion of anger ruffles the mind, disturbs the countenance, hurries on the circulation of the blood, and disorders the whole vital and animal functions. It often occasions fevers and other acute diseases, and sometimes even sudden death. This passion is peculiarly hurtful to the delicate, and those of weak nerves. Such persons frequently lose their lives by a violent fit of anger, and I would advise them to guard against the excess of this passion with the utmost care. You have no more business to get into a passion than you have to get intoxicated or fall into debt. It is not indeed always in our power to prevent being angry, but we may surely avoid harboring resentment. Resentment preys upon the mind and occasions the most obstinate chronic disorders, which gradually waste the constitution. Nothing shows true greatness of mind more than to forgive injuries. It promotes the peace of society and greatly conduces to our own ease, health and felicity. Cultivate the art of forgetting. Thank God for the power to take our bumps like a man. Retaliation means nothing. If a neighbor wounds you with a sharp word, hold your tongue. Respectful silence is a weapon against which he cannot combat. Such as value health should avoid violent gusts of anger as they would the most deadly poison. Neither ought they to indulge resentment, but they should endeavor at all times to keep their minds calm and serene. Nothing tends so much to the health of the body as a constant tranquillity of mind. Some day, my friend, you will advance; so, if you are discouraged, take heart again. If you have made a mistake, cheer up; for this is not a bad old world, and if you are made of the right stuff it will soon forget, it will soon forgive you. Some day will come the cheering tidings of better, happier, brighter things. Some day you will forget the heat, the hardships, and the self-denial."

J. O., Haviland, Kan. I have been a reader of the Herald for nearly forty years. I enjoy Jowett, and the Mail-Bag, and just now the Mountain Peaks of Prophecy are intensely interesting to me. I hail with delight the articles on archeology, and often wonder what will be the final outcome of your article on the Ark, written a few years ago, stating how it was stolen from under the Mosque of Omar. Six months before your article was written, a converted Jew had told us here that the Ark was buried 200 feet beneath the Mosque of Omar.

The report of the Ark's hiding-place having been discovered under the Mosque of Omar no doubt arose from the fact that the Mosque stands partly on the old Temple site. But no evidence has ever been adduced to show that it was hidden there. It may have been carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, with the other sacred articles, when he plundered the Temple. As no reference is made to it by Ezra, Nehemiah or Josephus the historian, after the Captivity, the best Bible authorities have concluded that there was no Ark in the second Temple. There is a tradition among the Jews that before Nebuchadnezzar plundered the Temple, the priests hid the Ark safely, and that its hiding-place will not be revealed until the Messiah comes.

H. W. U., Wenonah, N. J., writes concerning a letter in the Mail-Bag of the May 16 issue by C. F. W. M., about older preachers "trimming their sails": "His testimony explains to me," he writes, "hitherto unaccountable experiences I have known of older preachers who, when they get to the age of about 45, begin to go down in the scale and are shifted about from place to place in a short time, with an ever-lessening salary. I had contended that the older the preacher the better he should be, and therefore the more desirable from having the accumulated experience of years in the work of saving souls. It is a sad mistake. In the Philadelphia Conference it is the younger preachers that are wanted, and therefore in demand. I am thankful to say there are a few exceptions of men who have not 'trimmed their sails' or wings, but who continue to preach the whole Gospel. They are not has-beens." Different preachers have different experiences. It is indisputable, however, that many a faithful preacher of rare spirituality, but who lacked the quality some have of keeping in the limelight, has been left behind, while others, with probably less power but more assurance, have forged ahead.

G. H., Portland, Ore. We know it has been the custom among a certain class of papers to apply rather sharp criticisms to Evangelist Sunday on the supposition that his financial methods were mercenary. They were wrong, however, and had they taken half the trouble to investigate which they took to denounce, they would have written differently. Billy Sunday is a tremendous worker for souls, and is just the man for dealing with the unchurched masses of any great city. It is not at all strange that his business managers should be careful not to incur debt; it would be a disgrace for any evangelist to leave a trail of debt behind him; and as Mr. Sunday works on an extensive scale, he would soon be overwhelmed by financial disasters if his managers were not careful. He is most generous in helping out not only many poor, but in lifting out of the slough of abject poverty many an old friend to whom he has become a benefactor. All that comes out of the New York campaign after paying actual expenses he has pledged to charity. It is a good plan to hear both sides; and especially when the one side most in evidence is the worldly side, we should try to find out just what there is on the other. See Acts 5 : 39.

The Dream-Fruit Tree

OH, it grows in the midst of a marvelous land
That is known as Dear Children's Delight!
It's away o'er a strip of that silvery sand
Where the Dream-Laddie wanders at night;
You go drifting afar on the Barcarole Sea,
To discover the magical Dream-Fruit Tree.

In a rainbowy shallop the little ones sail,
All as lightly as bright bubbles float,
And to find that fair country they never can fail,
For the Dream-Laddie pilots the boat;
Oh, they laugh like a runaway brook in their glee,
As they dance 'neath the boughs of the Dream-Fruit Tree!

But a taste of the wonderful Dream-Fruit fair,
And a host of dear wishes come true,
And the children may slide on a silver chute there,
Or with elfin folk play peek-a-boo;
And the toys are all walking and talking—dear me!
While the books read aloud from the Fairy-Tale Tree.

And the wee ones may ride for a glorious hour
In the faeroplanes cleaving the air;
They may climb tippy-top of the Chocolate Tower,
And there's no one to say, "Have a care!"
For no harm can befall them in Children's Delight,
Though they flutter through star-fields with Dream-Laddie's kite.

When your eyes start to filling with poppy-seed sand,
And your rosy mouth opes in a yawn,
They are signs that you're bound for that marvelous land,
Where you'll roam in delight till the dawn;
You shall sail on that starry-bright Barcarole Sea,
And discover the wonderful Dream-Fruit Tree.

DAISY D. STEPHENSON

P. J. R., Santa Cruz, Calif. There is nothing in I John 3 : 6, 8 and 9 to conflict with the assurance elsewhere expressed in many passages, that there is always hope for one who repents and that no one will be cast off who really desires to come back. See John 6 : 37 and related passages.

H. M. T. 1. It cannot be stated with any degree of certainty how long the child Jesus remained in Egypt with his parents. 2. You are correct in holding that the Mary mentioned in Rom. 16 : 6 is the sixth of that name mentioned in the New Testament.

Mrs. S. E. B., Akron, N. Y. Nahum 2 : 4 has been quoted as referring to automobiles, but the best commentators agree that the passage was written as a direct prophecy of the destruction of Nineveh, and that the particular verse describes the mad rush of those in chariots to escape the enemy.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank inserted, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THIS BLANK.

The subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books. The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35. The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David, $2.50; Miss Theodosia's Heart-strings, $2.50; Luther in Light of Recent Research $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $3.50; with Genuine Morocco Binding, $4.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House New York.

E. J. S., Kewanee, Ill. Please tell me why Job's friends sat with him seven days and seven nights and none spake a word.

The incident described in Job 2 : 13 indicates an Eastern custom according to which long silences are practiced in times of distress or mourning. Seven days was the usual period of mourning. Among the Jews, fasting is common following the death of a relative or friend; in fact, an occasional egg or some lentils is the only food allowed mourners. After the funeral it was customary for the bereaved women to sit in their chambers on the ground with unsandaled feet, surrounded by a circle of professional mourners with torn clothes and dust on their heads. No one spoke till the bereaved ones had done so. This would continue for seven days. It was so with Job's friends. They came to be ready to comfort, when Job wanted comfort; but so long as he remained quiet, nursing his grief, delicacy prevented them from intruding any remarks.

A number of letters have reached us from Christian Herald readers in relation to the visibility of the Second Coming, and inquiring how it can be possible that all people living can witness it at the same time. These letters have been referred to Dr. Gray, who gives this in reply:

"'Every eye shall see Him,' does not refer to the first stage of Christ's Second Advent, when his church will be caught up to meet him in the air, but to the second stage, when, after an interval, he comes with his church and his holy angels, in judgment on the nations, and to deliver Israel from her hour of tribulation. Since he is coming in the clouds and in flaming fire, as the Scriptures state, why should it be thought a thing incredible for every eye to see Him? Does not every eye see the sun shining in mid-heavens, and shall not the Creator of the sun and his glorious and powerful retinue be a brighter revelation still? Saul was stricken to the ground by a light above the brightness of the sun, and that light was the presence of his Lord. So shall it be when he reveals himself to mankind in that day."

Miss H. F. B., Falmouth, Mass. 1. Please explain I Cor. 16 : 22; 2. I Cor. 15 : 26; 3. I Cor. 15 : 54, 55, 56; 4. Matt. 24 : 28.

1. The apostle who is burning with love for his brethren (Rom. 9 : 1–5 and 10 : 1) certainly has not such hatred in his heart as would call down upon them a curse. We are dealing here with a prediction that those who deny Christ and will not follow the apostles' warning to prepare against his coming will have visited upon them the curse that falls upon those who reject the Lord. 2. A commentator thus expresses it well: "Death to the believer, stripped of its sting, only ushers him into the presence of his Lord." It is ever to the believer an enemy, but it is the last. 3. The apostle is here exulting over the fact that the sting has been taken from death. Until now, he would say that victory had been won by sin, for "the wages of sin is death"; but now, by Christ's resurrection, the sting has been taken out of death. 4. The "carcass" in this word picture represents moral corruption; the eagle, God's means of certain punishment when the time is ripe. The context would seem to refer us to the special occasions, the one at the destruction of Jerusalem, when the Roman eagles were agencies of vengeance; the other at the last day, when the Lord's swift messengers, the angels, shall come to execute his judgment on the unregenerate.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Kiukiang troops moving against Chang Hsun boarding a river steamer to cross the Yangste River at Nanking

China Under the Republic

A Peace-Loving Nation, Torn by Militaristic Factions, Yet Struggling Toward a Great Ideal

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

I HAVE just returned to Peking, from traveling several thousand miles in China, from Canton to Nanking, and from Shanghai to a sight of the Tibetan mountains. The bugle call of the man in uniform has been my constant symphony of discord and the scraping of soldiers' feet has been my fife and drum corps. I have been living among soldiers for several months—more soldiers than I have ever seen in my life in the United States. China is overrun, bankrupted, and infested with soldiery. But she is even more suffused, so far as official circles are concerned, with a spirit of militarism.

Yuan Shi Kai's control of China for five years was through his control of his army. Two months ago the military governors, meeting ostensibly to discuss the advisability of making war on German militarism, successfully forced their desires upon the Constitutional Party and won a victory over parliament by the force of arms. Chang Hsun, the dupe of cleverer men who resented his dominance by force, built up a monarchy by force in a day, which collapsed in a week, again by force. His only qualifications were those of a war lord, and by the force of military power he rose—and fell.

Today China is in a state of chaos. In Chengtu, which I left sixteen days ago, when the city was divided between two generals and when the province was divided by five, disorder in even greater measure than that of last April has broken out, and what law and order there is exists only by permission of military men. There is no civil power sufficiently strong to cope with the whims of the military. Never, since the time of the Boxers, has a foreigner been less sure of protection than now. For two years, robberies by robber bands, some of which are made up of disbanded soldiers, and all of which exist on account of a political unrest which has resulted from jealousies and quarrels between military men, have been increasingly common.

China is a country admirably suited to militarism. The standard of wages is so low that even the pittance paid by the government, or by one military leader or another, is a great inducement to join the colors of some leader, whose hope is force and whose aim is control by force.

Contrary to the general conception, the Chinese are good fighters, though, like the conquering Turk, they do better in hand-to-hand work than they do in artillery dueling at long range. Thousands of Chinese troops—again like the Turks—can move from one place to another almost without a commissary department. They can make their own sandals overnight.

Thousands of great temples all over China offer immediate shelter as barracks, and there is scarcely a city of size in China that has not one or several drill grounds where soldiers are constantly at work. The soldiers can sleep without beds, eat without utensils, take long marches without shoes, and in general wage effective war in the land in which they operate without the munitions of war.

Of course the efficiency of such men would be vastly lessened in a war with well-equipped foes. China is ill-fitted to send properly disciplined troops outside her own boundaries. But fifty thousand men were massed around Peking in less than a week, and ten times that number could be gathered in short order if the occasion arose. The fact remains that in China there are thousands of men whose only outlook is militarism, and whose utter ignorance of modern warfare is no bar upon their dogged belief in the law of force. Force and not law rules China to-day, as far as China is being ruled.

Dr. Wu Ting Fang describes the present trouble in China as a fight between militarism and democracy, and he is authority for the statement that between fifty-five and sixty per cent. of the national revenue of China goes to support militarism. Such a nation may have been peaceful in the past, and its lack of modern weapons and of the ability to use them may force China to be regarded as a peaceful nation, when the entire mental outlook of its leaders is that of the militarist, who would win through force rather than through recourse to law under a constitution.

Political office is held under the spoils system. Each "general" milks his own part of the country, and the number of men who have any altruistic or patriotic outlook on office-holding is very small. Patriotism or the ideal of nationalism is sacrificed at any time in order that one man or another may rise to temporary power or wealth.

The leader of the military men in China is General Tuan Chi Jui, of whom Mr. C. T. Wang, a Yale graduate and probably the most promising of the younger Chinese statesmen, said at a luncheon given before the American University Club:

"On the elimination of Yuan and the revival of the republic last year, it was hoped that the military machine so powerfully used by Yuan would have learned a lesson and would take to heart that, in a true republic, it is law and not force that prevails; that the will of the people through the expression of their legally elected representatives rules, and that the fighting forces of a country are arms which are to give it due protection.

"From General Tuan Chi Jui, as the new leader of the military machine, much was expected. His gallant stand against the imperial designs of his former chief and life-long friend naturally elicited much approbation and admiration from the people, irrespective of party lines. This could be gauged by the practically unanimous vote he received in both Houses, when his appointment as Premier and Minister of War was submitted to them for approval.

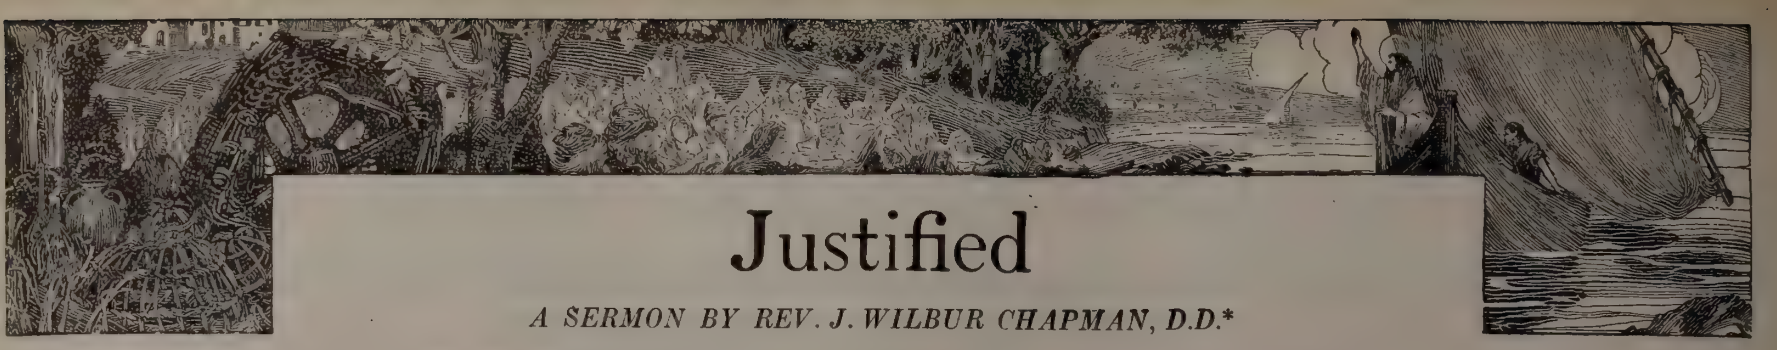
"But no sooner was he placed in positions of trust and power than he manifested the same tendencies as Yuan—the same disregard of the popular wish, the same play of the minority against the majority in the Assembly, and the same use of the military machine for his personal ends. Only he was not one-tenth as clever as Yuan, and he showed much inferiority in statesmanship.

"We wish to do him honor where honor is due. As a man, we have always maintained that he has good character and strong convictions. As a soldier, we also admire his cool courage, his dogged determination and his wise administration of military schools. But as a statesman, we must say that he has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. His training and mental make-up do not fit him at all to understand and interpret the spirit of the twentieth century."

Thus China, ruled by a man whose clemency is well-known, is torn by the dissensions of military men, each with his own army, from whose uniforms, ill-fitting and cheap as they are, he gets a "squeeze" from the tailors.

Yet one might almost say that China is unaffected by all these private brawls. The people go about their

Continued on page 916



Justified

*A SERMON BY REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

TEXT—I Cor. 6 : 11. "Justified in the name of the Lord Jesus."

THERE are some words the full meaning of which we must feel as blind men sense the morning light, because it is quite impossible that we should know their full force so long as we are hampered by human limitations, and so long as language, great as it is, is so poor a medium by which to convey our best thoughts.

The word "saved" is such an one. We use this word lightly. We speak of it carelessly, and yet it touches two eternities; for salvation was planned in the eternity that is past, and the fruit of it will reach into the eternity which stretches out ahead of us beyond the grave.

There is a threefold salvation, according to the Scriptures. We are saved from the penalty of sin by the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ upon the cross, and our personal acceptance of him. We are being saved; that is, day by day, by the power of the indwelling Christ, we are being set free from sin's power, just in the proportion that we trust in him and yield our lives unto him. We shall be saved; that is future. If by his death on the cross we are saved from sin's penalty, and by his indwelling we are saved from sin's power, then in the future, when salvation is a completed work, we shall be saved from sin's presence. It is a wonderful word, and no one can fully appreciate the depth of its meaning or the sweep of its power.

To make salvation possible God gave the best he had in Heaven, and that was his only begotten Son. Calvary lifted its head dark against the sin, and the cross waited for its Victim. Jesus himself hurried toward that cross, that he might offer himself as a substitute and sacrifice for sin; and because God gave, and Jesus died, and we accept, salvation is made possible for us.

Free from the law, O happy condition!
Jesus hath bled, and there is remission;
Cursed by the law, and bruised by the fall,
Grace hath redeemed us once for all.

Now are we free—there's no condemnation;
Jesus provides a perfect salvation;
"Come unto me," Oh, hear his sweet call;
Come, and he saves us once for all.

"Children of God!" oh, glorious calling!
Surely his grace will keep us from falling;
Passing from death to life at his call,
Blessed salvation once for all.

"Love" is another such word. Love takes no account of graces; that is, the unlovely becomes the object of affection; the poor, the weak, the wandering, the undone, present a field for its operation.

Love works in spite of failure; that is, one may fall again and again until shipwreck is inevitable, and then love steps in and reclaims the lost, restores the years which the cankerworm hath eaten, and makes it possible for the one who has failed to start life anew again.

Love finds sinners out, unless there is placed in the way of its working the only insurmountable barrier, and that is, the will of man himself. I do not speak of a man's love, because that has limitations. I do not even speak of a mother's love, because that has been known to fail; but I speak of God's love.

"For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind."

"Justified" is another such word, and this is almost, if not quite, the greatest word I know. It really means "to be acquitted at the bar of a righteous judge," or it may be interpreted to mean for one to stand as if he never had sinned. It certainly means to have an open way clearly indicated into the Father's presence, and I know it means that the justified one has a standing before God which neither heaven nor hell may have a right to challenge.

GOD'S promises and provisions for a sinner are wonderful. In the Epistle to the Hebrews we read, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." The negative is a threefold negative, and may be repeated three times, thus: "I will never, never, NEVER leave thee," and it is at least a hint as to the fact that God has not left his trusting ones in the past, that he walks with them in sweet fellowship in the present, and that they are quite safe with him in the future days. So the whole verse in which the text is found should be quoted: "And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." (I Cor. 6 : 11).

"Ye are washed." This expression refers to the past.

"Ye are sanctified," That is a present experience, and means being set free day by day from the power of sin.

"Ye are justified." The blessing of justification is, of course, a present one; but the fruit of justification stretches out into the future, and so we are kept quite safe and go on our way rejoicing.

THERE are two texts of Scriptures which might be quoted in this connection, and which present a striking contrast. ' And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Rev. 20 : 12).

Over against this text in Revelation place Rom. 8:1. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." It is a wonderful thing to know that, being justified, we need have no fear of the judgment!

They told me a story in Wales of an old Welsh preacher who had been famed for his Gospel preaching, who, one night in his dream stood before God, and when asked why sentence should not be pronounced upon him he exclaimed, "My Lord, my case was settled out of court." So has your case and mine been settled out of court, and though our sins may have been as scarlet, or even red like crimson, we stand acquitted at the bar of God and appear before him as if we never had sinned. This is justification.

In Rom. 3 : 24 we read: "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." We are justified, not by works, lest any man should boast; and if works could justify, then many who find themselves powerless in the grip of sin, with lives ruined and undone, would be dismayed.

THERE are two things to remember regarding the blessings which come to us as a result of the death of Christ:

1. Christ in his death met every demand of the righteous law. He was made sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. He died, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. In God's Word it is said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; but in the same Word it is said, "He died that we might live."

2. God's grace is free. With him all of us, by the personal acceptance of Christ, become the objects of it. All sins may be put away because of it. All joy may be to us the fruit of it.

Working will not save me;
  Purest deeds that I can do,
  Honest thoughts and feelings too,
  Cannot form my soul anew
Working will not save me.

But faith in Jesus Christ, the personal acceptance of Jesus Christ, the complete surrender to Christ, this will save.

In Rom. 5:1 we read: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Twenty-five years before this Epistle was written, the stone was rolled away from the door of the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea and Jesus came forth. He walked and talked with those who were round about him in order that he might make them understand that he was real and not a spirit. He bade them handle him and be convinced for themselves.

Concerning his resurrection, the apostle Paul writes as follows: "And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures: and that he was seen of Cephas, and then of the twelve: after that he was seen of about five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time"(I Cor.15:4-8). And when he writes in the Epistle to the Romans concerning his risen Lord, in the fourth chapter and the twenty-fifth verse we read: "Who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification," the apostle Paul must have had a vision of the old day and of the Atonement, and the scapegoat staggering beneath the weight of Israel's sins, and being led by the hand of a fit person into the land where no man lived; and then there must have come to him the vision of his resurrection, and of the fruit of this resurrection, which is the sinner's justification. So in the fifth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans and the first verse we read: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." The word "therefore," which with this Scripture is introduced, connects Paul's expression with all that has preceded in the Epistle to the Romans. It is a wonderful thing to be justified!

"Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. 5:18). The word "justification" is derived from the custom of weighing in scales. When God created the world he weighed the work of his hands in the balance of divine wisdom, and it was full weight, and he pronounced it very good. When he would rebuke a wicked king, he wrote with his fingers over against the wall, "Weighed and found wanting." When God came down at Sinai, he flung the whole world into the scale, the law being in the opposite hand, and the failure was terrible. Then he made a new scale, governed by the law of faith, the foundation of which was the Gospel of his grace. He hung it upon Calvary's cross. All the law was on one side of the scale and Jesus was on the other. You have seen the needle on a scale tremble rise, and fall, then settle to an exact weight. So it was on Calvary's cross. The darkness was increasing, the finger of the scales was trembling, until at last he bowed his head and gave up the ghost, and said, "It is finished."

WE are justified evidently by what we have and are. The following words are wonderful indeed. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." (Rom. 5 : 1-5).

We have peace with God, peace which passeth understanding.

We have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and we come with boldness into his presence.

We rejoice in the hope of the glory of God and although the days be dark and dreary, we know that the day of days is just ahead of us.

We glory in tribulation, because tribulation is a school from which we graduate into a wonderful experience.

The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, and this makes life worth while.

"My life is a wearisome journey,
  I am sick of the dust and the heat;
The rays of the sun beat upon me,
  The briars are wounding my feet.

"But the city to which I am going
  Will more than my trials repay;
All the toils of the road will seem nothing
  When I get to the end of the way."

It is no question with God as to how many times we have sinned, nor how far we have wandered away from him. It is only a question as to whether or no we will return unto the Lord and let him have mercy upon us. When we do return to him, he will forgive our sins and forget them, and because he forgets them, we shall never face them at the judgment bar of God.

Let us keep it constantly in mind that if we are Christians, having accepted Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour, we are justified freely and forever; we shall never appear in judgment for sin, for Christ our Substitute hath put away our sin by the sacrifice of himself. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

◆

Only good thoughts make a man fit company for himself.

Fashions are like fire—a good servant but a bad master.

---

*Dr. Chapman is Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, and one of America's leading evangelists.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Shields of the Soul

SUNDAY, September 2. Ps. 47 : 9. "The shields of the earth belong unto God." All fine protectives are the gifts of God. All that is spiritually defensive and sanative is the bounty of his grace. He holds in his hand everything that preserves the inner life from the invasion of disease, and keeps it strong, and sweet, and healthy. All the shields are his; and everything that is in any way a shield of the soul can be found in his great armory. We need not inquire elsewhere for the shields, nor need we seek elsewhere, for all such journeys will fail of their quest. Whatever shield we are lacking we can find in God. The armory is not on the other side of the world; it is nearer than the doors of our own home.

Take, for instance, that very fine shield which we call "good spirits." That is a splendid shield for the soul, and it is a rare protective when circumstances are gloomy, and many are inclined to be morbid, and all sort of deadly germs are in the air. Men and women travel round the world in search of good spirits. They visit lively health-resorts in hope that some spark of gaiety may kindle a cheery fire in their own souls. They visit countries where they hope the very novelty of their surroundings may stir the spirits into bright and happy expectation. They set out to find good spirits in travel. And often the journey is a very pathetic failure, and the weary pilgrim returns home under the weight of a heavier depression. Let him try a shorter journey. Let him inquire for the shield in the armory of God. Good spirits are the gift of the Spirit, and in the energies of the Spirit we are defended against the pestilence that walketh in darkness. "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

Or take the famous shield of love. There is none like it! "Love endureth all things." Nothing can break through the shield of love, and destroy the life that shelters behind it. The soul that wears this shield is gloriously immune. Where can we get the shield? What ethical store can provide it? What humanitarian cult can supply it? What do they hand across the counter when we ask for this defense? What society is there in the city which promises to brace and defend the soul with the shield of love? Every door at which we knock mocks our askings, and we turn empty away. Love is one of the shields of the Lord, and it is waiting for us as one of the gifts of his grace. "The fruit of the Spirit is love."

And so it is with every shield that can protect the soul. They all belong unto God. We cannot buy them. We cannot have them as the prizes of long travels. They are in God's hands, and we must take them from him. "'But first,' said they, 'let us go into the armory.' So they did; and when he came there they harnessed him from head to foot with what was of proof, lest perhaps he should meet with assaults in the way. He being therefore thus accoutered, walked out with his friends to the gate." J. H. J.

A Fortunate Family

MONDAY, September, 3. John 11 : 5. "And Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus." That must have been a beautiful home in Bethany, and if it had not been, the frequent presence of Jesus would have made it so. It may not have been a home of luxury (not all such homes are beautiful), but it was composed of souls with love and harmony and mutual confidence and high ideals and simple faith in simple things like friendship, hospitality and truth. There is a variety of temperament and character in that family. The sisters are very unlike each other, and the brother is unlike both. Martha is the motherly one of the circle, practical, domestic, unselfish, undemonstrative, overburdened with her cares, over anxious that the house should be well kept and the meals well cooked, and well served. Mary is the dreamer, poetical, emotional, demonstrative. She reads while Martha sews. She is not indolent, but visionary. If Martha's great word is duty, Mary's is beauty. With Mary, feeling has all the authority of conscience. Then there was the brother, substantial, thoughtful, philosophical, silent. He feels more than he says, knows more than he feels. He is more akin in temperament to Martha than to Mary; yet loving both alike, he is himself loved by them.

It is not at all more certain that Jesus loved Lazarus than that he loved the others also; for thus it is written: "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus." Blessed home, where Jesus rested and was fed! Blessed hearts, whom Jesus loved! He loved Martha because of her fidelity to duty. He loved Mary because of her teachableness. He loved Lazarus because of his sterling worth. "Lazarus was solid, not stolid; reflective, not loquacious." So, it would seem, Jesus had a special reason for every individual love of his. He loved John because he was a man of fine spiritual sensibility. He loved Matthew because he was methodical. He loved Peter because of his zeal. He loved the rich young ruler because he had lived a clean life and because he "answered discreetly." He loved the centurion because of his great faith. If there was any lovable trait in anybody Jesus met, he found it, recognized it, honored, and utilized it. It was that searching, sifting love of Christ that made him the builder of a kingdom out of material which others would have cast away. So we love him because he first loved us. C. C. A.

The Tears of Jesus

TUESDAY, September 4. Luke 19 : 41. "When he was come near, he beheld the city and wept over it." Tears of Jesus! What solemn lessons they convey! They were not wept for joy, but wrung from his truly human heart by grief over the impending doom which his divine eye beheld hanging over the holy city. His was a tearful misery. In the days of his flesh he offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears. So the writer to the Hebrews tells us. In that comprehensive record are included not only this instance and the other, at the tomb of Lazarus, where Jesus wept, but innumerable occasions which are not told at all in the sacred narrative. How often may his eyes have become moist during his journeys when he stood among the wretched, when he beheld the degradation of the elect race, the blight of sin and the rule of vice in hearts that should have been resplendent with the glory of holiness! How often may he have bedewed the grass on mountain tops where he spent nights in prayer with bitter tears over the deplorable condition of sin-stricken mankind!

Ponder, O man, this awful fact: that the holy Son of God in his incarnate state stands weeping among his brethren; his sensitive nature is smitten with the consciousness of men's lost condition under sin, and still more with the perception that men do not seem to feel their shame and ruin at all. How gay and merry they can be even while they are approaching the brink of the precipice, yea, are slipping over it! What an awakening theirs will be when they realize their fate as the tearful Jesus realized it! W. H. T. D.

Force of Example

WEDNESDAY, September 5. Prov. 10 : 7. "The memory of the just is blessed." The memory of evil characters warns us, but the memory of the good influences us to follow them as they followed Christ. Men after God's own heart were those like David, who by his help overcame the evil in his nature and led Israel and succeeding generations to holier living. Every one should desire to preserve a good name for posterity.

How precious to the family of children is the memory of faithful parents! Is it not easier to emulate examples than to obey percepts? The portrait of our Lord's sinless life in his miracles of blessing, his kindly manner under all provocation, his suffering, death and resurrection, is everywhere in the memory of mankind stronger even than his wonderful words.

The victors who have obtained the crown of life were men of like passion with us, surrounded by similar conditions, helped by the same Saviour. What they did we can do, and, like them, be in everlasting remembrance. Do we not need every aid and motive to help us to noble living? Then add this one: live for those who love you and who wait for you at heaven's portal. Honor their memory, treasure their devotion, that your home may be established in the land that is fairer than day.

If Methodists hold sacred the memory of Wesley, Presbyterians of Knox and Lutherans of Luther, so each individual may feel the inspiration of the lives of holy persons who would delight to count us among the seals of their apostleship in the Lord. Let us then so live that we may one day join in the songs and everlasting joy which is the heritage of the blessed. E. W. C.

The Value of Humanity

THURSDAY, September 6. Isa. 13 : 12. "I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir." There has come into the world a new sense of the worth of human life since Jesus of Nazareth lived and wrought and taught. It is most remarkable that he who knew man most deeply thought most highly of him. That is a good definition of a friend—one who knows all about us and still believes in us. Then Jesus is our best friend. Three thousand years ago pyramids could be built without immense cost, though it required the labor of a hundred thousand men for thirty years to complete one of them. What were a hundred thousand human lives in the eyes of a Pharaoh, a Rameses, a Ptolemy? What were they in the view of a Cæsar? Along the Tiber there are engraved markers in the walls of the palaces indicating the high-water mark of the river at flood tide. When an old Roman philosopher said, "I am a man, and nothing human is alien to me," the high-water mark of paganism was reached. It required a lofty exercise of spirit to reach that height. So ample a soul as Aristotle had declared, "We can not dispense with farmers and mechanics, but these have nothing to do with public affairs, and are not worthy of the name citizen. They are incapable of greatness of soul, because they work for wages and therefore must be of a mercenary spirit." Into a world accustomed to such sentiments as these, Christ came with a totally different conception of the worth of humanity, teaching us that every one of us is potentially great because we are the children of the Heavenly Father. When that idea took root in human thought it had within it the power and potency of all coming freedom. C. C. A.

Prayer

FRIDAY, September 7. Ps. 65 : 1, 2. "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion; and unto thee shall the vow be performed. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come." There is a rendering for this text that is more apt: "There is praise for thee in silence, or in resignation." The situation, then, is this: An agrieved soul has come to the temple to pay its devotions to God. Hopes that had been fondly cherished have not materialized, and yet the worshiper is ready to render praise to God. He has brought his petitions before God, whose sovereign prerogative it is to hear, that is, to take account of and to answer, prayer. Now he comes to pay his vow. He interprets even the non-fulfilment of his hope as an answer to his prayer. He understands himself better now that God has said him nay. He kisses the hand that has withholden the gift asked for; for even in withholding the desired gratuity that hand has blessed him. Such an action must be numbered with the noblest deeds of faith. The believer's resignations are a splendid worship, and God is pleased to accept it.

Such trustful submission to the Supreme Will is also the most effectual answer to the many plausible objections to prayer. It seems a reasonable argument against prayer to be told that God in his perfect wisdom knows all things in advance, and there is no need that we tell him; or his will can not be bent to conform to ours; or his general government of the universe and the laws which determine his government are unalterable; hence things will always be as he wills. But these arguments convince no one who has made a trial of prayer. He has the proof of his own experience. Moreoever, he will appeal to the fact that God has invited men to pray and has promised to hear him. W. H. T. D.

Temptation

SATURDAY, September 8. Matt. 6 : 13. "Lead us not into temptation." Our Lord was tempted in all points like as we are. Satan offered him all the nations of the earth, and he seemed to have them to give, for he ruled the Cæsars, and they ruled the world. But Christ only wanted the nations to save them and lift them up into his light and glory. We should resist the devil's offer to give us worldy things. Seeking the kingdom of heaven first is the duty of childhood and youth, but how many make worldly pleasures, riches and honors first, hoping to make peace with God at the last; grasping for both worlds, we lose both.

It is according to Christ's will that every one should be tried as gold in the fire of temptation while he supplies grace and power to bring us off more than conqueror. Should not every young person cry out, "Oh, lead thou me on," not into temptation, but into the power of that life which conquers evil? We do not go alone or stand alone, for all power is with us. It is dangerous to go over on the enemy's ground, among his followers, priding ourselves that we are strong enough to say no. "Pride goeth before a fall." Watchfulness against going near the very doors of the devil's saloons and brothels alone will save you. Don't see how near you can come to the edge of the precipice of ruin, but how far you can keep away.

Satan found Eve near the tree, looking at it and desiring it. Her wishes were already on the side of evil. She almost tempted the tempter to try her, and was ready to accept Satan's "thou shalt not surely die," against God's eternal word. E. W. C.

A Week in the World's News

© International Film Service

The American Mission at Russian Staff Headquarters. Front row, left to right, M.Tereschenko, Gen. Brusiloff, Elihu Root, Gen. Hugh Scott

An Appeal for Peace

POPE BENEDICT'S appeal for peace has not been met with prompt responses from any capital. But it is everywhere being given profound consideration.

The Pontiff in his appeal declares his absolute impartiality toward all the belligerents, toward whom he is drawn by the universal law of charity, and with a common desire to "do them all as much good as possible." The first appeal, two years ago, he regrets, was not heeded. The war has now intensified until it threatens to turn "the civilized world into a field of death," causing Europe to rush "as carried, by a universal folly, to the abyss, and take a hand in its own suicide."

It is to avert this threatened calamity, and in obedience to the voice of humanity and reason, that the Pope renews his appeal. The main issues are stated concretely thus:

> First of all the fundamental points must be that for the material force of arms be substituted the moral force of right, from which shall arise a fair agreement by all for the simultaneous and reciprocal diminution of armament, according to the rules and guarantees to be established, in a measure necessary and sufficient for for the maintenance of public order in each state. Then in the substitution for armies of the institution of arbitration.
>
> Once the supremacy of right has thus been established, all obstacles to the means of communication of the peoples would disappear by assuring, by rules to be fixed later, the true liberty and community of the seas.
>
> As to the damages to repaired and and as to the war expenses, we see no other means of solving the question than by submitting as a general principle complete and reciprocal condonation, which would be justified, moreover, by the immense benefit to be derived from disarmament, so much so that no one will understand the continuation of a similar carnage solely for reasons of an economic order.
>
> On the part of Germany there should be the complete evacuation of Belgium with the guarantee of her full political, military and economic independence toward it. The evacuation of French territory; on the part of other belligerent parties similar restitution of the German colonies.
>
> The same spirit of equity and justice must guide the examination of the other territorial and political questions, notably those relative to Armenia, the Balkan states, and the territories forming part of the old kingdom of Poland, for which, in particular, its noble historical traditions and suffering, particularly undergone in the present war, must win, with justice, the sympathies of nations.

WHILE no official answer had yet come from Great Britain, Premier Lloyd George took unofficial occasion to say in a public speech that Great Britain was "fighting for one thing, and that was victory of democracy over aggressions." All other things wrapped up in the programmes of no matter what

Continued on page 920

Pope Benedict XV

Who calls the World to Peace

ORGANIZING THE NEW ARMY. It was announced on August 13 that the entire 687,000 men composing the first contingent of the National Army would be under training early in October, the first thirty per cent. to start for the cantonments on September 5, the next thirty per cent., on September 15, another thirty per cent., September 30, while the remaining ten per cent. would be mobilized as soon as possible after that date. In farming communities, the local exemption boards were expected to arrange a list of those in the first contingent with the local crop conditions in mind. It was also announced that the conscientious objectors to war would not be excused from serving, but would be drafted, sent to the mobilization camps and assigned to those army organizations known as non-combatant troops, such as hospital corps and quartermaster's corps. They will also be assigned with labor battalions, as messengers, motor drivers, or clerks, and while they will do no fighting, they may be exposed to shell fire in their work back of the fighting lines. District exemption boards began their work about the middle of August. On August 16 the regular army had been recruited to 6,179 men above the war strength quota. . . . The first division of National Guard troops to be organized for service in France will be known as the 42d Division, will consist of approximately 19,000 men under command of Major-General William A. Mann, and will be made up of picked National Guard troops from various states. It was expected that this division would sail soon for France and that it would complete its training behind the fighting lines. . . . A contingent of American troops paraded in London, August 15, being reviewed by the King and cheered by the people, who crowded the lines of march. General Sibert on the same day reviewed the whole of the American expedition under his command.

Corporation to Control Wheat. A corporation was formed on August 15 by the Food Administration Committee, through which it is expected to take over the entire 1917 wheat crop. The entire capital stock of $50,000,000 is held by the Federal government. The corporation will buy and sell wheat at the principal terminals, and will act as broker for the milling interests. It was reported that a scale of prices would be established from the farm to the store. The commission to fix the price is composed of twelve men representing producers and consumers, and headed by Henry A. Garfield, president of Williams College. Mr. Hoover has announced that as soon as the wheat situation is in hand, the food administration will place sugar and dairy products under supervision.

Naval Guards German Prisoners. The Navy Department announced on August 12 that the armed Standard Oil tanker Campana had been sunk on August 6 by a submarine. Forty-seven survivors reached land in safety. It was believed that the captain of the steamer and four of the members of the armed guard were held prisoners on the submarine.

British Labor Backs Henderson. A joint meeting on August 14 of the Executive Committee of the National Labor Party, the Parliamentary Committee, the Trade Union Congress, endorsed the action of Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor Party, in his approval of the Stockholm conference, and in his resignation from the war cabinet. The Russian government has let it be known that it did

Continued on page 920

Younger Every Day

MOST of us are only children grown up; many of us have forgotten the fairy folk who peopled the days of our childhood. Robert Riggs and Margaret E. Sangster have collaborated in the production of a delightful series of pictures and poems which will take every reader of the Christian Herald back to his early school-days, and which will inspire in the younger readers that quickening of imagination which is essential to a proper valuation of mature life. The series will begin early in the fall.

Next week; an official story of just what the Food Administration expects to achieve; a heart searching story of missionary sacrifice, the news of the week, and the regular monthly message from Dr. Jowett.

The news in pictures, too.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

VII The Antichrist, His History and His Doom

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

IN dealing with a subject of this kind, time spent in review is not always misspent. Therefore let us sweep the horizon once more, the better to relate the present mountain peak of prophecy to the rest of the range. We have seen:

(1) That God has a purpose of redemption for the race revealed in the promise of Eden, that the Seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head.

(2) At a certain point in time, he called out the nation of Israel as an instrument in the execution of this promise.

(3) The failure of Israel to fulfil her mission has caused her to be set aside temporarily while the "times of the Gentiles" are in process.

(4) These times are to come to an end in catastrophic judgment by and by, at which time Israel will have been regathered to her own land and restored to fellowship with God in order to the renewal of her commission as his witness to the world. The millennial blessing follows this.

(5) But now, while Israel is rejected and the "times of the Gentiles" are in their course, God is doing a new thing in the earth. He is calling out a people for his Name from all the nations. This people are being formed into the body of Christ, which, when its number is completed, will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and to reign with him over the millenial earth.

TO return now to those catastrophic judgments. When will they fall upon the earth? What will be their character? And where, and in whom, will they be focused? To this last inquiry we address ourselves in this study.

The prophet Daniel is our authority for saying that the Gentile nations, which in earlier times were federated under Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander and the Cæsars, shall again be federated under a secular despot mightier and wickeder than they. He is described by him in chapters 6 and 8 as a "little horn," in chapter 9 : 26 as a "prince" of the Roman people, and in chapter 11 : 36 as "the king."

The details of the description indicate his intellectuality and boldness: "eyes like the eyes of a man and a mouth speaking great things." These "great things" are "words against the Most High," and he "shall wear out the saints of the Most High," and "think to change times and laws." "His power shall be mighty," and "he shall destroy wonderfully," and "through his policy he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand." His time will be "the time of the end," i.e., as we learn from other Scriptures, the last seven years of the present age, during which time he will "make a firm covenant" with the Jews then residing in Jerusalem. This covenant he will break in the middle of that period and "cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease;" he will deny the Jews liberty to worship God, and will set up his own image to be worshiped on a pinnacle of the restored temple. "Yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him."

In other Old Testament Scriptures he is spoken of as "the king of Babylon," prouder even than Nebuchadnezzar—"I will be like the Most High"—but he "shall be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit" (Isa. 14; Micah 5 : 6). In Zechariah 11 : 15-17, he is spoken of as a shepherd, but a foolish and a worthless one, who "shall eat the flesh of the fat and tear their hoofs in pieces."

II

THE New Testament takes up the story of his career in the Gospels. It is a common opinion of expositors that our Lord refers to him in John 5 : 43, where, rebuking his fellow countrymen for their unbelief and rejection of himself, he says: "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." It is thus not improbable that this coming one may be a Jew, but in any event he will be accepted by restored Israel as their predicted Messiah. It is this fact which in a later writing of the New Testament gives him the title of "the Antichrist."

It is in the Olivet discourse of Matt. 24, however, that our Lord refers to him more particularly. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place" (verse 15). This "abomination of desolation" is none other than the wicked "prince" of Dan. 9 : 27, and the same "little horn," who shall have his image placed on a pinnacle of the temple, where all the passers-by may behold it, and who himself on some occasion, or occasions, will be found sitting in the temple giving out that he himself is God (II. Thess. 2 : 4).

This allusion to Paul's words in II. Thessalonians brings us to the next New Testament reference. In his first epistle to that church he had expatiated on the coming of Christ for his church; but at this time a grievous persecution seems to have been raging in the city, and some of the Christians had come to believe that "the day of the Lord" had come. In other words they thought they were already in the tribulation period, which a better intelligence doubtless would have led them to see could not be true while the church was still on the earth. Moreoever, they had been misled by a forged letter, as from Paul, that contributed to their error.

The apostle is now seeking to correct this, and he tells them that that day shall not come until after the apostasy and "the man of sin (or lawlessness) be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above (or against) all that is called God or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

A further description follows in the same chapter, in which it is said that his "coming is after the working of Satan with all power, and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish." He will come to an end, however, for "the Lord shall consume him with the breath of his mouth, and shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming."

This may be as good a place as any to say that the common application of these words to the Pope of Rome does not fit. When he is carried into St. Peter's, he may be seated somewhat higher than what is called the "tabernacle of the host"; but still, St. Peter's is not the "temple of God." That temple was erected in Jerusalem by Solomon, according to the instruction of his father David, who said: "All this the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern" (I Chron. 28 : 19). And there it is to be reerected, according to the prophets; and there the "abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet" is yet to be seen.

It is the apostle John who specifically calls this person the Antichrist. "Who is the liar," he exclaims, "but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is the Antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son" (I John 2 : 22). Another evidence is this that the Pope is not he, for the Pope does not deny that Jesus is the Christ. The Pope, on the contrary, calls himself the "vicar of Christ," and in a way professes to exalt him. He does not deny the virgin birth of Christ, but makes much of it rather, in the form of Mariolatry. Neither does he deny his atoning sacrifice, nor his resurrection, nor his coming again, though the church he represents weakens these great facts and almost nullifies the doctrines they sustain by her traditions.

Indeed, Protestantism contains more of the deadly elements of Antichristianism today than Roman Catholicism. It is time our eyes were opened to this fact. The destructive criticism of the Bible which began in Germany less than one hundred years ago, and which holds sway in so many of our Protestant theological seminaries at this time, and is voiced in so many of our Protestant pulpits and our religious periodicals, is doing as much as, if not more than, the Papacy to prepare the way for the coming of him whom humanity, in its blindness, will worship as the "Very God."

III

WE now come to the book of Revelation. More is said about this being here than in any other part of the Bible. And the reason is that Revelation deals very particularly with the events upon the earth during the last seven years of this age, when the Antichrist will be revealed and have come into his great power.

By many he is thought to be the rider of the white horse of Rev. 6 : 2, who goes forth "conquering and to conquer." He it is in Rev. 11 : 2, who is treading the holy city (Jerusalem) "under foot forty and two months," the latter half of the period of seven years. He it is who, "ascending out of the bottomless pit, shall make war" against God's two witnesses in that holy city "and shall overcome and kill them."

He is the "beast" which John saw as revealed in chapter 13, "coming up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy." "And the dragon [i.e., Satan] gave him his power, and his throne, and great authority." "And all the world wondered after the beast," saying, "Who is able to make war with him?" "And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God." "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations."

The fact that this beast comes "up out of the sea identifies him with the vision of Daniel where he saw the four beasts come up out of the sea. The "sea" is commonly typical of the Gentile nations, and the particular sea in mind just now is doubtless the Mediterranean, the center, so to speak, of the Roman Empire, and hence the center of what is called the prophetic earth. The "ten horns" are a further mark of identification, showing that the Roman Empire is referred to, not as it has been known during its entire existence, but as it shall be known in its last form. The "seven heads" are a new feature not referred to in any earlier prophecy of the beast, but symbolizing, it is thought, the different forms of government in which the Roman Empire has existed, from the absolute monarchy of Nebuchadnezzar's period to the constitutional monarchy and democracy of our own time. One of the heads was "as it were wounded to death," the prophet says, and "his deadly wound was healed." In other words, here is the renewal, as by Satanic power, of a certain form of government under which the Roman Empire once existed, but which had passed away. It is this renewal that causes all the world to wonder, and to say, "Who is able to make war with him?"

But this chapter also contains a revelation of another beast "coming up out of the earth." "He had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." "And he exerciseth all the authority of the first beast before him [or in his sight], and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast." "And he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do." And he caused "that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." And "no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." "And his number is 666."

This second beast comes up out of the "earth" rather than the "sea." If the latter symbolizes the Gentile nations, the former symbolizes Israel, so that this "false prophet," as he is called later on, may be a Jew, while the beast before whom he exercises his power may be a Gentile. The first "beast" is the supreme civil or political power at the end of the age, but the second "beast" is the ecclesiastical power, or what will stand for it at that time. His "two horns like a lamb" seem to set him off in contrast to Christ, but since "he spake as a dragon," it is evident that he is energized by Satan. Note the trinity of evil: The dragon (Satan), the beast, the false prophet! What a caricature of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit!

Nor let it be forgotten that all this is in the name of religion. At the beginning of Gentile dominion, Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, sought to ordain a public worship for all his subjects, by setting up his image to be worshiped, and here history repeats itself. "Nothing promotes discord among nations as diversity of religion." Hence, when the Roman Empire is once more federated politically, that federation will be sealed by what another aptly calls "a new common-sense, matter-of-fact sort of worship, obligatory upon every one," and focused on the image of the beast, the great emperor himself. This is the abomination of desolation which will be set up in the Jewish temple, while perhaps fac-similes will be found in all the cathedrals and churches of Christendom in that day.

And the second beast "causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast." He deceives them by the miracles he does. Not pretended miracles, be it remembered, but real miracles. This is the time predicted in II. Thess. 2, when God shall send upon men strong delusion for their sin, that they should believe a lie; for while the miracles are real, the worship they sustain is false.

And no insubordination will be tolerated. All must receive a mark, either on the hand or on the forehead. No man can buy or sell without it. This mark will be the name of the beast or the number of his name. That is, it may be expressed in letters, or in cabalistic numbers. In the Greek and Hebrew languages letters are used to express numbers as well as sounds.

"Putting aside vain guesses and efforts of ingenious men, the general idea of what this means is plain enough. Seven is God's number in his present dealings with the world, while six is the utmost reach of man." This number is first mentioned in connection with man, i.e., in his creation on the sixth day, and, as Bullinger says, it thus becomes his "hall-mark," stamping everything with which it is used as belonging to him. God's great human opponents have been so marked. Goliath was six cubits in height, his spear's head weighed six shekels, and he had six pieces of armor. Nebuchadnezzar's image was sixty cubits high and six broad, and six instruments of worship summoned its worshipers.

Continued on page 920

THE WITNESS

By Grace Livingston Hill Lutz

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

CHAPTER I

LIKE a sudden cloudburst the dormitory had gone into a frenzy of sound. Doors slammed, feet trampled, hoarse voices reverberated, heavy bodies flung themselves along the corridor, the very electrics trembled. One moment all was quiet with a contented after-dinner-peace-before-study-hours; the next it was as if all the forces of earth had broken forth.

Paul Courtland stepped to his door and threw it back.

"Come on, Court, see the fun!" called the football half-back, who was slopping along with two dripping fire-buckets of water.

"What's doing?"

"Going to make Little Stevie cuss! Better get in on it! Some fight! Tennelly sent 'Whisk' for a whole basket of superannuated cackle-berries"—he motioned back to a freshman bearing a basket of ancient eggs—"we're going to blindfold Steve and put oysters down his back, and then finish up with the fire-hose. Oh, the seven plagues of Egypt aren't in it with what we're going to do; and when we get done if Little Stevie don't scold, I'll eat my hat. Little Stevie's got good stuff in him if it can only be brought out. We're a-going to bring it out. Then we're going to celebrate by taking him over to the theater and making him see 'The Scarlet Woman.' It'll be a miracle, all right, if he has any of his whining Puritanical ideas left in him after we get through with him. Come on! Get on the job!"

Drifting along with the surging tide of students, Courtland sauntered down the corridor to the door at the extreme end where roomed the victim.

HE rather liked Stephen Marshall. There was good stuff in him; all the fellows recognized that. Only he was woefully unsophisticated, abnormally innocent, frankly religious, and a little too openly white in his life. It seemed a rebuke to the other fellows, unconscious though it might be. He felt with the rest that the fellow needed a lesson. Especially since the bald way in which he had dared to stand for the old-fashioned view of miracles in Biblical Lit. class that morning. Of course an ignorance like that wouldn't go down, and it was best he should learn it at once and get to be a good fellow without loss of time. A little gentle rubbing off of the "mamma's-good-little-boy" veneering would do him good. He wasn't sure but with such a course Marshall might even be eligible for the frat. that year. He sauntered along with his hands in his pockets; a handsome, capable, powerful figure; not taking any part in the preparations, but mildly interested in the plans. His presence lent enthusiasm to the gathering. He was high in authority. A star athlete, an A student, president of his fraternity, having made the Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year, and now in his senior year being chairman of the student exec. There would be no trouble with the authorities of the college if Court was along to give countenance.

COURTLAND stood opposite the end door when it was unceremoniously thrust open and the hilarious mob rushed in. From his position with his back against the wall he could see Stephen lift his fine head from his book and rise to greet them. There was surprise and a smile of welcome on his face. Courtland thought it almost a pity to reward such open-heartedness as they were about to do; but such things were necessary in the making of men. He watched developments with interest.

A couple of belated participants in the fray arrived breathlessly, shedding their mackinaws as they ran, and casting them down at Courtland's feet.

"Look after those, will you, Court? We've got to get in on this," shouted one as he thrust a noisy bit of flannel head-gear at Courtland.

Courtland gave the garments a kick behind him and stood watching.

There was a moment's tense silence while they told the victim what they had come for, and while the light of welcome in Stephen Marshall's eyes melted and changed into lightning. A dart of it went with a searching gleam out into the hall, and seemed to recognize Courtland as he stood idly smiling, watching the proceedings. Then the lightning was withheld in the gray eyes, and Marshall seemed to conclude that, after all, the affair must be a huge kind of joke, seeing Courtland was out there. Courtland had been friendly. He must not let his temper rise. The kindly light came into the eyes again, and for an instant Marshall almost disarmed the boldest of them with his brilliant smile. He would be game as far as he understood. That was plain. It was equally plain that he did not understand yet what was expected of him.

PAT McCLUNY, thick of neck, brutal of jaw, low-browed, red of face, blunt of speech, the finest, most unmerciful tackler on the foot-ball team, stepped up to Stephen and said a few words in a low tone. Courtland could not hear what they were save that they ended with an oath.

Instantly Stephen Marshall drew himself back, and up to his great height, lightning and thunder clouds in his gray eyes, his powerful arms folded, his fine head crowned with its wealth of beautiful hair thrown a trifle back and up, his lips shut in a thin, firm line, his whole attitude that of the fighter; but he did not speak. He only looked from one to another of the wild young mob, searching for a friend; and, finding none, he stood firm, defying them all. There was something splendid in his bearing that sent a thrill of admiration down Courtland's spine as he watched, his habitual half-cynical smile of amusement still lying unconsciously about his lips, while a new respect for the country student was being born in his heart.

Pat, with a half-lowering of his bullet head and a twisting of his ugly jaw, came a step nearer and spoke again, a low word with a rumble like the menace of a bull or a storm about to break.

With a sudden unexpected movement Stephen's arm shot forth and struck the fellow in the jaw, sending him reeling half across the room into the crowd.

With a snarl like a stung animal Pat recovered himself and rushed at Stephen, hurling himself forward with a stream of oaths, and calling curses down upon himself if he did not make Stephen utter worse before he was done with him. Pat was the "man" who was in college for football. It took the united efforts of his classmates, his frat, and the faculty to keep his studies within decent hailing distance of eligibility for playing. He came of a race of bullies whose culture was all in their fists.

Pat went straight for the throat of his victim. His fighting blood was up and he was mad clear down to the bone. Nobody could give him a blow like that in the presence of others and not suffer for it. What had started as a joke had now become real with Pat; and the frenzy of his own madness quickly spread to those daring spirits who were about him, and who disliked Stephen for his strength of character.

They clinched, and Stephen, fresh from his father's remote Western farm, matched his mighty, untaught strength against the trained bully of a city street.

FOR a moment there was dead silence while the crowd in breathless astonishment watched and held in check their own eagerness. Then the mob spirit broke forth as some one called out:

"Pray for a miracle, Stevie! Pray for a miracle! You'll need it, old boy!"

The mad spirit which had incited them to the reckless fray broke forth anew and a medley of shouts arose.

The fight raged on for minutes more, and still Stephen stood with his back against the wall, fighting gasping, struggling, but bravely facing them all; a disheveled object with rotten eggs streaming from his face and hair, his clothes plastered with offensive yolks. Pat had him by the throat, but still he stood and fought as best he could.

Some one seized the bucket of water and deluged both. Some one else shouted, "Get the hose!" and more fellows tore off their coats and threw them down at Courtland's feet; some one tore Pat away, and the great fire-hose was turned upon the victim.

Gasping at last, and all but unconscious, he was set upon his feet, and harried back to life again. Not one word had he uttered since they entered his room.

"Cut it out, fellows! It's no use!" shouted one onlooker. "You can't set him cussing. He never learned how. Better cut it out!"

Some one suggested it was getting late and the show would begin. Some one else suggested they must dress up Little Stevie for his first play. There was a mad rush for garments. Any garments, no matter whose. A pair of sporty trousers, socks of brilliant colors, not mates, an old football shoe on one foot, a dancing-pump on the other, a white vest and a swallow-tail put on backward, collar and tie also backward, a large pair of white cotton gloves. Stephen bore it all, grim, unflinching, until they set him up before his mirror and let him see himself, completing the costume by a high silk hat crammed down upon his wet curls. He looked into the mirror and suddenly he turned upon them and smiled his broad, merry smile! After all that he could see the joke and smile! He never opened his lips nor spoke—just smiled!

"He's a pretty good guy! He's game, all right!" murmured some one in Courtland's ear. And then, half shamefacedly, they caught him high upon their shoulders and bore him down the stairs and out the door.

THEY swarmed into the theater, with Stephen in their midst, and took noisy occupancy. Opera-glasses were turned their way, and the girls nudged one another and talked about the man in the middle with the queer garments.

The persecutions had by no means ceased because they had landed their victim in a public place. They made him ridiculous at every breath. They took off his hat, arranged his collar, and smoothed his hair as if he were a baby. They wiped his nose with many a flourishing handkerchief, and pointed out objects of interest about the theater in open derision of his supposed ignorance, to the growing amusement of those of the audience who were their neighbors. And when the curtain rose on the most notoriously flagrant play the city boasted, they added to its flagrance by their whispered explanations and remarks.

Stephen, in his ridiculous garb, sat in their midst, a prisoner, and watched the play he would not have chosen to see; watched it with a face of growing indignation; a face so speaking in its righteous wrath that those about who saw him turned to look again, and somehow felt condemned for being there.

He was not smiling now. His face had that set, grim look of the faithful soldier taken prisoner and tortured to give information about his army's plans. Stephen's eyes shone true, and his lips were set firmly together.

BUT suddenly a smothered cry arose. A breath of fear stirred through the house. The smell of smoke swept in from a sudden open door. The actors paused, grew white, and swerved in their places; then one by one fled out of the scene. The audience arose and turned to panic, even as a flame swept up and licked the very curtain while it fell.

All was confusion!

The football team, trained to meet emergencies, forgot their cruel play and scattered, over seats and railing, everywhere, to fire-escapes and doorways, taking command of wild, stampeding people, showing their training and their courage.

Stephen, thus suddenly set free, glanced about him, and saw a few feet away an open door, felt the fresh breeze of evening upon his hot forehead, and knew the upper back fire-escape was close at hand. By some strange whim of a panic-maddened crowd but few had discovered this exit, high above the seats in the balcony; for all had rushed below and were struggling in a wild, frantic mass, trampling one another under foot in a mad struggle to reach the doorways. The flames were sweeping over the platform now, licking out into the very pit of the theater, and people were terrified. Stephen saw in an instant that the upper door, being farthest away from the center of the fire, was the place of greatest safety. With one frantic leap he gained the aisle, strode up to the doorway, glanced out into the night to take in the situation; cool, calm, quiet, with the still stars overhead, down below the open iron stairway of the fire-escape, and a darkened street with people like tiny puppets moving on their way. Then turning back, he tore off the grotesque coat and vest, the confining collar, and threw them from him. He plunged down the steps of the aisle to the railing of the gallery, and, leaning there in his shirtsleeves and the queer striped trousers, he put his hands like a megaphone about his lips and shouted:

"Look up! Look up! There is a way to escape up here! Look up!"

SOME poor struggling ones heard him and looked up. A little girl was held up by her father to the strong arms reached out from the low front of the balcony. Stephen caught her and swung her up beside him, pointing her up to the door, and shouting to her to go quickly down the fire-escape, even while he reached out his other hand to catch a woman whom willing hands below were lifting up. Men climbed upon the seats and vaulted up when they heard the cry and saw the way of safety; and some stayed and worked bravely beside Stephen, wrenching up the seats and piling them for a ladder to help the women up. More just clambered up and fled to the fire-escape, out into the night and safety.

But Stephen had no thought of flight. He stayed where he was, with cracking muscles, sweat-grimed brow, and worked, his breath coming in quick, sharp gasps as he frantically helped man, woman, child, one after another, like sheep huddling over a flood.

Courtland was there.

He had lingered a moment behind the rest in the corner in the dormitory corridor, glancing into the disfigured room; water, egg-shells, ruin, disorder everywhere! A little object on the floor, a picture in a cheap oval metal frame, caught his eye. It was the picture of Stephen Marshall's mother, which he had seen upon the student's desk a few days before, when he had sauntered in to look the new man over. Something unexplained made him step in across the water and débris and pick it up. It was the picture, still unscarred, but with a great streak of rotten egg across the plain, placid features. He recalled the tone in which the son had pointed out the picture and said, "That's my mother!" and again he followed an impulse and wiped off the smear, setting the picture high on the shelf, where it looked down upon the depredation like some hallowed saint above a carnage.

Then Courtland sauntered on to his room, completed his toilet, and followed to the theater. He had not wanted to get mixed up too much in the affair. He thought the fellows were going a little too far with a good thing, perhaps. He found a seat where he could watch what was going on without being actually a part of it. If anything should come to the ears of the faculty that things had gone too far, a word from himself would check them.

Courtland was rather bored with the play, and was almost on the point of going back to study when the cry arose and the panic followed.

COURTLAND was no coward. He tore off his handsome overcoat and rushed to meet the emergency. On the opposite side of the gallery, high up by another fire-escape, he rendered efficient assistance to many of the panic-stricken multitude.

The fire was gaining in the pit; and still there were people down there, swarms of them, struggling, crying, lifting piteous hands for assistance. Still Stephen Marshall reached from the gallery and pulled up, one after another, poor creatures, and still the helpless thronged and cried for aid.

Dizzy, blinded, his eyes filled with smoke, his muscles trembling with the terrible strain, he stood at his post. The minutes seemed interminable hours, and still he worked, with heart pumping painfully, and mind that seemed to have no thought save to reach down for another and another, and point up to safety.

Then into the midst of the confusion there arose an instant of great and awful silence.

Paul Courtland, high in his chosen station, working eagerly, successfully, calmly, looked down to see the cause of this sudden arresting of the universe; and there, below, was the pit full of flame, with people struggling and disappearing into fiery depths below.

Just above the pit stood Stephen, lifting aloft a little child with frightened eyes and long streaming curls. He swung him high and turned to stoop again; then with his stooping came the crash; the rending, grinding, groaning, twisting of all that held those great galleries in place.

One instant Stephen was standing by that crimson-velvet railing, with his lifted hand pointing the way to safety for the child, the flaming fire lighting his face with glory, his hair a halo about his head, and in the next instant, even as his hand was held out to save another, the gallery fell, crashing into the fiery, burning furnace! And Stephen, with his face shining like an angel's, went down and disappeared with the rest, while the consuming fire swept up and covered them. Paul Courtland closed his eyes on the scene, and caught hold of the door by which he stood. He did not realize that he was standing on a tiny ledge, all that was left him of footing, high, alone, above that burning pit where his fellow student had gone down; nor that he had escaped as by a miracle. There he stood and turned away his face, sick and dizzy with the sight, blinded by the dazzling flames, shut in to that tiny spot by a sudden wall of smoke that swept in about him. Yet in all the danger and the horror the only thought that came was, "That was a man!"

Stephen, with his face shining like an angel's, went down with the rest

CHAPTER II

PAUL COURTLAND never knew how he had been saved from that perilous position high up on a ledge in the top of the theater, with the burning, fiery furnace below him—whether his senses came back sufficiently to guide him along the narrow footing that was left to the door of the fire-escape, where some one rescued him, or whether a friendly hand risked all and reached out to draw him to safety.

He only knew that back there in that blank daze of suspended time, before he grew to recognize the whiteness of the hospital walls and the rattle of the nurse's starched skirt along the corridor, there was a long period when he was shut in with four high walls of smoke. Smoke that reached to heaven, roofing him away from it, and had its foundations down in the burning fiery pit where he could hear lost souls struggling with smothered cries for help. Smoke that filled his throat, eyes, brain, soul. Terrible, enfolding, imprisoning smoke; thick, yellow, gray, menacing! Smoke that shut his soul away from all the universe, as if he had been suddenly blotted out, and made him feel how stark alone he had been born, and always would be evermore.

HE seemed to have lain within those slowly approaching walls of smoke a century or two ere he became aware that he was not alone, after all. There was a Presence there beside him. Light, and a Presence! Blinding light. It radiated from the Presence beside him. And there was a Voice, calling his name. He seemed to have heard the call years back in his life somewhere. There was something about it, too, that made his heart leap in answer.

He could not look up, yet he could see the face of the Presence now. What was there so strangely familiar, as if he had been looking upon that face but a few moments before? He knew. It was that brave spirit come back from the fire. Come, perhaps, to lead him out of of this daze of smoke and darkness. He spoke, and his own voice sounded glad and ringing:

"I know you now. You are Stephen Marshall. You were in college. You were down there in the theater just now, saving men."

"Yes, I was in college," the Voice spoke, "and I was down there just now, saving men. But I am not Stephen Marshall. Look again."

And suddenly he understood.

"Then you are Stephen Marshall's Christ! The Christ he spoke of in the class that day!"

"Yes, I am Stephen Marshall's Christ. He let me live in him. I am He whom you sneered at and disbelieved!"

Courtland looked, and his heart was stricken with shame.

"I did not understand. It was against reason. But I had not seen you then."

"And now?"

"Now? What do you want of me?"

"You shall be shown."

THE smoke ebbed low and swung away his consciousness, and even the place grew dim about him, but the Presence was there. Always through suspended space as he was borne along, and after, when the smoke gave way, and air, blessed air, was wafted in, there was the Vision. If it had not been for that he could not have borne the awfulness of nothing that surrounded him.

There was a bandage over his eyes for days; people speaking in whispers; and when the bandage was taken away there were the white hospital walls, so like the walls of smoke at first in the dim light, high above him. When he had grown to understand it was but hospital walls, he looked around for the Presence in alarm, crying out, "Where is He?"

Bill Ward and Tennelly and Pat were there, huddled by the door, hoping he might recognize them.

"He's calling for Steve!" whispered Pat, and turned with a gulp while the tears rolled down his cheeks. "He must have seen him go!"

The nurse laid him down on the pillow again, replacing the bandage. When he closed his eyes the Vision came, blessed, sweet—he was at peace.

To be continued

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The Life Hereafter

AT a time like the present, when the world is in what seems to be almost apocalyptic turmoil, it is quite inevitable that there should be much introspection. Men seek to discover within themselves, or in their fellow men, some of the causes from which such calamities spring. One result of these conditions has been greatly to swell the output of literature dealing with the life beyond. In the preface to a notable book, "Immortality and the Future," the author has this declaratory passage: "The great themes of death, immortality and the life everlasting have now laid hold upon all hearts with new power. Evidences abound on every side that not for a century has interest in these matters been so widespread and so profound. The war has made a new heaven; let us trust that it may aid in making a new earth."

Can anything really new be brought forward on these themes to satisfy the inquiring souls of men? All know that throughout the ages God has had his witnesses—men of strong, clear faith and holy life, prophets and saints—who kept altar fires burning amid the darkness of ignorance and unbelief. When the Light of the world dwelt among men and revealed the life to come, those who understood and believed realized that the language of Jesus pointed to a time when, by "a catastrophe or a series of catastrophes," the existing order of things would be broken up, giving place to a new and better order throughout the world. Jesus taught the certainty of the life everlasting. Is it a wonder, then, the author asks, that "earnest men should always find in Jesus' certainty a firm ground of hope which no speculative objection can affect? . . . Say what you please of the absurdities which in theology have gathered around the belief; they all vanish as negligible, irrelevant accretions in presence of his faith." So one cannot discuss immortality apart from Christ's teachings, or from His own death, resurrection and ascension. "If Christ had not been raised," says Paul, "then is our preaching vain and your faith also is vain." "If a man die shall he live again?" asked the patriarch Job. His faith answered his own question afterward, but we have the firmer assurance from Christ's own lips, many times multiplied.

As with all the other fundamentals of the religious life, the assurance of immortality belongs to religion and not to science. "It is anchored in revelation. We know that men are brave; but to see an act of heroism wonderfully quickens that knowledge. In like manner, he whom God is holding by his right hand is sure of life without end; but the spectacle of Jesus' actual resurrection gives to his prior faith a new intensity of feeling. It makes his hold upon it more living, so that he dares to apply it undismayed to the darkest aspects of experience—to sorrow and tragedy, to ignominy and pain. In his eyes, the world itself is now transfigured."

The Soldier and the Gospel

THERE is no lack of opportunity, these days, for the plain citizen, his wife and family to do their bit toward enlivening the routine of camp life for our new citizen army. There are so many war activities on the list that each may choose according to personal taste and predilection. Friends of temperance can have a part in the furtherance of the plans for spreading that worthy cause by joining forces with any one of the score or more prohibition and temperance bodies now at work. These include all the leading organizations, the W. C. T. U., the Men and Women's Christian Associations, the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, and many others, and all phases of the subject are shown in illustrated lectures, posters, and a large variety of temperance literature. On the exclusively spiritual side there will be a variety of presentation by able clerical and lay speakers. Nor will the social view be overlooked; for the plans include almost every form of commendable diversion and an abundance of good literature. Best of all is the arrangement for putting the Bible in the hands of our soldiers and sailors—a plan which has been productive of splendid results in the camps and fleets abroad during the last two years. A copy of God's Word in the pocket of every man in the army and navy has proved that it is the surest and most direct way to reach the hearts and consciences of the men, and it should not be difficult of accomplishment. The Christian Herald, which distributed large editions of the New Testament in the Spanish American War, invites the cordial cooperation of its readers in a similar work now. Every dollar received for that purpose will go toward supplying New Testaments to the men in our American military camps. We urge this Gospel campaign strongly and invite all to have a personal share in it. There is surely no more gracious way of helping our soldier boys to clean, upright, honorable lives than to have the Testament with them, in coat-pocket or kit, whether they stay on American soil or go over seas. In many a lonely hour they will find in it the solace, strength and consolation that come direct from Him "who hath the words of eternal life."

A Plea for Humanity

POPE BENEDICT'S Peace Note is now before all the governments, belligerent and neutral. It is exceptionally clear and cogent, and cannot be lightly turned aside as the production of one equipped with all the arts of statecraft, but seeking to serve partisan interests. Its sincerity and broad humanity are so evident that there can be no other conclusion than that it was written under the pressure of deep sympathy for all the nations involved, and with an eager desire to avert the complete wreck of Europe's civilization. It is clear, too, that the Pontiff is steeled against the illusion that it is within the power of any nation, or group of nations, to assume the safety and permanent peace of the world, unless their whole course is sincerely in line with and submissive to the divine rulership. Without such guidance, the sense of right and justice may become so confused with wrong that men will ennoble things that are diabolic. Therefore, the first step urged by the Pope, and one which he points out can be taken without sacrificing the honor of the armies, is to substitute the moral force of right for force of arms, and thus open the way to discussion of the various questions involved, with a view to an amicable agreement.

The essential features of the pontifical note we have already given. Expressed in the briefest terms, it urges forgiveness, conciliation, restoration and disarmament. No attempt is made to outline a peace treaty; that the Pope leaves to the governments themselves; yet he has most skilfully indicated the essential provisions which such a treaty should contain. And it is perhaps more than a coincidence that his suggestions are virtually identical with the views expressed at different times by our own government on the same subject, and which have been presented in the pages of the Christian Herald.

If the Vatican rightly gauged the opportunity for its effort, the fact must soon become apparent; indeed, the acceptance or rejection of the note may be decided before this reaches our readers. Certainly, the crisis which evoked it was sufficiently grave to justify it. Virtually all the world is at war. Human lives have been wasted at a rate that cannot go on indefinitely. After thirty-six months of this international destruction, the conflict is as far from a decisive climax as ever. All the nations yearn for peace, but their rulers, caught in the maelstrom, are unable to extricate themselves. And the dance of death threatens to sweep in the neutrals. China is already in; Switzerland is tottering on the brink, and Holland, Spain and others seem likely to follow. It was publicly stated in the United States Senate on August 13 that 10,000 lives and $100,000,000 are thrown away every day on one side of the conflict alone, the wastage on the other side doubtless being equal. All are nearing exhaustion. If ever a peace protest was justified, it is so in the present case.

Of course, there will be discussion, remonstrances, protests, objections in many quarters. Even assuming that all the chancelleries were sounded by the Vatican in advance, it can still be foreseen that diplomacy will find a way to pick flaws in a sincere and well-meant proposal to end a struggle which has become intolerable. But it is to be remembered that it is the people, and not the cabinets and statesmen, who are bearing the real burden and making the supreme sacrifice. Whoever speaks for humanity speaks for the common people of all lands, and they have at least a right to be considered, although they may be denied the opportunity. Now, the Pope's outline of terms includes all that the people of most of the nations have been fighting for. Beyond this, they are not interested in any claims by the individual powers or their statesmen. If peace is to be reached, it must be by mutual renunciation on a very large scale on both sides.

Reflecting Christ

PAUL has written beautifully about the Christian reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord to all with whom he comes in contact, and being himself changed from glory to glory in his life of illumination. The continued development of likeness to Christ comes by transmitting the glory to others.

Savonarola's holy devotion to his Lord transformed the city of Florence and illuminated the Christian lands. From Pope to people, he made millions tremble. It is said that Michael Angelo became so deeply moved by his ministry that he saw in brighter gleam the glory of God in the spiritual splendor of the face of Savonarola. This gave a new inspiration to the wonderful productions of his brush and chisel. His paintings and sculpture after this vision were vastly more Biblical, spiritual and illustrative of the realm immortal. As Israel saw Moses' shining face, so he saw the face of the martyr of Florence illumined with a light that never was on land or sea.

Many people who refuse to read the written Word of God are willing to behold Christ's followers as living Bibles, the incarnation of truth reflecting Christ's image as he reflected the divine Fatherhood.

"Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath his shadow. This shall then be your reward:
That whene'er you leave the silence of that happy meeting-place,
You will surely bear the image of the Master in your face."

On a certain mirror in a window, an advertisement was laid in brass letters. When the letters were removed and the mirror cleaned, it was found that the forms of the letters remained—the sun had struck them through the glass, never to be erased. May not the soul shining for Jesus, spreading his glorious Gospel, become one with him whom it seeks to glorify? Does not every Sabbath of worship, every evening of song, every hour of prayer, every service for men, imprint deeper his image upon the character, making more brilliant the illumination of his person to men, and making us more and more like him in the gentleness, kindness and holiness of his person?

A Man and His Watch

SPECIAL talent often makes fine spurts ahead and genius sometimes soars grandly, but it is the steady-going sort of worker who gets the most done in the end, and is the most reliable. It is with men as it is with their watches—the most reliable and serviceable are the ones steadily at work.

There is a Pennsylvania railroad engineer who has retired on a pension after forty-eight years of service. "I have carried one watch for more than twenty-six years," he says, "and it always kept the right time. A good engineer must have a good watch; it does the most important part of his work."

It is said of this engineer that he has been an exceptionally sober, orderly, steady-going man, whose health has always been good and his record always clean. But doesn't this go without saying, when we know that his watch always kept the right time?

Watchmakers say that a watch partakes of the traits of the one who carries it. If the owner is steady, even-tempered and reliable and never "flies off the handle," his watch behaves itself in the most proper manner. If the owner is a genius, with an erratic, excitable, uncertain temperament, the watch cuts up all sorts of pranks and is too fast or too slow or else will not run at all.

Watch-repairers look with considerable suspicion on men whose watches always need regulation. The man whose watch is always right "just to the tick" is pretty sure to be one who keeps regular hours, indulges in no excesses, conducts everything in a methodical manner, and consequently does good work and enjoys good health.

The vacant house decays soonest, and the watch or the man that is kept running regularly lasts the longest and is of the most service while it lasts.

This old engineer's watch has kept good time beyond the "life" of the average timepiece, for the reason that the man himself has kept his habits correct all the time. The retired engineer is old in years but young in spirits. He has kept himself as he kept his watch. He enjoys the admiration and gratitude of all the officials over him for the reason that, whatever the run assigned him, he made it on time, and had no worries left over.

The watch that works only by fits and starts is never to be trusted. Nor is the man who does his work in the same way ever capable of the highest achievement possible to his station. With men as with watches the test lies in being right and reliable all the time.

◆

The most lovable saints are those who have little to say about their saintliness.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Airplanes for Commerce

THE wonderful progress of the airplane in the short time since its invention leads to the general belief that it will be used for commercial purposes, in the transportation of passengers, mail and freight. Mr. Holt Thomas, in an address before the Royal Aeronautical Society, not only claims that it will be used for commercial purposes when the commerce of the world shall have been renewed, but he has mapped out practical routes for the airships to the various countries of the world. He estimates the time that these several voyages will require starting from London: to New York two days, Vancouver three, Buenos Aires two and three-quarters, Ceylon two and three-quarters, Bagdad one and one-half, Tokyo four and one-half, Cape Town three and one-half. It must be realized that airplanes never will compete with railways or road transport for heavy or bulky traffic; yet for passenger traffic and the transportation of mail or light packages, particularly where it is desired to save as much time as possible, there certainly is a field for commercial aeronautics. Their speed, of course, is nearly twice as great as that of express trains, and there is no reason why comfortable and commodious cabins cannot be installed. With the technical and natural problems solved, there loom only the particular commercial questions, economy of operation and maintenance, which must be met in this connection. The inventive genius of man is such that it is likely that the generations to come will witness just as great advancements in the field of human investigation and achievement. The Psalmist thus voices man's mastery over nature: "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands: thou hast put all things under his feet." (Ps. 8 : 6).

Peaceful Irish Convention

FOR a number of generations the Irish question has been a continual challenge to Great Britain's statesmanship. Various measures in amelioration were taken. The Irish peasant was given an opportunity to own land, prosperity returned to the Emerald Isle, but the Irish question remained. As the European War broke, it had about reached the stage of open rebellion in the north and complete satisfaction in the south, for the promise of home rule to Ireland was about to be fulfilled, though Ulster feared it might be a bitter morsel and refused to try it. The war necessarily postponed so radical a change within the empire, but the question was accentuated. Then came the Casement invasion, then the Sinn Fein rebellion at Easter a year ago. Finally the British government hit upon a happy scheme. Why not let Irishmen, who had always fought at the dropping of the hat, meet calmly in convention and discover what fine fellows they were and settle the question themselves? So the call was sent out for a convention of Irishmen, and Nationalists and Ulstermen and representatives of a few other factions (although one or two factions refused to participate) met in Dublin July 25, electing Sir Horace Plunkett as chairman, and adjourned to meet again on August 8, on which date they again adjourned to August 21. The choice of Sir Horace Plunkett as chairman is said to be most happy in that his loyalty to the Irish cause has never wavered and never been called in question. Since his young manhood, he has been a consistent fighter for the liberties of his native land and for home rule. The convention met in Trinity College, and on the day of its first meeting sandwich men marched up and down through the crowds in front of the college bearing great placards addressed to the delegates expressing the confidence of the Irish people in the convention and the hope that the British government would keep faith with the delegates. Britain having given freedom to so many colonies cannot consistently withhold it from Ireland. Christ's kingdom is being established, which means liberty and equality. Where Christ's spirit prevails there is individual and national liberty. "If the Son therefore shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." (John 8 : 36).

Dust Paralyzes Monkey

DURING the infantile paralysis epidemic in Baltimore last summer, nine of eleven children in an apartment house were stricken with the disease. Two physicians of the Johns Hopkins Hospital have just made public the result of a test which is of deep interest. to the medical profession and the public at large. A test was made in which dust, lint, hair, hairpins and a few seeds found in the apartment in which some of the children lived were placed in a jar. The sweepings were covered with a small amount of normal saline solution and left to soak over night in the jar, which was tightly sealed. The mixture was passed through a Berkfeld filter, and the filtrate injected into a monkey which had been in the best of health for years. The monkey first showed a weakness in the left leg, then in the right leg, and soon began to develop the other symptoms of infantile paralysis. Before the experiment could be carried out to its conclusion the monkey fell and fractured his skull. This experience illustrates the generally admitted fact that man and the lower animals have a certain physical kinship, but when it comes to the moral and spiritual kinship the analogy is at an end. Between the smartest monkey and the dullest man there is a great gulf fixed which has not been bridged. The human soul is not an evolution from a lower order of animal life, but a creation and emanation of the Deity. This story of man's creation is the reason of the difference between man and the monkey. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2 : 7).

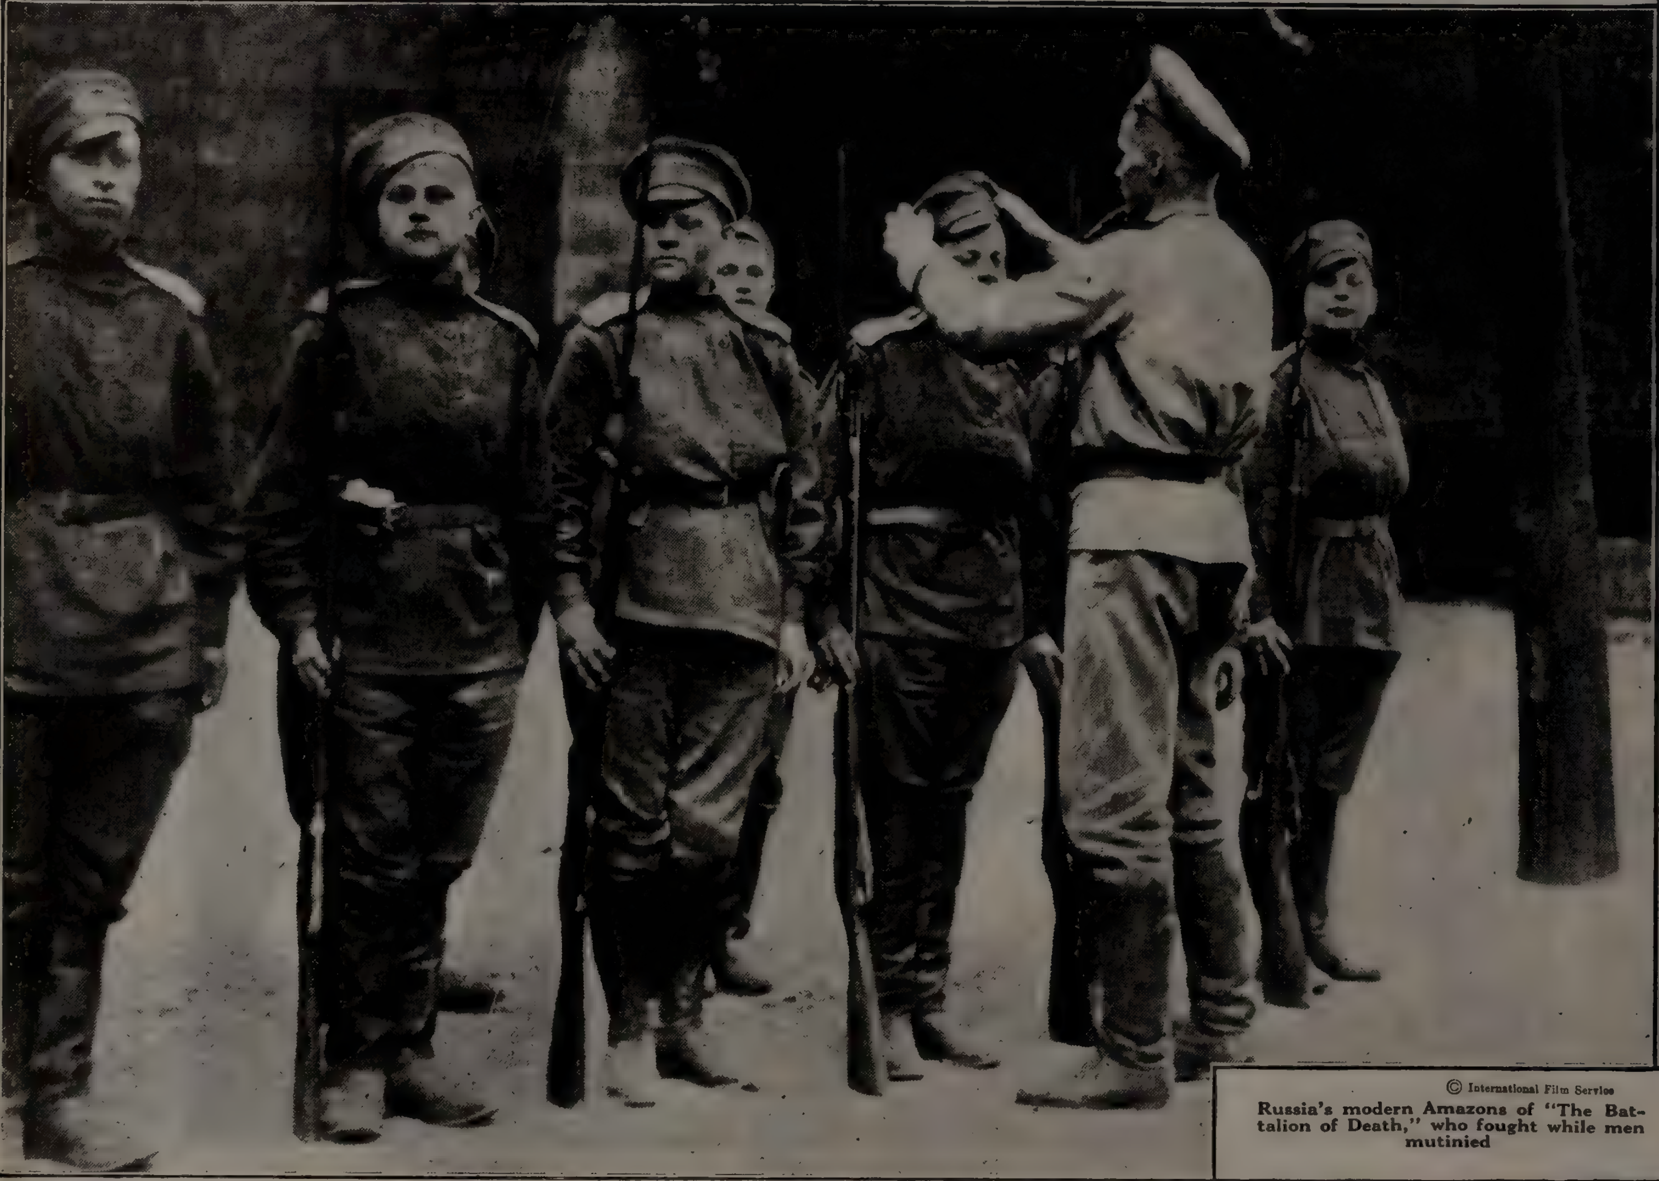
Summer's Heat in Winter

CAMILLE FLAMMARION sent a cablegram from Paris to one of the New York City dailies, in which he makes mention of the difference in the temperature in these summer days between countries of North America and Europe of the same latitude. He also claims that in the near future science will have discovered some method of storing the torrid heat of summer and using it to temper the freezing cold of winter. Science is doing such marvels all the while that to realize Flammarion's idea would not be surprising. To provide heat for man in the winter time a kind providence furnished the forests for fuel and spread vegetation in layers and pressed them down with mountain loads into coal to make heat for winter and motive force for industry. God put lakes and rivers of oil down in the earth to be pumped up by man in the generations to come for light and heat. This French scientist or some other genius may yet invent receptacles for the sun's heat and a method of dispensing it. The cold of winter is just as necessary to health, progress and happiness as the heat of summer. A certain amount of cold is necessary to produce the highest civilization. God in his providence has arranged everything just right in nature for man's benefit, and has made this promise to Noah in the infancy of the race: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." (Gen. 8 : 22).

Washing Injures Eggs

OVER 5,000,000 eggs in cold storage spoil every year because they have been washed, or in some way have become wet before being sent to market. So says the Department of Agriculture at Washington. The Department claims that water removes from the shell of the eggs a gelatinous covering which would otherwise help keep air and germs from entering the egg. It is found that from seventeen to twenty-two per cent. of the eggs washed before going into cold storage are spoiled, whereas only from four to eight per cent. of the unwashed eggs are spoiled. Eggs properly preserved in cold storage do very well, but fresh eggs taste ever so much better. Eggs are a palatable, digestible and nutritious article of diet. Their production in enormously increasing quantities is a profit to the poultry farmer, and a great blessing to the people. There is this reference to eggs as an article of food among the Jews, with which our Lord has coupled a sublime moral lesson: "Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?" (Luke 11 : 12.)

WORLD ACTION CAUGHT BY THE CAMERA



© International Film Service

Russia's modern Amazons of "The Battalion of Death," who fought while men mutinied

Chinamen i tins during
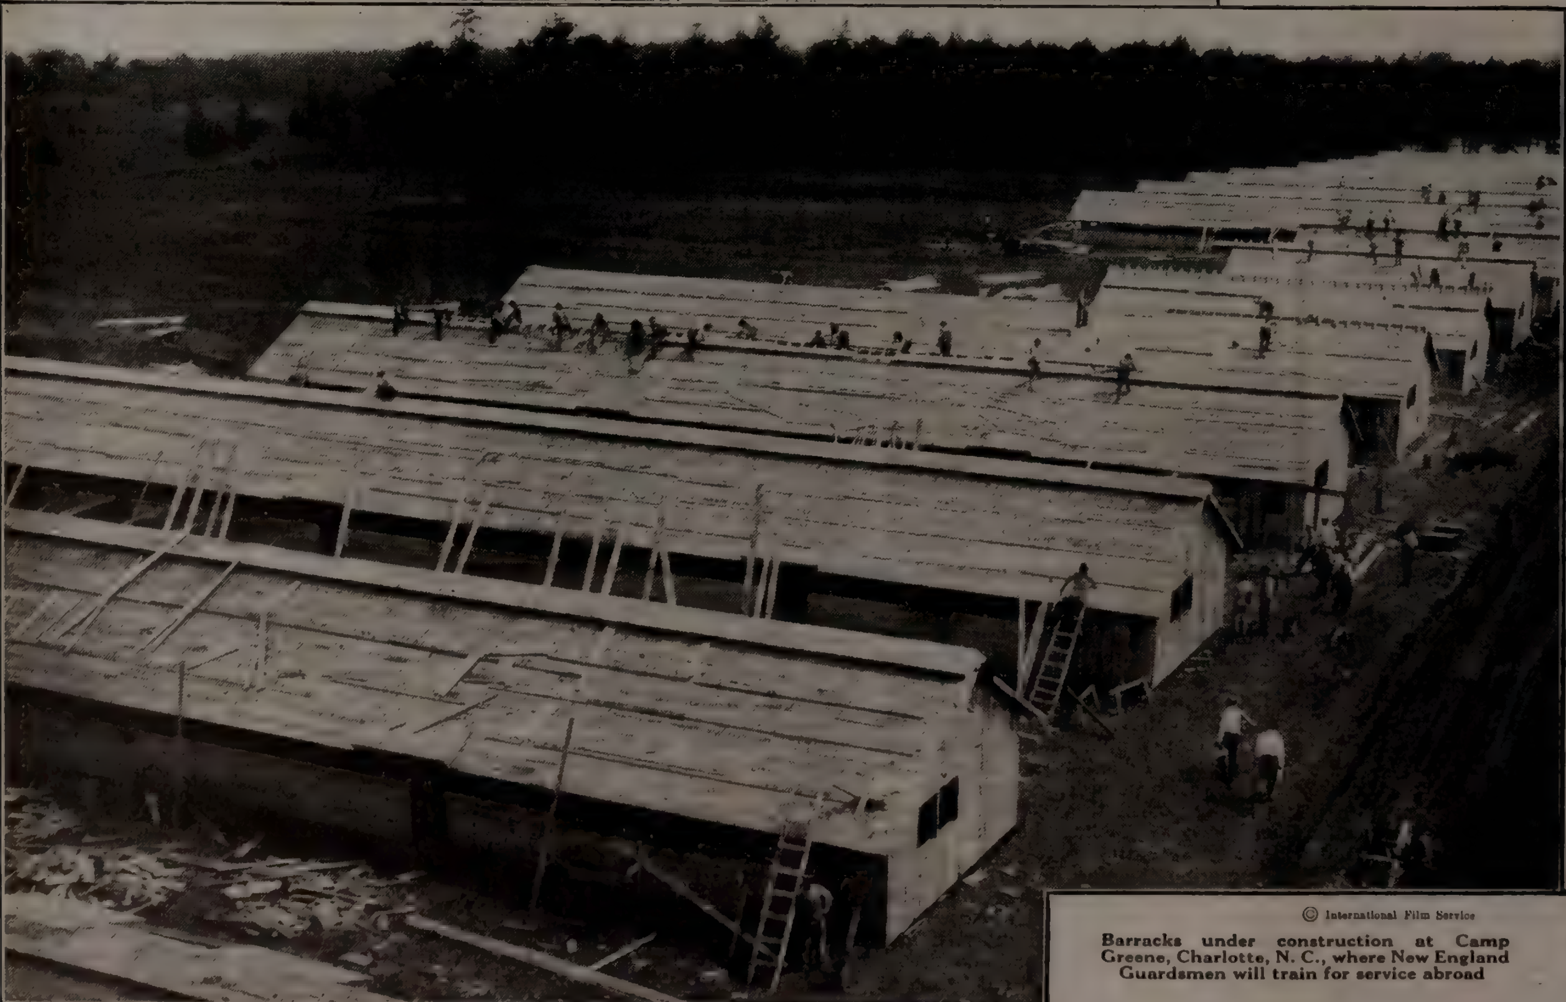
lic. Photo

Judge J. H
President's
the I. V



© International Film Service

Barracks under construction at Camp Greene, Charlotte, N. C., where New England Guardsmen will train for service abroad

British official picture fr

Part of a soldier'
France. Testing gas filled tre

…ing the newspaper bulle-
…pt to overthrow the repub-
…ald special correspondent

Premier Tuan Chi Jui, who led the republican forces

Chinese troops waiting to entrain for action against Chang Hsun. Photo by Christian Herald special correspondent

…the
…of

Major General William A. Mann, who will command the first division of National Guard troops sent to France

© International Film Service

Cleveland's "Hoover Market," where producer and consumer meet and dicker

An army fights on its stomach. Wise Uncle Sam, training men for army cooks, takes a woman for instructor

Mobilizing Nature's Forces

Frank G. Carpenter Tells of the Marvelous Development of Gasoline and Lumber in War Time

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

THE demands of the war have brought Oklahoma into the limelight. I might better say into the gaslight, for the state is a mighty gasoline torch that will increase in importance as the war goes on. Upon it will largely depend the movement of the thousands of airplanes which we shall be sending to Europe, of the motor trucks in the field, of many of our vessels at sea, and even of the military tanks, the warlike leviathans of the land.

Today Oklahoma leads the United States in its output of petroleum and natural gas. Last year the state produced more than four times as much oil as Texas, and sixteen million barrels more than California. It produced more than one-third of all our petroleum, and today more than a thousand new wells are drilling and the present production is more than a quarter of a million barrels of crude oil per day, with a monetary value of $500,000. The state has forty-one oil refineries, and ten of these are now using ten thousand barrels of crude oil every twenty-four hours. They are all running at their full capacity.

A city builded on the sand, but it is oil-bearing sand. Tulsa, Okla.

In the past year Oklahoma's output of gasoline for industrial consumption has almost doubled. During 1916 it was considerably more than 1,000,000 gallons per week, and it is possible that it may amount to 100,000,000 gallons this year. During the past twelve months the output of natural gas has been more than 3,000,000,000 cubic feet daily, only about one-tenth of which has been used. There is one field in the northern part of Oklahoma which now yields about 500,000,000 cubic feet of gas every day. This is in Kay County. It is said to be the greatest natural gas producing area of the world. There are also large quantities of gas in Kansas, Missouri, Louisiana and Texas, and these fields may be developed to increase the gasoline supply. Just now the various states are adopting conservation methods in order to prevent the surplus of gas going to waste. It is estimated that Oklahoma is now saving something like 2,000,000,000 cubic feet every day.

Whether it is wooden ships or army cantonments or just new homes, some forest, like this one in the South, is the source

MUCH of the gas lies in the rocks above the beds of petroleum; and in the past it was allowed to flow out and go to waste in order to get the valuable oil contents below. Today they have discovered methods by which they can pump in a mud-laden fluid which coats the oil well and seals in the gas, so that the oil can be taken out and the gas preserved until needed. In such cases the gas sand lies above the oil sand, with rock breaks between.

The center of the oil industry of Oklahoma is the city of Tulsa, in the northeastern part of the state and about 120 miles from Oklahoma City. Tulsa has doubled in population within the past two years, and it is now about fifty times as big as it was in 1900. It is a modern city of more than 60,000, with ten-story office buildings, large hotels, fine residences and parks and boulevards. Its building permits are now running from a half million to a million dollars per month, and it claims to have on the average 100 permits for new homes every thirty days. A building program is now under way which will include expenditures amounting to $5,000,000, and there is another which will comprise a sixteen-story office building to cost upward of $4,000,000. The town is one of many rich men, all of whom have made fortunes in oil. One company recently sold its holdings for $35,000,000, and two men who were country merchants only a few years ago have realized $6,000,000 cash for a portion of their oil property.

The town has eight oil refineries, one of which has a capacity of forty thousand barrels of crude oil per day. It was started a few years ago with a capacity of only fifteen barrels. It was burned out, reestablished and then destroyed by a cyclone. It was again built and has grown to such an extent that its capital is in the neighborhood of nine million dollars. It now produces eighteen thousand barrels of petroleum a day.

IT is no wonder these people are growing rich. Last year Oklahoma produced almost $133,000,000 worth of crude oil. The total production was equal to more than five barrels for every family in the United States, and its value was in the neighborhood of $2 per barrel. Something like 7,000 new wells were completed during the year and more than a half million barrels of new production were added to the state suply. About a half million dollars' worth of oil is now being taken out every day, and the prices are steadily increasing.

These figures seem enormous, but the demand for oil and its products is so increasing that new fields will have to be found or substitutes created to take the place of petroleum. The total output of all the fields of the United States last year was a little under 300,000,000 barrels. It was more than 11,000,000 barrels in excess of the production of 1915, and the increase came chiefly from this territory. They are now discovering new wells in Louisiana and Texas, and the present output will certainly hold its own.

Nevertheless, there is danger of a famine in gasoline. Mr. Van H. Manning, the director of the United States Bureau of Mines, has figured out the industrial demands of petroleum, and shows that our enormous production is not large enough to satisfy the wants of the time.

Mr. Manning says that there will be a greatly increased demand for petroleum and its products on account of the war. He believes that this, added to the normal increase, will create a demand for 60,000,000 barrels more than we used last year, which will have to be drawn from the storage supply. This, as I have said, is already greatly reduced. He estimates that between fifty-five and sixty per cent. of our whole supply is used by automobiles, twenty per cent. more is exported, and the balance is used in stationary engines, motor boats, farm tractors, motor trucks and for other purposes.

The consumption of gasoline in motor cars began about twelve years ago, when we had 85,000 automobiles. That was 1905. Five years later the number had increased to five times as many, and by 1915 it had grown to a million and three-quarters. The number of cars in use this year is estimated at a little more than three million and the number in 1918 will rise to four and three-quarter millions. Mr. W. F. Rittman, of the National Bureau of Mines, figures that the gasoline production of the present year will be something like seventy million barrels, which is more than 15,000,000 barrels in excess of the product of 1916 and thirty million barrels over that of 1915.

Mr. Rittman says that by the newly invented cracking process, which greatly increases the yield of gasoline, we should be able to produce six hundred million gallons of gasoline this year and that the production of next year will probably be one billion gallons, while in 1920 more gasoline will be produced by that method than by all others. He thinks that the cracking process has largely prevented a great increase in the price of gasoline, and says that were it not for it we might be paying 10 cents more per gallon than we now are for our motor-car fuel. He evidently believes that the cracking process will to a large extent solve the gasoline problem.

THE lumber industry of the United States is being mobilized for the needs of the army and navy. This means the bringing to Uncle Sam's aid of a force of 900,000 workers and the utilization of capital amounting to billions. It means the having at call more than 49,000 sawmills and the ability to command something like 20,000,000,000 feet of lumber which now lies at the mills or in the yards and other distributing centers throughout the country.

During my travels through the South I found everywhere an extraordinary activity in the lumber industry. The scream of the saws at the mills and in the woods vied with the shriek of the locomotives, and I was told that 500 plants are now running day and night in the Southern pine region. New shipyards have been established at almost every port, and a total of something like $100,000,000 of new capital has gone into steel and wood shipbuilding establishments. At New Orleans has been established a government war order organization known as the Southern Pine Emergency Bureau, and there are similar organizations in every lumber center.

R. S. Kellogg, the secretary of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, is perhaps as well posted as to the exact situation regarding the government as any man in the country. From him I gather that the government will need about 2,000,000,000 feet of lumber, board measure, for the army and navy this year. This big lumber order would be sufficient to build homes for a city of a million inhabitants. It would house more people than there are in any city of the United States, excepting New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. If the lumber were loaded on cars it would fill a solid train from New Orleans to New York and half way on from New York to Boston.

More than one-fourth of it will be required for the mobilization camps of our new army of 1,000,000 men. It will be put into long one- and two-story buildings, forming the best arranged and most up-to-date barracks that have ever been known. The officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan required almost a million and a half feet of lumber, or enough to make a boardwalk a foot wide reaching from New York to Boston. The contract was awarded to a construction company in Chicago on Saturday evening, April 28, and by noon on Sunday the order for the material was sent out. That same afternoon five auto truckloads of lumber were shipped to build quarters for the working force engaged on the job, and at 5 o'clock Sunday evening fifty empty cars were on the tracks of the lumber company. The whole of that lumber was loaded the following day, and that notwithstanding more than one-third of it had to be run through the planing mill before it was shipped. The stuff was on the ground by Tuesday morning, and within ten working days from the start the great barracks, mess buildings and other structures were completed, with their tables, toilets, shower baths and everything needed.

The same kind of work is going on in the building of the great barracks for the army of a million men. These are being erected at the mobilization sites throughout the country. The estimates, based upon the plans of the War Department, are that 13,500,000 feet of lumber will be needed for each infantry division of 35,000 men, or in all about 600,000,000 feet for barracks alone. A million feet of lumber would just about floor twenty acres, so that the barracks for each division will need enough to cover 270 acres, and those for the army would make a floor an inch thick over the whole 12,000 acres with some over.

IT has not yet been decided just how many ships will be built, but it is pretty certain that two hundred and fifty vessels of standard type will be constructed of wood. Each of these will need one and a half million feet of lumber, enough to floor thirty acres, and the total will be something like four hundred million feet. At five thousand feet to the mile, for easy figuring, the ship lumber would more than plank an automobile highway sixteen feet wide, reaching from Boston to San Francisco, and from St. Paul to New Orleans. Many of these vessels are now under way. New shipyards have been created for them in many parts of the South and in the Northwest, as well as along the north Atlantic coast, and the work is going forward as planned.

Among the other buildings required by the government are some for the Y. M. C. A. These have been planned by the War Work Council, and will be situated at the various army and navy training camps. They will number two hundred and will be clubhouses or amusement places for the men in the camps. Each building will take about thirty-seven thousand feet of lumber, and it will include a hall seating about a thousand men, which will be used for moving picture shows and lectures, as well as for religious addresses. There will also be classrooms and probably arrangements for athletics.

The government will need as much as 200,000,000 feet of lumber for training camp buildings for the navy, and the navy will require a great deal for small boats of various kinds.

In addition to these large items there are others which seem small until one realizes the extent of the orders. Take for instance transportation. More than 30,000 vehicles have already been ordered for the army. These orders will require at least 25,000,000 feet of high-grade yellow pine and oak.

AMONG the machines which require fine lumber are the airplanes. It is said that the Allies have 20,000 flying machines on the western front, and that Uncle Sam will probably ship thousands to France. Ash is used for the bent woods, and a variety of different woods are employed for the propellers. Spruce is used for airplane wings. To build 10,000 airplanes we shall need something like 20,000,000 feet of rough lumber, or enough to floor 400 acres.

I might mention a score of other demands, such as artillery trucks, automobiles, new docks and piers, tools and railroad construction, as well as the lumber for timbering mines, and the new factories now building to make army and naval supplies. All of these will require more or less wood, and the total estimate of two billion feet is probably under what will be required.

Until the time of our Civil War the most of the lumber consumed in the United States was cut from New England and the Alleghany Mountains. For the next thirty years the vast white and Norway pine regions of the states along the Great Lakes furnished most of the lumber; and the industry then moved into the Southern yellow pine belt along the Atlantic Ocean and the Mexican Gulf. That region is now the chief center of our lumber industry. The cut there is about seventeen billion feet per annum, and at the present rate twenty years will practically exhaust the supply. The total stand of Southern yellow pine is estimated to be about three hundred and eighty-four billion feet.

The next great movement of the lumber industry will be to the Pacific coast, where they are already cutting something like eight billion feet per annum, and where the cut of Douglas fir is steadily climbing. The forestry men tell me that it is simply a question of years before the lumber product of Oregon and Washington will exceed that of all the lumber regions of the East.

Just Like New!

Greasy, smeary, smoky, dust-catching furniture can be easily restored to its original beauty and charm with Johnson's Liquid Prepared Wax. It cleans and polishes in one operation — protects and preserves varnish, adding years to its life — covers up mars and small surface scratches, and prevents checking.

Has Your Mahogany Furniture a Bluish, Cloudy Appearance?

An application of Johnson's Liquid Prepared Wax will quickly and permanently remove it—at the same time imparting a hard, dry glasslike polish of great beauty and durability. It never gets soft and sticky, consequently does not gather dust or show finger prints.

JOHNSON'S Liquid
PREPARED WAX

Johnson's Prepared Wax is now made in Liquid Form so that it may be more easily polished. It is exactly the same as the famous Johnson's Prepared Wax (Paste) except that it is a liquid. Johnson's Liquid Prepared Wax polishes instantly with but very little rubbing — you can go over a roomful of furniture in half-an-hour.

A Dust-Proof Auto Polish

Johnson's Prepared Wax Liquid preserves the finish of automobiles and protects it from the weather. It covers up mars and scratches—prevents checking and cracking—sheds water and dust—and makes a "wash" last twice as long.

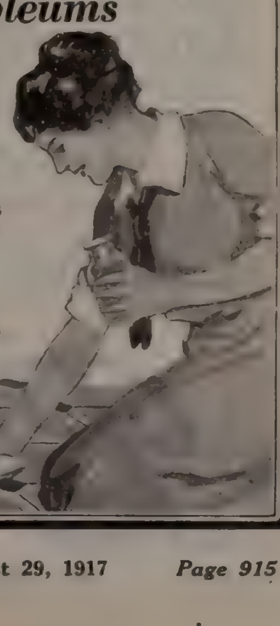
For Floors and Linoleums

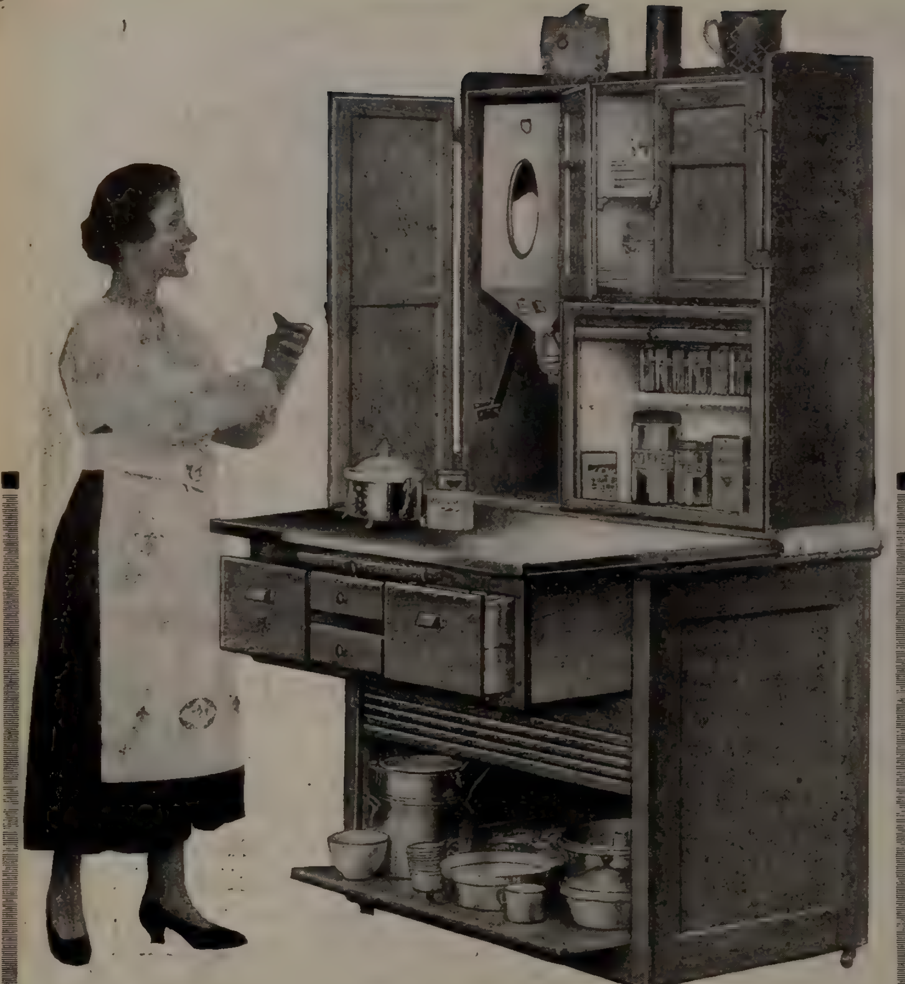
Johnson's Liquid Prepared Wax gives just the polish and protection you need on your floors and linoleums. Imparts a beautiful dry polish which any housewife can easily keep in perfect condition. Brings out the pattern of linoleum and preserves it.

Tell your dealer that Johnson's Prepared Wax is now made in Liquid Form and insist upon his supplying you with it.

Quarts $1.40 Pints .75 Half-Pints .50

S. C. JOHNSON & SON, Dept. CH8, Racine, Wis., U.S.A.





"Nested Drawers"

A Revolution in Kitchen Cabinet Efficiency

"The most efficient labor-saving device ever perfected for the kitchen." That's the enthusiastic opinion of thousands of housewives who now own BOONE No. 41 Kitchen Cabinets.

The "nested drawer"—an exclusive feature of the BOONE No. 41—allows free and easy access to all drawers when table top is extended. You don't have to clear off the table-top to get to the drawers. They are "nested" in a big, ball-bearing drawer which glides out even with the extended table-top. These much-used drawers are thus easily available always.

The BOONE Kitchen Cabinet No. 41 saves much stooping, because the curtain covering the lower section can be automatically raised.

You can't appreciate a BOONE Kitchen Cabinet No. 41 until you see one. And after you examine this well-made cabinet, you'll understand at once how you can save time and labor, and promote sanitation when one is installed in your kitchen.

BOONE Kitchen Cabinets are on exhibition at the best furniture stores. There's a special style and size BOONE Kitchen Cabinet for every kitchen.

FREE An attractively bound novelette, "Betty's Boon," a short, illustrated story that will interest both men and women. It will be sent you by return mail upon receipt of your request.

The BOONE No. 41 and other styles of BOONE Kitchen Cabinets are designed, built and guaranteed by the long established, reliable institution of

CAMPBELL-SMITH-RITCHIE CO.
Lebanon, Indiana

Boone
KITCHEN CABINETS

China Under the Republic

Continued from page 903

work as though nothing were happening. In many districts the people show no interest whatsoever in the political changes which the world considers news from the real China. The real China is no more making news than it is consuming it. It is true that the bulletin boards of the newspapers are being eagerly read even in the remote districts, but how much of it is reading lesson and how much of it is political interest is hard to state.

Some time ago two generals had planned a battle in the Chengtu plain. It was within a few days of the rice harvest. The people petitioned the generals to call off their battle until the rice was harvested, and they did so. Then they went on with the fighting. But the days of such common sense in desisting are passing. Militarism is coming to demand more respect than that.

It is not necessary to consider just how much of the peacefulness of China is due to the teachings of Confucius. Confucianism is losing its hold on China. As Christians, a more vital question is, "What will the effect of Christianity be on China?" For Christianity is a growing force. Christianity is carrying to China the same message it has carried to all people throughout the centuries: the message of individual rights and development according to the doctrine of the abundant life.

This soul-freeing and democratic doctrine is breaking down the passive obedience and apathy of the common people. When China became a republic, it was one only in name. It is so still. But through the troubles which flit back and forth across the country, affecting the great mass of people to a strangely small extent, the masses are awakening to a feeling, not of patriotism, but of individual rights and republican freedom. This sentiment is gaining ground. The government may proclaim a constitutional monarchy, or uphold the name of a republic; but through it all the people are coming to a sense of the rights and responsibilities of the individual.

Here then is the situation: China is ruled by force; as yet, there is not, in governmental circles, any considerable recognition of constitutional rights; but from below there is an almost imperceptible but unmistakable stirring on the part of the people, who are beginning to conceive of themselves as a part of it all.

A mighty nation is gaining political compactness and momentum. There is no immediate danger of its power being felt outside its own boundaries. But surely and slowly China is moving toward something. It may be trust in militarism and a consequent need for military preparations on a vastly enhanced scale. Or it may be a breath of true democracy and sense of responsibility to uphold the rights of mankind. For the people are awakening, and this awakening can be but to rule by force of armament or rule by the will of the majority.

The solidarity and permanence of republican institutions rest upon the willingness of the individual to sacrifice himself for others. Democracy in its perfection is nothing but the application of the law of loving one's neighbor as oneself. For centuries, in a rude and informal way, the Chinese have been obeying the law of the neighbor. But in politics they have not yet reached the willingness to abide by the decision of the majority or to uphold the constitution. China's political morals are far behind her personal morals, and yet she is moving toward political consciousness. What will be the result? A vast increase in the number of deaths arising from the larger numbers involved, and a greater popular sentiment for or against political changes, or a soul-stirring turning toward the enactment into politics of the Chinese attitude of peace toward his neighbor?

Three years ago we Americans made the mistake of thinking of militarism as the product of one country. Today we are heart and soul in just such a movement as we openly condemned three years ago. In our efforts to attain unity of action and belief, we have rudely trampled upon the ideal of pacifism. We believe that we are upholding something better. But we are not upholding that. China is facing just such a change. Change is imperative. But politically the land is in chaos. Individuals and not principles are being defended or opposed. Behind it all is an apathy that is retarding a movement which might otherwise spread like wildfire. What principles have done in the past to deter America from entering a war, apathy and lack of political consciousness are doing for China.

With mails, newspapers and railways awakening a sense of nationalism, China still lacks true principles to which she can turn for correcting her course, and she still lacks the willingness on the part of the minority to abide by the decision of the majority. The present political mix-up in China is revealing the true lack of solidarity and nationalism in that great land. And the troubles have only just begun. The fall of Chang Hsun has removed only one of the politicians from the arena. Cleverer men than he are still operating for personal advantage, and China is liable to face many a day of disorder before she attains the goal of a true republic. Yet that is the ideal toward which she is working. Sooner or later, she must demonstrate her ability to govern herself.

Meanwhile the events that startle the world fail to interest or even to reach the common people—the real strength of the nation—who are pacifists through apathy. In Peking, Nanking, Canton, and other centers, various politicians are even now trying to see who shall ride. The common people have nothing to say about it, and would say nothing if they could. But among them there is a growing sense of the desire for freedom from taxes for which there is no return, and officials from whom there is no benefit.

As I have said, the great body of Chinese are pacifists by nature and by lack of communication with the political centers. But above them are scores of individuals, each trying to discover a way to advance his own position, and all of them using force. The land is over-ridden with soldiery, which keeps some part of the great republic in a constant state of unrest. The fight is on between force and right, between individual glory and power and patriotic support of a mighty republic. China has thousands of soldiers who serve, not China, but some political leader who temporarily has the shekels. Far from being peaceful, China is in a state of political anarchy because of a belief in force as a solution of political troubles. All the militarism of the world is not in the continent of Europe. China has a large share of it, and because of it, she is suffering in her fight for political integrity and the rights of man.

◆

The Story of a Notable Life

THE biography of Dr. Carl F. W. Walther, by Pastor D. H. Steffens, of Martini Evangelical Lutheran Church, Baltimore, is issued by the Lutheran Publication Society of Philadelphia. In this year of the quadricentennial of Luther's birth, when the events surrounding the Reformer and the church he founded are being very widely discussed, this book, describing one of the most prominent American Lutherans and dwelling on his work as founder of the most prominent American Lutheran Church body, which has grown to tremendous size, is a timely addition to Christian literature. Christian Herald readers are already familiar with the author's style, as many of his sermons have appeared in these pages. The contents of the book, from the intimate chronicle of Walther's youth and training to the history of later struggle, hardship and handicap, and ultimately to the successful termination of an eventful and useful life, make good reading, while the accounts of the controversies in relation to Lutheran fundamentals and other doctrinal discussions will appeal to those who like to study such developments. The whole record will prove inspiring to all who admire ability and courage.

The Cure

By
MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

FROM out of the dim maze of history there comes a story about a certain monarch who ruled right royally in a prosperous kingdom by the sea. The monarch's name was Canute, and his word was as law to the people who lived in the land that was governed by the sweep of his jeweled scepter. His subjects looked upon him as a heaven-ordained ruler, and they told him so.

It is a bad thing for any one to have too much popularity. It's a fatal thing for any one, even a monarch, to be thought too clever. But King Canute was a really great king. His mind was large enough not to be misled by the sweet perfume of empty speech, and his common sense told him many things that were flat contradictions of the sugared words with which his attendants fed him; and so, instead of beginning to believe that he was heaven-ordained, he laughed to himself and saw through the flattery of his courtiers as easily as you or I see through a pane of window glass. And his crown continued to fit him easily and comfortably.

As I said before, the prosperous land that King Canute governed was bounded by the mighty sea. And one day, as he was walking along the gray sands, with his train of ministers and pages and what not wandering impressively after him, he stopped at a point where great waves tumbled over each other in their haste to get to the land. And as he looked, he said thoughtfully:

"How wonderful is the sea! So untamed, so—"

One of the courtiers interrupted, although one can hardly call flattery an interruption—

"O king," he said, "you are so great that you could rule the sea! You are the greatest power in the world!" And a murmur of assent ran through the procession.

"Fiddlesticks!" said the king. Being a wise king, however, he said it under his breath.

The impressive procession strolled back to the palace. But the king was lost in thought.

"This habit of flattery," he said to himself, "is getting on my nerves, and the men of my land are beginning to think that I'm fool enough to believe all they tell me. If they don't stop soon, I shall be—I must—" And then suddenly the monarch had a Big Idea, and he chuckled.

THE next afternoon the Big Idea bore fruit. Nonchalantly King Canute called his prime minister to his side.

"Today," he told the prime minister, "at low tide, I want my best throne carried down to the beach and placed a few feet back from the water."

"But, your majesty," objected the prime minister, who had given the throne-making contract to a friend of his, "the gold might—wash off."

"The waves," said the king with outward majesty and inward laughter, "will not touch the throne." And, then, because he was a wise king, he elevated his eyebrows—"and, anyway," he said, "I thought that the throne was fourteen karat," which quite silenced the minister and made him retire, blushing, from the room.

And so, when the tide was roaring in, foam-tipped, on the gleaming gray sand, King Canute gathered his long robes in his hands, and, stepping gingerly out on the soggy beach, seated himself on the throne. His courtiers, grouped behind him, stared with uncomprehending eyes at the strange picture.

The waves came up on the beach with a rush. Fine mist clung, jewel-like, to the king's hair and beard. The courtiers shivered and one of them called:

"Come in, your majesty. It's damp and dangerous out there."

The king, facing the sea, smiled. But with a great dignity in his voice he called back to his subjects: "Am I not a great king? Can I not rule the ocean?" And in a mighty voice he shouted: "Stand still, O waves! I, King Canute, command it!"

The waves threw themselves even more roughly on the beach. One of them, more venturesome than the others, swirled around the legs of the throne and licked the toe of the king's slipper.

"Come back!" screamed the courtiers. "Come back, your majesty!" But the king only smiled again and shouted: "Stand still, waves! I, the king, command it!"

This time, as if in answer, the waves touched his ankles, and the next time they swept above his ankles. But King Canute, as immovable as a statue, sat in his throne until the water was as high as his royal knees. And then, with a gesture that did not lack in dignity, he gathered his rich robes very high in his hands and walked slowly up on the beach.

"Am I the ruler of the sea?" he questioned sternly. And his court, shrinking under his steady eyes, replied in a body—

"No, your majesty," they answered.

"All right!" said King Canute. And then, quite as if nothing had happened, he turned to his prime minister.

"The gold leaf," he said, "has soaked off the feet of the throne. . . . How much did you get out of it, anyway?"

YESTERDAY I went down to the beach. It is a different sort of a beach from the one that the wise king knew, for the gleaming gray sands are dotted with gay bathers and brilliantly striped parasols, and the only castles and thrones are made with colored tin shovels by tiny children. But the waves, the dashing, foam-tipped waves, are the same sort of waves that King Canute—with a great deal of reverence in his heart for a mightier Ruler than himself—defied.

Sitting there I watched the sun flashing across the water — water that stretched far away to strange lands. And as the waves, alluringly rough, came creeping up about my feet, I found myself thinking of the vastness of the ocean, of the huge world proportions that make oceans possible, and of the Master Mind behind it. I found myself realizing that, after all, I was a very small fragment of a very great system—that I was as unimportant in the scheme of things as one of the grains of sand upon the beach.

I found myself realizing that, no matter how many tasks were given me, no matter how well I accomplished them, I would still be very unimportant. I found myself realizing that years after I had ceased to be, years after I had folded my hands and gone to sleep, the waves of a great ocean would still be beating, undefeated, against a great shore line.

IT'S a rather good thing to go to the seashore, or to the mountains. It's a rather good thing to look across the wide prairies. It's a good thing to notice the uncountable blades of grass, and the uncontrollable waves, and the majestic heights. It's a remarkably good thing to do if you're feeling a bit pleased with yourself—a bit complacent over some task you have finished, some deed you have done, something some one has said to you. For looking at the great wonders, one cannot repress a proper feeling of humility and reverence.

People are too apt to be pleased with themselves. King Canute, 'way back in the front of our history books, knew that constant flattery would ruin his chances of being a good ruler. Praise—whether it be the praise of others or of one's self—will affect us in the same way; will perhaps kill much of the worth-while spirit in us. Success can blast more than failure, if the success is too positive—too blatant.

When you find yourself thinking that you loom rather largely in the scheme of things, do as King Canute did. Stand on God's seashore and command his waves to stand still; or stand in front of His mountains and ask them to crumble; or look across His fields and tell the blades of grass to wither.

And if you do that you'll come away with a new fire in your soul—a fire that will lead you on to real things—and with a prayer to the only Great Power upon your lips!

"John, that's the smartest, best fitting suit you ever wore."
"Yes, dear, and I can thank you for sending for the Bell Style Book from which I bought it. ★ It pays to investigate."
Special
SUIT to your order
$15.00

FASHION MAGAZINE of FALL and WINTER STYLES
BELL TAILORS
OF NEW YORK

★It will pay you to investigate the Bell Tailors

LET us make you a smart, perfect fitting $25 suit or overcoat to your special measure for $15. You absolutely take no chance, because you are protected by the broadest possible guarantee which says—

If the clothes we make do not fit or please you, we will refund your money and any transportation charges you may have paid.

That's the pledge on which we have built this great tailoring business.

That's the pledge by which we have served smart dressers of the nation for nearly forty years.

That's the pledge by which we ask to make you a suit or overcoat.

Style Book, 64 Samples, FREE

Let us send you our new Style Book, with 64 of the smartest and newest fabrics, free of charge.

We have no agents, or representatives of any kind. Our only salesman is our catalogue. It travels by mail and asks no pay for doing its work. That's why we can offer you a fine $25 suit or overcoat made to your special measure at $15.

Whether you have ever ordered clothes by mail or not, send for Style Book to-night. The request places you under no obligation and the catalogue will undoubtedly save you many dollars.

Bell Tailors
of New York
Dept. C
115 Walker St.
New York

BELL TAILORS, Dept. C, 115 Walker St., New York
Please send your FREE Style Book and 64 samples to
M. . . . .

John Wanamaker

The Wanamaker Catalog
Fall and Winter 1917-18
Will give you
The latest New York
Fashions for Women and Children
Now being shown in a
Mail Order Catalog.
Your copy of this
Fall Fashion Catalog
(War-time edition)
Just now off press
Showing many specials
At economical
War-time prices
Will be sent
Upon request.
Please address today
John Wanamaker
New York.
Ask for Catalog G.

EAT
SKINNER'S
THE BEST
MACARONI
MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
MACARONI
SKINNER MFG. CO.
OMAHA U.S.A.

WANTED

Women to become nurses. The need was never so great as now. We have trained thousands of women in their own homes. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—with actual experiences. Specimen lesson pages free.
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Are you grateful for that auto ride, kind act, gift or other favor your friend gave you? If so, send them a Chase "Thank you" card.

For Sale Everywhere or Direct
Send for Catalog 231
ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway Street Boston, Mass.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in out Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by
MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

The Benefits of Total Abstinence

International Sunday School Lesson for September 9. Daniel 1

An Ancient Temperance Demonstration

By Rev. George D. Allison

WE now come in our study to a series of three lessons from the book of Daniel. This is one of the most fascinating of Old Testament books, and abounds in expressions—such as "the handwriting on the wall"—that have become a part of the literary speech of all modern nations. One of its peculiarities consists in the fact that it is written in two languages, changing from Hebrew to Aramaic or Chaldee at the fourth verse in chapter two and turning back to Hebrew with chapter eight. There are other puzzles for experts in this thoroughly Oriental work; but we are seeking, not knotty problems, but life lessons for ourselves and the boys and girls we teach.

However, the following outline will be useful as a guide and index to the contents of the book:

Part I. Stories of the Faith and Courage of Hebrew Captives in Babylon.
(1) Daniel and the King's Dainties. Chapter I.
(2) The Vision of the Image and the Stone. Chapter II.
(3) Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. Chapter III.
(4) The Vision of the Great Tree Hewn Down. Chapter IV.
(5) Belshazzar's Feast. Chapter V.
(6) Daniel in the Lion's Den. Chapter VI.

Part II. The Apocalypse of Daniel, or Revelations of Contemporary and Future Events.
(1) The Vision of the Four Beasts. Chapter VII.
(2) The Vision of the Ram and the Goat. Chapter VIII.
(3) The Vision of the Time of Restoration. Chapter IX.
(4) The Visions of the End. Chapters X to XII.

The first section has always been a favorite with the young because of the beauty and wonder of the prophetic stories, and also with teachers for the moral value of the narrative, as shown by all of our lessons from Daniel being selected from this part.

Daniel the Man of Purpose

At the very beginning of the picture of Daniel, he is characterized by inflexible determination. He was very youthful and a captive in a foreign land, but he "purposed in his heart" that he would not compromise his convictions. Doubtless the customs of his race were chiefly in mind. Like countless Jews even to this present time, he refused to eat flesh that had not been slaughtered according to rabbinic prescriptions. But there seems to be more to it than this. For there was no prohibition of wine, yet he was equally determined here also. Is there perhaps an echo here of the fierce words of Amos and Isaiah against the drunkenness that had helped to bring Israel into captivity?

Daniel had perhaps seen enough for himself of the work of alcohol. Like countless young men today, what he himself had seen was enough to decide him to abstain forever.

His Influence Upon His Friends

It seems we have here one of the earliest illustrations of the "Win-My-Friend" movement. Though we have no record of it, undoubtedly Daniel went about among the young Hebrews who had been selected for the king's service, and tried to enlist them all in his plan for personal efficiency and religious loyalty. However, from the whole company only three were willing to join him. These three are known universally; none of the rest apparently made any impression on the heathen palace. They refused the test of self-denial, and never amounted to anything worth recording.

Daniel succeeded because of a rare combination of determination and tactfulness. He was tenderly loved by the trainer in whose charge the youths were placed. There must have been qualities in his personality that awakened regard. When he comes with his request to be allowed to live according to a different regimen from that provided, he is so courteous that no antagonism is aroused. Instead, the only objection is a fear for his health and success.

It is a fine thing to have strict principles, and a still finer to commend such views by a gracious spirit and a practical exemplification of them in one's life. There are people who hold right beliefs so belligerently that they antagonize others, instead of converting them. In general, a quiet steadfastness seldom gives offense; and if it be coupled with a reasonable disposition to justify one's opinions by a reference to actual facts, good results will usually follow.

I have just received a letter from one of our church boys who is in a training camp. He tells frankly of the good and bad influences at work, and adds that, as a Christian, he endeavors to remind himself every day that he had the chance of a lifetime to stand up for Jesus Christ. Let us hope that the leavening influence of our loyal Sunday school young men may count largely in making and keeping our new armies temperate and decent.

"In Favor with God and Man"

Daniel was like the Lord Jesus Christ in this—that he grew in favor with God and man. The story of his life could not have been written had not stewards, princes and conquerors loved and respected him. The qualities that really count with our fellows are, after all, the same that are pleasing to the Almighty. Nobody really likes a drunkard, a thief or an adulterer. Every one secretly admires a sober, clear-headed, clean-living man—a man of absolute honesty and trustworthiness.

Employers, government officials and generals are alike seeking in our day for youths having the same characteristics that distinguished Daniel. Then, as today, the men of self-control reached the top.

A Practical Test of Abstinence

When the steward who cared for the young courtiers heard Daniel's request, he was alarmed lest they should suffer by their proposed self-denial. Like many moderns, he imagined that rich and highly-seasoned foods and alcoholic stimulants must be beneficial—at least to the body.

But Daniel proposed what was then a novel test—ten days on the simplest possible diet, with only water to drink. He anticipated the "physical culture" movements which have rejuvenated thousands by advocating the simple life. Even ten days will tell the story. At the close of so short a time, the superiority of the temperate was so manifest that they were gladly allowed to continue their program.

Of course, these youths were not in bad shape to start with. It takes months to get the alcohol out of the system of a hard drinker. But again and again, men who have followed Daniel's plan have felt, as one of them expresses it, born again.

Results count. Note the proved effects which are recorded in our lesson:

"Their countenances appeared fairer." They were better looking! Beauty-seekers all learn quickly that diet is their primary study. How much better these youths would look in ten years than their luxury-loving, wine-drinking companions, if ten days was enough to convince this Melzar, whose office it was to provide fine-looking servants for the king!

"Fatter in flesh." The steward had feared they would look thin and weak, but he found them strong and healthy. Possibly it may have occurred to him that this ancient court was defeating its own purposes, and continually spoiling the youths it intended to make the finest of all.

It is remarkable how a few months of abstinence will bring the glow of health and the renewal of vigor to our modern athletes after a course of dissipation. Sometimes one could scarcely believe he saw the same man, after "training" a while. The pity of it is that so many of them fall victims to intemperance and lose all their strength when they know so well the price of indulgence.

Our high schools and colleges, with their strict rules for the athletes chosen to represent the institution, have done more than anything else to bring home to students the advantages of abstinence.

"God gave them knowledge." Alcohol dulls the highest faculties first. The spiritual imperceptibly diminishes first, then the finer moral nature; after that, the intellectual. It stands to reason that a brain free from the fumes of poisonous drugs apprehends more clearly and retains impressions more certainly. It is not the "moderate drinkers" who come home from store and factory able and eager to advance themselves by taking correspondence courses of study.

"And skill." Skill is the ability to use knowledge. Mentally it is wisdom—"understanding" in the Bible phrase. Physically it is the capability to use tools and weapons. Tests made in the Swedish army show that not only ten days, but one day of drinking affects markmanship. It is a well-known fact that Sunday drinking affects the skill of factory hands to such an extent that Monday is the day for accidents.

Daniel's Start in Life

At the very beginning of the story of this great man we are taken into the secret of his success. He started right! At the very beginning he encountered temptation in a plausible, alluring form. He might have argued that others knew better than he, that to succeed, it was better to conform to the usages of the court. If he had done so he would probably have remained among the mediocre.

"Dare to be a Daniel; dare to stand alone!" It is old now and a commonplace. But it still means success and happiness.

After a training which usually comprised three years, the young men were brought before the king. Doubtless they were to be used as pages and couriers and personal attendants. But almost immediately the great ruler selected the four young Hebrews as his most valued and trusted retainers. Their self-control had won for them a great chance in life. How they used it, and their further adventures, are to be found in the other chapters of this book.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Obtain Order

ORDER is said to be heaven's first law. It is a first necessity in the Sunday school. Without it there can be neither worship nor instruction. To secure it is worth while from every standpoint. How to secure it is the question.

To help thousands of superintendents and teachers who are troubled on this point, I am bringing testimonies from those who have succeeded. And the first testimony will be my own.

For 30 years my plan for securing order has been to stand in perfect quietness, sometimes with uplifted hand, until all talking has ceased. I never talk unless there is quiet. The school will soon understand and will come to the will of the superintendent. I never use the bell to bring quiet. In a certain school a visitor noticed that they waited until the superintendent had rung the bell a number of times before coming to order. The visitor asked a boy the reason. The boy said they knew he would always ring at least five times. To make disorder, to shout for order, to scold, is no way to win order.

Now listen to some other superintendents:

"Never have had any trouble. If any confusion I stop the program and quietly wait."

"By having officers and teachers in their places at the appointed hour. I will not have anything but order. If you don't believe it, come and see."

"Disorder is generally found among the smaller children. We have charts and maps and try to keep them interested."

"By being orderly on the platform myself. Having teachers sit with classes and assist. By having 'something doing' all the time."

"By being quiet myself and saying as few words as possible."

"By refusing to do anything while the school is disorderly; by keeping cool and dignified but cheerful when tempted to scold. By keeping school busy."

"Nothing more than to call for a spirit of reverence at all times."

"Expect it. Example and co-operation of teachers. Silence on part of secretaries. Wait for order."

"The school comes to order (without bell) when the superintendent ascends the platform. No word is uttered until the room is perfectly still. The assistant superintendent hands a red slip to the teacher whose class is disorderly."

"By knowing exactly what is going to be done during the session. By having signals struck on the piano for order, and rising."

"By expecting each one to be courteous and considerate. No trouble on that score."

"In the main room, by the personality of the superintendent. In the others, by putting classes on their honor."

"By not allowing disorder to start. If there is any unusual noise or disorder, a moment's pause in whatever is going on will suffice."

"I profit by experience. Co-operate with teachers. I expect order. I remove causes of disorder. I put a troublesome pupil with an older class. In severe cases (about once in ten years) I suspend a pupil for two weeks."

"Ring a call bell once and wait."

"We call school to order by the use of the piano. Do not use a bell."

"In the devotional or opening exercises I obtain order by having an attractive program and by executing it promptly, not allowing it to drag. In the class, by having teachers who are interested in the work, and having something to interest the class."

Christian Herald Soldiers and Sailors Fund

You Can Help Send the Christian Herald Every Week Direct to the Soldiers and Sailors at Sea

FATHERS and sons have gone forth at their country's call—some to brave peril and death on land and sea—others to join the training camps. Many will find a last resting place on a foreign shore—on the battlefield, in the hospital, or to succumb to the inevitable hardships of camp life. Imagine the anguish that must be in the heart of every mother—as she thinks of her son—the boy she has watched over since childhood with the love that only a mother can give—now suddenly taken from home to a strange land—possibly never to return.

We can all help these anxious mothers of our soldiers and sailors by seeing that they promptly receive the Christian Herald every week. It is just the magazine the boys should have. There is so much in the Christian Herald that will appeal to them—good, clean, yet interesting stories, with an up-to-date record of the events of the world. And the very latest pictures, too.

For this purpose we are going to organize a Soldiers and Sailors Fund. Every penny received for this fund will be used for supplying Christian Heralds direct to our soldiers and sailors wherever they may be.

A correspondent in Paris, France, in a recent dispatch tells us what General Pershing said about reading matter for our boys in France. It applies equally as well to the sailors at sea and to the army in training at home.

> "The Sammies in France need all the good, wholesome reading matter the folks at home can send them," Major General Pershing declared.
>
> The American boys at the permanent training camp near the French front have expressed their hunger for fresh newspapers and magazines from home. The question was put up to the American Commander in Chief and he not only approved plans that might be made to furnish the Sammies with good magazines and newspapers, but outlined a scheme under which he believes the work can be done effectively.
>
> "I thoroughly approve of the plan of sending plenty of newspapers and magazines to the Sammies," Pershing said. "The idea is excellent. The boys here need any amount of good, wholesome reading matter from the folks at home.
>
> "But one thing must be understood: the officers do not want and the men do not appreciate old papers—old printing. The literature sent to France must be current—that is, new magazines and leading newspapers despatched as soon as possible after publication."—News Item.

Postmaster General Burleson has announced that magazines which have been read can be remailed to the soldiers and sailors by placing stamps on the cover, and giving them to any postal employee. Such magazines will be distributed among our soldiers and sailors. But as General Pershing says: "These young Americans, massing behind the firing line, have already called attention to the need for up-to-date literature."

First Copies Off Press Will Go to Soldiers and Sailors

Just as General Pershing says, "Our boys will not read old magazines, but must have up-to-date issues—current numbers."

The Christian Herald will arrange to send the very first copies off the press to soldiers and sailors, which will insure their getting them without delay.

Testaments for Our Boys

We desire that our brave soldiers, who have proved themselves so courageous and steadfast in their country's cause, should, every man of them, be provided with a copy of a Christian Herald Testament, that they might wear it next to their heart to comfort, guide and cheer.

An opportunity is now afforded for all who desire to become actively interested in this missionary work to do so. Contributions to this fund will help us also to place Christian Herald Testaments in the hands of the soldiers and sailors—as we will send a Christian Herald Testament for each name of a soldier or a sailor that is placed on our mailing list. Every boy who receives one of these Testaments will carry it about with him wherever he goes—in the camp, in the hospital, or in the field. These little volumes will become precious as souvenirs and as kindly remembrances of the friends who thought of the soldiers' spiritual welfare.

Send any sum you can spare. All contributions will be placed in the fund and the amount used to add as many names of soldiers and sailors on our mailing list as possible. Address all communications and remittances to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

◆

THE first illustrated lecture on Sunday school work ever given in South America, presented in Buenos Aires by Rev. George P. Howard, Sunday School Secretary, was attended by over 850 people, who enjoyed seeing the Sunday school groups in other lands.

A PLAN for Sunday school training for the foreign field is being developed by the World's Sunday School Association. Three groups are included: missionaries on furlough, missionary candidates, and students from foreign countries. A list of over 650 furlough missionaries has been received. A letter is sent to each, giving a list of books on Sunday school methods. The name is then passed on to the Association of the state and county in which the missionary resides. Through these, he receives a set of the state Sunday school literature, and is advised of good nearby Sunday schools, and of institutes and conventions. This plan will "promote the missionary idea in Sunday school work and the Sunday school idea in missionary work." The foreign students are reached principally through the Y. M. C. A. secretaries of colleges and universities. The local Sunday School Associations have been asked to put these students in touch with the home life of the community.

Stop Brushing
Teeth In Your Way For a Week
By Wm. M. Ruthrauff, A. B., A. M.
All Statements Approved by High Dental Authorities

Pepsodent
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
The New-Day Dentifrice

Prove the Results of Pepsodent

A way has been found to deal with film—that slimy film, the cause of nearly all tooth troubles.

Old teeth-cleaning methods failed to end it. Despite twice-daily brushing, much of the film remained.

It absorbs stains, so the teeth discolor. It hardens into tartar. It holds food particles which ferment and form acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth—the cause of all decay.

It also forms an ideal breeding place for germs. Germs enter it and multiply.

These germ attacks are the cause of many serious troubles and an important factor in producing pyorrhea.

Tooth protection requires that film's day-to-day removal. Without that, the best-brushed teeth discolor and decay. Tartar forms, until a dentist must remove it. Gum troubles frequently develop.

Almost everybody knows that. Now we ask you to prove a new invention—Pepsodent—which that film can't resist. Cease your old ways for one week, and see what this new way does.

Watch It Digest The Film

That film is albuminous. That fact suggests the use of pepsin, the digestant of albumin.

But pepsin alone is inert. It must be activated; and the usual activating agent — acid —is harmful to the teeth. That fact for long prohibited the use of a digestant.

Now a harmless agent has been found to activate the pepsin. Five governments have granted patents on the combination.

This is the basis of Pepsodent. It contains activated pepsin. The purpose is to digest the film, wherever it may lodge, so brushing can easily remove it. Three years of clinical tests under able authorities have proved this product splendidly efficient.

We offer you a One-Week tube. Send the coupon for it. Compare this tooth paste with the methods that you use. Note how clean your teeth feel, how they whiten, how the film disappears. Then judge for yourself if you want your teeth always cleaned like that.

Do this for your own sake, for your family's sake. Cut out the coupon now.

Pepsodent
REG. U.S. PAT OFF
The New-Day Dentifrice
Sold by Druggists in Large Tubes
THE PEPSODENT CO.
Dept. 62, 1104 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

One-Week Tube Free
THE PEPSODENT CO.
Dept. 62, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Mail One-Week Tube of Pepsodent to
Name..........................
Address........................

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 906

not consider itself bound by any decisions of the Stockholm conference. It has also declined to place any obstacles in the way of the conference, which Premier Kerensky is said to favor.

The Cost of Conflict. Secretary McAdoo on August 14, in conference with Congressional leaders, informed them that it would be necessary for the Congress, during the present special session or the coming regular session, to authorize additional war expenditures of $9,000,000,000, which would include further loans to the Allies, and would carry the war expense to June 30, 1918.

Fragments of News. The United States soldiers in France are reported to dislike the nickname "Sammie," prefering "Johnny Yank," although no appellation has yet been found to meet with universal approval among the men of the expedition. . . . The State Department is investigating through the Spanish embassy a report that American citizens resident in Germany are being forced to serve in the Kaiser's army. . . . The Japanese high commission to the United States arrived at San Francisco on August 13, being given an enthusiastic welcome by the people of the city. Addressing the mayor in response to his welcome, Viscount Ishii declared: "We are here as the representatives of Japan on a mission of friendship and good will. We come as allies in a common cause." . . . The militant suffragettes who continued to picket the White House after the President's pardon of those committed to the workhouse attempted for several days to display banners addressing the President as "Kaiser Wilson," the banners being promptly torn down by members of the "audience." On August 14, disorder approaching a riot accompanied the tearing down of the banners, and the pickets were driven back to the Cameron house, their headquarters, by a volley of eggs and stones. The headquarters were also stoned and some windows were broken. Twenty banners in all addressed to "Kaiser Wilson" had been destroyed up to August 14. On August 16, six women were arrested, receiving workhouse sentences the next day. Senator Myers, of Montana, on the 18th, introduced a drastic bill designed to stop picketing which he declared had approached treason. . . . On August 13, fifty armed business men of Lovelock, Nevada, deported two organizers of the I. W. W., shipping them to Ogden, Utah.

◆

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE only important fighting in the past week took place in Moldavia and on the western front. On August 12 hard fighting took place in Moldavia, in the quadrangle formed by the Bukowina border, the Sereth River, a line from the Sereth to the mountains running north of Fokshani and the Transylvanian frontier where the Teuton forces were closing in on their enemies from three sides. From Bukowina one Teuton force is moving southward from the direction of Kimpolung, slowly driving the Russo-Rumanians before it. On the west, the Teutons are forcing their way through the mountain valleys, pushing the defenders eastward toward the plain between the mountains and the Sereth River. On the Trotus, the fighting was particularly severe, and ended in the Russo-Rumanians falling backward to Ocua, almost at the entrance of the valley.

On the southern line the severest fighting took place. Here the Austro-Germans attacked the foe on the railroad running north from Fokshani, and in the territory lying between this railroad and the Sereth. The Rumanians resisted desperately, but eventually they and the Russians gave way and fell back to Marasechti, ten miles north of Fokshani, the Teutons capturing some 6,700 prisoners, eighteen cannon and sixty-one machine guns.

Next day, the railroad junction town of Pautziu, west of Marasechti and north of Fokshani, fell into Teuton hands. Pressing their advantage, the Teutons captured the town of Stratcani, northwest of Pautziu. On the Sereth, the bridgehead at Baltaretu was stormed by the Teutons, 3,000 prisoners and considerable artillery being taken.

A falling off in British tonnage sunk in the week ending August 12 was reported in the Admiralty statement: 14 vessels over 1,600 tons, 2 under, and 3 fishing vessels being stated to have been sunk. The Italians report a loss of 11 vessels for the same period.

In the early part of the week, there was considerable artillery fighting in the Nieuport sector, and the Germans heavily shelled the British positions before Lens. In the Ypres sector, the British, after artillery preparation, assaulted the German advanced positions east of Hooge, between Frezenburg and the road from Ypres to Menin. The rush of this assault was successful in penetrating the German lines to a depth of several hundred yards on the whole front, but after the rush the German defense stiffened and counter-attacks marked by heavy fighting developed.

Toward the end of the week important fighting took place on that part of the British front between Hulluch and Lens. Here the Canadians made a thrust forward and captured Hill No. 70, one of the heights along which the road from Lens to Hulluch runs. This position has been captured twice before, by the British in September, 1916.

According to late reports, hand-to-hand fighting is now going on in the streets of Lens itself.

On the French portion of the front the artillery was very active on the Aisne, in Champagne, near Verdun and in the Alsace mountains.

China finally declared war this week on the Central Empires. The practical importance of this move is in the committing of China to the economic "war after the war" on the side of the Allies.

◆

An Appeal for Peace

Continued from page 906

party, the British Premier said, were unattainable unless the Entente won.

The British press shows some difference of opinion in commenting upon the Pope's proposal.

The Westminster Gazette says: "The government should first consider not only what we wish to do, but what we can do. The government would have to consider many things unknown or only half known to the public. It must consider whether the Pope's ideas furnish a basis for negotiations. If not, it will be the duty of the Entente Allies to state their minimum terms explicitly so that the enemy cannot say we are persisting in war for aims which we cannot or dare not avow."

OPINIONS of leading American clergymen are as follows:

Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the Christian Endeavor Society:

The Pope's peace proposal is good as far as it goes. I wish it might go further in the line of democracy, disarmament and guarantee of permanent peace.

Cardinal Gibbons, Roman Catholic Church:

His Holiness unquestionably is expressing the yearning and longing that is in the hearts of millions of people. Every rational citizen will acknowledge that the Pope is actuated by lofty, humane and disinterested motives, and therefore his suggestions deserve to be received with the attention and respect due them.

Bishop Frederick Burgess, of Long Island, Protestant Episcopal Church:

I regard it as a hopeful sign and trust that it will prevail to bring about a conference of the various governments engaged in the war."

Dr. R. A. Torrey, dean of Bible Institute, Los Angeles:

I long for peace, even though we do not obtain all that we desire or that is clearly just; but I suspect all proposals concerning the present war, or concerning peace, emanating from the Papal court."

Dr. Junius B. Remensnyder, pastor St. James Lutheran Church, New York:

I am delighted that the head of a great branch of the Church of Christ appeals to the warring Christian nations to adjust their differences by reason of conference and mutual regard, instead of by force, hate and deception."

Dr. David James Burrell, Marble Collegiate Church, New York:

No consideration should be given to any peace proposal which is not based on German surrender."

Dr. W. H. T. Dau, Concordia Seminary, St. Louis:

The Pope's peace proposal correctly reported is significant chiefly because of its deference to views expressed heretofore by President Wilson; next, it meets in a masterly way the universal desire for peace prevalent among the common people of the nations involved in the present war, and thus is apt to gain glory for the Catholic Church; lastly, it reveals intimate and exact knowledge of the state of affairs on the battle fronts, which seems to spell exhaustion and impending disaster to one or the other side, which disaster it may seek to avert by the opening up of peace negotiations."

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, pastor, Congregational Church, Topeka, Kan.:

The Pope's peace proposal does not meet the condition that exists. It will not be accepted by the Allies on that account."

Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

Continued from page 907

But the great significance of this number, as Bullinger says further, is its symbolical use in the ancient pagan mysteries. And SSS, or 666, is still "the secret connecting link between them and their revival in spiritism and theosophy, which aim at the union of all religions in one."

"Here is wisdom," as the inspired prophet says. "He that hath understanding, let him count the number of the beast." It were as though he went on to add: Let not the faithful remnant be afraid; great and awful as his power is, he is not God, though he shows himself to be so. After all, his number is but "the number of a man."

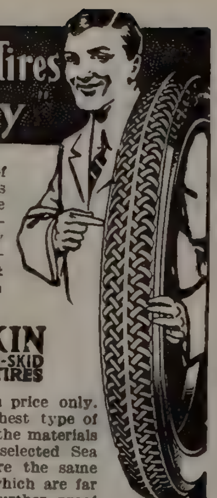
IV

IT is when we come to Revelation, chapters 17 and 19, that we perceive the doom of the "beast" and the "false prophet," together with the events immediately leading up to it.

The former is depicted as "scarlet colored," and he has a woman seated upon him. This "woman" is subsequently interpreted to symbolize "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," and "over peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." The city is then identified by the name written on the woman's forehead as "Babylon the Great," meaning, as the author of this article believes, the same old Babylon on the plain of Shinar, revived at the end of this age as the localized seat of power, or throne, of the Antichrist. As she is sitting on the beast, it means that the Antichrist is supporting her in all that she holds of blasphemy and idolatry and intoxication "with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

The record goes on to show the transfer of the power and strength of the ten kings unto the "beast," "for God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfiled." From one point of view, this is Satan's work; and yet God ruleth over all, and he "shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe the lie" (II Thess. 2 : 11), and so surrender themselves to the Antichrist. These then make war with the Lamb, but are overcome. It is the battle of Armageddon that is here referred to, in which the beast is taken, and with him the false prophet, and "these both were cast alive into the lake of fire." (Rev. 19 : 20.)

The rest of the army which they led were ordinary men, and their dead bodies were eaten by the fowls of the air, for there was none to bury them. But these two, while also men, were nevertheless superhuman men. They came up out of the abyss and cannot now be slain as mortals (Bullinger); hence they are cast alive into the lake of fire." And there are they still found alive at the close of the millennium (Rev. 20 : 10).



These are the Tires I always Buy

THAT is the slogan of thousands of car owners in every part of the United States and Canada. And the tires they are talking about—which they buy direct from the factory at a saving of 30%—are

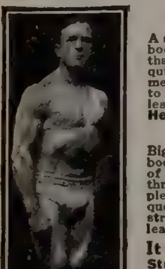
BUCKSKIN PLAIN & NON-SKID Guaranteed TIRES

Buckskins are cheap in price only. They represent the highest type of tire manufacture; and the materials used, Para rubber and selected Sea Island cotton fabric, are the same as those used in tires which are far higher in price. As further proof of their quality, BUCKSKINS carry a

4000-MILE GUARANTEE

You have the privilege of examination at no cost to yourself and, in making adjustments, we pay express both ways. Write today for price list and free illustrated book. 25

THE L. AND M. RUBBER COMPANY
East St., Carrollton, O.
Western Distributing Office
1436 South Michigan Ave., Chicago



WHY NOT WIN!

A strong man, strong in mind and strong in body, can make more money in a single year than a weakling in a lifetime. You can acquire perfect physical and mental development easily, quickly and surely. No fads to follow, no medicines to buy, no worthless apparatus required. Let Permanent Health banish doctor bills.

America Needs Men

Big business demands men whose healthy bodies and keen minds will stand the strain of the strenuous life. Build up your body through natural methods. Make work a pleasure. Command your business and conquer its worries. Get that vitality, nervous strength and energy that will enable you to lead, not follow.

It CAN Be Done: It's Not Hard

Strongfortism will help you as it has helped thousands of others. True Health and Happiness are synonymous terms. Right now, write me and ask for my book, "Intelligence in Physical and Health Culture" written by the strongest and most successful physical culture instructor in the world. Enclose 5c for mailing.

LIONEL STRONGFORT
240 Park Building, Newark, N. J.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

"Yes, I Made It All Myself"

"AND this is only one of five I've made this Spring. I bought new material for two, the others I made over from last year's dresses. All in the very latest style, of course, and better made than any I could buy. Now, thanks to the Woman's Institute—I save half on everything I wear."

Thousands of women in city, town and country have learned, through the Woman's Institute how to make their own clothes and hats and be better dressed than ever at far less cost.

Learn Dressmaking at Home

By our fascinating new method of teaching by mail, you, too, can quickly learn in spare time, in the comfort and quiet of your own home how to make dresses, skirts, waists, suits, coats, lingerie, children's clothes, hats—in fact, garments of every kind. With this training you will be able not only to make all your own clothes, but to take up dressmaking or millinery as a business—secure a good paying position or open a shop of your own.

Send for our handsome illustrated book, and learn from the personal experiences of many of our

5000 Delighted Students

just what the Woman's Institute can do for you. Simply mail the coupon—or a letter or post card, stating which subject interests you most.

Woman's Institute of Domestic Arts and Sciences, Inc.
Dept. 37-V 425 Fifth Ave., New York City
Please send me booklet containing full information about your course in the subject marked X.
☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Millinery
☐ Professional Dressmaking
Name__________
Specify whether Mrs. or Miss
Address__________

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

"HOW shall I phrase my prayer that it may be heard, that the answer may be sure?" Such a question came to the editor within the month, and he replied that the language of the prayer mattered little, but the sincere desire of the heart mattered much. The same questioner was seeking release from an ailment which is nearly always the result of careless habits.

The laws of nature are part of the law of God, and if we break these laws, we sin. We can hardly expect to receive relief through prayer as long as we continue the sin, for the one prayer of the sinner which is certain to be answered is the prayer for forgiveness. We must come to the Great Physician able to plead that we have exhausted all our own resources. When the skill of a physician has not availed, when as far as we know we are breaking no laws of our being, physical or spiritual, and there is no further human resource, when we can come praying even as the Saviour prayed in Gethsemane, "Not my will, but thine be done," then we can lay before the Great Physician our human ills, and be sure that we shall receive either relief or grace to bear them. But until we have done all that in us lies, it savors of presumption to ask God to save us. We can always ask for and receive help to do our best.

M. D., a young college woman, says that several paths for life work lie before her, and she asks for prayer that God's will may be carried out.

E. W. S., who acknowledges answer to prayer that a pastor might be secured for the church, writes that the pastor requests leave of absence to work among the soldiers in France, if a good substitute can be secured. The prayer of the pastor and congregation now is that some one may be found to take the place of this good man during his absence.

A heartbroken mother is pleading with God to cure her child of an injury which she inflicted upon her in ignorance and in a moment of excitement. She asks the Prayer League to join with her in prayer for the poor innocent child.

Mrs. M. A. asks the League to join with her in prayer that a mother, who left her little boy several years ago, may return.

Mrs. W. M. asks if it is selfish to request prayers for her loved ones who have enlisted for the war, and begs all those who have given their boys to the service of their country to join her in prayer that all, if it be God's will, may return safe to their homes.

The mother of A. L. B., who asked the prayers of the League in her behalf, has been blessed with renewed health and strength. A father for whose safe return from the army in France to his little girl A. L. B. had prayed, recently wrote that he was well.

C. F. G., a minister, requests prayer for the recovery of his wife, whom he feels none but God can heal.

Mrs. S. M. F. asks, for the sake of her husband and children, that she may be cured of infirmities which are manifested in vertigo and inability to concentrate her mind.

Mrs. L. V. C. asks prayer for her little boy who is six years old and cannot talk yet.

Mrs. W. A. M. asks prayer for the mothers who have sons in the war; also for bodily healing for herself and spiritual healing for her son.

C. C. asks prayer for a poor woman, nearly sixty years old, whose home was recently sold for debt.

Mrs. H. F. C. asks for prayers for the return of her husband.

J. S. requests prayer for his sick wife; also to be cured of his own bodily infirmities.

Mrs. L. L. F. asks the prayers of the League for her two sons who have gone to the war; also that her little daughter may be cured of the effects of contact with a poisonous plant; also that peace may soon be declared.

Miss A. B. testifies that her father, who lay very ill in the hospital, was spared to her, though the doctors had said he could not survive an operation.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

London, Ohio; Circleville, Ohio; Ingomar, Mont.; Salem, N. Y.; Jonesboro, Ga.; Capeville, Texas.

Two mothers ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. P. G. asks prayer that daughter's mind may be restored; N. S., for the healing of own mind; E. C. J., that A. R. B.'s mind be restored; and Regular Reader, that friend's mind be restored.

I. L. H. asks prayer that brother's sight may be restored; E. S. P. that sister's sight may be restored; E. E. S., that own sight may be restored; Mrs. J. Z., that eyes may be strengthened; E. J. M., that M. E.'s sight may be restored without operation; and E. C. J., that sight may be better.

Six friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing.

Nine friends ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Twenty friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

A. A. L. asks prayer that son may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. M. D. S. and M. O. O., that brothers may be cured of the liquor habit; Arcadid, that nephew may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. L. A. P., that her brother may be cured of the drug habit.

Fifty friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. L. V. C., that son may be able to talk; Mrs. A. C. N., that daughter may be cured of nervous prostration and her mind and body strengthened; M. H. M., that brother be cured of tuberculosis; J. H. N., that sister may be healed of stomach trouble and cancer of the nose; Member, that neighbor may have the use of her limbs restored; J. H. W., that friend may be healed of cancer of the eye, and another be cured of epileptic fits. Thirty-one friends ask prayer for the healing of self, including G. W. M., to be cured of nervous prostration.

Three parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; two wives, their husbands; seventeen, for other relatives and friends.

Twenty friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters.

Twelve friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including three that war may cease.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

A Reader, Logansport, Ind.; A Sincere Believer in Prayer, Westbrook, Me.; Reader, Manette, Wash.; A Reader, Marion, N. C.; Y. P., New Jersey; Mrs. S. R. W., Boulder, Colo.; A Constant Reader, Arcadia, Fla. (for restoration of friend's mind); Miss E. M. B., Dayton, Ohio; C. D. C., Berwick, Iowa; A Believer in Prayer, North Tonawanda, N. Y.; Mrs. M. D. S.; H. K., Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. A. J. H., Birmingham, Ala.; A Constant Reader, Oklahoma; A True Friend; Mrs. W. D. T., Geary, Oklahoma; J. H. N., Nevada, Texas.

Called Higher

THAT veteran worker, the Rev. William James, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who recently passed away, was engaged in many various Christian activities, of which the outer world knew little or nothing. He founded a Sunday School at Rockaway Beach, in a public school building, many years ago when there was no religious work there. Out of that school grew a church which is now large and prosperous. He also started a Sunday School at Union Course, near Woodhaven, some 30 years ago, which has grown into two large churches. He founded a Sunday School at Rockledge, Fla., which has also grown into two churches. These are in addition to Dr. James' labors referred to in the Christian Herald recently. He was indeed a "Master Worker," and the labor of his heart and hands was wonderfully blessed.

James D. Jones of Omaha, Neb., who lately passed away, was during the latter years of his life one of the best-known active Christians in a populous neighborhood. He was one of the pioneers of Nebraska, and was long identified with stockyard interests. At the funeral services Rev. Charles F. Holler of Trinity Baptist Church paid high tribute to the whole-souled, sturdy, courageous character of the man, who was won to Christ through the prayers of his godly wife.

Mr. J. M. Morse, of Passaic, N. J., the author of many beautiful religious poems, passed away recently. "The Saviour's Call," which appeared in the Christian Herald of May 9th, was one of his last poems. A number of notable sacred songs from his pen have been set to music.

This stretch of concrete is on the Ohio River Road, in the Williamstown District of West Virginia. It is good 365 days in the year; always clean. Burdette Woodyard, Parkersburg, W. Va., was the engineer.

Concrete Roads Help the Farmer to "Do His Bit"

The American farmer may win or lose this war for the whole nation. He has to feed us and our allies in the face of a world-wide shortage of food. He must make every acre yield its utmost in grain, fodder and fruit.

The farmer's time must be saved so that he can devote more of it to producing. His horses must be kept working in the fields. He and they should spend a minimum of time on the road to and from market. He must be able to haul quickly, by motor if he can, and get back to work; and he must be able to haul in bad weather when he can not work on the farm.

Concrete Roads Are a Necessity

They enable the farmer to haul produce despite rain, thaw or snow, in half to a third of the time it takes to do so through mud, ruts and holes, and with fewer horses. Heavier loads can be hauled with less effort and in less time. When motor cars are used, all the horses can be spared for farm labor.

In war time waste is treason. It helps the enemy to win. Public funds must not be squandered, as they have been in the past, in poor and temporary road building. Every dollar raised by taxation should be wisely spent.

Highways must be able to stand up under the heaviest traffic, without need of constant repairs. They should be built of concrete, which is hard, rigid, unyielding and durable. Concrete for roads is the same as the material used in building concrete dams, foundations, bridges and great engineering works like the Panama Canal, requiring great solidity and strength.

Let Every Patriot Help

by taking a personal and active interest in the huge road problem confronting the nation. Let every community do its part in constructing roads which will endure and which will connect with the improved roads of its neighbors. Thus the whole country will be pulled out of the mud. Farmers will answer the call to arms with a yield that will surpass all records and win the war for us and our allies.

Inform yourself about concrete—its cost, its maintenance, its adaptability to your section. Agitate for good roads bond issues to build connected systems of highways. Vote for the bonds as a patriotic duty, and get your neighbors to do so. All pull together for NATIONAL EFFICIENCY in food production and food distribution.

Write for a free copy of Bulletin No. 136.

CONCRETE ROADS:
THEIR ADVANTAGES
No Mud—No Dust
No Ruts—No Holes
No Slipping
No Skidding
Easy Hauling
Smooth Riding
Long Life—Safety
Always Ready for Use
Low Maintenance
Moderate Cost

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION
Offices at ATLANTA
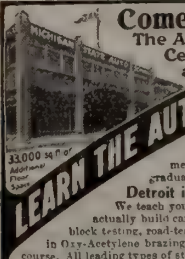
CHICAGO
DALLAS
DENVER
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
MILWAUKEE
NEW YORK
PITTSBURGH
SALT LAKE CITY
SAN FRANCISCO
SEATTLE
WASHINGTON, D. C.

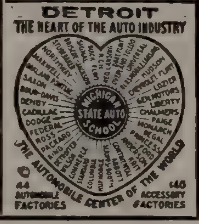
CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE

Reeducating the Disabled

THROUGH the Military Hospitals Commission, Canada has undertaken to provide disabled soldiers and sailors with vocational reeducation to make them self-supporting. The purpose is to remove from the government the burden of pensions. It is an effort to discourage the conception that a soldier should receive a pension from the government that will enable him to live in idleness. In England approximately $34,100,000 have recently been provided by popular subscription to promote the work.

An organization has been incorporated by prominent citizens of St. Louis, Mo., known as the National Hospital-School for Cripples, its purpose being to promote the welfare of all disabled on account of the war, to promote the employment of crippled children and soldiers, and to provide schools in which sha'l be taught suitable occupations. The organization will train dependents of those called to the front and train them so they may obtain self-sustaining work. The movement which is to be made national, is known as the White Cross.





Come to Detroit
The Automobile Center and
LEARN THE AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS

33,000 sq ft of Additional Floor Space

Detroit trained men get preference and jobs quickly. Think what it means to learn in the M. S. A. S Factories endorse our School. Men are needed everywhere as testers, repair men, chauffeurs, garage men. Hundreds of our graduates start in business for themselves.

Detroit is Place to Learn—Start Any Time

We teach you to handle any auto proposition. Students actually build cars, getting factory training in assembling, block testing, road-testing, everything. Special complete course in Oxy-Acetylene brazing, welding and cutting, separate from regular course. All leading types of starting, lighting and ignition systems in operation. Six cylinder Lozier, eight cylinder King used for road instruction. We have the following completely equipped chasses — Studebaker "6" 1917 chassis, Hudson Super-6 1917 chassis, Cole "8" 1917 chassis, Detroit Electric 1917 chassis, G. M. C. Truck 1917 chassis, Buick Light "6" 1917 chassis, Chalmers "6-30" 1917 chassis, Saxon "6" 1917 chassis, Maxwell 1917 chassis, Oldsmobile "8" 1917 chassis, Winton "6" 1917 chassis, Packard Twin-6 1917 chassis, Detroiter "6" 1917 chassis, Overland 1917 chassis, Willys-Knight 1917 chassis. School Open All the Year; Graduate in 10 to 12 Weeks; Enter Classes Any Time, Any Day.

Prepare to Serve Your Country NOW

The U. S. needs thousands of truck, aeroplane and motor cycle drivers. Trained men are needed. Any motor machinery the government owns must be in service. Preference will be given to trained men. The Army must be fed. It will need ammunition. Food and ammunition must be delivered regularly. The army must be transported.

Quartermaster Department and Signal Corps Need Trained Men

Every student learns autos and gas motors from A to Z. Factories know from actual experience that our men are thoroughly and practically trained.

These men Our Government wants and is daily enlisting.

LEARN A SUBSTANTIAL BUSINESS

Trained auto men who serve their country can go into a permanent business when services are no longer needed. Ours is the largest Auto School. Better jump on a train and come to Detroit as hundreds have done.

Act Quickly

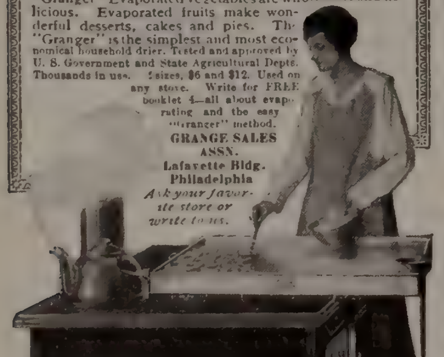
Get full particulars, "Auto School News" and new 128 page illus. Catalog, absolutely free.

Michigan State Auto School
The Old Reliable School
A. G. ZELLER, President
4408 Auto Bldg., 687-89-91 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich., U. S. A.

Money Back Guarantee

WE guarantee to qualify you in a short time for a position as chauffeur, repair man, tester, demonstrator, garage man or automobile dealer or refund your money.

DETROIT
THE HEART OF THE AUTO INDUSTRY
MICHIGAN STATE AUTO SCHOOL
THE AUTOMOBILE CENTER OF THE WORLD
44 AUTOMOBILE FACTORIES
140 ACCESSORY FACTORIES



Dry Your Fruits and Vegetables
on the time-tried economical
"Granger" Evaporator

Do "your bit" for Uncle Sam and practice economy. What you don't eat now, save for winter meals.

The "Granger" does it—easy to run, child can do it. Takes
No Sugar, No Cans, No Jars

"Granger" Evaporated vegetables are wholesome and delicious. Evaporated fruits make wonderful desserts, cakes and pies. The "Granger" is the simplest and most economical household drier. Tested and approved by U. S. Government and State Agricultural Depts. Thousands in use. 2 sizes, $6 and $12. Used on any stove. Write for FREE booklet 4—all about evaporating and the easy "Granger" method.

GRANGE SALES ASSN.
Lafayette Bldg.
Philadelphia

Ask your favorite store or write to us.

STEWARTS IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Young People's Topics for September 9

Are You a "Yes—But"? (A Lesson on Excuses)

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ex. 4 : 1-17

THOSE who have tried to get something done have felt oftentimes very much as the Lord felt when Moses met with the confession of his own feebleness every suggestion that he do something. There was some excuse for Moses, for the Lord was sending him against the greatest monarch of his age; but there is little justification for most of us. Our weakness or lack of knowledge or unpreparedness is no reason for release from a duty that calls merely for the use of such talents as we have, to which will surely be added the power of God. He never fails those who seek to do his will. After all, an excuse is nearly always a mask behind which we seek to hide indifference or lack of interest or lack of consecration, or some other failing which we would be slow to confess; yet the excuse is often a more open confession than would be the direct statement. There are people who, asked to do a thing, say: "Oh, yes, I would be glad to do it, but don't you think So-and-So could do it much better?" And there are others who merely answer, "I will try." The "yes—but" sort of folks may be very pleasant people, but the world could lose several million of them and never know it. But the "I will try" people are the ones who are keeping the wheels turning, who are making Young People's Societies a door to the church, an effective force for the building of the Kingdom of Righteousness on earth.

Rally Day. The Place and Purpose of the League

Epworth League Topic. Mal. 3 : 16-18; 4 : 2 (R. V.); II Tim. 2 : 15, 20-26

SOLDIERS who have gone into battle rally about their leaders when the battle is over, or, if the battle results in disorganization, and defeat is threatened, the men are rallied for a new start. Each year marks a campaign by the League for God and the church. The Rally Day in the fall is a new gathering of the workers about their leaders for a new attack upon sin, indifference and the forces which lead the steps of young people away from faith and service. Two things are necessary to an effective rally: leaders, and those willing to be led; and a third thing is necessary for both; namely, a vital purpose which grips each heart. The Epworth League stands between the Sunday school and the church. It is its business to train the young people of the Sunday school for active church work, in the meantime giving them the necessary opportunities for social development and recreation. It must translate the spiritual lessons of the Sunday school into the religious activities of the church. Many children are brought into the church through the Sunday school; more are now lost to the church each year. Much of this loss is due to the indifference of the parents, but a large part of it can be prevented if the Young People's Societies approach the problem with the proper degree of vigor and originality. The Sunday school should be the recruiting station of the League, even as the League is the recruiting station of the church, and both leaders and members should keep ever before them the fact that the League work is only performing its proper function when it is developing young life for service through the years of maturity. Make sure that Rally Day is more than a mere enthusiastic gathering at the end of the summer vacation. Make it a rally for consecration for definite hard work during the active months to come.

[The editor received an anonymous request on August 2 asking for special treatment of a certain subject in this column in the next issue. The next issue was already on the press and the request could not be complied with. If the writer had signed the letter, the editor would gladly have rendered by mail such service as he could.]

Putting Sand on the Back Track

WHEN the boy goes from home to college, he is in a certain sense born again. To a large degree he is thrown into a new environment, upon his own responsibility. Habits of thought and habits of life which have become more or less natural in the environment of home are supplanted in whole or in part by new habits, both of thought and action.

There is nothing in the college life that is essentially antagonistic to consistent Christian living; but many young men, and young women, too, who have been leaders among the young people in the churches at home, seem suddenly to lose their moorings and sometimes make utter shipwreck of their religious lives during the first term at college. The social life, the fraternity life, the athletic life, all right enough when kept in their proper relations to each other and to the college life as a whole, easily take up the time out of class, to the exclusion of religion and the church. This tendency has been particularly marked at state schools, where, because of our peculiar governmental attitude toward religion, active Christian work under the authority of the college is impossible. The two Christian Associations are able to exert a certain influence for good, but they are unable to do all that is desirable in the creation of a religious atmosphere within the college.

It became evident several years ago that some additional measure must be taken, and the first student pastor was an attempt to find the other way. It proved an experiment very much worth while, and now, as a result, student pastors are maintained in most college towns by nearly all of the evangelical churches. It is the business of a student pastor to learn the church affiliation of each student coming to the college, to meet the student at the train, to visit him in his room, to help him get started right in all the various relationships of college life, to give him definite religious work to do, and to see that the religious life, started at home, develops to its proper fruitage in college, as well as to bring into fellowship with Christ those students who, though coming down from a Christian family, have not professed Christian faith before coming to college.

The student pastor has thus filled the gap in the religious life of the nonsectarian school. The church with which he is connected does not require the transfer of membership, but recognizes the student's membership at home, and admits him to a working fellowship as a student, thus making possible the continuation in college of religious habits and the development there of the religious energies which had been created at home. Parents whose boys and girls are this fall beginning a college course would do well to see that the student pastor of their denomination knows about these students. In the larger colleges it is almost impossible for him to sort out the young folks of his own denomination from the records of the college in time to be of much service to them during their first year. His principal source of information must, of necessity, be the fathers and mothers and the pastors in the home town.

Ambassador Gerard's View

IN his narrative entitled "My Four Years in Germany," now running in the San Francisco Examiner, former Ambassador Gerard tells many things concerning the war which it is well for Americans to know. Of these he writes: "It is only because I believe that our people should be informed that I have consented to write this book."

Briefly he summarizes what he believes to be the actual situation in these words: "I am writing what should have been the last chapter as the foreword of this book, because I want to bring home to our people the gravity of the situation; because I want to tell them that the military and naval power of the German Empire is unbroken; that of the 12,000,000 men whom the Kaiser has called to the colors but 1,500,000 have been killed, 500,000 permanently disabled, not more than 500,000 are prisoners of war, and about 500,000 constitute the number of wounded or on the sick list of each day, leaving at all times about 9,000,000 effectives under arms.

"There have been no great losses in the German navy, and any losses of ships have been compensated for by the building of new ones. The 9,000,000 men and more—for at least 400,000 come of military age in Germany every year—because of their experience in two and a half years of war, are better and more efficient soldiers than at the time when they were called to the colors. Their officers know far more of the science of this war, and the men themselves now have the skill and bearing of veterans.

"Nor should any one believe that Germany will break under starvation or make peace because of revolution. The German nation is not one which makes revolutions. There will be scattered riots in Germany, but no simultaneous rising of the whole people. The officers of the army are all of one class, and of a class devoted to the ideals of autocracy. A revolution of the army is impossible, and at home there are only the boys and old men, easily kept in subjection by the police.

"There is far greater danger of the starvation of our Allies than of the starvation of the Germans. Every available inch of ground in Germany is cultivated, and cultivated by the aid of the old men, the boys and the women, and the 2,000,000 prisoners of war. The arable lands of northern France and of Rumania are being cultivated by the German army with an efficiency never before known in these countries, and most of that food will be added to the food supplies of Germany. Certainly the people suffer; but still more certainly this war will not be ended because of the starvation of Germany.

"The U-boat peril is a very real one for England. Russia may either break up into civil wars or become so ineffective that the millions of German troops engaged on the Russian front may be withdrawn and hurled against the western lines.

"We stand in great peril, and only the use of all our resources, and recognition of the truth as to our enemy, can win this war for us. If Germany wins this war, it means the triumph of the autocratic system. It means the triumph of those who believe not only in war for itself, but in war as a high and noble occupation."

◆

A Touching Gift

INCLOSED you will find a one-dollar gold piece, given to me by my husband on our wedding-day, about sixty years ago. I won't need it much longer, as I am nearly eighty-one years old, and my husband will soon be ninety-two. He reads the Christian Herald with his second sight. I don't want this little dollar to lie idle any longer. I hope it can help some poor little Belgian orphan. I would really like to know if you receive it. Then I would know it had begun its work. Mrs. J. W. L.

Spirit Lake, Iowa.

EXPOSITION INTERNATIONALE
PARIS 1903
MÉDAILLE D'OR
DIPLÔME D'HONNEUR

"Lord, give us bread" is the cry of the world today. This picture shows a waiting bread line in France

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

——, Beaver, Okla	$1.00
Mrs R R Randall	1.00
Allen H Crary	1.00
A H Reese	1.00
Julia F Abbot	1.00
——, Ellsworth, Me	1.00
"An Interested Reader"	1.00
Katie Kennel	1.00
Mrs E D Horn	1.00
Edw Helfrich	1.00
M Davis	1.00
Mrs Berd Kingman	1.00
Mrs A A Wherley	1.00
Miss L C Bronaugh	1.00
Friend, Canonsburg, Pa	1.00
Marion Middlemas	1.00
Mrs A A Dinsdale	1.00
J F Dodd	1.00
S H Ayers	1.00
Mrs J B Gregory	1.00
Mr C Haslett	1.00
Mr Ray Luher	1.00
E P G	1.00
Mr Louis Reymond	1.00
Mrs McCloud	1.00
Mrs Jacobson	1.00
——, Decatur, Texas	1.00
Gertrude Frisbie	1.00
Mrs E H Whitehurst	1.00
Clyde Salisbury	1.00
Mrs E J Hunt	1.00
Miss Nellie Schock	1.00
Rev D Graessle	1.00
L J Baker	1.00
Mrs Catharine Bastin	1.00
Mother, Albion, Idaho	1.00
Mrs Anna L Miles	1.00
Mrs Rose Lippert	1.00
M M McIntyre	1.00
Elsie H Smith	1.00
Lulu Pearce	1.00
John McDonald	1.00
Mary E Eggleston	1.00
Friend, Germantown, Pa	1.00
——, Roanoke, Va	1.00
W W Arthur	1.00
Friend, Coatesville, Pa	1.00
——, Head Tide, Me	1.00
Lucy V White	1.00
Mrs Elmer Davis	1.00
Mrs G De Nise	1.00
Friend, Milford, Mich	$1.00
"A Shut in" Nashua, N H	1.00
Mrs J A Taylor	1.00
Miss Alice Churchill	1.00
U L A	1.00
J E Covington	1.00
Mrs N A Y	1.00
Mrs Lida E Workman	1.00
Rev V Kunsisto	1.00
Mrs J Kreus	1.00
Geo Neudeck	1.00
Mrs S C Lattimore	1.00
Miss M C Yount	1.00
Dr T J Merryman	1.00
Mrs E A Smith	1.00
D I Culbertson	1.00
Martin Sommer	1.00
Estella Townsend	1.00
Gordon R Morgan	1.00
R B Morgan	1.00
Mrs E D Van Nest	1.00
Miss Sara Woodcock	1.00
Mrs C S Hoadley	1.00
Jacob Becker	1.00
W W Treleaven	1.00
T A Newman	1.00
Rev Wm L Hoffman	1.00
Friend, Zion City, Ill	1.00
Friend, Harford, Pa	1.00
Mrs Clinton Eggleston	1.00
Sarah Walkden	1.00
Mrs Lettie Cobb	1.00
Mrs Eliza W Adams	1.00
Ada B Reed	1.00
Miss S J Grossman	1.00
A F Melcher	1.00
Mrs M A Cassity	1.00
Mrs M A Warner	1.00
Mrs John E Williams	1.00
K M Spencer	1.00
Miss Louise Nottingham	1.00
Miss Mary J Best	1.00
Sue Herr Rutt	1.00
Catherine Shee	1.00
Mrs J A Wimbish, Jr	1.00
Mrs B B Ballanfant	1.00
Mrs A P Stevins	1.00
Mrs M L Goldie	1.00
Mrs Kate Brown	1.00
Chas E Wilcox	1.00
Mrs J H Merkley	1.00
L A Avery	$1.00
James L Ogilvie	1.00
Mrs Thomas Williams	1.00
Mrs M R Jackson	1.00
Mrs Chas Metzger	1.00
Margharetta Grottrup	1.00
Mrs Geo Polley	1.00
H M W	1.00
Hamilton & Leighton Miller	1.00
Mrs M F Palmer	1.00
Mrs L H Haskell	1.00
"Q," New Mexico	1.00
Mrs J W Jones	1.00
Mrs L Chase	1.00
Mrs E Halsey Ball	1.00
Mrs R W Putnam	1.00
Mrs A C Fifere	1.00
Minnie R Walkup	1.00
Albert Somerlott	1.00
Fannie B George	1.00
Mrs C M Courter	1.00
S R Stanton	1.00
Baby Doris Roth	1.00
——, New Berlin, Pa	1.00
A O B	1.00
Subscriber, San Diego, Calif	1.00
W S S Metzger	1.00
"Illinois"	1.00
Mrs M M Shull	1.00
Mrs C C Bletscher	1.00
Mrs Nettie Nicholson	1.00
Mrs M S Hull	1.00
——, Paterson, N J	1.00
Edith Finster	1.00
E S Hodgson	1.00
Ed T Somervell	1.00
Mrs S J Bossnet	1.00
Evalyn L Wilder	1.00
E Anderson	1.00
J A Sneaver	1.00
——, Battle Creek, Mich	1.00
Miss M R Smith	1.00
W B Miller	1.00
Mrs Amy Krebs	1.00
Mrs R A Keene	1.00
Mrs Hoxsey	.50
——, Gardiner, Me	.50
C G Hildinger	$0.50
——, Victorville, Calif	.50
Mrs A E MacFarlane	.50
Mrs Harlan Baughn	.50
Mr H C Hoffbuhr	.50
Mrs Richard Evans	.50
Mrs N J Chambliss	.50
G L Motsinger	.50
Mrs B M Johnson	.50
Mrs Emily E Stanbridge	.50
Mrs M E Wilkes	.50
Geo L Motsinger	.50
Mrs S L Gilbert	.50
Lottie M Jones	.50
William Greenwood	.50
Mrs Laura V Sawyer	.50
Sister, Jeffersonville, Ill	.50
Friend, Richibucto, N B, Can	.50
Mrs M Chastain	.50
J W Paull	.50
Mrs Hannah Pearson	.50
W B Lewis	.50
Mrs J W Pugh	.50
Rev C H Frady	.50
Kate B Lear	.50
Mrs Joseph La Hue	.50
I X L	.50
Through "Bridegroom's Messenger"	.50
Mrs W H Pirtle	.25
Mrs J W Morris	.25
Mrs Tom Watts	.25
Mrs Walter Marden	.25
Mrs G K Binkerd	.25
Preston Brown	.25
Chas W Freeman	40.00
Miss Annie Shadden	60.00
C F Ballou	7.00
Ladies Aid, Luth Ch, Ellington Prairie, Iowa	9.00
Wm M Deitz	13.00
Friends, Louisville, Ky	4.00
A R P Ch, Ora., S Car	12.00
Christian Church Otego, N. Y.	19.00
Mrs R R Randall	1.25
S A Latimer	12.00
Union S S, Moffat, Utah	$4.51
Ella W Page	8.83
David Watts, Birdsboro, Pa.	3.50
Scotland Charge of U B Church, Chambersburg, Pa	6.25
Mrs F E Nye	9.00
C Agnes Whitmarsh	4.00
A D & J M Yale	7.00
M Evelyn Crockett	6.50
Baptist Friends of Crystal, Mich	6.25
Friend, Kinston, N Car	8.00
First Presby Ch, Holt, Mich	6.50
Mrs M D Bartholomew	1.24
——, Salem, Iowa	2.25
Mrs Wm Statsick	8.00
Mrs E J Currin	12.00
Friends, Laird, Mich	3.29
Friends, North Laird, Mich	1.29
Friends, Mass, Mich	2.22
Clara Moore	5.50
Mary A K C Lambert	.10
Newton Union Sabbath School, Newton, Iowa	150.45
Axel T Johnson	4.00
Myrtle Long	.10
Fay Snider	.10
Beulah, Myrtle and Ora Price	.15
Julia, Florence and Helen Price	.15
Mrs Bessie E Price	.35
Mrs Fannie Elliott	.10
Mr Snider	.15
Mrs S N Dawson	.40
Reader, Billings, Mont	8.00
Edith Rogers	11.00
Mrs C O Strand	4.00
Lutheran S S and C E Soc, McConnellsburg, Pa	10.90
Annie F Patteson	4.00
Friend, Summit Hill, Pa	1.75
La Clede, Ill	.10
Mrs Emeline W Seymour	8.00
Friend, Pittstown, N Y	8.35
Women's Missionary Soc, Southfield, Mich	26.40
John W Heritage	6.00
Friend, Concord, N Car	$3.50
Little Geraldine	.10
Mrs R P Auclaire	1.25
Mrs Ed Halldane	1.25
Mrs Rosella Mason	4.00
Mrs Fannie S Fry	4.00
——, Rochester, N Y	12.00
Fresh Ponds S S, New Brunswick, N J	4.00
Maud L Miller	7.00
Church of Christ, Louisville, Ky.	26.66
Forestdale S S, Forestdale, Mass	8:00
S S, First Bapt Ch, Waterford, Conn	7.60
Mr and Mrs R P Davies	14.00
G P Hawley	10.50
Mrs Anna R Tappan	3.25
Geo Ravn	17.14
Elizabeth Small	9.65
Mrs J C Pfeiffer	1.25
Edna Shore	11.43
Mrs Geo Morris	4.00
Mrs A H Carey	30.00
Mrs M J Baumgardner	.10
Mrs L G Lewis	6.00
L Wohlberg	2.75
H H Berg	1.75
W Arthur Spencer	10.75
——, Stewartville, Minn	6.65
Smithfield Jackson	6.00
D A Pipher	1.25
L H Ward	8.00
J M Dew	4.00
Mrs Mary E Jeffrey	1.65
Miss Mary Wood	.35
W W Bidwell	7.65
Dexter Wells	2.65
J J Wilmert	2.75
Mary E Streeter	200.00
Neeland Bros	100.00
Mrs D Gillespie	25.00
H T Stryker	25.00
Mrs Anna Wagner and Miss Augusta Collins	25.00
Mrs Isabella Porter	25.00
"Reader"	25.00
A S J Phelps	25.00
E M M	25.00
Immanuel Deaconess Inst. Omaha, Nebr	20.00
J J Pounder	$25.00
Mrs W T Williams	20.00
A Reader, Dekalb Junction, N Y	20.00
A Friend of the Needy, Washington, D C	20.00
Charlotte J Snyder	20.00
DeEtte A Cole	20.00
W A Orr	20.00
Mrs Sibilla Knobel	15.00
M E S S, White Pine Mine, Mich	15.00
Prairie Flower Bapt S S, Wellman, Iowa	15.00
Hortense Voter	15.00
Miss Sarah M Parr	15.00
L H Lord	15.00
An orphan, Phoenix, Ariz	10.00
Rev L L Reevy	10.00
A T Tornholm	10.00
Margaret Thompson	10.00
U B Church, Niles, Kans	10.00
Wm Herbert	10.00
Friend, Linden, Pa	10.00
Friend, Leadville, Colo	10.00
Wm J D Bell	10.00
Eleanor L Dexter	10.00
C B, Bernardsville, N J	10.00
"Anonymous", Beloit, Wis	10.00
Friend, Bethel, Conn	10.00
Esther L Strom	10.00
A H Byrd	10.00
Mrs C F Brumm	10.00
Mrs C Philipbar	10.00
Archibald McCormick	10.00
Mrs N H Fry	10.00
L A M, Montgomery, Ohio	10.00
Mr and Mrs Oryer Boyce	10.00
Woman's Miss'y Soc., Grandview, Iowa	10.00
C A Williams	10.00
Mrs Ida Blee	10.00
J L Snavely and family	10.00
First Cong'al Ch, Belle Fourche, S Dak	10.00
L R J, Edna, Kans	10.00
Mrs Elizabeth Laing	10.00
Nellie Mackey	$10.00
Mr and Mrs L C Miller	10.00
L W Felter	10.00
H G, Seattle, Wash	10.00
C L Moore and family	10.00
M Kelgard	10.00
Pherson M E S S, Circleville, Ohio	10.00
Ladies Aid Soc, Presby Ch, Shelbyville, Tenn	10.00
J T Osnes	10.00
Mary V Reynolds	10.00
Mrs M J Jackson	10.00
C W Kessler	10.00
Mrs C Wiklund	10.00
Miss Annie Caruthers	10.00
Mrs E R I and children	10.00
Mrs E W Sweet	5.00
——, Farmington, Iowa	5.00
Dr R W Frey	5.00
Frank Lehner	5.00
Miss Annie C Tepper	5.00
W H Housel	5.00
J H Walter and family	5.00
Mrs M M H., Greenville, Pa.	5.00
——, Cape May, C H, N J	5.00
Mr and Mrs I J Tipler	5.00
——, Vincennes, Ind	5.00
Mrs Wm E Gray	5.00
Mrs H S F, Jordan, Ont., Can	5.00
Mrs N A Maser	5.00
Mrs Elizabeth R Wertman	5.00
Milford Lafferty and Friends	5.00
——, New Lebanon, Pa	5.00
Lydia V Joseph	5.00
M J, Sewickley, Pa	5.00
A S Newcomb	5.00
D W Cowdrey	5.00
W J Hineman	5.00
The May Bakery	5.00
Emma A Cowles	5.00
District School No. 7, Lyons, N Y	5.00
O E Rose	5.00
Mrs A B S, Mansfield, Ohio	5.00
Mrs J O Martin	5.00
A E Lane	5.00
Miss Grace H Wilson	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Send all gifts for this fund to the Christian Herald, 93 Bible House, New York City

The Latest National Test of the Franklin Car

THERE never was a time when so many people were interested in a lowered cost of automobile use and maintenance.

It becomes a vital question as gasoline and tires go up in price.

What motorists want is free use of their cars: freedom from frozen radiators, repairs and car troubles; greater ease of handling; safety; economy; and the utility of the enclosed car for general use.

There is something for every motorist to think about in the Franklin National Efficiency Demonstration of July 13, 1917.

One hundred and seventy-nine Franklin Touring Cars—Series 9—in all parts of the United States, over roads good and bad, and in weather partly fair and partly rainy, recorded an average of 40.3 miles to one gallon of gasoline.

Franklin National Efficiency Demonstration Rules and Regulations

1. Date—Test to be made on Friday, July 13, 1917, regardless of road and weather conditions.
2. Equipment—Test to be made with Franklin Series 9 Touring Car, strictly stock model. Tires to be inflated to at least 40 pounds. Top should be down and windshield open, unless weather prevents. Car to carry regular stock equipment only.
3. Fuel—Use ONE gallon of ordinary grade of gasoline, testing between 60 and 65 degrees. DO NOT use a special high test gasoline. Obtain certificate of the quality of the gasoline.

   Use one gallon gasoline from measure certified to by local Sealer of Weights and Measures.
4. Observers—Test to be supervised by two disinterested parties of unquestionable standing, preferably an officer of your local automobile club, a representative of the press, or some high city official.

   Duties of Observers: See that trip register on speedometer is at zero. Take accurate reading of speedometer and mark it down. At close of test take another reading of speedometer and report results in miles and fractions thereof.

   Observers should inspect certificate as to test of fuel and satisfy themselves as to this point in any other way necessary.

   Observers should satisfy themselves that one gallon of gasoline has been properly measured and used as the supply. Note that the main gasoline tank and any other possible source of supply except specified container, is disconnected.

   Observers should trace out and inspect the piping from the container to the carburetor, to be sure that everything is as represented.
5. Passenger Load—To consist of driver and two observers only, one to sit in front with the driver.
6. Route—Lay out your course so that you can return to starting point. Start to be made from your own place of business, automobile club headquarters, or from a prominent hotel or equally well-known place. Cover a well-known route so the mileage shown by speedometer may be checked up from common knowledge.
7. Weight—Car to be weighed on city scales immediately after test is completed and while the three occupants are still in the car.
8. Speed—For maximum economy, maintain as near 23 miles per hour as possible, except when coasting. Coasting has always been allowed in official economy trials. Call observer's attention to fact that you will coast whenever you can.
9. Report—The results to be attested to by driver and observers before a Notary Public on certificate furnished for the purpose. Mail one copy to the factory; retain the other.

Franklin Establishes New World's Record for Gasoline Mileage

The conditions of the test are quite as significant as the results.

These conditions are printed on this page. They can be followed by any make of car, or by any two or more makes of cars in competition.

They open up to any motor car owner a simple, positive check on the performance of his car.

The man who is undecided which of several makes of cars to buy, need only put the cars through this test to get an unfailing gauge on their relative thrift—not only in gasoline, but in tires and every other item that enters into the operation of a car.

How Gasoline Economy Shows Efficiency Throughout the Car

Every automobile engineer knows, whether he admits it or not, that gasoline mileage is the final test of the easy-rolling qualities of a car. Easy-rolling means minimized friction, and where there is little friction less power is required to propel the car.

It is a fact that, on the same amount of initial power, the Franklin will coast farther than any other car. This is a result of its scientific-light-weight and flexible construction, its balance and resiliency, the quality of its materials and its sound workmanship.

Back of this minimizing of fuel waste, you see Franklin Direct-Air-Cooling—its influence on the efficiency of the Franklin engine, its elimination of the usual 177 heavy and complicated water-cooling parts.

High gasoline bills always indicate friction or excessive dead weight—power diverted from mileage and consumed in dragging the car.

Dead weight means a rigid construction—a stiff-riding car, destructive to tires and expensive in repairs and depreciation.

At this time, when so many motorists are tending towards Enclosed Cars, it is well to know that every advantage of Franklin construction applies equally to the Franklin Enclosed Models.

It is still a new thought to many, this practical adaptability of the Franklin Enclosed Car—with its protection from heat or dust, from wind or rain, from cold or snow—ready for as hard and as free use as any open model, and with practically the same economy of operation.

It was the efficiency and road ability of the Franklin that first pointed the way to the use of the Enclosed Car for all purposes.

Over a period of fifteen years the Franklin has been urging and demonstrating automobile economy. For a while it did not have much of an audience; the public eye was filled with other things.

Franklin Dealers Ready to Prove Franklin Facts

Nowadays most automobile announcements are talking Thrift—but few are proving it by facts and figures. The idea seems to be to find what the public wants and then claim it vociferously.

There are no two ways about this Thrift question. Either a car has it or it has not. If it has, it can be demonstrated.

Your Franklin dealer will be glad to demonstrate to you any claims we make for the Franklin Car. Ask him.

Touring Car	2280 lbs.	$2050.00
Cabriolet	2485 lbs.	2850.00
Town Car	2610 lbs.	3200.00
Runabout	2160 lbs.	$2000.00
Sedan	2610 lbs.	2950.00
Limousine	2620 lbs.	3200.00
Four-pass. Roadster	2280 lbs.	$2050.00
Brougham	2575 lbs.	2900.00

All Prices F. O. B. Syracuse

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY, Syracuse, N. Y., U. S. A.

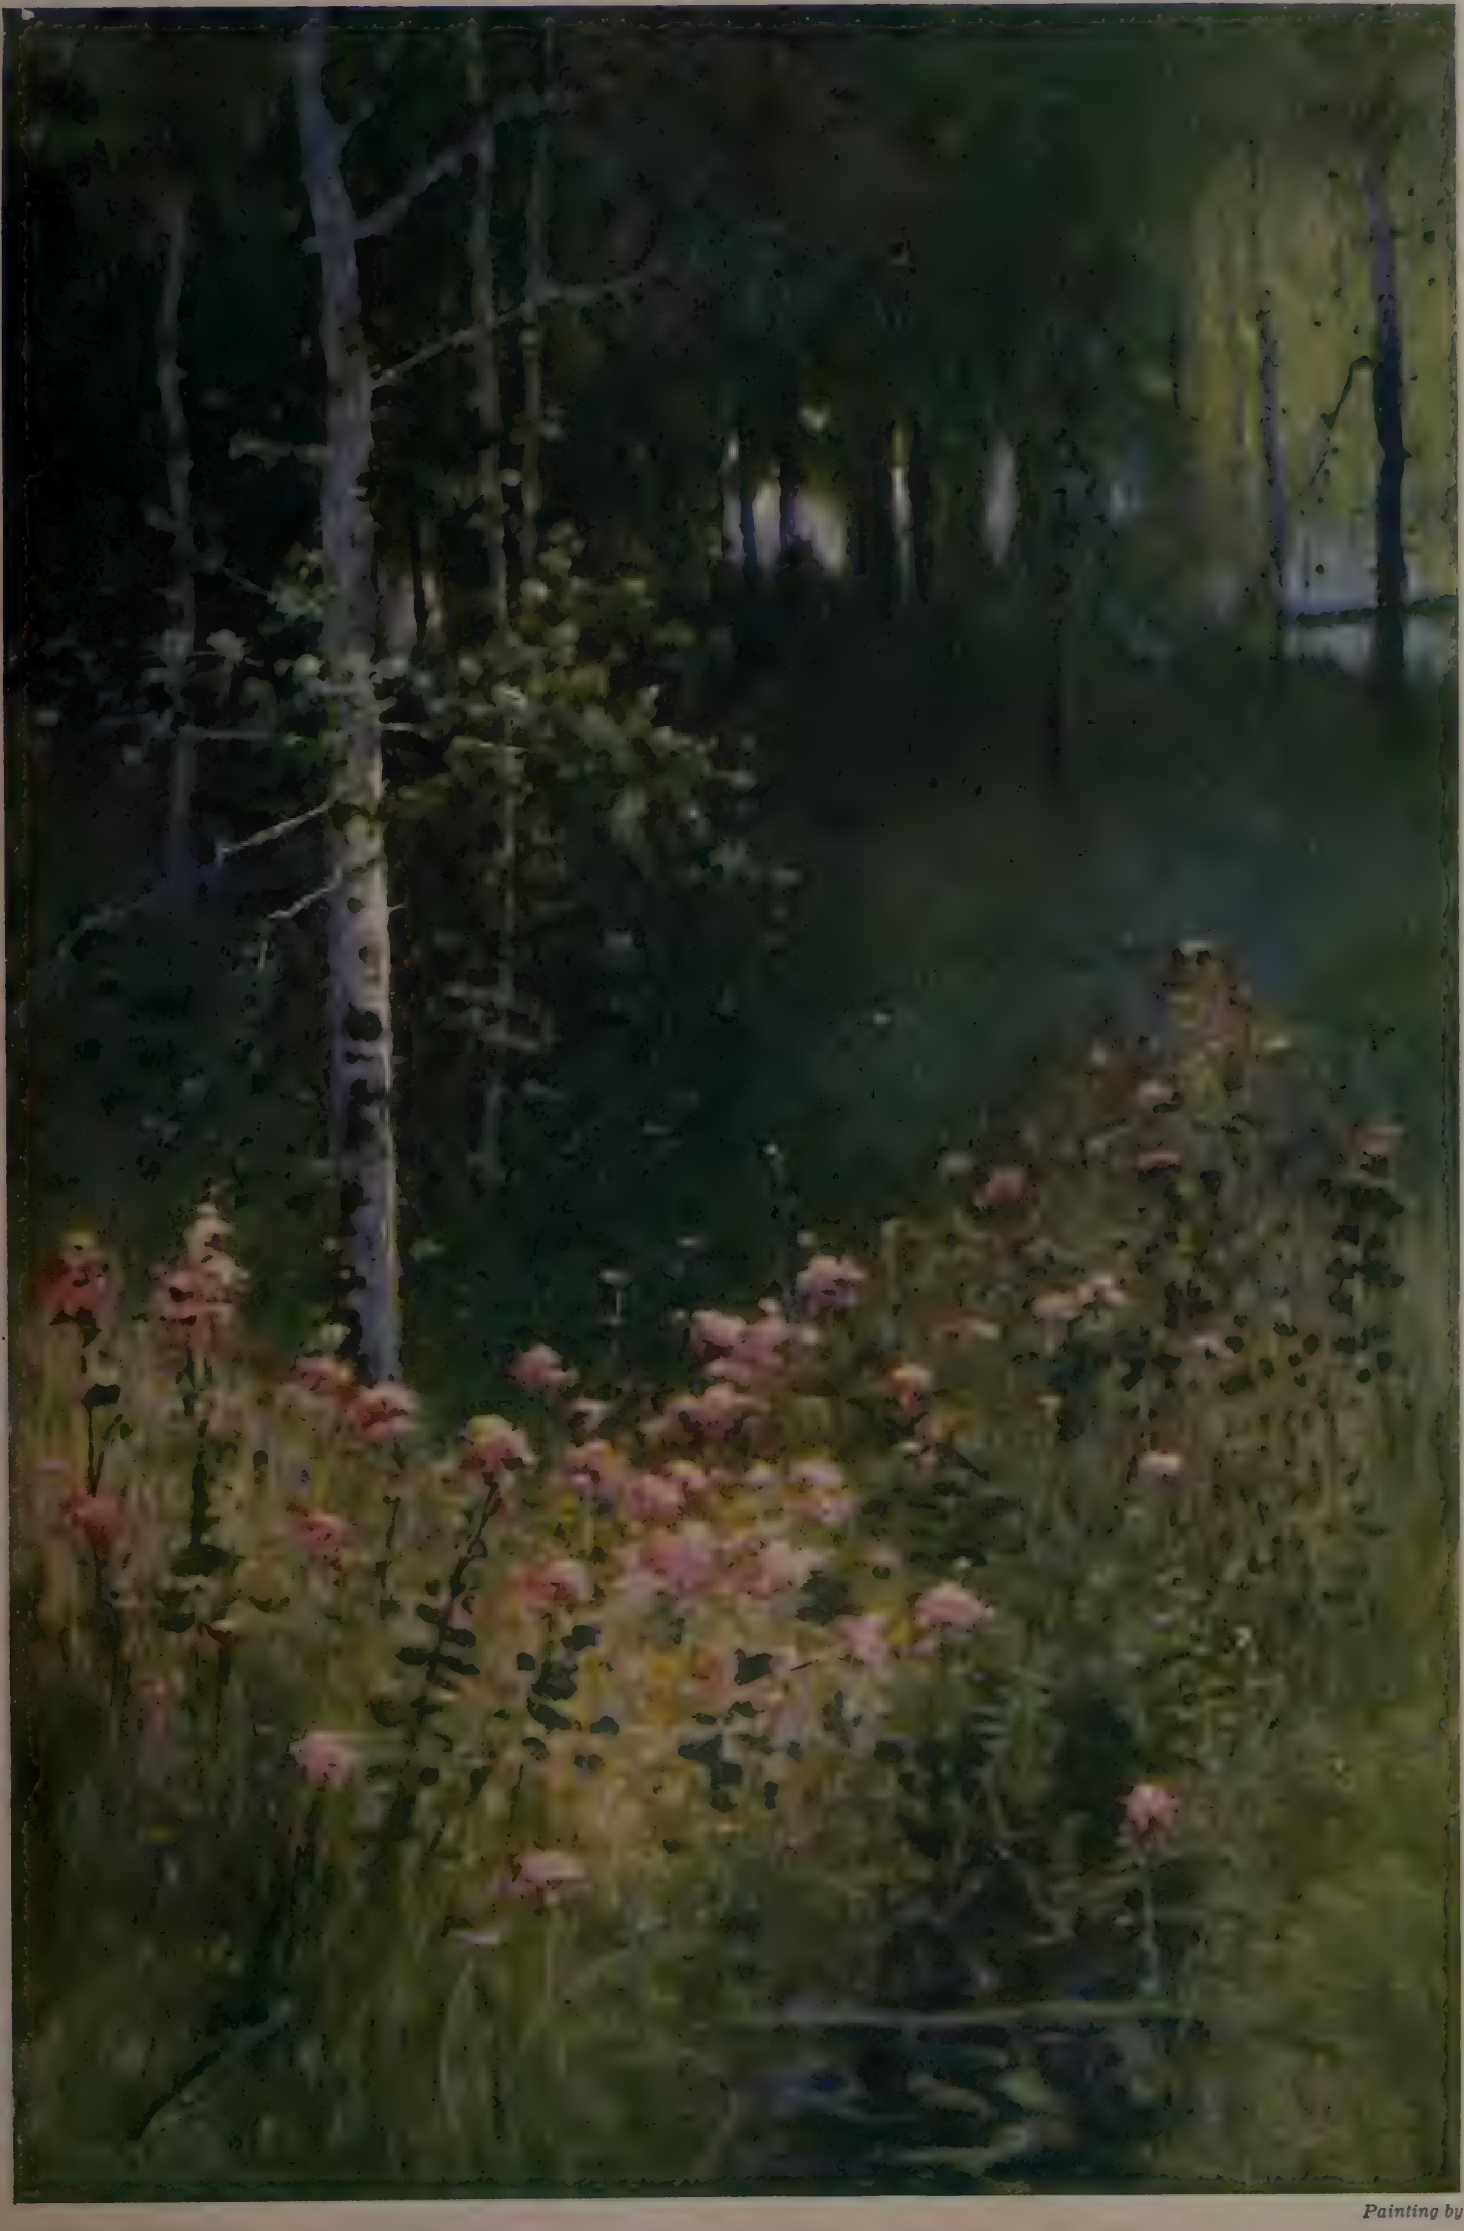
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

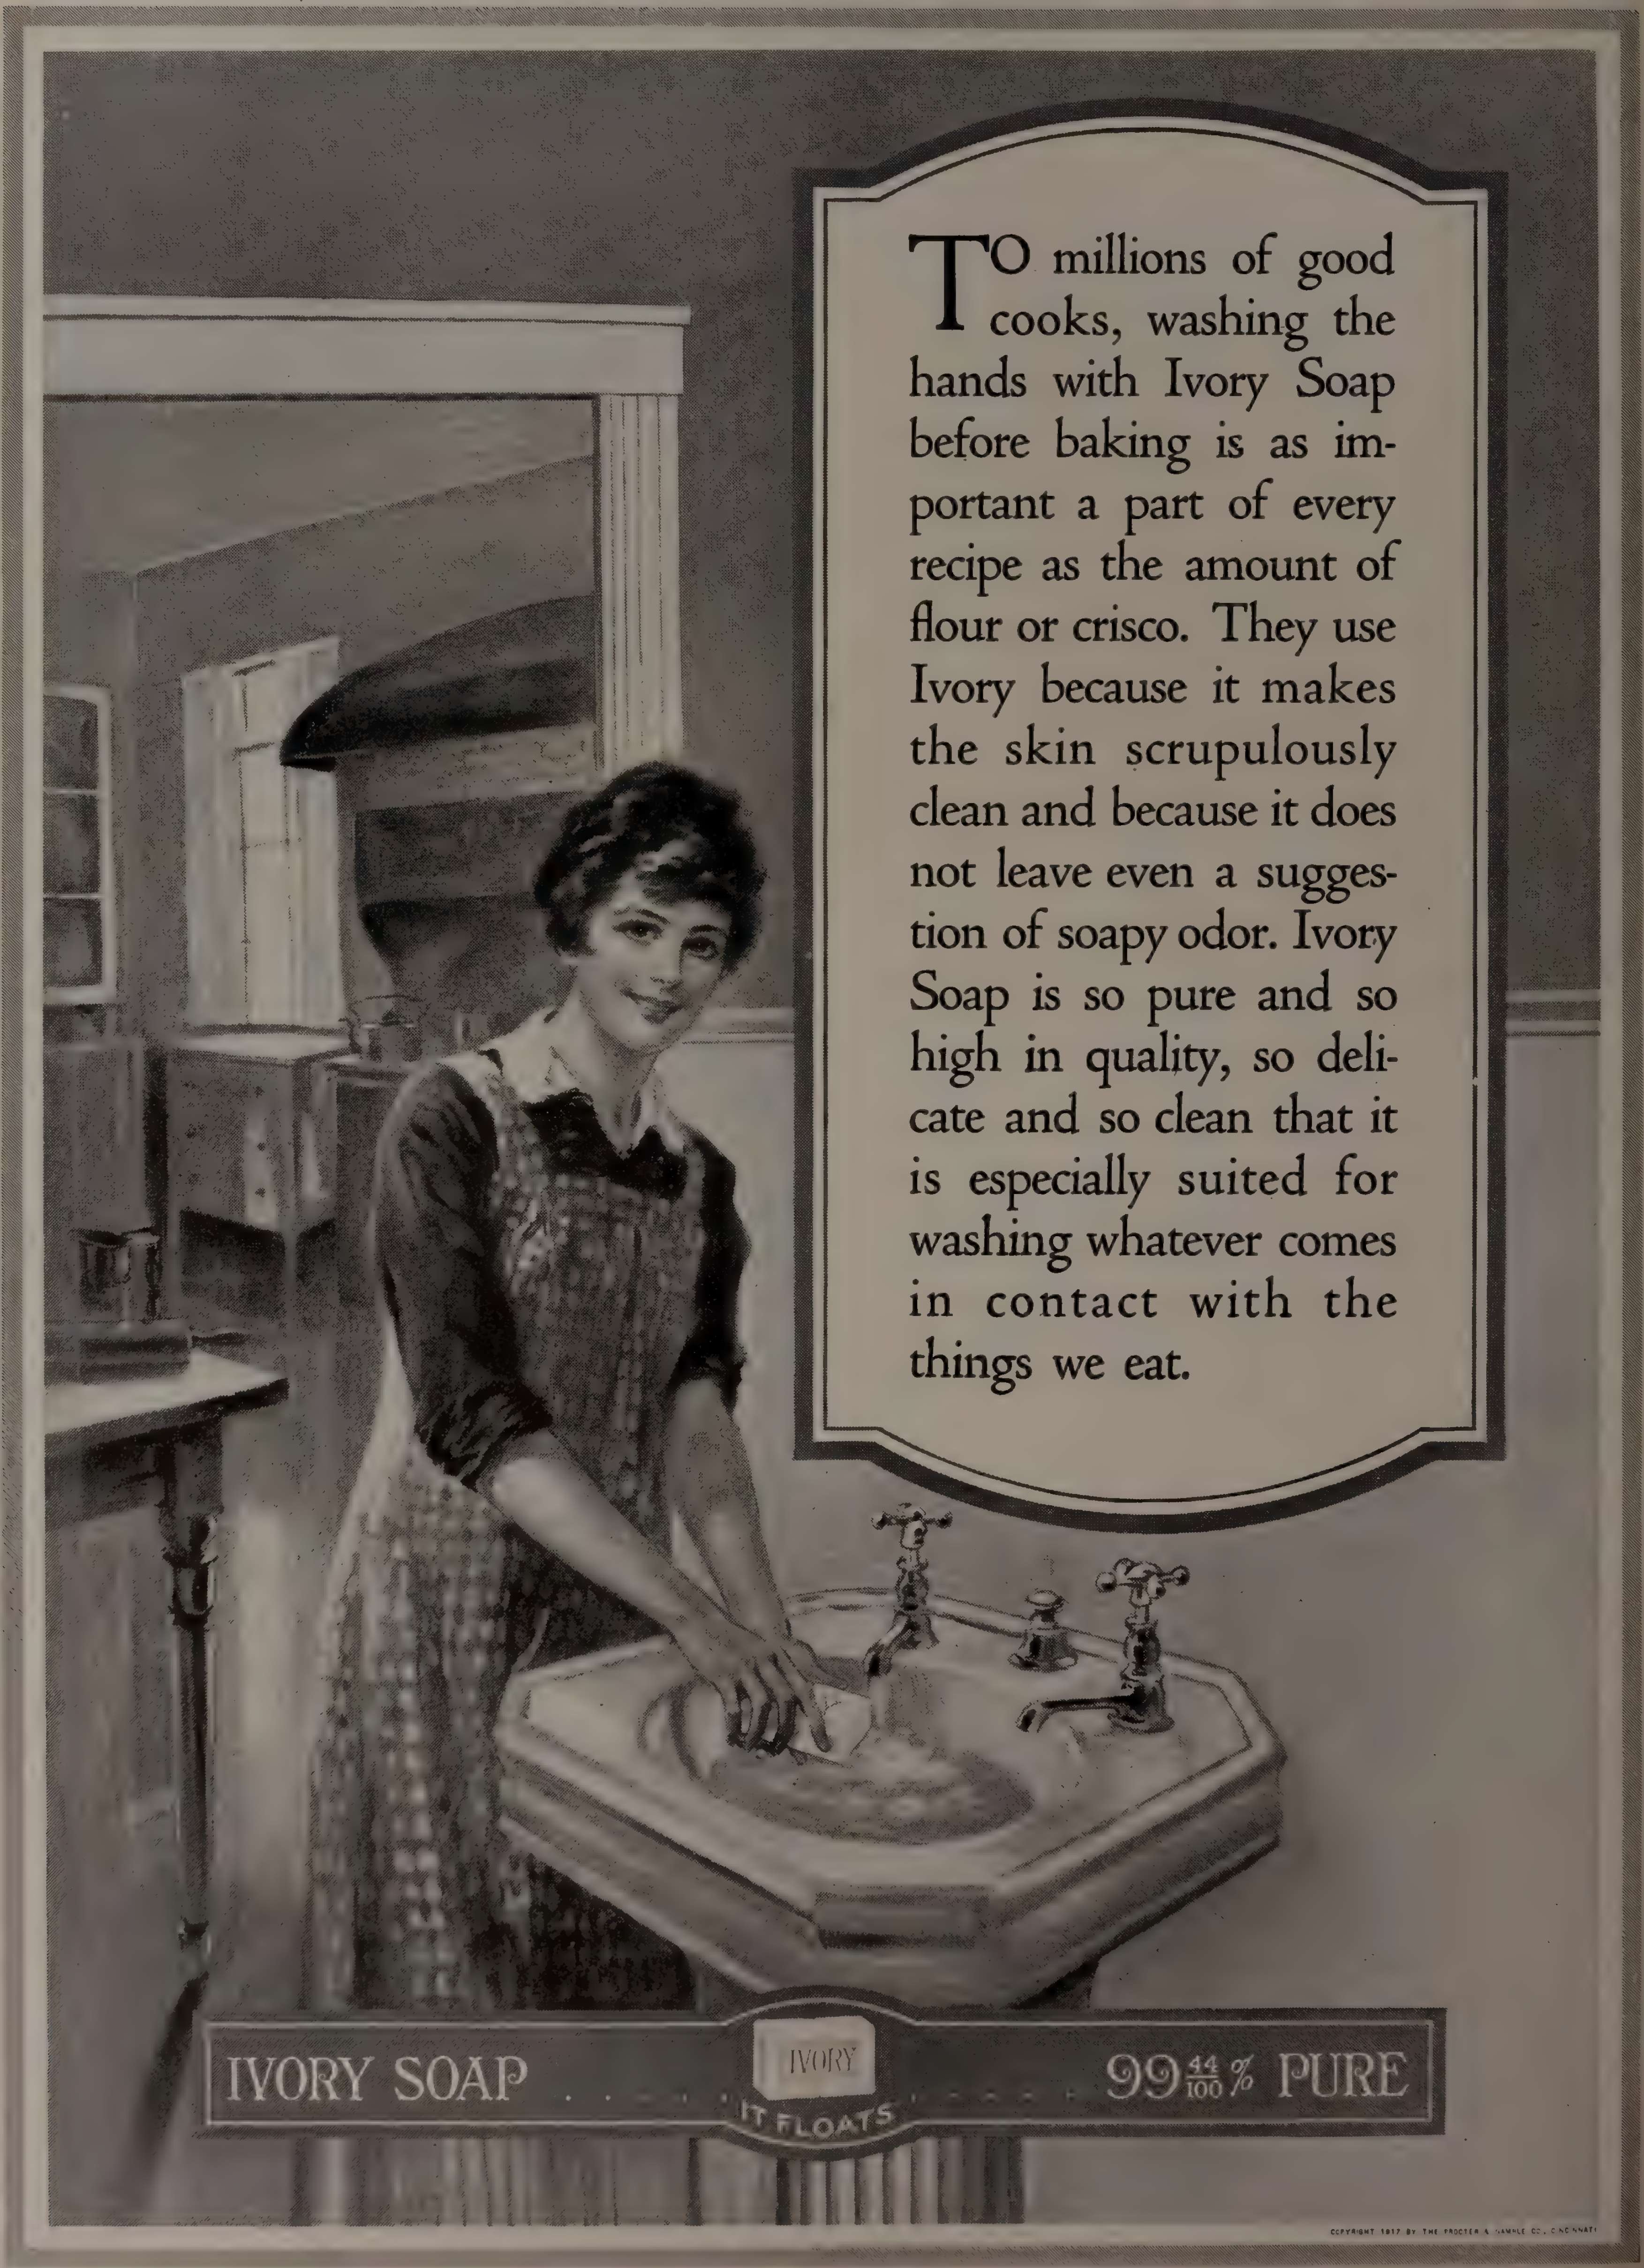
NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 5, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 36. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by C. P. Rising

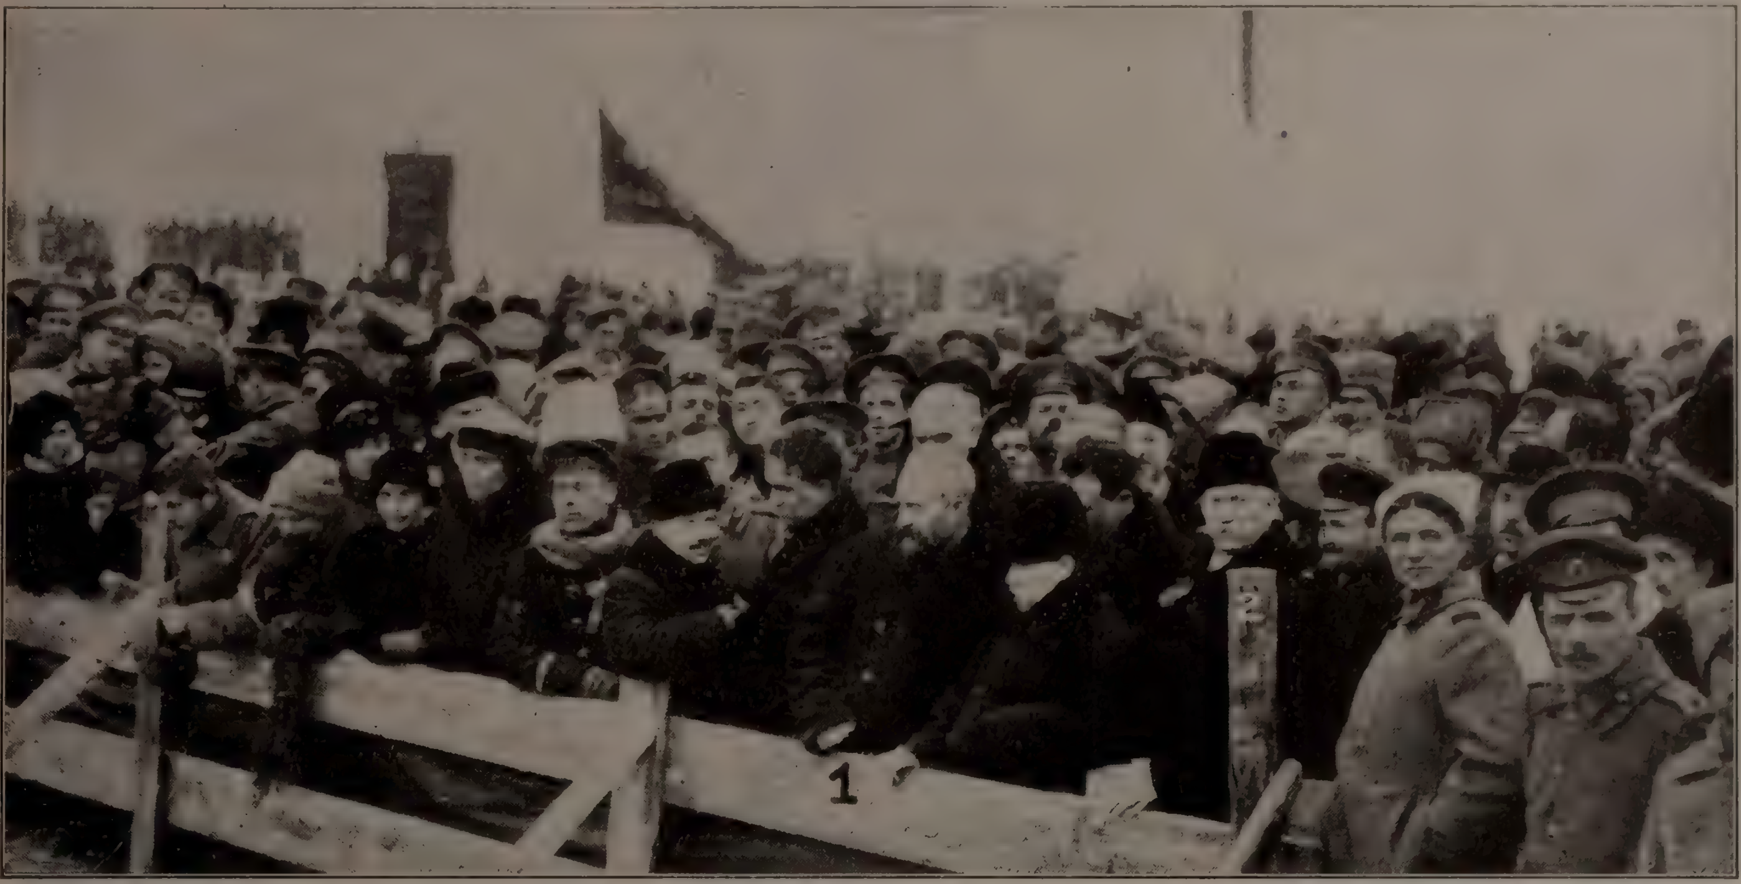
In Canada's now lonely fields joepye-weed softly blows;
But where her sons fight, o'er the seas, a redder flower grows!



TO millions of good cooks, washing the hands with Ivory Soap before baking is as important a part of every recipe as the amount of flour or crisco. They use Ivory because it makes the skin scrupulously clean and because it does not leave even a suggestion of soapy odor. Ivory Soap is so pure and so high in quality, so delicate and so clean that it is especially suited for washing whatever comes in contact with the things we eat.

COPYRIGHT 1917 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME



Premier Prince Lvoff (1) and M. Miliukoff, Foreign Minister (2), with soldiers and peasants at the graveside of the martyrs who died in the name of Russian liberty

The New Freedom in Russia

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

Mailed at Harbin, Manchuria, July 25, 1917

HARBIN, Manchuria, is the front door to the new Russia. Twenty years ago it did not exist. It is the child of the Chinese Eastern Railway, which is the hope of the new republic. In 1898 the Russian government secured the right to extend the Siberian Railway from Mandshuriya, on the Siberian-Manchurian frontier, to Pogranitchnaia, on the Manchurian-Siberian frontier, across the bulge of Manchuria to a point where the projection of the Siberian coastline reached south to the port of Vladivostock. This would make possible a direct line from the Siberian Railway to the Ussuri line, instead of bending hundreds of miles to the north, as the boundary does. The right was also secured to build a branch line from this new railway south to Port Arthur and Dairen, then called Dalny.

By the end of three years sixteen hundred miles of railway had been completed, and defenses had been built at all the strategic points. European cities were being constructed on the leased grounds along the railway line, when Japan challenged the advance of the big bear and the Russo-Japanese War broke out. By the Portsmouth Treaty, a little talkfest arranged by one Teddy, at which both the Russians and the Japanese, now our brave allies, asserted that they were robbed of victory, the southern part of this mushroom line was ceded to Japan. Today it forms the flourishing South Manchuria Railway. But the Russians were allowed to keep the section of railway from Harbin to Changchun, and a good understanding was soon arrived at between the two lines.

Soon the term "Trans-Siberian" came into being, and professional world-circlers began to make new speed records. Fast expresses were put on from Vladivostock and Dairen to Moscow, Berlin, Paris and Ostend, for London. Siberia the Unknown became a tourist route, which was all very well, and may or may not have had anything to do with the Great War or the recent Revolution.

Weird tales began to appear of how a copy of the Survey or the Masses, dropped from a car window by an extravagant tourist, had awakened the people of Siberia to a new desire for freedom. Which lightly skips over the fact that not one man in ten thousand along that line can read English. Then the Great War came and Russia sent a lot of German prisoners into detention camps, where they taught the peasants German and democracy overnight and thus precipitated the recent abdication of the Czar of all the Russias.

Such romances, even if they were true, would be no more wonderful than the actual fact. Russia, whose Czars, from Peter the Great down, had dreamed of a port on the Mediterranean and the possession of Constantinople, found that that way was blocked by a German dream of the Bagdadbahn and a new outlet on the Persian Gulf. Russia tried her hardest to break the German line along an eastern front which extended from the Gulf of Riga to Khanikin; but her window on the Mediterranean and her front door on Europe were alike closed.

She needed munitions and war supplies of all kinds, steel products and railway materials, and her front door was closed by an impenetrable wall. She turned her house around, and Harbin the Insignificant became the hope of a mighty empire. Through this junction point most of the imports of Russia had to come.

Then came the revolution and the startling declaration of an idealized but imperfect and unsubstantial socialism, with "no annexations and no indemnities." Peter the Great's mighty dream of conquest was repudiated by workmen and soldiers whose control of the government was far from complete. But that meant giving up the dream of seeing some Russian cathedral, with its bulbous towers, gazing down upon the Bosphorus and the bustling Golden Horn.

IF Russia stands by that declaration, her face will be irrevocably turned toward the waking East. Harbin will become the permanent entrance to the new Russia. A port that is not ice-bound in winter will again be an absolute necessity. That will involve China and Japan. The Russo-Japanese Alliance will then become far closer than it is now, or an awakened Russia, worn with the task of carrying on a great war along a long front but trained and strengthened by that very ordeal, will again have to cross swords with her Asiatic ally, who is strengthening herself with every voyage of her many ships and every turn of her countless spindles.

Whatever the outcome of this war, Russia's western front will be held by powers from whose hearts peace terms of whatever kind cannot wipe out a feeling of enmity. That will give new importance to Russia's Asiatic interests. Japan must be enlisted as a closer friend or fought as an enemy. Harbin is the strategic point from which two railway lines reach out toward the coast of Asia.

It is not a pleasant fact to face, but one-third of the people on this globe are to-day without responsible government. China and Russia are at present without any well-established authority. Both are reaching toward democracy, but the siege-gun is inevitable. The present condition of disorder and indecision may be temporary. But to ignore the fact that it exists is to expect illiterate lands to achieve results which more advanced nations won only after bloodshed and a long period of dangerous absence of centralized authority. Each revolution, more or less, has its reign of terror.

Szechuan today is divided between several rulers. But, worse than that, it is given over to robbery and disorders. China as a whole is for the time being without national government in any true sense.

Honest and liberal-minded men in China seek a return of law and order, even if it mean the sacrifice of the republican form of government, which, in any case, has thus far been only nominal. The inevitable disturbance caused by a political upheaval involving more than four hundred million men makes many who desire to see the rights of men guaranteed wonder whether it was an advantage to cast off the authority of an autocrat and assume the lawlessness and unrest of an idealistic but impracticable republic in which authority is centered in no one. So with Russia. In the capital and in the more enlightened cities, the light of a new liberty is shining on the glorified faces of those who were ready to die if only the rights of man might be won. But in the remote districts the same enthusiasm does not exist, the same leaders cannot be found, the same substitution for police and municipal control cannot be immediately effected.

Conditions in Harbin are today far worse than they were under the Czar. Conscientious officials do not know to whom to turn for authority. Meanwhile men whose patriotism need not be questioned, but whose control over disturbing elements is utterly lacking, are crying for an absolute freedom from the few men who are now competent to hold office and maintain law and order. Anarchy only can follow if the excusable and natural but impractical desires of the workmen and soldiers are accomplished. The trend is to throw off hated authority rather than to seek to preserve the authority—either by men of the masses or men of the classes—that can preserve orderly government in the midst of a political and mental chaos caused by sudden change.

There is no limit to which impassioned men with a taste of the new freedom cannot go. Returned Russians from America, who had lived for years under a democracy, sought to have the Root Commission excluded from Russia on the ground that they represented the capitalist class rather than the common people. With many of these, Charles Edward Russell was the one member who was really admired, and even he was thought to be traveling in very dangerous company.

Night after night, here in Harbin, murders and robberies are committed by soldiers and working men whose representatives in the Council of Workmen and Soldiers' Delegates would be the first to condemn their conduct. But during the transference of power, there is no sufficient authority, just as in Szechuan, in the district between two armies that refuse to come to grips, brigands and pirates carry on their depredations unimpeded.

Turkey had its counter-revolution, and among those who sought to end the rule of the Young Turk there were men as wise and patriotic as among the Russian revolutionists. China has just had a counter-revolution of petty proportions, even though the failure of the strong man, Yuan Shi Kai, should have proven the folly of tampering with a people who have shown in no uncertain way their desire for republican government. A counter-revolution is as logical as a revolution, for revolution seeks to cast off established authority, and counter-revolution seeks to throw off authority which has not yet thoroughly entrenched itself nor proven its sincerity and efficacy.

Under the old régime in Russia, manufacturers, miners, railway men, and soldiers performed their tasks unwillingly. But they performed them. Coal for the railways was always slow in coming, but it came. Manufacturers did not trust their ruler, nor did they like him, but they went on with their work—because authority existed.

Today Russia is trying out the grandest experiment in socialism the world has ever seen. Never before have governmental bodies been in the hands of the working and fighting classes to anything like the same extent. Russia has the chance to establish a democracy in which the working classes truly rule—such a democracy as the rest of the world does not know. But meanwhile, these would-be rulers have lost control, or rather, they have never had it. Trade is demoralized, manufacture stopped. The railways are in far worse condition than before, and the railways are the hope of a belligerent Russia. Miners refuse to work and mines are closed because of political unrest. The army, which went ahead with a dash two weeks ago, has now stopped for want of organization in the field and in the industrial world behind the trenches. [This article was written before the mutiny and the retreat across Galicia and Bukowina.] Democracy, jealous of its humble personnel, is sacrificing through disorder those things for which democracy fights. Men who served the old régime, but who are as sincere protagonists of true democracy as the veriest workmen, are prevented from exerting their recognized abilities because they have never worn overalls or fought as common soldiers.

An aged grenadier on sentry duty in Petrograd

The outcome of all this is hovering in the balance, and the issue may be decided during the time that this article is on its long voyage. Democracy may prove its true humility and sincerity by enlisting expert aid, or, jealous of its rights, may forfeit its victory. Only time can tell.

It was hoped that Russia would profit by the examples of France and America; but while history furnishes examples it does not always teach methods. The French method would certainly be no improvement. When we praise the French Revolution we mean the completed result and not the Reign of Terror. When we laud the patriotism of the American colonists, we overlook the fact that when our country was at its lowest ebb, there must have been among the bloody-footed followers of Washington at Valley Forge those who questioned whether after all, England had not been a considerate master.

Russia has this chance, not of following the example of America and France, but, while carrying on a war for democracy against the militarism and autocracy of the Central Powers, of establishing the rights of the common man in government to a degree that has never before been seen. She fights a double battle, and the fate of humanity may depend upon the outcome of either conflict. To win the rights of humanity in its broadest sense, including the capitalist, the lawyer, the professor and the business man, Russian democracy, speaking and acting through workmen and soldiers, must recognize the worth and rights of all classes of mankind. Here is the grandest experiment in sociology in this revolutionary age. Victory for all-embracing humanity will be the greatest advance of history. But the present is dark.

That fact should not discourage those who hope for a new freedom. No such change as is hoped for can be accomplished with ease and dispatch. In this day, when shoes are too expensive for the well-to-do in America, the Russian peasant wears boots which use up as much leather as three pairs of American shoes. The customs of centuries cannot be changed in a day. But a mighty change is taking place in Russia, bigger than the volleys in Petrograd, bigger than the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, bigger than the millions who are involved. Russia and the world need more than human guidance in this darkest hour before the dawn of a new day.

A Week in the World's News

President Wilson's Reply to the Pope on Page 940

DRAFTING INCOMES. The Senate Finance Committee's scheme of additional income taxes was under fire in the Senate on August 20, 21, and 22. Senator Johnson of California and Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin both attacked the bill, as falling far short of what the people had a right to expect, and both declared that the nation should conscript wealth as well as life. The Senate voted on a surtax schedule on August 22, adopting, by 35 to 31, additional taxes running from one per cent. on incomes of between $5,000 and $7,500 to fifty per cent. on incomes of a million dollars. The temper of the Senate indicated that similar levies would be made against war profits. The Senate, on August 24, adopted an amendment to the revenue bill increasing by four per cent. the present income tax of two per cent. on corporations. This tax yielded $180,000,000 this year. President Wilson on August 20 fixed a basic price of two dollars a ton at the mine for soft coal. Judge Robert S. Lovitt was designated as Federal agent in control of coal traffic on the railways. Following the fixing of the soft coal price, the President gave his attention to anthracite and steel, having been provided by the Federal Trade Commission with complete estimates of the cost of production of both industries, as well as in the copper industry, which is expected to come in for its share of regulations later. The President, on August 23, fixed the basic price of anthracite, at the mine, at $4.00 to $5.30, limiting jobbers' profits to thirty cents per ton and providing for the regulation of retailers' profits.

BRITISH LABOR IN STOCKHOLM. On August 20 the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, voting 376 to 354, decided against British representation at the international Socialist conference in Stockholm, reversing a previous decision. On the following day the British Labor Conference, by the narrow margin of 3,000 in a vote of 2,500,000, stood by its former decision to send delegates.

DRAFT OFFICERS TO PRISON. Two members of a local exemption board in New York City, who had been indicted for conspiring to defeat the Conscription Act by taking bribes for exemptions, pleaded guilty in the Federal Court at New York on August 20, admitting having taken over $3,000, part of which had been returned. Both were given maximum sentences of two years' imprisonment. The man accused of being their go-between stood trial and was convicted and given a similar sentence.

I. W. W. LEADERS ARRESTED. Federalized Idaho Guardsmen at Spokane on August 19 arrested James Rowan, under whose leadership a lumber workers' strike was being planned in Oregon and Washington. Twenty-six other members of the organization were also arrested, and the headquarters and meeting-hall were raided. The men were declared military prisoners, and it was inferred that the arrest was made on orders from Washington as a part of the general plan to put a stop to the activities of this organization. The strike, which had been planned to include construction workers and harvest hands, as well as the loggers, did not develop. The President is understood to be making personal investigation of the I. W. W. through Judge Covington of the District of Columbia bench.

SHIPWORKERS' STRIKE. At a meeting attended by nearly 2,000 shipyard workers in New York on August 21, a resolution sponsored by the machinists was heartily acclaimed, by which all the shipyard workers in the port of New York were called on strike. The men were seeking higher wages and the unionizing of shops. Strenuous efforts were to be made to pull all civilian labor out of the navy yard. It was expected that more than 11,000 men would be involved in the strike. Government mediators immediately took up the problem involved in the disaffection of the men. Attempts were to be made to institute strikes in other navy yards, but 7,000 men of the League Island Navy Yard at Philadelphia, in a resolution which was presented to Secretary Daniels, pledged their loyalty and cooperation. The men of the New York and other navy yards followed the example of the League Island workers and remained at work.

THE THIN BLUE LINE. Boston on August 20 welcomed the fifty-first national encampment of the Army of the Republic, which was attended by one soldier in gray, Major Frank M. Burroughs, now in the government service in Washington. In spite of their years the veterans insisted on the usual parade, as an evidence of the loyalty which led them to battle, and which still marks them as first among American citizens. The lines of blue and gray are thinning. The nation which was reborn in the struggle of the 60's remembers both, grateful to one and honoring the courage of the other.

DRAFT ACT CONSTITUTIONAL. United States Judge Emory Spear of the Southern District of Georgia on August 20 declared the Selective Draft Act constitutional.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. A fire on August 20, due to spontaneous combustion, destroyed Pier 26 in Brooklyn, damaged a British steamer and also a Norwegian steamer, destroyed several barges, and did damage estimated at $500,000. . . . The Japanese Commission to the United States, headed by Viscount Ishii, reached Washington on August 22, where it was officially received by representatives of the national government. The commission expected to be in Washington for two or three weeks, and then to make a tour of the country. . . . Cuba has shown its mettle as an ally by turning over to the United States government, free of cost, four out of five German merchantmen seized in Cuban ports, and by offering to the United States government ground for a mobilization and training camp for American forces. The offer was accepted by the American government. . . . A threatened strike of British railwaymen was settled on August 20 by conciliation under the Defense of the Realm Act. . . . Porto Rico, which recently voted itself dry, is now considering the establishment of woman suffrage. . . . John B. White, international president of the United Mine Workers of America, has issued a call to laboring men: "To play our part in the war manfully with unstinted loyalty to these United States." . . . Seven hundred American Jews are being permitted to return to the United States from Palestine, by way of Switzerland. . . . Austria-Hungary refused to accept China's declaration of war against her, notifying the Chinese Foreign Office that it considered the declaration unconstitutional and illegal, since it did not carry the approbation of both houses of the Chinese Parliament. . . . Two Virginia mountaineers were given sentences of five years in the Federal penitentiary

Continued on page 941

Hoover Warns of World Meat Famine

He Tells How Every Citizen Can Cooperate in the Nation-wide Food Campaign

Girl scouts of Washington, D. C., learning to cook perishable foods. They are wearing the Food Conservation uniform

THE recent rapid increase in the price of all meats, in spite of the passage of the Food Bill, is warning that the world is coming face to face with a meat famine. It cannot be hoped that meats will decline in price during the war. Indeed, according to Commissioner Hoover, "a high range of prices for meats and animal products for many years to come confronts this country."

He has cited figures to prove that the nation's cattle, sheep and hogs are dwindling rapidly under the demands of war (in Allied Europe they threaten to be wiped out entirely) and that fabulously high prices in Europe and America will extend to lard, butter, cheese, leather, fats, oils and wools.

He is advocating government control of this country's meat exports and calls upon our live-stock breeders to lay plans at once for enormously increased flocks and herds.

He pleads that all rich, well-to-do, middle-class and other non-manual laborers in the United States greatly reduce their meat consumption, and leave more for the fighting men and male and female war-workers of Allied lands. As a meat conservation measure for America in this crisis, it is urged that our comparatively little utilized fish supply be thoroughly harvested and marketed and more generally eaten.

Decided measures are well under way to control the supply and price of bread and breadstuffs. The Food Administration will undertake to maintain a standard price for wheat and to supervise the storage and distribution of grain. The millers have agreed to cooperate. In keeping with American business genius, a great corporation is being formed to administer the manifold ramifications of the enterprise.

REGARDING the new and serious meat situation Commissioner Hoover has issued a formal statement, which in the main follows:

"A total decrease of 115,005,000 in the world's meat-producing animals is shown in a comparison of present with pre-war conditions. While the increase of cattle in the United States was 7,090,000 in this period, the total world decrease was 28,080,000. Sheep decreased 3,000,000 in the United States and 54,500,000 in the world. Hogs increased 6,275,000 in the United States, but decreased 32,425,000 in the world supply.

"The demands made by war on the American meat supply are further shown in the growth of our meat exports for the year ending June 30, 1916, which were 1,339,193,000 pounds, as compared with 493,848,000 pounds for a three year pre-war average. These exports have chiefly gone to our Allies, whose capital stock of animals has decreased by 33,000,000 heads.

"The men in the armies, the men engaged in the shops, and the millions of women forced to physical labor, have required a greatly increased supply of animal products. Millions of individuals to whom fresh meat twice a week was a luxury are now, by necessity of their extreme physical labor, eating it twice daily.

"The supply of wool and leather has decreased in a period when additional demands for the extra amount of normal clothing required for the soldiers must be met. All European countries have drastically reduced the consumption of meat and clothing among the non-war workers to a point that would seem impossible to the American people, but despite this the actual meat, fat, wool and leather consumption in the Allied countries has increased as a result of the war. Under the pressure of these forces Europe has been eating into its herds and flocks, and thus is burning the candle at both ends.

"The problem facing the American people is not only one of supplying the immediate demands of the Allies, but one which is more far-reaching in its future significance. As the war goes on there will be a constant lessening of the capital stock of food animals of the world. Among our western Allies the demand outruns further every day the decreasing production, and as shipping becomes further shortened by continued submarine destruction, less tonnage can be devoted to fodder and further reduction of the herds must ensue. These destructive forces have given rise to reactions in many directions.

"The world's supply of meat and dairy products of animal fats and industrial fats, wool and hides are all involved not only now but for far into the future.

"The immediate problem is to furnish increased meat supplies to the Allies to maintain them during the war. There is only one immediate solution to the short supply of meat for export pending the increase in our herds and flocks, which will take years. During the course of the war we can, just as with the cereals, reduce the consumption and eliminate the waste, particularly among those classes which can best afford it. In the meantime, in order to protect all of our people, we must carefully control our meat exports in order that the people shall not be denied this prime necessity of life.

"The waters of our coasts and lakes are enormously rich in food fish and shell fish. Our streams, too, contribute a great quantity of fish. Many varieties are now not used for human food but are thrown away or used for fertilizer. Habit has confined our use of fish to a few varieties, and inadequate methods of commercial handling have limited our uses of these largely to only certain days in the week.

"With better marketing facilities, with better understanding of how to use the most varieties, with proper preservation by smoking and salting and by establishing plants for frozen fish, we can increase greatly our supply and thus relieve largely the pressure due to the inadequate supply of meat. Every fish eaten is that much gained in solving the present problem of living. The products of the land are conserved by eating those of the sea."

AN intensive nation-wide propaganda is under way, urging the people of this country to learn to use to the furthest possible degree vegetables, perishable products and corn and barley as food, in order that the wheat may be available for shipment to the Allies. A large corps of experts is preparing for general distribution suggestions and recipes for the use of corn particularly as human food, palatable and nourishing.

Mr. Hoover believes that the future safety of the United States is largely dependent upon the manner in which the people obey the law in relation to food control, food conservation and food distribution. Democracy itself, he insists, is staked on the issue, and he calls upon every farmer, every distributor, every housewife and every consumer to assist him in what many thinkers regard as the greatest task ever assigned a citizen of the United States.

"Waste nothing and substitute." This is the slogan. Mr. Hoover doesn't mean that the impure shall be substituted for the pure, or that the people shall consume food any less wholesome than the food they have been nourished upon in the past. But where practicable, he wants corn substituted for wheat, and asks the people to eat more vegetables and less meat. Indeed, he declares, this must be the policy of the home kitchen, if there is to be anything substantial left for the field kitchen.

The Administration may be greatly aided if the following rules are pretty generally adopted:

Use corn, oatmeal, rye and barley bread, and non-wheat breakfast-foods.

Use stale bread for cooking, toast, etc., and eat less pastry.

Use more fish and less beef, mutton and pork.

Eat more vegetables.

Save the fats. We are the world's greatest fat-wasters. Fat is food. Use butter on the table as usual, but not in cooking. Soap contains fats. Don't waste it. Make your own washing soap out of fats saved at home.

Save the sugar. We use about three times as much per day per capita as our Allies. So that there may be enough sugar for all reasonable purposes at reasonable prices, use less candy and sweet drinks. Don't stint in putting up jams or preserves, for these will save butter.

Use perishable foods. Buy near home. Distance means money.

THE ENERGIES OF GRACE

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—II Tim. 2:1. "Thou, therefore, my child, be strengthened in the grace that is in Christ Jesus."

"THOU, therefore, my child." How graciously tender is the expression! But then surely we should expect the Lord's evangelist to be of gentle deportment. The herald of grace ought himself to be a gracious man. Of all woeful contradictions a graceless messenger of grace is perhaps the most forbidding. The lamp-post which proclaims the way to the laundry ought itself to be clean. The ambassador who is in the service of the Lord of Grace must himself be gracious. To exhibit harshness and inconsiderateness in the ministry of redemption is to take the surest way to nullify our work. How tender, therefore, is the apostle's approach to his youthful fellow-disciple! "My child."

The phrase betokens kinship, interest, yearning affection. And the circumstances make the expression doubly gracious. Timothy's zeal is losing some of its heat; his energy is somewhat flagging; his boldness is become a little wavering. Timidity and laxity are showing themselves in his religious life. How easy it might have been for the aged apostle to have been harsh and indignant! But his mode of expression reveals the tenderness of his spirit. "My child."

So much depends upon the manner in which we approach our fellows. We can do a great deal with bees when our hands are washed in sugar and water, and we can do a great deal with men when we approach them in a spirit of graciousness. And it is especially true that when we draw near to those whose spiritual devotion is wavering, and when our approach is just steeped in the sweetness of Christian affection and prompted by a soft and gentle solicitude, we employ a mighty power by which to constrain them back to the forsaken ways. "Thou, therefore, my child."

How redolent it is of the Master! Surely it is a flower from the Master's garden! I remember how in the Master's life he often used such terms when he wanted to hearten some timid and wavering soul. "Daughter, thy faith hath saved thee." "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee." I say that the apostle has got his Master's manner and speech. The apostle of grace was gracious.

"BE strengthened in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." "The grace." That is the word that staggers an expositor. One might attempt to describe a pebble, but who will dare to attempt the description of a continent? There are words which might be justly called continental words. Here is one, "love"; here is another, "peace"; and here is a third, "joy"; and here is a fourth, "grace." And what can one do with a continent except to make tours of exploration about it, each tour opening out new tracks, and unveiling vistas of unexpected glory? But who can be said to know a continent? Who knows Europe? We sometimes hear of a man knowing Switzerland, but the word is used in a very imperfect sense. Nay, who knows the wonders of a single furrow, and vast spaces of country lie yet undiscovered and unexplored. No wonder that the apostle speaks of "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Eternity alone will afford scope for adequate exploration.

What, then, shall we say of this grace? Grace is spiritual energy; it is the outgoing energy of the eternal Spirit of God. When I had written this last sentence, I felt that it was all so vague and inapprehensible. I thought of my congregation before me, and how little a service such a sentence would render them. And a secret counsellor said to me, "Go out of thy study for a while, and ask the Earth to be thy commentary." So I put down my pen, and closed my book, and left my study behind, and went out to seek the help of Mother Earth.

"O Earth, teach me," I said. And the Earth replied, "How standest thou? On this wealthy, rotating, roving globe, how standest thou? I hold thee! By the energy of gravitation, I keep thee in thy place."

Then I hurled a stone; at a few paces distant the stone sought the earth again. "I drew it," cried the Earth; "by my own energy I allured it to my breast. Take this energy of gravitation and let it be to thee a helpmeet in the interpretation of the energy of grace."

Then I took up a pebble. I found that the pebble was compounded of masses of minute atoms, and there they were, bound together in close and indissoluble fellowship. "I bind them," cried the Earth, "by the energy of affinity and cohesion I make them one. I take the oddments and weld them into unity. Take this energy of cohesion and let it be to thee a minister in expounding the energies of grace."

And then I looked about me and noted here a blade of grass, and there a fern, and yonder a flower and a tree. "And how are these brought into being?" I said to my Mother Earth.

"I raise them up by the energy of fertility. In my breast they find the resources for their growth. By me they are fed and sustained. Take with thee the energy of fertility and let it be to thee a suggestion of the energy of grace."

"And what of this?" I said, pointing to a mass of putrid, decaying, stenchful matter in the corner of a field, "and what of this corruption?"

"Oh," said my Mother Earth, "here the energies of dissolution are at work. My sister-energies of air and light are co-operating with me, and by dissolution we shall accomplish transformation. The corruptible shall become the minister of life. The stenchful shall be the nurse of the bluebell and the daisy and the wild rose. The putrid shall be creative of the beautiful."

I ceased my communion with Mother Earth and I returned to my study. In my mind I carried back the energy of gravity, the energy of affinity and cohesion, the energy of fertility, and the energy of dissolution. I took them with me into my study that they might be to me suggestive of the Spirit-energies and of the ministry of grace.

GRACE is Spirit-energy, the mystic energy of God at work among the children of men. How does it work? What is its ministry? Let the Earth-suggestions be my helpmeets in exposition. Grace works as the energy of gravitation. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw." That is the great magnetic power by which men are to be kept in their place. "By grace ye stand." It is only because the energy of grace is about and beneath us that our feet are kept in the way of right. Nothing can come between us and the pervasive energy except our own sin. Grace works as the energy of cohesion. "In Him all things consist." True union is our Lord's creation. Grace is the mystic cement in true family life. Wherever the units of a family are welded into close and intimate communion the binding presence is the grace of Christ. It is so also in friendship. The links of deep friendship are found in the secret activities of grace.

It is even so in society and the state. All other cements are but untempered mortar, and in the day of stress and strain they will miserably fail. It is even so in the church. The worth of our fellowship is just the measure of our possession of grace. Grace works as the energy of fertility. Again and again does the New Testament emphasize this truth. To be rooted in the energies of grace is to have the secret of a fruitful life. "Rooted in Him." Rooted in him we abound. "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."

Grace operates in human life and is creative of ferns and flowers and fruits; of ferns like humility, of flowers like love, and fruits like hospitality and beneficence. And grace works as the energy of dissolution. Grace can deal with that stenchful, corrupting stuff in my life which I call guilt and sin. The energy of the Almighty can dissolve my guilt, can even transform it into a minister of good. God can make my yesterday's sin the minister of my penitence. He can make my guilt nurse the spirit of lowliness. He can make the revolt of the past intensify the fervor of my present service. "Where sin abounded grace did much more abound."

Grace, then, is spiritual energy; the energy of the Eternal operating as gravity, as cohesion, as fertility and dissolution. "The grace which is in Christ Jesus." It is therefore grace issuing from a Personality. It is energy directed by affection. And it is free! It is a welcome suggestion that "grace" and "gratis" are from the same root.

"BE strengthened in the grace." The preposition "in" is the preposition of investiture, suggesting that in which a man is arrayed. I am to clothe myself in this grace, to be enwrapped in it, to wear it like an all-defensive robe. I am to allow myself to be strengthened by it.

What, then, is needful? If this energy of grace is to become ours, and to work in us the ministry of salvation, two things are required. First, there must be the disposition of willingness. Our will can interpose between us and the ministry of grace. "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." "How often would I . . . but ye would not." Grace can do nothing against our will. Our willingness can so paralyze the Master that he can do "no mighty work." "Wilt thou be made whole?" But we need not only the disposition of willingness, we also require acts of appropriation.

Now there are two primary ways by which this grace-energy can accomplish its ministry in our life. One is prayer, and the other is obedience. Each of these methods is essential to the other. Together they open out the heart; they make the life porous, and the energies of grace flow into the soul and accomplish the Saviour's work. To pray is to open the spiritual pores; to obey is to open the spiritual pores; we become "strengthened in the grace that is in Christ Jesus."

---

* Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Life in the Heights

SUNDAY, September 9. Col. 3 : 1. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." This chapter in Colossians, which begins in this exalted communion, ends in describing the Christian life of a slave. I think it was Spurgeon who used to say that the chapter begins in the heavenlies and ends in the kitchen. But it is not so much the wide sweep of the thought which is so startling as the fact that the thought never descends. The heavenly places and the kitchen are at the same elevation. The apostle did not come down from the mount to talk about employers and employed. He was still "in Christ Jesus," and all these human fellowships were regarded in the lofty relationship of the Lord. All earthly interests were lifted up into the heavenlies; everything was adjusted in divine communion, and so everything became one of the things which are above.

And so it happens that Paul's evangelical life is not at one height, and his practical life at another. We sometimes divide his letters into the doctrinal and the practical, and we regard the doctrinal as mountainous Alpine country, while the practical life finds a meaner symbol in the valleys and the plains. I do not think that this symbolism expresses either the apostle's thought or feeling. He gets up into the high mountains even when he is dealing with a matter of seemingly comparative indifference. In his letter to the Corinthians, and after the magnificent unveilings of the fifteenth chapter, we are confronted with the sudden transition, "Now as touching the collection!" But that is not a precipitous descent; it is only a sharp turning on mountain heights, keeping the same elevation. The apostle does not say, "Now to leave these great themes, and to descend to something practical!"

We are never vitally right, and we never enter into robust spiritual life, until we have something of this magnificent inclusiveness, and make everything part of the glorious mountain-country of the risen life in Christ our Lord. We must regard the lowly concerns of our daily walk and conversation as being vitally related to the heavenlies, and we must daringly believe that we can discharge the humblest duty while still breathing the air of the mountain-tops. J. H. J.

The Silence of God's Love

MONDAY, September 10. Zeph. 3 : 17. "The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will be silent in his love; he will joy over thee with singing." The Authorized Version reads, "He will rest in his love"; but the margin suggests the alternative reading, "He will be silent in his love." The most intimate friendships are not necessarily those which are maintained by frequent communications. The deepest affection requires no token. There may be correspondence between heart and heart without words. "The shallows murmur, but the deeps are still." God does not demand that our prayers be always voiced, nor should we expect his love for us to express itself wholly or chiefly in material ways. The wisest and saintliest of God's servants have perceived the reality of his ministry to them in the utter absence of any sign or symbol of that love. That prophet had reached a state of great serenity and of clear vision who rejoiced in the Lord and joyed in the God of his salvation although the fig tree did not blossom, neither was fruit in the vines.

There is a story of two friends, both philosophers, who sat together through the hours of an entire evening without exchanging a dozen words. When they parted, they clasped hands and one of them said to the other, "We have had a grand conversation." Who shall say that they had not? The presence of each of them had stimulated the other to deeper and clearer thinking. So, in ways that we can not see, much less measure, the mere presence of God with us and in us, the certainty that he is not very far away, the conviction that he is "never so far as even to be near," braces our weak wills, lifts our low thoughts, and enables us to see earth under the aspect of eternity. C. C. A.

Unity and Variety

TUESDAY, September 11. I Cor. 12 : 4, 7. "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withall." Unity is variety, one common aim and many distinct efforts to achieve it—this is the order God has adopted as well for the realm of nature as for the kingdom of grace. God has use for birds and butterflies, eagles and crocodiles, ferns and oaks, roses and squashes. All created things reflect the glory of their Maker, his wisdom, power and goodness. "All thy works shall praise thy name in earth, and sky, and sea."

The same order obtains in the church. To achieve the end of its existence the church presses into service every gift, faculty, skill, endowment with which God has enriched its members. There are learned doctors and simple folk, wise leaders and humble workers, great orators, and men who wrestle with God in prayer unseen by men, beautiful singers, and teachers who scatter the immortal seeds of truth into the hearts of their little class in school. One universal purpose sways the variety of operations in the church. Preachers and laymen, pastors and people work for the spreading of the blessed Gospel of the great Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Their united labor tends to the magnifying of God's holy name among the children of men. All ministrations within the church radiate from the cross of Christ and draw their efficiency thence; all flow back thither and find their objective and goal in the Cross, which is to be lifted up in every activity of the church as the ensign around which the nations are to rally. W. H. T. D.

Jesus' Love

WEDNESDAY, September 12. Rev. 1 : 5. "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sin in his own blood." Jesus is the infinite Lover; he loved, he loveth, he will love forever more. He loveth enough to die for us that he might loose us from our sins by his precious blood.

All the disciples of Jesus had passed away but John, the one whom Jesus loved with a special affection. John, on the lonely island of Patmos, in banishment, believed that the Saviour loved him still; and while he believed, Christ himself appeared unto him, and told him to write the things "which thou hast seen and the things which shall be hereafter."

In writing the Saviour's warnings to the seven churches, the climax of his words to each one was, "He loveth us still." Although you have fallen away from your first love, he hath come from heaven to earth again to bid me win you back to his embrace. You, who have loved the world of lust, of passion, of drink, of gold, of power, of all sinful pleasure—hear me, my fallen children: He loveth us still! Return, ye wanderers, return, and help to sing the everlasting song, "Unto him be glory and dominion and power forever and ever."

The aged John had a glorious meeting when he was in the Spirit on the Lord's day. Jesus revealed to him words and views which he has portrayed in his Gospel, his Epistles and the book of Revelation, so that all the world might know the meaning of his wonderful visions. Christ has spoken through him, the beloved disciple, greater things than even when he ministered among men. He came to speak to those who had fallen away. E. W. C.

Whiter Than Whiteness

THURSDAY, September 13. Ps. 51 : 7. "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." During the Polar expedition of Sir George Nares, a sailor belonging to the Alert died, and was buried on a rocky headland overlooking the Arctic Sea. On every side from that point there stretches a limitless wilderness of ice and snow. Perhaps it is the northernmost grave in the world. A rough stone marks the resting-place of the sailor, and on it there is riveted a copper plate, with the inscription, "Thou shalt wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." This promise, through the long ages which have passed since it was written, has been the great hope of the penitent sinner. Is it not enough to be "as white as snow"? Isaiah thought so, and God's promise of cleansing, as the prophet reports it, reads, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." But God is not satisfied to do things on a scale commensurate with our expectation. His rule is that of exceeding abundance. Mere innocence is as white as snow, but purity, which is innocence, tempted, tried and triumphant, is whiter than snow. The phrase "whiter than snow" takes its place with a comfortably large number of other expressions which some one has called God's superlatives. The New Testament is particularly rich in such phrases. Heaven's abundant measure is manifest under the covenant of grace. We who are forgiven are forgiven "abundantly"; we "abound" in wisdom, love and good works; the life we live is "more abundant"; and all because of "abounding grace." C. C. A.

The Publican

FRIDAY, September 14. Luke 18 : 13. "The publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner!" Of this publican the Lord says at the end of his narrative: "I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other; for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." That means, the publican was viewed with favor by God, the Pharisee with disfavor; the publican's sins were forgiven, the Pharisee's sins were not forgiven; the publican was declared free from guilt, righteous, the Pharisee's sins remained resting on him, together with the wrath of God. Was it because of the great self-humiliation which we observe in the publican's action that the divine pardon was extended to him? Did he merit forgiveness by his remorse and penitent grief? That thought never entered the heart of the publican. His appeal is not to his own merits, as the Pharisees had been, but only to the mercy, the compassion which God has on the miserable and undeserving.

In the attitude of the publican we are to behold the condition of the heart that is required in the sinner if the Saviour is to become a lovable object to him. The balm of the Gospel of forgiveness is not appreciated except by a bruised heart. When the spirit in us is become crushed and cowed by the memories of our sins and shortcomings and we wince under the sharp accusations of our accusing conscience, the message, "God has been merciful to thee; thy sins are forgiven; go, and sin no more," brings great relief. Only in a heart that has been emptied of all self-reliance and self-esteem does the Spirit of grace accomplish the work of restoration. Therefore Christ said: "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." W. H. T. D.

The Wicked Woman

SATURDAY, September 15. I Kings 21 : 23. "The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel." Jezebel of Hebrew history was reproduced in Shakespeare's Lady Macbeth. She was Phœnician, as were the merchants and seamen of those ancient times. She was considered the evil genius of her husband Ahab, introducing the worship of Baal, her own religion of shameless idolatry, which resulted in the overthrowing of the worship of Israel's God.

Elijah summoned the hundreds of prophets of Baal to a test of the true God on Mount Carmel; it was a conflict of spiritual forces between the false and the true. Jehovah was triumphantly vindicated, and the wicked prophets slain on the banks of the River Kishon about twenty miles from the city of Tyre. Ahab and the devotees of idolatry were completely overcome by this display of divine power.

But Elijah had Jezebel to reckon with, and he found one terrible woman more than all the hosts of Baal. After she had sworn that she would take his life on the morrow, Elijah, the hero, the courageous prophet, the man of God, fled in dismay and in defeat.

A while after, Jezebel caused the murder of Naboth in order to obtain his vineyard for her king. When Ahab trembled, she said, like Lady Macbeth, "Give me the dagger." Jehu was God's avenger; he slew Jezebel's son and grandson, kings of Israel and Judah, in the very Naboth's vineyard. Ahab was killed in battle while Jezebel waited for news at her palace window. She railed at Jehu as he appeared, defying him to the last. The servants, being ordered, threw her from the window, and the horses trod her under foot.

When one goes wrong, one sinks to the lowest depths of iniquity, trampling under foot God's laws, goodness, holiness and guidance, dying as the fool dieth, in impious ruin. E. W. C.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE WITNESS

By Grace Livingston Hill Lutz

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

CHAPTER II—Continued

THE days passed; strength crept back into Courtland's body, consciousness to his brain. The bandage was taken off once more, and he saw the nurse and other faces. He did not look again for the Presence. He had come to understand he could not see it with his eyes; but always it was there, waiting, something sweet and wonderful. Waiting to show him what to do when he was well.

The memorial services had been held for Stephen Marshall many days, the university had been draped in black, with its flag at half-mast, the proper time, and its mourning folded away, ere Paul Courtland was able to return to his room and his classes.

They welcomed him back with touching eagerness. They tried to hush their voices and temper their noisiness to suit an invalid. They told him all their news, what games had been won, who had made Phi Beta Kappa, and what had happened at the frat. meetings. But they spoke not at all of Stephen!

DOWN the hall Stephen's door stood always open, and Courtland, walking that way one day, found fresh flowers upon his desk and wreathed around his mother's picture. A quaint little photograph of Stephen taken several years back hung on one wall. It had been sent at the class's request by Stephen's mother to honor her son's chosen college.

The room was set in order, Stephen's books were on the shelves, his few college treasures tacked up about the walls; and conspicuous between the windows hung framed the resolutions concerning Stephen the hero-martyr of the class, telling briefly how he had died, and giving him this tribute, "He was a man!"

Below the resolutions, on the little table covered with an old-fashioned crocheted cotton table-cover, lay Stephen's Bible, worn, marked, soft with use. His mother had wished it to remain.

Courtland entered the room and looked around.

There were no traces of the fray that had marred the place when last he saw it. Everything was clean and fine and orderly. The simple saint-like face of the plain farmer's-wife-mother looked down upon it all with peace and resignation. This life was not all. There was another. Her eyes said that. Paul Courtland stood a long time gazing into them.

Then he closed the door and knelt by the little table, laying his forehead reverently upon the Bible.

SINCE he had returned to college and things of life had become more real, Reason had returned to her throne and was crying out against his "fancies." What was that experience in the hospital but the phantasy of a sick brain? What was the Vision but a fevered imagination? He had been growing ashamed of dwelling upon the thought, ashamed of liking to feel that the Presence was near when he was falling asleep at night. Most of all he had felt a shame and a kind of perplexity in the Biblical Literature class, where he faced "FACTS," as the professor called them, spoken in capitals. SCIENCE was another force which mocked his fancies. PHILOSOPHY cooled his mind and wakened him from his dreams. In this atmosphere he was beginning to think that he had been delirious, and was gradually returning to his normal state, albeit with a restless dissatisfaction he had never known before.

But now in this calm, rose-decked room, with the quiet eyes of the simple mother looking down upon him, the resolutions in their chaplet-of-palm framing, the age-old Bible thumbed and beloved, he knew he had been wrong. He knew he would never be the same. That Presence, or Vision, whatever it was, had entered into his life. He could never forget it; never be convinced that it was not; never be entirely satisfied without it! He believed it was the Christ! Stephen Marshall's Christ!

BY and by he lifted up his head and opened the little worn Bible, reverently, curiously, just to touch it and think how the other boy had done. The soft, much-turned leaves fell open of themselves to a heavily marked verse. There were many marked verses all through the book.

Courtland's eyes followed the words:

"He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself."

Could it be that this strange new sense of the Presence was "the witness" here mentioned? He knew it like his sense of rhythm, or the look of his mother's face, or the joy of a summer morning. It was not anything he could analyze. One might argue that there was no such thing, science might prove there was not, but he knew it, had seen it, felt it! He had the witness in himself. Was that what it meant?

With troubled brow he turned over the leaves again:

"If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."

Ah! There was an offer; why not close with it?

He dropped his head on the open book with the old words of self-surrender:

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

A moment later Pat McCluny opened the door, cautiously, quietly; then, with a nod to Tennelly back of him, he entered with confidence.

The Dweller in the House

IF my soul can rest content with bargainings,
Can look to decorations of the cross,
To meetings without partings — stuff of poets' dreams—
To rewards for self-denial, accomplishment,
Rewards for prayers, belief, and hedged-in faith,
Then it shrivels in its house, and dies.

But if this dweller in the house—my soul,
Throws wide the casement and the batten door,
Lets in the sunlight of the bigger fate,
The chance of a result more infinite—
Of touching future ages with the finger-tips—
Then it grows strong and sure and wise.

R. M. E.

Courtland rose. His face was white, but there was a light of something in his eyes they did not understand.

They went over to him as if he had been a child who had been lost and was found on some perilous height and needing to be coaxed gently away from it.

"Oh, so you're here, Court," said Tennelly, slapping his shoulder with gentle roughness. "Great little old room, isn't it? The fellows' idea to keep flowers here. Kind of a continual memorial."

"Great fellow, that Steve!" said Pat, hoarsely. He could not yet speak lightly of the hero-martyr whom he had helped to send to his fiery grave.

But Courtland stood calmly, almost as if he had not heard them. "Pat, Nelly," he said, turning from one to the other gravely, "I want to tell you that I have met Steve's Christ and after this I stand for him!"

THEY looked at him curiously, pityingly. They spoke with soothing words and humored him. They led him away to his room and left him to rest. Then they walked with solemn faces and dejected air into Bill Ward's room and threw themselves down upon his couch.

"Where's Court?" Bill looked up from the theme he was writing.

"We found him in Steve's room," said Tennelly, gloomily, and shook his head.

"It's a shame!" burst forth Pat. "He's batty in the bean!"

Tennelly answered the shocked question in the eyes of Bill with a nod. "Yes, the brightest fellow in the class. You ought to have heard him talk. Say! I don't believe it was all the fire. Court's been studying too hard. He's been an awful shark for a fellow that went in for athletics and everything else. He's studied too hard and it's gone to his head!"

Tennelly sat gloomily staring across the room. It was the old cry of the man who cannot understand.

"He needs a little change," said Bill, putting his feet up on the table comfortably. "Pity the frat. party is over. He needs to get him a girl. Be a great stunt if he'd fall for some jolly girl. Say! I'll tell you what. I'll get Gila after him."

"Who's Gila?" asked Tennelly gloomily. "He won't notice her any more than a fly on the wall. You know how he is about girls."

"Gila's my cousin—Gila Dare. She's a good sport, and she's a winner every time. We'll put Gila on the job. I've got a date with her tomorrow night and I'll put her wise. She'll just enjoy that kind of thing. He's met her, too, over at the Navy game. Leave it to Gila."

"What style is she?" asked Tennelly, still skeptical.

"Oh, tiny and stylish and striking, with big eyes. A perfect little peach of an actress."

"Court's too keen for acting. He'll see through her. She can't put one over on Court."

"She won't try," said the ardent cousin. "She'll just be as innocent. They'll be chums in half an hour, or it'll be the first failure for Gila."

"Well, it's worth trying, for if Court keeps on like this we'll all be buying prayer-books and singing psalms before another semester."

"Nelly, my infant," said Bill Ward, "I tell you Gila never fails. If she gets on the job Court'll be dead in love with her before the midwinter exams!"

"I'll believe it when I see it," said Tennelly, rising.

CHAPTER III

IT was a sumptuous library in which Gila Dare awaited the coming of Paul Courtland.

Great, deep, red-leather chairs stood everywhere invitingly, the floor was spread with a magnificent specimen of Royal Bokhara, the rich recesses of the noble walls were lined with books in rare editions, a heavily carved table of dull black wood from some foreign land sprawled in the center of the room and held a great bronze lamp of curious pattern, bearing a ruby light. Ornate bronzes lurked on pedestals in shadows, unexpectedly, and caught the eye alarmingly, like grim ones set to watch. A throbbing fire like the heart of a lit ruby burned in a massive fireplace of grotesque tiles.

Gila herself, slight, dark-eyed, with pearl-white skin and dusky hair, was dressed in crimson velvet, soft and clinging like chiffon, catching the light and shimmering it with strange effect. The dark hair was curiously arranged, and stabbed just above her ears with two dagger-like combs flashing with jewels. A single jewel burned at her throat on an invisible chain, and jewels flashed from the little pointed crimson-satin slippers. The whole effect was startling. One wondered why she had chosen so elaborate a costume to waste upon a college student.

She stood with one dainty foot poised on the brass trappings of the hearth. In her short skirts she seemed almost a child; so innocent the dark eyes as they looked into the fire; so soft the shadows that played in the dark hair! And yet, as she turned to listen for a step in the hall, there was something sinister in those dark eyes, something mocking in the red lips.

"Leave him to me," she had said to her cousin when he told her how the brilliant young athlete and intellectual star of the university had been "stung by the religious bug." "Send him to me. I'll take it out of him and he'll never know it's gone."

PAUL COURTLAND entered, unsuspecting. He had met Gila a number of times before, at college parties and games. He was not exactly flattered, but decidedly pleased that she had sent for him.

The contrast from the hall with its blaze of electrics to the softer light of the library affected him strangely. He paused on the threshold and passed his hand over his eyes. Gila stood where the ruby light of hearth and lamp would set her vivid dress on fire and light the jewels at her throat and hair.

The young man lingered unaccountably. He had a sense of leaving something behind him. Almost he hesitated as she came forward to greet him and looked back as if to rid himself of some obligation.

He thrilled with wonder over her delicate, dazzling beauty; and felt the luxury of the room about him, responding to its lure.

"So dandy of you to come to me when you are so busy after your long illness." Her voice was soft and confiding, its cadences like soothing music. She motioned him to a chair. "You see, I wanted to have you all to myself for a little while, just to tell you how perfectly fine you were at that awful fire."

SHE dropped upon the couch and settled among the cushions gracefully. The flicker of the firelight played upon the jeweled combs and gleamed at her throat. The little pointed slippers cozily crossed looked innocent enough to have been meant for the golden street. Her eyes looked up into his with that confiding gaze that thrills and thrills again.

Her voice dropped softer, and she turned half away and gazed pensively into the fire on the hearth. "I wouldn't let them talk to me about it. It seemed so awful. And you were so strong and great."

"It was nothing!" He did not want to talk about the fire. There was something incongruous, almost unholy, in having it discussed here. It jangled on his nerves. For there in front of him in the fireplace burned a mimic pit like the one into which the martyr Steve had fallen; and there before him on the couch sat the girl! What was there so familiar about her? Ah! now he knew. Her gown was an exact reproduction of the one the actress had worn on the stage that night. He was conscious of wishing to sit beside her on that couch and revel in the ravishing color of her. What was there about this room that made all his pulses beat?

They talked of the dances and games, little gossip of the university, with now and then a telling personality, and a sweep of long lashes, or a lifting of great, innocent eyes of admiration to his face.

She offered wine in delicate gold-crusted ruby glasses, but Courtland did not drink. She suggested that he smoke, but he told her he was in training, and she cooed softly of his wonderful strength of character in resisting.

BY this time he was in the coveted seat beside her on the couch, and the fire burned low and red. They had ceased to talk of games and dances. She had been speaking of palmistry, and she took his hand in hers, innocently, impersonally, with large eyes lifted inquiringly. Her breath was on his face; her touch had stirred his senses with a madness he had never felt nor measured in himself before.

"The life-line is here," she said, coolly, and traced it delicately along his palm with a sea-shell tinted finger. Like cool delicious fire it spread from nerve to nerve and set aside his reason in a frenzy. He would seize the berry and feel its stain upon his lips now no matter what! –

"Paul!"

IT was as distinct upon his ear as if the words had been spoken; as startling and calming as a cool hand upon his fevered brow; the sudden entrance of a guest. He had seized her hands with sudden fervor, and now, almost in the same moment, flung them from him and stood up, a man in full possession of his senses. "Hark!" he said, and as he spoke a cry broke faintly forth above them, and there was sound of rushing feet. A frightened maid burst into the room unannounced.

"Oh, Miss Gila, I beg yer pardon, but Master Harry's got his father's razor, an' he's cut hisself something awful."

The maid was weeping and wringing her hands helplessly, but Gila stood frowning angrily. Courtland sprang up the stairs. In the tumult of his mind he would have rejoiced if the house had been on fire, or a cyclone had struck the place—anything so he could fling himself into service. A sense of lost power returned, was over him. The spell was broken.

He bent over the little boy alertly, grasped the wrist, and stopped the spurt of blood. The frightened child looked up into his face and stopped crying.

"You should have telephoned for the doctor at once and not made all this fuss in the presence of a guest," scolded Gila as she came up the stairs. She looked garish and out of place with her red velvet and jewels in the brilliant light of the white-tiled bathroom. She stood helplessly by the door, making no move to help Courtland. The maid was at the telephone, frantically calling for the family physician.

"Hand me those towels," commanded Courtland, and saw the look of disgust upon Gila's face as she reluctantly picked her way across the blood stains. It struck him that they were the color of her frock. The stain of the crushed berry.

THE girl felt the man's changed attitude without in the least understanding it. She thought it had been the cry of the child that made him jump up and fling her hands from him with that sudden "Hark!" in the moment when he had almost yielded. She did not know that an inner voice had called him.

He gathered the little boy into his arms when he had bound up the cut, and talked to him cheerfully. The child's curly head rested trustfully against the big shoulder,

"Floor all bluggy!" he remarked, languidly. "Wall all bluggy!" Then his eyes fell on his sister in her scarlet frock. "Gila all bluggy, too!" he laughed, and pointed with his well hand.

"Be still, Harry!" said Gila, sharply, and when Courtland looked up in wonder he saw the delicate brows drawn blackly, and the mouth had lost its innocent sweetness. The child shrank in his arms, and he put a reassuring hand upon the little head that snuggled comfortably against his coat. It was one of Courtland's strong points, this love of little children. He grew fine and gentle in their presence. There was something inexpressibly beautiful about his attitude toward a child.

Gila saw it now and wondered. There was something in his face and attitude that commanded her respect and admiration; something that drew her as she had not been drawn before.

WHEN Gila set her heart upon a thing she had always had it. This had been her father's method of bringing her up. Her mother was too busy with her clubs and her social functions to see the harm. And now Gila suddenly became aware that she was setting her heart upon this young man. She had power and she would use it. She had beauty and it should wound him. She would win that gentle deference and attention for her own. In her jealous, spoiled little heart, she hated the little brother for lying there in his arms so, interrupting their evening.

When Courtland lifted his head at the sound of the doctor's footsteps on the stairs he saw the challenge in Gila's eyes. Drawn up against the white enamel of the bathroom door, all her brilliant velvet and jewels gleaming in the brightness of the room, her regal little head up, her chin lifted half haughtily, her innocent mouth pursed softly with determination, her eyes wide with an inscrutable look—something more than challenge—something soft, appealing, alluring, that stirred him and drew him and repelled him all in one.

With a sense of something stronger than he was back of him, he lifted his own chin and hardened his eyes in answering challenge. He did not know it, of course, but he wore the look that he always had when about to meet a foe in a game—a look of strength and concealed power that nearly always made the coming foe quake when he saw it.

He shrank from going back to that red room again, or from being alone with her; and when she would have had him return to the library he declined, urging studies and an examination on the morrow. She received his somewhat brusque reply with a hurt look, her mouth drooped grievedly, and her eyes took on a wide, child-like look of distress that gave an impression of innocence. He went away wondering if, after all, he had not misjudged her. Oh yes, he was going again. He had promised her at the last moment.

The sense of having escaped something fateful was passing already. The coolness of the night and the quiet of the starlight had calmed him.

To be continued

Down the hall Stephen's door stood always open, Courtland entered the room

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

National Prayer

MANY friends have written to us urging that the Christian Herald ask the churches and God's people everywhere to unite in a request that the President should appoint a day or days of national prayer.

We know that many organizations, representing practically all the denominations, are even now praying with intense fervor that the nation may be brought to true repentance and to a fuller recognition of and obedience to God's laws, which have been deeply transgressed by us as a people. The morning watch is being prayerfully kept in thousands of American homes; noontime prayer calls apart from the cares of the world a great multitude of earnest souls. The Prayer League, with its many affiliated organizations throughout the land, carries the nation's burdens to the throne of grace daily and weekly. There are, besides, countless thousands who are appealing for our people and our executive in the present grave crisis.

We believe that if all of the spiritual agencies of this nation were coordinated, and a day or days set apart by proclamation, such a mighty volume of united, earnest prayer would ascend for national pardon and purification as has never been equaled—not even in the praying days of the Civil War. God loves to see a nation on its knees. It is the attitude of power and confidence. He will never forsake the people that put their trust in him.

We are at the beginning of an undertaking so vast and so important that we shall need, as a nation, the leading of divine wisdom clear through to the end.

Thousands of our young men, on whom have been centered the love and hope of many households, are called to military service. As a nation, as well as individuals and communities, we should commit them to God's care and keeping, that their hearts may be kept clean and their young manhood unsullied, and that Christ the Helper may be their comrade.

Let us plead with God unitedly. Let the great and the humble join their petitions for national cleansing and keeping. So shall we then be in the right attitude to face the future, for "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

United States of the World

IT was Tolstoy who taught Russia that she had a soul. It is again a Tolstoy, son of the other, who today is the voice of that soul.

Count Ilya Tolstoy, seeing the wonder achieved in Russia, is hopeful for the world. If bound and ignorant Russia could free herself, then the whole world, he believes, can be free. Example is powerful; new ideals of freedom and equality are more powerful still.

In an article in the Century Magazine, Count Tolstoy hopefully asserts what he deems the two essentials to a democratic and peaceful world:

"My countrymen have now won individual liberty, and have thus been placed upon an equal plane with the inhabitants of other free nations. But this is not the highest standard. The souls of the people are still bound by the prejudices of patriotism and nationalism. The greatest evil of the human race is not yet overcome. I refer to war. Capital punishment, which is the murder of one man by the state, is already abolished in Russia; but the murder of millions in war is still justified and glorified by all governments. The world must at last rid itself of this hideous nightmare. The only way to realize such an aim is to forget forever the prime cause of dissension among nations, the sentiment of nationalism. . . .

"The day will come when she shall realize not only the brotherhood of individuals, but the essential unity of all mankind. The race must not only shake off the bonds of despotism, but must free itself from the slavery of national separatism. All are brothers, all children of the same Father. The barriers which divide nations are artificial. I believe the time is at hand when these barriers will fall, like the walls of Jericho, before love's trumpet summons; when the banner of brotherhood and freedom will float forever over a new federation—the United States of the World."

The brotherhood of mankind! It was God's decree in the beginning. It is ever the universal quest. Men seek it under many names and from many motives, and mostly wander far astray. But the yearning remains always; the effort never ceases.

All merely human theories and methods have failed again and again. Now the failure seems more than ever disastrous. The highest-valued political doctrines have failed. The brilliant statesmen are baffled. Human reason reels back impotent.

But the Word of God stands secure. In it the world will find the answer. There can be no true conception of brotherhood without first a true conception of Fatherhood.

The Fatherhood of God is the very fundamental of all human love and union that is true and availing.

Less of Luxuries

ALWAYS the prime essential to a good bargain is the necessity of the article purchased. No luxury is ever a good bargain. At such time as this, luxuries are the worst bargains conceivable; and in buying them we are made to know it.

Authentic figures just compiled show that prices of imported articles of luxury are much higher than before the war. Diamonds, for instance, have advanced approximately 30 per cent. in value per carat of corresponding quality; pearls, which are especially popular at this moment, show an even greater advance. Laces, which we are no longer able to obtain from Germany, and which France has now little time to manufacture, are much higher than in the pre-war period. Matting, perhaps not considered a luxury but not an absolute necessity in a time such as this, shows in official reports an average value in May, 1917, imports of 14 cents per square yard, against 9 cents per yard in May, 1914. Macaroni imports of February and March, 1917, were valued at 8½ cents per pound against 4½ cents in the corresponding months of 1914. Currants imported in May, 1915, came at 15.5 cents per pound against 3.9 cents per pound in May, 1914; figs, 7.6 cents per pounds against 3.4 cents in the same months of 1914. Carpets and rugs, woven whole, imported in May, 1917, averaged $6.39 per square yard, against $3.21 in August, 1915. Woolen dress goods imported in March, 1917, averaged $1.52 per pound against 85 cents in May, 1914, and woolen cloths in April, 1917, $1.46 per pound against 90 cents in May, 1914.

The wise acquire wisdom even in misfortune. The great war is teaching the whole world the wisdom of thrift. With even the prices of necessities going airplaining, there is nothing but absolute folly in the buying of any luxuries.

Food, Prophecy and Material Prosperity

DO you like to eat, or do you do it merely from force of habit, as an unpleasant necessity, to be followed by a pill or a grouch? A great deal is being said nowadays about eating in its relation to right living. There are authorities and others. One of the authorities is Dr. Wm. H. Vail, who has written a very interesting series of articles for the Christian Herald in which he has embodied the experience of years of medical practice and experiment. Dr. Vail comes of a family of physicians. His first article, "How to Eat," will appear in next week's Christian Herald.

Next week, also, Dr. James M. Gray, in another Mountain Peak of Prophecy, will show to us "The Day of the Lord, When it Comes, and What it Means."

Dye-stuffs and Steel, an important new industry and a fundamental and growing older one, are pictured next week by Frank Carpenter.

Mormons and the Bible

IN Billy Sunday's Tabernacle in New York some auditor one day left a copy of the Bible. So at least the story goes, and thereby hangs a tale. Ordinarily, a Bible found after a revival meeting would be a rather commonplace incident. But this particular Bible, although it was, as the title page showed, a copy of the good old Authorized Version, with the Oxford Press imprint, had one peculiarity which when discovered raised a storm of discussion. It contained an interpolated Mormon section, the title-page of which set forth that it was "copyrighted by Joseph F. Smith, trustee for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," and "designed for the use of missionaries and other students of the Scriptures." As explained by the Deseret Evening News, an official organ of the Mormon Church, this interpolated portion consisted of "quotations from the Bible, classified under appropriate headings, in support of the fundamental doctrines of the Mormon Church, those Scripture passages being supplemented by explanatory notes and citations from historical and theological writings of recognized importance."

Copies of this Mormon-tinkered Bible were found on sale in Brooklyn, and a protest was made against what was very naturally regarded as an attempt to circulate Mormon teachings under the guise of Christian literature. The Oxford Press, on receiving the protests, is said to have discontinued the publication of the book. It now turns out that the Cambridge University Press had issued a Bible with the same references to Mormon theology and presented in the same way, yet nobody seems to have discovered it, or known of it, outside of the Mormons and the publishers. We note further that the Continent makes the point in mitigation of the case, that it was a Bible made for Mormons only—and that "so far as the publishers know, the whole edition was sold out to Mormons."

There are many kinds of Bibles issued nowadays by some who believed they could greatly improve upon the age-honored, venerated model by omitting or retaining according to whim. But the average Bible reader, and certainly the Bible Christian, does not want a tinkered, interpolated Bible. He wants the Word in its entirety, unmutilated and not with this or that un-Biblical creed cunningly inserted. There is no law to prevent any set of people having a Bible of their own making, if they so desire. Certainly, they have a right to full religious freedom under the Constitution. But they have not a right, either morally or constitutionally, to tinker with the Bible. The lesson of the incident is that Bible-buyers should make sure that they are getting the Bible itself, and no other. It is a case in which substitution cannot be accepted.

Heroism and Heart

IT is said of a young Canadian lieutenant who died in especially gallant action somewhere in France that he left a will giving all of his property to a little blind child almost unknown to him.

Heroism is not a quality in itself; it is the fruit of many good qualities. When you see true courage anywhere you may look back of it for a kindly heart and a high sense of honor. They are always there.

It is selfishness that makes cowards of us.

Bravery is not born in a moment. It does not spring out of meanness of soul. Mere physical recklessness, which may be mostly a result of ignorance and excitement, may develop anywhere at any moment; but true courage, that deliberately sacrifices self for others, is very different, and is the product only of long self-denial, of open-heartedness and quickened sympathies.

The gallant death of this brave lieutenant has developed the fact that his heroism was not a thing of the moment. It did not spring from sudden impulse. It was a part of his thought and feeling. He ever had concern for others less fortunate than himself, and his hand and heart had been trained to go out to them.

His interest in the little blind child began years ago. Her pitiable helplessness had touched his heart. Her cheerfulness under her dreadful infirmity powerfully appealed to him. He was sending her to school. And he has provided for her in his will.

His last gallant act, in which he gave his life, was only fruit—the earlier generous instances were the seed.

Few lines in all literature are more beautiful in their simple truth than these of Bayard Taylor's:

"The bravest are the tenderest;
The loving are the daring."

The Russian Declaration

THE program of the dominant political party in freed Russia, quoted in full on another page of this issue, will be found a most advanced and remarkable document. As the program of the party which successfully waged the revolution and is in control of the new government, it is, for the time being, at least, practically the constitution of the newest and largest republic in the world.

With the nations of the world at war for the extension and safety of democracy, this tremendous unprecedented single step toward democracy by a people whom we had been accustomed to regard as the most oppressed, cowed and demeaned, is intensely interesting, not to say startling. It must readily be recognized as the most advanced, most sweeping declaration of new principles since the American Declaration of Independence. Whereas our own Declaration was that of 3,000,000 people, this is the declaration of a nation of 180,000,000.

If the Russian people should prove successful in working out the extreme problems they have set for themselves, they will have established a new and high mark for democracy, and will have led the world in an enormous step forward in civilization.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Czar Banished to Siberia

FOR political and military reasons, the Russian council of ministers decided to get former Emperor Nicholas out of the way before circumstances arose which might make it difficult. On August 14 the emperor and his family, with a retinue of about fifty servants and their guard of picked detachments from the troops which had been guarding the palace, left the palace of Tsarskoe-Selo in a special train for a destination in Siberia, presumably Tobolsk. Nicholas was reported as very depressed in appearance, while the former Empress Alexandra was apparently pleased at the prospect of a change in surroundings. It is impossible to contemplate the progress of this train without seeing again the long lines of manacled exiles who, in other years, struggled across the snow-blown steppes, suffering and dying, or, at the end, spending years in cruel banishment, that Czardom might live. In the history of the world's rulers, there has been a succession of transitions from weakness to power, and from power to weakness, some of them very sudden. A man sold fish in the market one day, the next he was made ruler of his people. A man was plowing in the field one day; on the next he was called to be ruler of the nation. The greatest kings fell from their thrones in an instant by the stab of a dagger, the shot of a bullet, or the stroke of the axman. Since the world began, few changes in royal condition are greater than that in the fortunes of the Czar of all the Russias. A little time ago reigning in all his pomp and glory, we now see him led away a captive to the prison province of the empire. There are few tears to shed for the Czar. The people do not care for kings. They are ruling, and intend to rule, themselves. The Czar, if he turn the pages of his Bible in the hours of banishment, may sympathize with those in similar condition in captivity in olden times. "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down; yea, we wept when we remembered Zion." (Ps. 137 : 1.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Trolley Crash Kills Eighteen

EIGHTEEN persons were killed and thirty injured when two trolleys on the Short Line Electric Railway crashed head on at high speed a short distance from North Branford, Conn. Both cars, of heavy construction, were going at top speed, it is said, and the force of the impact was such as to lock them together, a mass of twisted iron and steel and splintered wood. The motorman reported that he had been on duty for twelve hours and did not notice the signal as he passed, and hence the collision. Whether this be true or not, it is evident that somebody, or perhaps more than one person, was to blame. The reckless manner in which trolley cars are operated, especially in the suburban districts, is a shame and crime. Grand juries, prosecuting officers, and courts should set themselves instantly to the task of bringing these things to an end, or at any rate to the lowest possible minimum. The investigation of this tragedy now in process should be more than a form. If the guilty parties can be found a prison sentence will not be too severe. It seems that if a man boards a trolley car, or railway train, or boat, or even undertakes to go across the streets of a busy city nowadays, he takes his life in his hands. Even with moderate caution and wisdom, the dangerous accidents of life are everywhere. This trolley car tragedy illustrates this great fact: "There is but a step between me and death." (I Sam. 20:3.)

British Columbia "Dry"

THE province of British Columbia will become prohibition territory on October 1, under a law passed by the provincial legislature recently and signed by the lieutenant governor. The bill passed was a re-enactment of a measure introduced a year ago. This was submitted to a referendum and passed by a majority of 5,000. A vote of British Columbia soldiers overseas was taken, and the verdict was upset, the final majority being 800 in favor of the wets. The prohibitionists contended that frauds had occurred in the taking of the vote among the soldiers. A government commission, sent to England and France to investigate, found that many soldiers had voted two or three times, and that dead and missing men were also entered as having cast ballots. The legislature decided that the charges of fraud had been sufficiently substantiated to cause the bringing of the measure into effect. All the provinces of Canada except Quebec are now dry. On September 11, at 11 P.M. will cease the manufacture of distilled liquor in the United States, according to an act of Congress. Not another gill of distilled liquor will be allowed to be manufactured for beverage purposes during the war. The nations are regarding the liquor dealers as destroyers of men who may be included in this description of the workers of iniquity: "Who eat up my people as they eat bread." (Ps. 53 : 4.)

Look Out for the Sharks

LAST season the deadly sharks reaped quite a harvest along the Atlantic coast. It is reported that the man-eating sharks are again busy this season, and bathers must take especial caution to avoid them. Sloop captains arriving at Connecticut ports declared that they had seen at least twenty man-eaters in Long Island Sound. Captain John Wirth said that a young man by the name of Briggs, of Mattituck, Long Island, was swimming close to the shore when a shark attacked him, and had it not been for the timely assistance given by some fishermen, he would have been killed. Captain Wirth and his crew caught a huge shark six feet long, which was taken to Bridgeport, and placed in a show window. After getting the shark on a hook, several bullets were sent through the body before it showed any signs of weakness. There was a huge school of sharks in Long Island Sound which was cut up into seven separate divisions, including about twenty in each collection. Captain Frank M. Thompson captured a nine-foot shark near the New London, Conn., lighthouse. It weighted 650 pounds. A monster shark was seen off South Beach, Staten Island. The thousands of bathers on the coasts are beset with perils, and will have to exercise extreme caution in the moral and spiritual realm. There are dangers on the ocean shore: there is the undertow, the cramp, the heavy sea, and the deadly sharks, all ready to destroy. There must be watchfulness to avoid them. Christ thus enjoins watchfulness with reference to spiritual and eternal things: "And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." (Mark 13 : 37.)

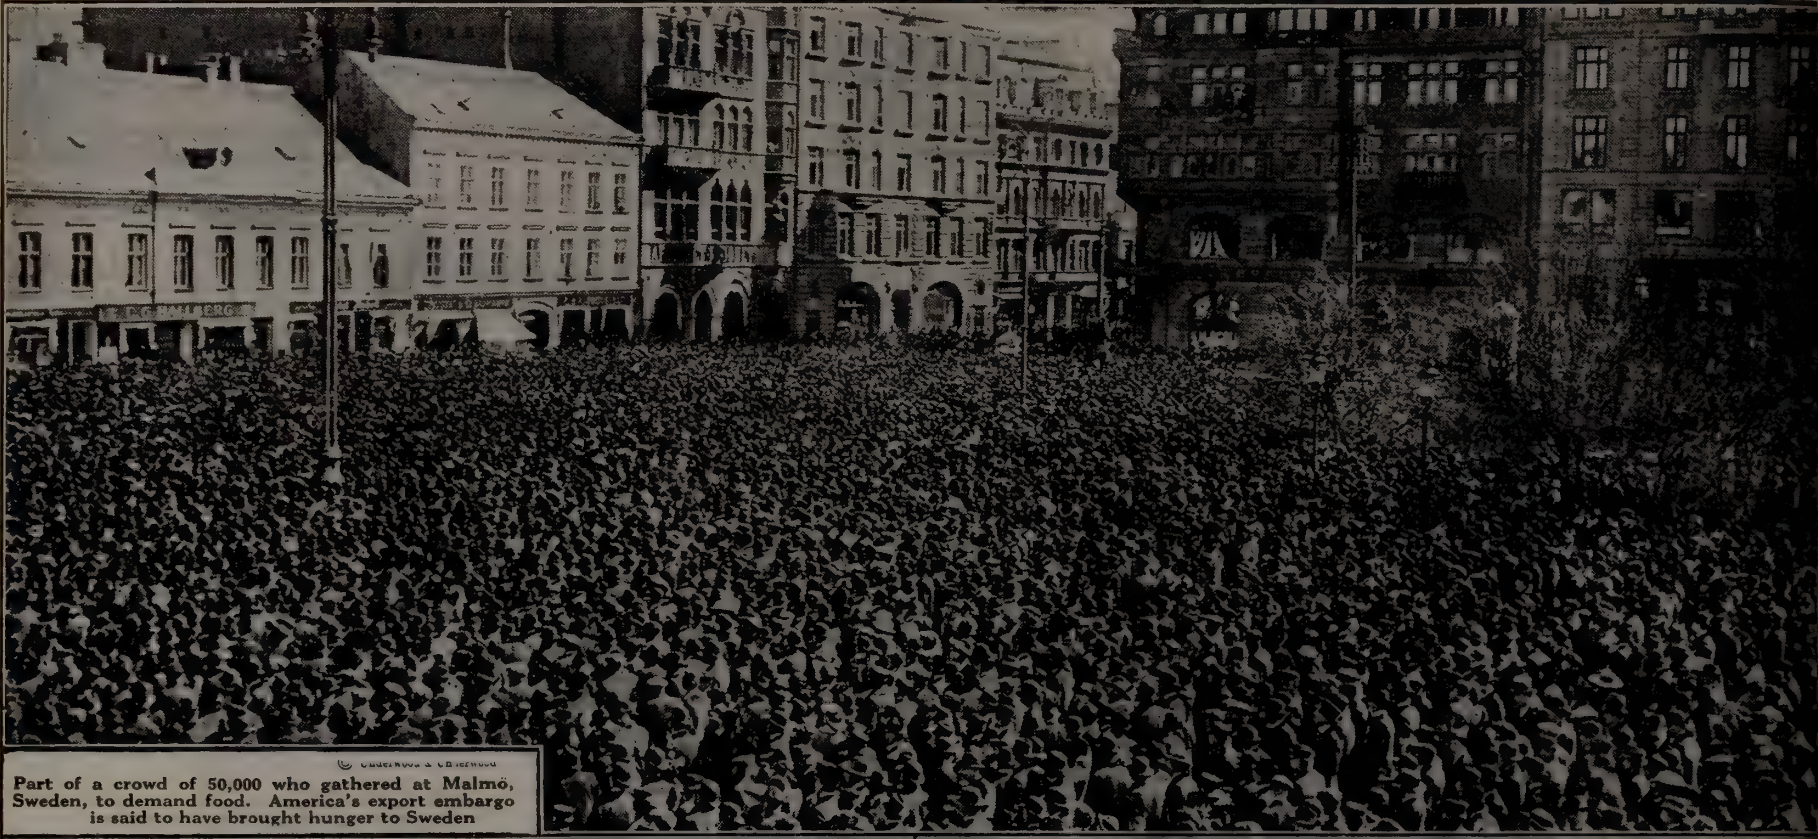
Redskin Rembrandt

AN Indian by the name of Lone Wolf, whose painting of Western scenes has won him fame in his own state of Arizona and other parts of the country, is called by some art critics a redskin Rembrandt. His work is remarkable for rugged strength. He paints cowboys, canyons, lonely plains and gorgeous skies. He is original and almost self-taught, having spent only a short time in an art school in Chicago. The paints he used in his early work were made by mixing the clays to be found near his Arizona home, and he still uses his thumb in lieu of a brush for obtaining his Western sky and cloud effects, remarkable for their singular beauty. Several of his paintings owned in the East have attracted attention and favorable comment. Lone Wolf is about thirty-five years of age. His studio is near the Roosevelt Dam, in an old cement-manufacturing building that was abandoned after the completion of the dam. He has comfortable quarters and works steadily on his pieces to supply a constantly increasing demand. He is generously patronized by tourists. His appearance and conversation are those of a man of refinement and education. He converses fluently on a wide range of subjects. He lives alone in his studio. The typical Indian of story is seen climbing the magnificent mountain, not placing it on the canvas; pursuing the deer, buffalo and bear with bow or rifle, not painting them. The Indian is a noble specimen of manhood and, civilized and Christianized, he makes a valuable member of society. Whether a man be white, black, red, yellow, or brown, he has a kinship of thought and affection, of genius and high development. The apostle thus declares the unity and divine origin of the race: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." (Acts 17 : 26.)

"The Boss Speller"

PROFESSOR D. JONES, fifty years teacher in Missouri, was called the "Boss Speller." He outspelled the neighborhood and challenged the country for any to compete with him. In one contest he spelled 15,000 words correctly. Paul thus refers to his school teacher: "Taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers. (Acts 22 : 3.)

Food and Fight Problems Photographed



© Underwood & Underwood

Part of a crowd of 50,000 who gathered at Malmö, Sweden, to demand food. America's export embargo is said to have brought hunger to Sweden

© International Film Service

The mists of early morning, battle time in France, made more real the training of student officers at Fort McPherson

© Underwood & Underwood

nt Ishii, head of the Japse Mission to the U. S.

© Underwood & Underwood

A Terror of the Sea. Putting together a torpedo for one of Uncle Sam's battleships

H. D. Haywood, Secre-
of the I. W. W.

left, a private in New
"fighting 69th," among st Guard regiments orto France, escorted to the
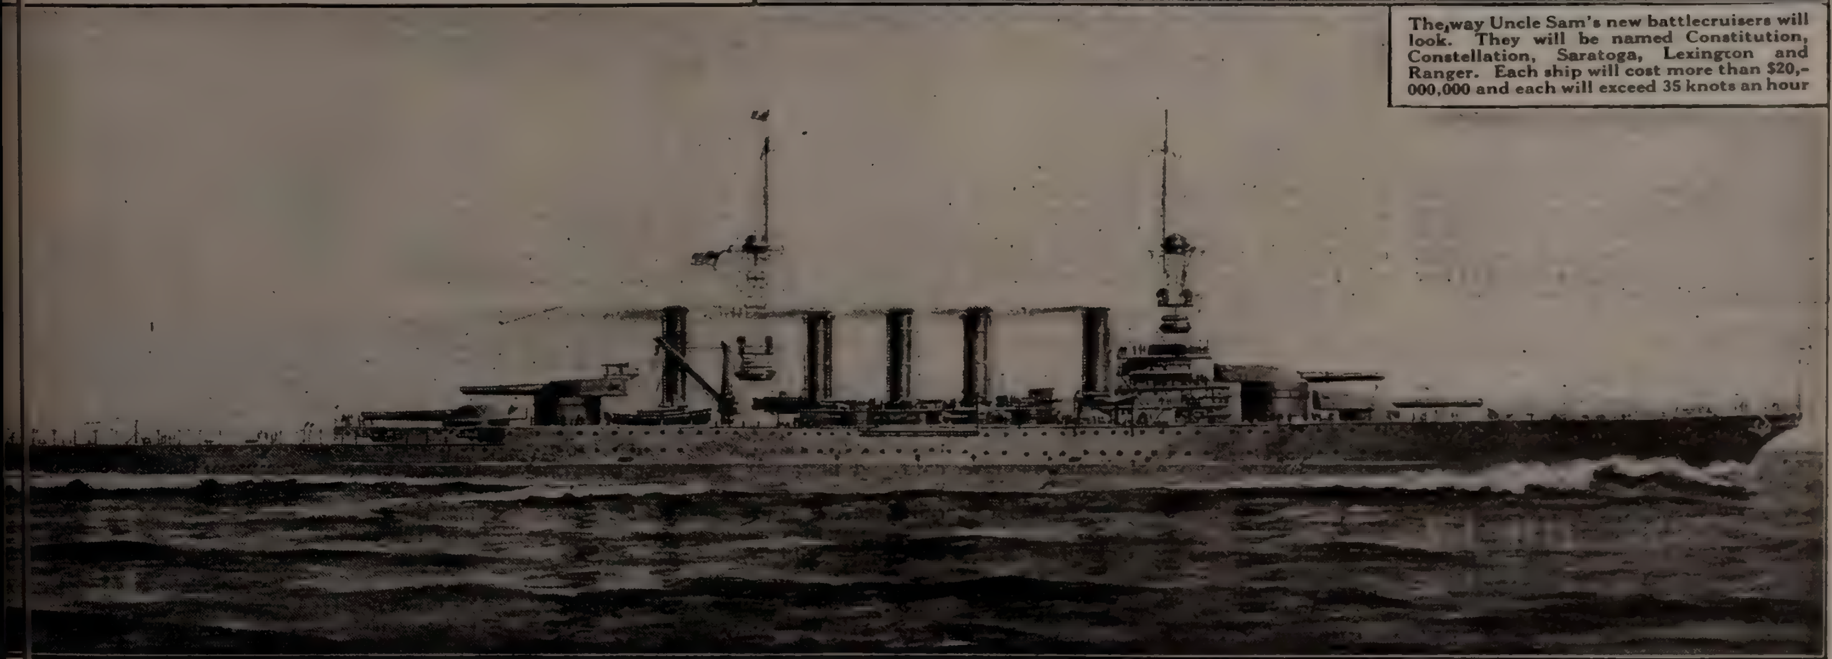
ry by his sweetheart

Plattsburg student officers gathered on the shores of Lake Champlain for a chalk talk



The way Uncle Sam's new battlecruisers will look. They will be named Constitution, Constellation, Saratoga, Lexington and Ranger. Each ship will cost more than $20,000,000 and each will exceed 35 knots an hour

FROM ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER

Conducted by MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Middle-Aged Woman

THE month of September always makes me think of a beautiful woman, past the first rosy glow of youth, perhaps, but with all of the fulfilment of life before her. September always makes me vision a graciously smiling face, a charming manner, and a pleasant sense of calm. The month of September always makes me think of the middle-aged woman with the promise of maturity, of harvest, on the horizon.

And yet, a few days ago, I met a September woman. Faint silver was beginning to show in her heavy hair, fainter lines were beginning to define the contour of her face. And, quite without warning, she suddenly grasped my arm, and said:

"How I hate the thought of middle age! I don't mind so much growing really old, for there is a certain dignity and respect that goes with white hair; but it almost hurts me to think of middle age!"

"Why do you feel that way?" I questioned. "Middle age has never seemed so terrifying to me."

The woman raised rather unhappy eyes to mine. "Middle age," she told me, "is such a hopelessly indefinite time in a woman's life. She's just at a standstill. The man of forty is usually by way of making something decisive out of his life, be it success or failure; but the woman of forty is—shelved. She's too old to go in for the amusements of the younger set and not old enough to be really interested in more serious and sedate pursuits. The middle-aged woman drifts. Often she is conscious that her attractiveness is going. She sees her children growing up and becoming absorbed in other than home affairs. And she, with her graying hair, feels out of it all."

I dare say that there are many women who miss the blessed September of life because they are mourning over the summer that has gone and the winter that is to come. Many women are shelved merely because they are so blatantly anxious not to be. Many women, too conscious of crow's-feet and gray hair, forget that theirs is the privilege of sharing with a husband his decisive victory, of comforting him in his defeat. Many women ignore the great chance of guiding the broadening interests of their children into worthwhile channels. Many women in their anxiety over the loss of youth forget that youth can be made to blossom eternally in the heart.

September is a month of restful beauty when summer lingers on to clasp the warm friendly hand of autumn. September is the month when vague colors deepen into richer, fuller tones. September is, almost, the soul of the year.

And the September woman with a smile on her lips and another smile in the depths of her eyes can be the most wonderful woman of any. To the experience of years she has added health and strength and the courage of her convictions. She can make herself a power in her community if she wants to, and one of the beacon lights of her church, and the axis of her home.

The First Woman Mayor of the South

MRS. GEORGE HORWITZ says that she is not interested in suffrage. She says that she has never really had time to study the question. "And then most women," she adds, "are not strong enough to hold down an office, anyway."

Mrs. Horwitz, according to her own analysis, is an exception to the rule. For, not being busy enough with society, civil work, and farming, she has recently been elected to serve as mayor of Moorshaven, Florida. At present she is in New York, where she is studying the police courts, for in Moorshaven the mayor must also act as judge against all offenders against city ordinances.

Mrs. Horwitz is the first woman mayor in the south. And if she carries out her principles as efficiently as she plans to, as pleasantly and fairly as the character and kindness and attractiveness of her face would suggest that she can do, she will be a credit to the ones who elected her.

"Still Stands the Schoolhouse by the Road"

THE average school teacher, be she the well-paid leader of an ultra-modern city class, or the struggling head of a tiny too-cold-in-winter country school, has some difficulty, or difficulties, to contend with. Her stumbling-block may be lack of interests in her scholars; it may be the subtle antagonism of one pupil; or it may be something in herself.

I number a great many young teachers among my pen-and-ink friends. Brave girls and true they are, with visions and ideals to work on. Their task is one of the greatest in our land, for they are building the tastes and the minds and the characters of the rising generation. As school is opening this month I am quoting a few paragraphs from a letter they have sent me. Perhaps they will hold suggestions and encouragement to other young girls who will take up the work this fall.

. . .

"By this sign conquer," begins the letter from M. B. "The words were embroidered on a flag that hung on the wall of my little country schoolhouse—a flag with a white cross on a field of blue. But, because one often accepts the decorations of a room without being particularly conscious of them, I scarcely noticed the flag until the day when Johnny was particularly naughty.

"'Johnny was always the bad boy of the school, and I had a quick temper. I raised my arm to strike him, and then my eyes fell upon the words, 'By this sign conquer.' The sign was—the cross. The cross meant love. My arm fell to my side. The flush died on my face and the anger faded from my eyes.

"'Johnny, dear,' I said, 'how can you speak so to one who loves you?' I put my arm about him.

"The mischievous expression on the boy's face gave way to sullen defiance as he muttered, 'You don't love me!'

"'I do!' I told him, 'so much that I cannot whip you; and because I love you I want you to try and be a better boy. I'll help you.'

"To my surprise Johnny burst into tears and sobbed out complete repentance.

. . .

"My boys," writes K. E.R., "liked to play soldiers at recess. But they didn't like to do their lessons. It was so much more fun to play.

"One day when one of them was putting the multiplication table on the blackboard, a row of straggling numbers, I said,

"'Make the numbers stand in line, dear, like little soldiers!' And he made the row of figures so orderly that it gave me an idea.

"Ever since that day, our classroom has been a military camp. I've had to do some heavy reading at night to grow technically sure of myself, for those kiddies know; but it is worth the trouble I've taken.

"'I'm the captain. I get a military salute every morning, instead of a casual nod. My monitors are first lieutenants. Rudeness or disobedience means the taking away of stripes or sending to the guard-house, which, normally, is a cloakroom.

"When lessons are well done for a month, a boy's official rank is increased, and the competition is very keen. Even our roll call, in the mornings, is preceded by a reveille, which one of my scholars has learned to play fairly well on a tinny old bugle.

"'Every study period, now, is a scouting expedition. Every recitation is a skirmish. Every map drawn is a report of the enemy's position. . . . My boys are getting so fond of lessons that our superintendent calls them abnormal!"

. . .

"To keep my pupils interested in current poets and writers," says D. H., "I have my prize scholar, every week, write to some famous person. The famous person, in almost every case, has been human enough to send a letter in answer. These letters are the most treasured possessions of our class. As the answer always comes addressed to the little writer, every child is anxious to attain first place in class. And I feel very happy when I think that the intimate contact with great and busy lives will broaden them."

. . .

E. H. tells us simply and sweetly:

"I have written a little prayer that I think will express the sentiments of every teacher who loves her work.

"'All this day, O God, I have looked upon the little children committed to my care and have felt the great trust imposed on me. I come to thee now in the quiet closing hours asking thee to still my soul awhile and grant me the peace that passeth all understanding. Whatever powers be in me dedicate anew to a larger service, greater inspirations, and nobler endeavors; and help me, O God, to keep my physical, material, and spiritual forces consecrated to thy service. Aid me to expand my thinking powers, develop my reason and control my will. Banish my fears and worries and increase my appreciation and love of the beautiful. O God, make me a good woman, so that the dear children may always keep the reverence that they now have for me. Keep me true to the highest ideals of my profession and tune my spirit to receive those vibrations which will tend always to keep me a good example.

"'Help me, O God, to control my passions, that I may never discourage, offend, or injure any little child.

"'Infinite Holy Spirit, feed my whole life, and so direct and govern me that I may always be a credit to my calling.

"'Do this, O Father, for the sake of the little children intrusted to my care, so that at last I can hear thee say, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant, well done.' Amen."

Help Mr. Hoover

"HELP Mr. Hoover" is just at present the motto of every careful and patriotic housewife. And Mr. Hoover has said that the conservation of wheat flour will help the United States to win a war. "Use cornmeal," is the slogan, "whenever you can."

The following are cornmeal recipes—recipes approved by the government—so that women, working with Mr. Hoover though they be thousands of miles from his bureau at Washington, may follow one of his suggestions and serve "one wheatless meal a day."

CORNMEAL AND HOMINY BREAD

One cup cooked hominy, one cup milk, one tablespoonful fat, one cup white cornmeal, two eggs, one and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix and bake for thirty minutes in a moderate oven.

CORNMEAL SPOON BREAD

Two cups milk, one tablespoonful butter, one cup cornmeal, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, two eggs, salt. Scald one cup of milk, add butter and cornmeal to it, then add the cold milk, salt and well-beaten eggs. Add baking powder last. Stir well and bake in a quick oven.

CORNMEAL MUSH

One cup cornmeal, one teaspoonful salt, three and one-half cups of water or four cups of milk or milk and water. Put all the ingredients into a double boiler and cook for four hours.

CORNMEAL GRIDDLE CAKES

Two cups cornmeal, one-half teaspoonful salt, one tablespoonful molasses, one cup flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder. Mix dry ingredients, adding enough milk or water and milk to make a thin batter. Bake on a hot griddle.

INDIAN PUDDING

Five cups milk, one-third cup cornmeal, one teaspoonful ginger, one-half cup molasses, one teaspoonful salt. Cook milk and meal in a double boiler for twenty minutes; add molasses, salt, and ginger; pour into a buttered pudding dish and bake for two hours in a slow oven. Serve with cream.

. . .

When the purple asters blossom
  On the borders of the lane;
When the sun lies, like a garment,
  On the ripened fields of grain;
When the air is soft and mellow,
  And the skies are blue and clear;
When each country road seems calling,
  Then I know September's here!

When the earth is like a love-song,
  And the bees make melody;
When each vague wind holds the murmur
  Of a dream-enchanted sea;
When the orchards greet us, jewel-like,
  And the farthest hills seem near,
Then I can't help writing verses,
  For I know September's here!

Freedom as Interpreted in Free Russia

THE program of the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party, which is in complete control of the political government of republican Russia, is here quoted in full:

"1. Self-government by the people, viz., the concentration of all the supreme powers of government in the hands of a legislative assembly of one chamber made up of representatives of the people.

"2. The right of universal equal and direct balloting in the election of all members, whether in the supreme legislative chambers or in all local instruments of government by citizens and citizenesses who shall have attained their seventeenth year; the use of the secret ballot; the right of every elector to election in any representative assembly; a two-year life of parliament; salaries for national representatives.

"3. Broad local self-government; provincial self-government in localities in which special conditions of life and of population exist.

"4. Inviolability of person and of domicile.

"5. Unlimited freedom of conscience, speech, press, strikes and organization.

"6. Freedom of migration and of occupation.

"7. The abolition of [political] classes and the granting of full and equal rights for all citizens of either sex and of whatever creed, race and nationaltiy.

"8. The right of every part of the population to receive an education in its native tongue, provided at the expense of the state, with a full equipment of all the necessary instruments of self-government; the right of every citizen to express himself in his native tongue in all public assemblages; the introduction of the native language on an equality with that of the state in all local public and state institutions.

"9. The right of self-assertion for all nationalities that enter into the composition of the state.

"10. The right of every individual to bring legal proceedings against any local official.

"11. The election of judges.

"12. The abolition of the standing army and the establishment of an armed nation in its stead.

"13. Separation of church and state and of school and church.

"14. A free and compulsory general and vocational education for every child of either sex up to sixteen years; the supply, at the expense of the state, of food, clothing and text books to poor children.

"AS the foundation of the democratization of our state organization the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party demands the abolition of all indirect taxation and the establishment of a progressive tax on incomes and inheritances.

"For the development of the working class in physical and moral regeneration and also for the development of its abilities to wage war for liberation, the party demands:

"1. The limitation of the work day to eight hours in all wage-earning occupations.

"2. The establishment by law of a weekly rest period of twenty-four consecutive hours for all wage earners of either sex in every branch of our national industry.

"3. The rigid prohibition of overtime labor.

"4. The prohibition of night labor (from 9 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock in the morning) in every branch of our national industry, with the exception of those occupations where it is made obligatory by technical considerations, and in such cases only with the approval of the labor organizations involved.

"5. The prohibition of child labor during school age up to the sixteenth year, and the limitation of the working hours of minors (sixteen to eighteen years) to six hours a day.

"6. The prohibition of the labor of women in any branch of industry in which labor is injurious to women; the prohibition of women's labor for a period of four weeks before and six weeks after bearing a child, with the payment of the normal wage due for the entire period.

"7. The establishment in every industrial institution, factory or other enterprise where women work, of nurseries for nursing and other minor children; the liberation from work at three hour intervals and even less of every nursing woman for a period of half an hour.

"8. State insurance of workingmen against old age and partial or complete disability from a special fund to be derived from a tax on capitalists.

"9. Prohibition of the withholding of wages earned on whatever consideration and in whatever form, such as fines, deducting, etc.

"10. The appointment of a sufficient number of factory inspectors in every branch of national industry and the extension of factory inspection to every enterprise employing hired labor, not excluding public and domestic labor; the appointment of women inspectors in branches where women are employed; the participation of elected workmen and paid state representatives in the inspection of factories, and also in matters involving wage lists, the receipt and the rejection of material and the valuation of the output of labor.

"11. Inspection, by the officials of local self-governments, with the participation of elected workmen, of the sanitary condition of dwelling-places provided by employers, with a view to the internal arrangement and condition of those dwelling-places and the terms of their occupation, and also to prevent any interference of employers in the lives and activities of employees as private citizens and individuals.

"12. The establishment of a well-regulated sanitary inspection in all employments by means of sanitary and medical bodies entirely independent of the employer; free medical aid to workers at the expense of the employer, with support of the workman during the time of illness.

"13. The complete and supreme responsibility of employers for any violation of the law governing labor.

"14. The establishment in every branch of national industry of courts made up equally of representatives of labor and of employers.

"15. The obligation of the authorities for local self-government to establish offices for the engagement of local or of outside workers (chambers of commerce of labor) in every branch of industry, with the participation in their administration of representatives of the labor organizations.

"WITH a view to the abolition of the remnants of feudalism which are weighing heavily and directly upon the peasants, and in the interest of the free development of the struggle of the classes in the villages, the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party demands:

"1. The abolition of all class pressure upon the person and the property of the peasant.

"2. The abolition of all imposts and obligations imposed upon the peasant class and of all peasant obligations of a class character.

"3. The confiscation of church, monastery and state lands and their transfer to the local authorities in order that these lands together with forests and water of importance to the state, shall be surrendered to the control of the democratic state.

"4. The confiscation of privately owned lands, with the exception of the small holdings, which shall be placed at the disposal of democratically elected local officials, the minimum standard of exemption from seizure to be fixed by the superior local authorities of self-government.

"Indorsing fully the revolutionary demand of the peasantry for the confiscation of the landowners' properties, the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party always and uncompromisingly will oppose every attempt to halt the advance of economic development. Aiming with the victorious development of the revolution to transfer the confiscated lands to the control of the democratically constituted local authorities, the party, in the event of conditions being unfavorable to such a solution, will advocate the division of the land among the peasant tenants thereon, who are actually carrying on their cultivation or to whom they are essential by proximity.

"This party, under all circumstances of democratic agrarian reforms, imposes upon itself the problem of aiming unswervingly toward an independent class organization of the rural proletariat, will endeavor to impress upon it the irreconcilable opposition of the village bourgeoisie to the vital interests of the peasantry, and finally to demonstrate the absolute necessity of complete social reorganization as the only means of destroying every form of oppression and exploitation.

"Aiming at the attainment of its immediate purpose, the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party will support every oppositional and revolutionary movement against the policies of the dominant classes which run counter to the interest of the working class. It will resolutely reject any project of reform tending in any way to broaden or reestablish police and other official control over the toiling masses."

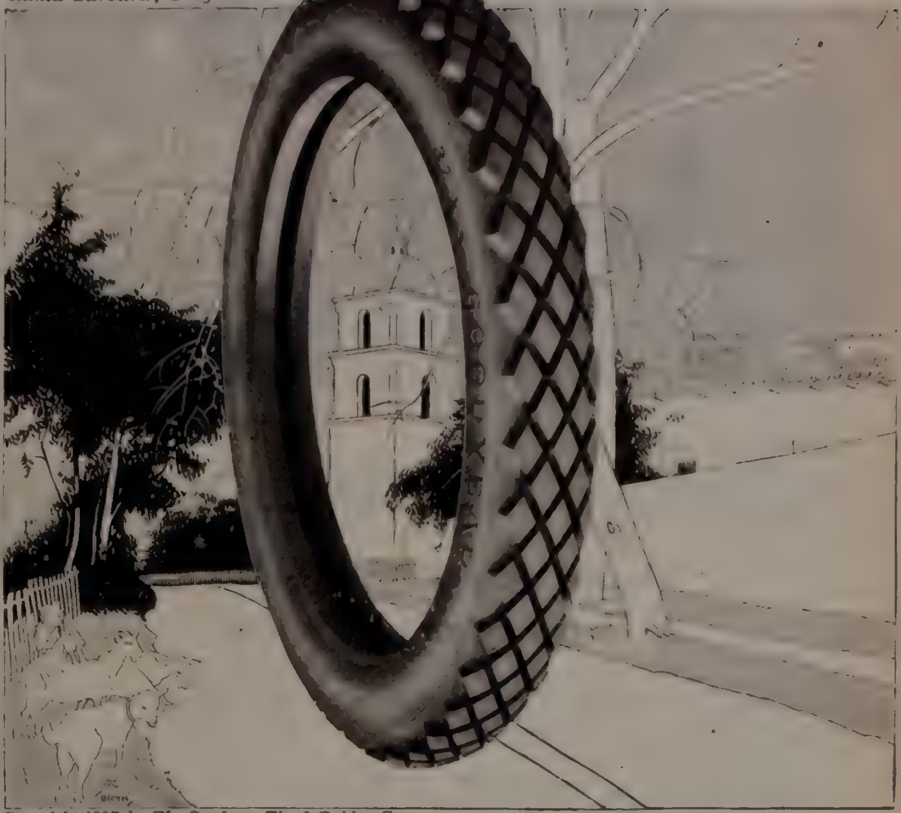
◆

Training Russian Missionaries

PASTOR WILLIAM FETLER is making good progress in his task of establishing a Russian Bible and Educational Institute in Philadelphia. His desire is to make it a training school on a sound Bible basis, teaching the full Gospel. Already more than one hundred young Russians have applied to be enrolled as students, both men and women. By training them, he expects to send a number of earnest evangelists and Bible teachers to work in New Russia.

Two centrally located buildings have been found in Philadelphia, in which one hundred and fifty men and women can be housed. An effort is now being made to raise funds for the work. A friend at Northfield, Mass., gave $5,000 without solicitation, Pastor Fetler regarding the gift as a direct answer to prayer.

The pastor has absolute confidence that the balance needed to complete the fund at the outset will be supplied by God's people, who have shown a warm interest in the project.



Santa Barbara Mission,
Santa Barbara, California

Copyright 1917, by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

It Will Pay You to Try Goodyears

Goodyear Tires command the preference of shrewd America by unusual value.

Throughout this country, the demand for them overtops that enjoyed by any other tire.

This fact is far more important as an indication of quality than it is as a statement of sales.

For no tire could have won this position of leadership except by demonstrated superiority.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that the tire which serves a plurality of American motorists better, also will serve you better?

Is it not reasonable to suppose that the tire which gives them greater mileage, more comfort and larger freedom from trouble, also will give you the same?

It will pay you to try Goodyear Tires. It will pay you from the moment you put them on your car.

In the case of innumerable thousands they have proved themselves the tires of saving and satisfaction.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

Quaker Oats Loom

Above Your Other Foods In Nutrition and Economy

Consider these facts — you who so keenly feel the rising cost of living.

The oat is a marvelous nutrient. It has twice the food value of round steak, and about five times the minerals. Measured by food units — calories—it is 2½ times greater than eggs.

Equal nutrition in the average mixed diet costs you four times as much. And in some common foods up to ten times as much. Even bread and milk costs twice as much for a half day's need.

Some foods have multiplied in cost. The finest oat food has advanced but little.

The oat has a wealth of flavor. It adds a delight to bread and muffins, to pancakes and cookies, etc. There was never a time when this premier grain food meant so much as now. And it also conserves wheat.

Quaker Oats

Extra Flavor Without Extra Price

You can make oat food often doubly welcome by using Quaker Oats. These flakes are made from queen grains only, from just the big, plump oats. All the little, starved grains are omitted. A bushel of choice oats yields but ten pounds of these luscious Quaker Oats. Yet this luxury grade costs you no extra price.

Among oat lovers all the world over this is the favorite brand. When you order oats see that you get it.

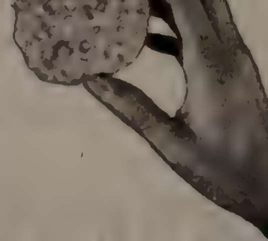
12c and 30c per package in United States and Canada, except in Far West and South where high freights may prohibit

Recipe for Quaker Sweetbits A Cookie Confection

1 cup Sugar, 1 tablespoon Butter, 2 Eggs, 2½ cups Quaker Oats, 2 teaspoons Baking Powder, 1 teaspoon Vanilla.

Cream butter and sugar. Add yolks of eggs. Add Quaker Oats, to which baking powder has been added, and add vanilla.

Beat whites of eggs stiff and add last. Drop on buttered tins with teaspoon, but very few on each tin, as they spread. Bake in slow oven. Makes about 65 cookies.



(1693)

President Rejects Pope's Peace Plea

SPEAKING apparently for all the nations allied against the Central Empires, President Wilson, in a note dated August 27, 1917, replied to the peace proposals of Pope Benedict, as follows:

EVERY heart that has not been blinded and hardened by this terrible war must be touched by this moving appeal of his Holiness the Pope, must feel the dignity and force of the humane and generous motives which prompted it, and must fervently wish that we might take the path of peace he so persuasively points out. But it would be folly to take it if it does not in fact lead to the goal he proposes. Our response must be based upon the stern facts, and upon nothing else. It is not a mere cessation of arms he desires; it is a stable and enduring peace. This agony must not be gone through with again, and it must be a matter of very sober judgment what will insure us against it.

His Holiness in substance proposes that we return to the status quo antebellum and that then there be a general condonation, disarmament, and a concert of nations based upon an acceptance of the principle of arbitration; that by a similar concert freedom of the seas be established; and that the territorial claims of France and Italy, the perplexing problems of the Balkan States, and the restitution of Poland be left to such conciliatory adjustments as may be possible in the new temper of such a peace, due regard being paid to the aspirations of the peoples whose political fortunes and affiliations will be involved.

It is manifest that no part of this program can be successfully carried out unless the restitution of the status quo ante furnishes a firm and satisfactory basis for it. The object of this war is to deliver the free peoples of the world from the menace and the actual power of a vast military establishment, controlled by an irresponsible Government, which, having secretly planned to dominate the world, proceeded to carry the plan out without regard either to the sacred obligations of treaty or the long-established practices and long-cherished principles of international action and honor; which chose its own time for the war; delivered its blow fiercely and suddenly; stopped at no barrier, either of law or of mercy; swept a whole continent within the tide of blood—not the blood of soldiers only, but the blood of innocent women and children also and of the helpless poor; and now stands balked, but not defeated, the enemy of four-fifths of the world.

This power is not the German people. It is the ruthless master of the German people. It is no business of ours how that great people came under its control or submitted with temporary zest to the domination of its purpose; but it is our business to see to it that the history of the rest of the world is no longer left to its handling.

TO deal with such a power by way of peace upon the plan proposed by his Holiness the Pope would, so far as we can see, involve a recuperation of its strength and a renewal of its policy; would make it necessary to create a permanent hostile combination of nations against the German people, who are its instruments; and would result in abandoning the new-born Russia to the intrigue, the manifold subtle interference, and the certain counter-revolution which would be attempted by all the malign influences to which the German Government has of late accustomed the world.

Can peace be based upon a restitution of its power or upon any word of honor it could pledge in a treaty of settlement and accommodation?

Responsible statesmen must now everywhere see, if they never saw before, that no peace can rest securely upon political or economic restrictions meant to benefit some nations and cripple or embarrass others, upon vindictive action of any sort, or any kind of revenge or deliberate injury. The American people have suffered intolerable wrongs at the hands of the Imperial German Government, but they desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have themselves suffered all things in this war, which they did not choose. They believe that peace should rest upon the rights of peoples, not the rights of Governments—the rights of peoples, great or small, weak or powerful—their equal right to freedom and security and self-government and to a participation upon fair terms in the economic opportunities of the world, the German people, of course, included, if they will accept equality and not seek domination.

The test, therefore, of every plan of peace is this: Is it based upon the faith of all the peoples involved, or merely upon the word of an ambitious and intriguing Government, on the one hand, and of a group of free peoples on the other? This is a test which goes to the root of the matter; and it is the test which must be applied.

THE purposes of the United States in this war are known to the whole world—to every people to whom the truth has been permitted to come. They do not need to be stated again. We seek no material advantage of any kind. We believe that the intolerable wrongs done in this war by the furious and brutal power of the Imperial German Government ought to be repaired, but not at the expense of the sovereignty of any people—rather a vindication of the sovereignty both of those that are weak and of those that are strong. Punitive damages, the dismemberment of empires, the establishment of selfish and exclusive economic leagues, we deem inexpedient, and in the end worse than futile, no proper basis for a peace of any kind, least of all for an enduring peace. That must be based upon justice and fairness and the common rights of mankind.

We cannot take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure unless explicitly supported by such conclusive evidence of the will and purpose of the German people themselves as the other peoples of the world would be justified in accepting. Without such guarantees treaties of settlement, agreements for disarmament, covenants to set up arbitration in the place of force, territorial adjustments, reconstitutions of small nations, if made with the German Government, no man, no nation, could now depend on.

We must await some new evidence of the purposes of the great peoples of the Central Powers. God grant it may be given soon and in a way to restore the confidence of all peoples everywhere in the faith of nations and the possibility of a covenanted peace.

◆

The Pageant of the Reformation

THE Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work has issued a prospectus descriptive of the historical pageant which is proposed for presentation in public halls or churches. The pageant is divided into five episodes, made up of different historic scenes. The first, representing the dawn of the Reformation in Germany, includes among the characters represented: Luther, Melanchthon, Spalatin, Emperor Charles V, Elector Frederick, Landgrave Philip of Hesse, Zwingli, and other important personages; also the townspeople of Wittenberg. No. 2 shows the Reformation in Geneva and lands beyond, and includes Calvin, William Farel, Catharine de Medici, Cardinal Guise, Theodore Beza and William of Orange. The third tableau is laid in England and includes Queen Elizabeth and her court, Cardinal Wolsey, etc. The fourth is in Scotland, and among the characters presented are Queen Mary, John Knox, Marquis of Argyle, reformers and ministers. The last is laid in America, and among the characters introduced are John Eliot, Myles Standish, Roger Williams, William Penn, Jonathan Edwards, John Hancock, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin and others. Address the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 928

for recruiting men "to destroy arms and munitions of the United States government." . . . Russian troops were reported to have put down revolts in a number of Finnish cities where the Finnish populace had seized foodstuffs and had set fire to the forests. The Finnish Diet is also reported as defying the Provisional government. . . . An incendiary fire on August 18 destroyed two-thirds of the Greek city of Salonica, the base port of the Entente in the Macedonian campaign. The principal business section of the city and much of the residence district was destroyed, and more than 50,000 people were made homeless. . . . Conscription in Canada threatened to disrupt the government and force an election. The premier of Quebec joined with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a demand that a referendum be taken on the Conscription Act before it was made effective.

NEGRO SOLDIERS RIOT. Seizing cartridges from company stores, 125 soldiers of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, U. S. A., a colored regiment, guarding construction work on Camp Logan, near Houston, Texas, on August 23, started for the city, shooting indiscriminately. Policemen, who sought to halt the soldiers, were attacked and driven back. Order was finally restored by Illinois National Guardsmen and Coast Artillery troops hurriedly despatched from Galveston, after Governor Ferguson had declared the city and its environs under martial law. Seventeen persons were killed, including the negro sergeant who led the rioters. As a result of this incident Southern Senators and Congressmen lodged strong protests with the War Department against the mobilizing in the South of negro troops except troops of the National Army assembled near their former homes.

ALLIED PURCHASING BOARD. Recognizing the disadvantage of competitive bidding by the United States and her Allies in American markets, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Lord Northcliffe, Ambassador Jusserand and Ambassador Boris Bakmetieff arranged for the appointment of an American Commission to make all war purchases for all the Governments in this country. The members of the commission are Bernard Baruch, Judge Robert S. Lovett and Robert S. Brookings.

SHIPS AND MORE SHIPS. In addition to 2,000,000 tons of shipping in course of construction in American yards the Shipping Board announced on August 24 plans for the building of 1,270 ships of 7,968,000 tons. The whole enterprise will involve about $2,000,000,000.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT IN GERMANY. Chancellor Michaelis from the beginning of his term has been taking the Reichstag Main Committee into his confidence on all matters of national import. On August 23 it was reported that the Chancellor had declared that he would take no action in regard to international relations without consulting the committee. While this is voluntary on his part, it is nevertheless a move in the direction of making the government responsible to the people. In addressing the committee on August 22, the Chancellor is reported to have gone rather deeply into the question of peace and the other questions related to it. He announced the addition of three enemies, Siam, Liberia and China, to Germany's already long list, and declared that these countries had no convincing reason for enmity against Germany, but had been influenced by the Entente and the United States. He also declared that Germany would bring them to account for damage done to German interests. Confirming the solidarity of Germany and her allies, and quoting Field Marshal von Hindenburg as saying that the military situation was more favorable than ever for Germany, the Chancellor referring again to his former statement as to the desire of France for German territory, he declared that on March 4, 1915, Russia had demanded that peace should bring her Constantinople with considerable portions of Thrace and the peninsula between the Black Sea and the Bosphorus, as well as the Armenian territory overrun by Russian troops, and that England and France had acquiesced in this demand, they dividing between themselves the rest of Asiatic Turkey. Palestine was to be internationalized. He also declared that when Italy entered the war she demanded her share of the booty and he said he expected that they would have further details of this agreement later. He concluded: "With such far-reaching enemy war aims, it may be understood why Mr. Balfour plainly stated he did not think it advisable to make a detailed statement on the war policy of the government. Those are the bottom facts as they appear to us at the present moment when we visage the possibility of concluding peace."

SWEETENING FOOD CONTROL. Negotiations between Mr. Hoover and representatives of the American beet sugar refiners resulted on August 25 in a price agreement which reduces the refiners' selling prices by 1½c a pound. Arrangements have also been made with wholesalers by which it is expected that the saving in prices will reach the consumer intact, which means $30,000,000 saved by January 1.

KERENSKY AT MOSCOW. The Russian National Conference which is to suggest a basis for the organization of the free Russian state met at Moscow at 3 p. m., August 26. It was opened by Premier Kerensky who, in an impassioned address, lasting an hour and a half, declared that the Provisional Government was prepared to tell the conference the whole truth. He warned them that the state was in mortal danger, but declared that any attempt at counter-revolution would be met with bayonets and put down with "blood and iron." He declared "the task incumbent upon you in the struggle against a powerful, implacable and organized enemy, demands great sacrifices, self-denial, deep love of country, and the forgetting of domestic quarrels." He promised a resort to "Czarism" if necessary, saying, "We shall be implacable because we are convinced that supreme power alone can assure the salvation of the country." He referred to the attempts to force Russia into a separate peace and referred to the Pope's appeal as "another attempt, equally base, against our allies." The delegates were reported to have cheered Kerensky's statement that Russia's allies had indignantly rejected the appeal.

CONSIDERING THE PEACE NOTE. At the time of this writing none of the nations concerned had as yet given an official reply to the peace proposal of Pope Benedict. On August 20, Boris Bakhmetieff, Russian ambassador at Washington, issued a statement to the effect that "the answer to the Pope's peace proposal has not yet been formulated by the Russian government. . . . It is considered in Russia that the very bases of the Vatican's proposals are inconsistent with the democratic aims of the Russian people in this war, and not acceptable from that point of view." The American State Department was reported as indicating that our government would not participate in any formal meeting of delegates of the Allies, although its course would be determined as a result of conference with the other nations at war with Germany. It was expected that the members of the Entente would make a joint response through the British government, but that the United States would send a separate reply. While the President's answer will be for the United States alone, Washington expects that it will sound the keynote of the Allied war aims. No authoritative news as to the attitude of the Teutonic Allies is yet available, although it was reported on August 26 that they would send separate replies. Dr. Michaelis, the German Imperial Chancellor, addressing the Reichstag Main Committee on August 21, is reported to have declared: "It has not yet been possible for Germany to agree with her allies concerning a joint reply." The Chancellor appeared in agreement with the Pope on the fundamental ideas advanced in his proposal. Fragmentary quotations from the German press indicated that Germany had no thought of arbitrating the question of Alsace-Lorraine. Austria is reported as willing to make peace upon terms similar to those outlined by the Pope. No evidence is available as to the attitude of Turkey. Bulgaria's premier was reported demanding for her the Dobrudja, and parts of Macedonia and Servia. The Italian opinion appears to be that the Pope's intervention was premature. All of the Allies, including the United States, are said to be in accord for the refusal of such a peace as the Pope proposed. It is felt in many quarters, however, that in forcing the nations to consider the question of peace, the Pope has brought the end of strife measurably nearer.

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE outstanding event of the week is the practically official announcement from Washington of the impending—complete economic and military collapse of Russia.

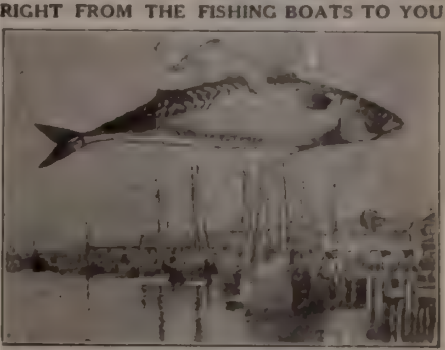
Later in the week came reports of stiffening Russian resistance, while the Italian attack from Tolmino to the sea began to crumple up the Austrian resistance, Monte Santo, the dominating height in the Isonzo line, falling to the Italians, who were pressing back the desperately fighting Austrians and threatening Trieste. On August 26 the Italians claimed the capture of 23,600 prisoners, 75 guns and vast quantities of Austrian supplies, while the Austrians claimed to have taken 8,000 Italians.

At the present time, while we do not know with any degree of exactness the situation in Russia, general reports are of such a character as to indicate that unless the seeming impossible is done very soon, Russia will be unable to continue in the war. This seeming impossibility is to insure to Russia not only an adequate and continuous supply of provisions and munitions of war, but also the almost complete renewal of her artillery (two-thirds of which has been lost) and of other weapons of war.

The Teutons, aware of Russia's predicament, opened in the last days of the week what appears to be the beginning of an offensive to the west of Riga, between the Tirul marshes and the River Aa, and, according to the bulletins from Petrograd, have already forced the Russian line to fall back a considerable distance.

On the Rumanian front, too, according to reports from Allied sources, the situation is a bad one, and it is not expected that the Russo-Rumanians will be able to resist the Teutonic pressure for more than a very few weeks more. Reports from Washington state that the offensives now going on in the western

Coninued on page 944



Salt Mackerel
CODFISH, FRESH LOBSTER
RIGHT FROM THE FISHING BOATS TO YOU

FAMILIES who are fond of FISH can be supplied DIRECT from GLOUCESTER, MASS., by the FRANK E. DAVIS COMPANY, with newly caught, KEEPABLE OCEAN FISH, choicer than any inland dealer could possibly furnish.

We sell ONLY TO THE CONSUMER DIRECT, sending by EXPRESS RIGHT TO YOUR HOME. We PREPAY express on all orders east of Kansas. Our fish are pure, appetizing and economical and we want YOU to try some, payment subject to your approval.

SALT MACKEREL, fat, meaty, juicy fish, are delicious for breakfast. They are freshly packed in brine and will not spoil on your hands.

CODFISH, as we salt it, is white, boneless and ready for instant use. It makes a substantial meal, a fine change from meat, at a much lower cost.

FRESH LOBSTER is the best thing known for salads. Right fresh from the water, our lobsters simply are boiled and packed in PARCHMENT-LINED CANS. They come to you as the purest and safest lobsters you can buy and the meat is as crisp and natural as if you took it from the shell yourself.

FRIED CLAMS is a relishable, hearty dish, that your whole family will enjoy. No other flavor is just like that of clams, whether fried or in a chowder.

FRESH MACKEREL, perfect for frying, SHRIMP to cream on toast, CRABMEAT for Newburg or deviled, SALMON ready to serve, SARDINES of all kinds, TUNNY for salad, SANDWICH FILLINGS and every good thing packed here or abroad you can get direct from us and keep right on your pantry shelf for regular or emergency use.

With every order we send BOOK OF RECIPES for preparing all our products. Write for it. Our list tells how each kind of fish is put up, with the delivered price, so you can choose just what you will enjoy most. Send the coupon for it now.

FRANK E. DAVIS CO.
208 Central Wharf
Gloucester Mass.

Frank E. Davis Co.
208 Central Wharf
Gloucester, Mass.

Please send me your latest Fish Price List.

Name ....
Street ....
City .... State..............

FREE! "So-Handy" Sewing Bag To Your LADIES AID
Thousands of Societies have earned big money with the "BUCK" line of utilities. Why not yours? We make the wire frames. You make the bags and the money. One complete 50c "So-Handy" Bag absolutely free to your society, with full particulars of 18 fast sellers, by return mail. Send 10c to pay postage and packing.
RACINE WIRE WORKS, Dept. C Racine, Wis.

Hemstitching only 5c per yd. on any material
I have been in business for eighteen years. I do Hemstitching, Pleating, Embroidery, Braiding, Scalloping, Stamping, etc., as it should be done to make clothes right up to date. I also cover buttons.
SEND FOR MY FREE BOOKLET
JACOB MANGE,
705 Washington Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Heat Your Home through One Register

Enjoy furnace comfort at lowest cost this winter. Get a Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace and be able to burn any kind of fuel. Feed but one fire—heat your entire home.

Write for Our New Catalog
and learn what you can save in fuel bills this winter. See how easily this simple and powerful heating outfit can be installed in your home. Read what owners say about it. Kalamazoo Pipe Furnace outfits where desired, heating plans FREE.

Quick Shipment, No Waiting
Our big stocks insure immediate filling of your order. We pay the freight and guarantee safe delivery. Cash or easy payments. Write today.
Ask for Catalog No. 927
Kalamazoo Stove Company, Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.
We manufacture Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

Replace Your Heating Plant NOW!

SAFEGUARD HEALTH
CUT FUEL EXPENSE

IF you are about to select a heating system for your new home—or if you intend to replace your present unsatisfactory heating plant with a modern, up-to-date system—Act Now! Write to-day for full information regarding the

ROUND OAK MOISTAIR Heating System

The Only Heating System That Automatically Ventilates and Humidifies

Floods the home with comfortable, ever-changing, warm, fresh air automatically humidified. Banishes the dangers of germ attacks on nose, throat and lung tissues broken down by breathing foul, dry-as-a-bone air. Gives plenty of heat upstairs and down, in every room, in any weather.

Saves Fuel by the Ton

Properly humidified air at 68° is more comfortable than dry air at 75°. This and other exclusive features listed in panel at the left insure an actual fuel-saving of one ton in every nine.
Easy to operate - requires least attention holds fire longest—burns all fuels—clean, durable, trouble-proof - preferable from every angle.
This system is a result of 46 years of experience, is built by the makers of the genuine Round Oak STOVE and enjoys the confidence of more than 60,000 enthusiastic users! Investigate!

Write Now for Valuable Book and Heating Plan—FREE

Handsome illustrated book describes modern plant. With book goes a blank, which enables you to get a scientific Heating Plan and cost estimate drawn by our expert Engineers to meet your needs. We also send name of nearest dealer selling and installing Round Oak Moistair Heating Systems. Many dealers sell on easy payments. To get the genuine, look for the trade-mark, which shows the Round Oak Indian.

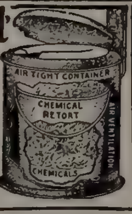
Established 1871

THE BECKWITH COMPANY
Round Oak Folks
110 Front Street Dowagiac, Mich.

Five Star Points of Round Oak Supremacy

*HEALTH Only Heating System that automatically ventilates and HUMIDIFIES.
*COMFORT Delivers pure, warm, ever-changing moist air, free from dust, gas, smoke—fitted with gas-tight doors and dampers.
*ECONOMY Longest fire travel all inside casing; improved hot blast RING; extra deep fire pot; extra large combustion chamber—perfect combustion; most heat on minimum of fuel.
*CONVENIENCE Simple regulator controls entire system. Self-cleaning. Seamless ash pit, has sprinkler—dust proof. Non-leak door frame cast on—not bolted. Easy to operate.
*DURABILITY Materials used stand highest physical tests. All hinge pieces DRILLED, not cast. Never a bolt where a rivet will do. Tight fittings guaranteed. GOOD FOR A GENERATION OF SERVICE.

Comfort Indoor Closet



Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Can be placed anywhere in home. A guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions.
SWAT FLY BREEDING PRIVY
Have city conveniences. Germ-life killed instantly by chemicals. Emptied once a month. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse. Write for literature.
Agents wanted—exclusive territory.
COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
549 Factories Bldg., TOLEDO, OHIO

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 72 Stewart Blk., Cincinnati, O.

HARRIS HOMES

When You Build "THE HARRIS WAY"
you build to stay, and secure the utmost possible in Quality, Economy and Service. Why? Simply because you profit directly—immediately—by our 24 years experience. You get the benefit of our practical knowledge as the originators of the "Direct to You" Home Building Industry. "THE HARRIS WAY" has exclusive merits—special advantages for the shrewd and careful Home Builder, possessed by no other plan or method. It is the best, safest and most sensible way to build your ideal home right without sacrifice of quality, or the waste of a single penny!

ADVANCE IN PRICES
Our prices are so low they are bound to advance. If you are needing a house either for investment or for a home, write now.

The Material used in building all Harris Homes is Sensibly "Cut-to-Fit" with absolute accuracy and positive elimination of all waste. You pay for nothing that you do not get—only for what is needed to do the work right "THE HARRIS WAY."

$10,000,000
Capital Stock and Surplus—stands back of our guarantee to every Harris Home Buyer—you cannot lose.

Free Book of Plans Write for the latest edition of the famous $10,000 HARRIS HOME PLAN BOOK now ready. Contains 100 modern Harris Home Designs, with descriptions, material, specifications, prices, etc., and explains how we save you $50.00 to $250.00 on plans and material.

$1042 Buys The Material To Build This Beautiful Home No. 161 — Best Quality Material Throughout — Best Construction — Sensibly Cut-To-Fit.

HARRIS BROTHERS CO., Dept. FM 202 CHICAGO

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S MACARONI
SKINNER MFG CO OMAHA, U.S.A.

Don't Let Them Breathe Germ-Laden Dust

Never scatter dust indoors. That's a relic of the dark ages of housekeeping. The modern, sanitary way is to use dustless dust-cloths—easily and cheaply made at home with

3-IN-ONE THE SANITARY DUSTING OIL

Just pour a little 3-in-One Oil on a piece of ordinary cheesecloth. Let stand until the 3-in-One permeates the cloth. Then wipe your piano, phonograph, furniture and woodwork. The cloth will pick up and hold every atom of dust. When through, shake it out of the window and—goodbye dust!
3-in-One is sold at all good stores—in 50c, 25c, and 1 oz. (Small Size) bottles; also in Handy Oil Can, 25c.
FREE Liberal sample of 3-in-One Oil and Dictionary of Uses—both sent free for the asking.
Three-in-One Oil Co. 165CW. Broadway, N. Y.

3 IN

The Fiery Furnace

International Sunday School Lesson for September 16
Dan. 3

A Story of Sublime Faith

By Rev. George D. Allison

THE third chapter of the book of Daniel is a masterpiece of dramatic narrative. The story it tells has captured the imagination of the world and given immortal fame to its heroes, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. If you are a teacher see to it that the impression made on your charges is worthy of the greatness of the lesson.

For every child of God will sooner or later come to the testing-place and have to pass through the searching fires. Those that try the spirit are not less to be dreaded than those that threaten the body only. The spirit of the martyrs, the courage of the Bible saints and heroes, are essential to the progress of Christian faith in the world today.

Popular in an Age of Persecution

In every age when it has cost something to confess the religion of the Bible, this story has been a source of strength. When flaming torches lighted the Roman forum and the hunted Christians took refuge in the Catacombs, then the story of the Fiery Furnace was read and reread by the Christian pastors and learned by heart by hundreds who could not read a letter. It was a favorite subject for paintings in those underground chambers.

Gone forever, let us hope, is the burning at the stake. But for most of us, the lesser furnaces of ridicule or unpopularity are hot enough to make us flinch and to require genuine consecration, that we may endure unscorched by the flames. They are Christian indeed upon whom the malignity of enemies leaves no taint of scorn or revenge.

The Call for Nonconformists

The world owes its moral and social progress to the nonconformists; that is, to those who refused to do what was being done by those around them. Our lesson reads like a mighty parable when you think of it—the enticing music, the golden image, the swaying multitude kneeling to do homage, and then those three prominent, well-known characters in their robes of office daring to stand out alone.

The force of public opinion singles them out, and the special order of the king gives them one more chance under threat; but now they are invincible, deliberate, steadfast. Why, this has been the spirit of the moral leaders in all ages! So have the dissenting Protestants in England continued their passive resistance to the state church. So did the anti-slavery men speak out against the sin of dealing in human lives.

The things that our youths must resist are insidious. The music again plays softly, "Everybody is doing it"; and before they realize what has happened, they have followed false ideals, sometimes have fatally compromised the principles they profess.

We must show them the moral grandeur of daring to be different, to stand out against popular sins and established iniquities.

The Reason Back of Ancient Persecutions

Our older scholars deserve to understand the reason back of national persecutions of long ago. Here we have a good example. Nebuchadnezzar is trying to unify his heterogeneous empire and uses the image of a national god as one of his means. Therefore the conduct of these young courtiers was practically regarded as treason. This was largely the case in ancient Rome. Under Nero and Domitian, the worship of the emperor was made a sort of test of loyalty. Since the Christians could not conscientiously conform, they were fiercely suppressed. In like manner the Chinese Boxers regarded the Christian Chinese as having gone over to the "foreign devils," and thousands of them were put to death for their faith in Jesus Christ.

No one stands up like a Daniel unless he has something that he considers worth the sacrifice. The trouble with the majority lies just here; they have no principles worth standing up for. Therefore they are swept to and fro with every popular fashion in religion and morals.

We must cultivate steadfast beliefs in the days of calm and preparation, or in the time of testing we shall weakly succumb. We shall have nothing to stand on! It takes courage to brave the fury of the world's potentates, but courage comes with heart-allegiance. Remember Paul's brave words before King Agrippa—no mere flaunting of his own will against another's, but the kindly, firm statement of a mighty dedication to a cause. And that cause worthy of the noblest and the best that the world could furnish.

Such consecration makes any other course of action unthinkable. With Luther, every man of true principle exclaims: "Here I stand; I can do no otherwise; God help me!"

Indifference to Consequences

"We are not careful [anxious] to answer thee in this matter." There was no disrespect in their voices nor manner. What they meant was that they saw clearly things had come to a vital issue, and they were determined to obey conscience regardless of the consequences. It is the spirit of Athanasius, who was told that the world was against him. "Then it is Athanasius against the world," responded the old hero.

We are so apt to be intimidated by what may happen! What will people think if we show friendship for this poor, unfortunate young woman? What will the crowd say if the young fellow in college stands out against drinking or gambling? "Will it hurt my business if I refuse to sell beer in my grocery store?" asked an acquaintance of mine. What does it matter whether it hurts your business or not, if it is morally wrong and you know it? What's the use of having principles, if you never use them for fear of consequences?

But If Not

These three negatives make a glorious phrase. The three Hebrews believed God could save if he would. They did not know his plans. They recked not consequences. He is able and can deliver; "but if not," then, nevertheless, they will do right!

Well, I believe that Christian principles will make business success. But if not, I trust that you will choose business failure and financial loss to moral failure and spiritual loss. It is better to be poor and loyal than rich and a compromiser with iniquity.

It seems to be fairly certain nowadays that Christian standards of life and character will make a man or woman popular and socially desirable. But if not, then it is better to suffer ostracism with the people of God, than to have the social world at your feet and be living a lie.

Surely, Christians can enjoy a plentiful share of pleasure and amusement. They can conscientiously take part in most of the good times that are offered. But if not, they have a solemn duty to protest against what they see to be wrong or unwholesome.

"But if not" is the message of the Christian soldier. He hopes to come through the battle unscathed. Whether it be from the trenches of France and Belgium, or the moral battleground of camp and field, he believes that God is able to keep that which is committed unto him. But if he must die in action, he is ready. If he must be misunderstood and misjudged, he is ready also. The first thing the narrative teaches is to be true. Incidentally, it holds out the hope of deliverance also.

Not All Are Delivered

The Jewish readers of Daniel used to be cautioned that not all of God's servants are delivered. Indeed, it would

Button Game
for 2 Cents

Send for this fascinating Chalmers Button Game complete with six Chalmers Pearl Buttons to play it with. Chalmers Pearls are made by the world's largest manufacturers of pearl buttons. Color-perfect, strong centers, smooth holes. Quality "A," 5c to 10c a card. Quality "B," less.

Dealers everywhere. Send 2c and your dealer's name for this Chalmers Button Game.

For five empty cards and 5c, we will send you this handsome Solid Silver Thimble Free, any size.

Harvey Chalmers & Son
Amsterdam, New York
We Make 7000 Buttons a Minute.

Chalmers Pearls

Four Weeks' Trial

Choice of 38 Styles of the Superb

Wing

Yes, we will ship you on four weeks' absolutely free trial, all charges prepaid, direct from our own factory, any highest-grade Wing Piano, or Player Piano.

One of 38 Styles

No Money Down Nothing on arrival; no freight either way; no deposit.

Use it and enjoy it four full weeks; then, if you wish, ship it back at our expense. You alone are the judge. You will be amazed at our rock-bottom direct price on the Wing, guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash.

Valuable Book—FREE "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos" sent free and postpaid. Valuable 140-page book. Tells how to judge pianos. Beautiful catalog of new art styles also sent and particulars of great Free Shipment Offer. Write today—now.

Wing & Son (Est. 1868), 9th Ave. & 13th St., Dept. 2496 New York

Let Me Quote You a Special Price On My Rapid Fireless Cooker

Cook every meal on it. If you are not satisfied and delighted I will refund every cent. Get my direct to you. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Full set of famous "Wear Ever" aluminum cooking utensils comes with it. Ask for free book of valuable recipes.

Special Low Factory Price

William Campbell Co.
Dept. 2, Detroit, Mich.

Keeps Skin Smooth, Firm, Fresh Youthful Looking

To dispel the tell-tale lines of age, illness or worry — to overcome flabbiness and improve facial contour — there is nothing quite so good as plain

Powdered SAXOLITE

Effective for wrinkles, crowsfeet, enlarged pores, etc., because it "tightens" and tones the skin and underlying tissue. No harm to tenderest skin. Get an ounce package, follow the simple directions—see what just one application will do. Sold at all drug stores.

LEPAGE'S GLUE HANDY TUBES
MEND IT TODAY 10¢

$4.50 Offer

$4.50 down brings brand new Rex (10 years' guarantee) built because world's greatest merchandise house wanted a better machine. Sent on trial. Typewriter prices smashed. Write for free book and startling offer.
Rex Typewriter Co., Dept 2496 LeMoyne Bldg., Chicago

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 63 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

be flying in the face of all the facts, if this instance were held to be typical of the lot of all faithful witnesses. These men were saved from death and honored by their persecutors, but countless others have paid the last full measure of devotion.

Do not forget those for whom it was written: "They were tortured, not accepting their deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection."

The Unseen Friend

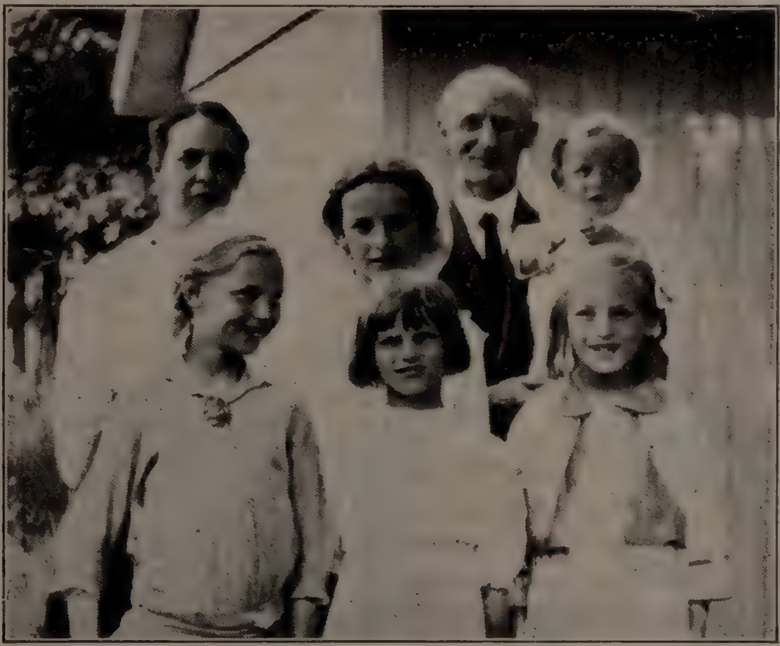
It was Nebuchadnezzar who discerned a fourth Figure in the fiery furnace. The Authorized Version is incorrect in translating "like unto the Son of God," for Nebuchadnezzar knew nothing of this term with the meaning it has for us. He said "a son of the gods." But the meaning is, after all, the same. There was a divine Being who went through the fire with them.

Herein is our comfort also. No matter how hot the temptation, how dire the need, we have the Great Companion ever at hand. Let us not forget him nor lose this consolation. Only the eyes of faith (or of aroused conscience like the king's) can see him.

Neither the waters of tribulation nor the fierce blaze of the world's temptations can harm a soul that relies upon the living Christ.

Missionary Workers Lost at Sea

MISSIONARY circles in America have been deeply saddened by the tragic fate that befell a number of well-known missionary workers on the occasion of the sinking of the British steamer City of Athens near Cape Town on the night of August 10. The vessel, which sailed from New York July 12 for South Africa and India, struck a floating mine in the darkness. She carried ninety-seven passengers, fifteen of whom perished together with four of the crew. The majority of the passengers were bound for Africa and India.



Seven of the eight Duckworths who perished on the City of Athens. Front row, Rosalyn, Martha and Edith, center, Ethel, in the rear Mrs. Duckworth and James S. in his father's arms

There was a large party of missionaries on board, including representatives of the Methodists, Swedish Lutherans, Christian and Missionary Alliance, Africa Inland Mission, and Plymouth Brethren. According to the latest accounts of the disaster, fifteen of the missionary passengers and four members of the crew were lost. Among the passengers were thirty-one women and twenty-two children under twelve. There were no tourists. The fate of several of the children is still in doubt.

Among those known to have been lost on the City of Athens are Mr. Sumner, Mr. and Mrs. Nygaard, Miss Helen E. Robinson, Caroline Thompson, Rev. Arthur Duckworth, his wife and six children. Miss Robinson was the daughter of Bishop John C. Robinson of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. She had served in that field since 1902 and was returning to her post.

AMONG the missionary workers saved were nineteen members of the Africa Inland Mission: Mr. and Mrs. Sommer of Meadows, Ill.; Anderson C. Richey of Chicago; James H. Pritchett of West Chester, Pa.; David Lovas, Astoria, S. D.; X. F. Braaten, Minneapolis; an Australian named Denham and his wife and two children; Mr. —— Smith; Rev. J. D. Pointer, Methodist, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Denham and two children; Miss Bushfield, and three Christian Alliance missionaries. The Rev. John Nygaard, who was lost together with his bride of three months, was a pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran Church in Minneapolis. With Miss Caroline Thompson of the same denomination, they were on their way to Madagascar as Lutheran missionaries.

Perhaps the heaviest blow inflicted was the complete wiping out of the Duckworth family. Mrs. Duckworth was the daughter of Rev. James Scoville, pastor of the Baptist Church at Blue Point, N. Y. She went to India about twenty years ago, under the Christian and Missionary Alliance, and did excellent work. Rev. Arthur Duckworth, a Congregational minister, married Miss Scoville in Bombay in 1902. He was a nephew of Sir James Duckworth, a member of the British Parliament and one of the leading Methodists in England. The children who perished were Ethel, Rosalyn, Edith, Martha, James and baby Violet.

THE Rev. A. B. Simpson, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, writes to the Christian Herald a beautiful tribute to the members of that organization who passed so suddenly out of life. He states that Mr. and Mrs. Duckworth were both most faithful missionaries, and Mr. Duckworth was a successful evangelist and both were greatly used in gathering out from pagan India a people for His name.

"What a comfort it is that we do not have to explain God's providence! While it seems most mysterious that these beloved missionaries should be called from the most important work of the Christian Church in the hour of their ripest maturity and usefulness, yet we cannot but believe that the last chapter of their lives will be as fruitful for the glory of Christ as the score of years which they have spent in active and successful evangelization. There is something touching and beautiful in the fact that while they were lovely and pleasant in their lives, in their deaths they were not divided.

"Another company has joined the two hundred translated missionaries of the Christian and Missionary Alliance."

Cheering Up Your House Guests

Most of us try to see that our guest rooms are just a little bit more perfect than the rest of our rooms—and especially that they offer more little comforts than the guest sometimes has at home. Many an innovation has started that way.

Just now, the one thing no guest room should be without is Mennen's Borated Talcum. And there—on the shaving stand—don't forget Mennen's "Talcum for Men." It's neutral in tone; because men who have learned the comfort of talcum powder after shaving, are fussy about the pallor that comes with the use of white talcums.

Yes—Mennen's helps to send your guests away making the right kind of comment.

Some clever housekeepers have two or three tints (Cream and Flesh) as well as White. And Violet as well as Borated. The variety, of course, costs no more in the long run, and it does add a touch of completeness. Besides—you're sure of suiting your guest's taste in perfume as in color.

It's amazing how cheerful you'll find a house full of people who have had a rub with Mennen's after the bath.

Comfort does more for cheeriness than any other one thing. And Mennen's means comfort.

It has been making the delicate skin of babies comfortable for nearly forty years. Why should you deny yourself today what your mother didn't deny you—and you wouldn't deny your child?

Use Mennen's generously.

William Gerhard Mennen

MENNEN'S
BORATED TALCUM

TRADEMARK

MENNENS
BORATED

Now in the new large-size economical can

MENNEN'S TALCUMS—all with the original borated formula that has never been bettered—include a variety to satisfy every need; Borated, Violet, Sen Yang with a delicate Oriental perfume; Flesh Tint and Cream Tint, each charmingly perfumed; and the new Talcum for Men, a boon after shaving, with a neutral color that leaves the face free from the pallor of a pure white powder. Send 5 cents for a trial can of any one brand, or 25 cents for any five.

GERHARD MENNEN CHEMICAL CO.

Laboratories
929 Orange Street, Newark, New Jersey
Canadian Factory, Montreal, Quebec
Sales Agents for Canada:
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

How to Eat Yourself Well

By R. H. SINCLAIR

WHEN I was a boy we used to say that we "ate ourselves sick" on something we liked.

But I have lived to hear men say, "I ate myself well."

I have lived to see a woman who, though she almost starved herself, was so overburdened with flesh that she actually could not lace her own shoes, become trim and—I was about to say slender, but I can't go that far—no, let me say comfortable—trim and comfortable, and able to dance and swim and walk distances like a girl, ALL BY EATING!

And, I haven't seen, but have seen an authenticated letter from a man who was rejected by a life insurance company because he was twenty pounds under weight, and suffering from chronic constipation, and who by following the same system of eating gained twenty-six pounds, lost his constipation, and was accepted for his life insurance!

By eating! By eating ordinary, everyday things—not patented or fad foods, but the good things we all like.

I have been shown cases of indigestion corrected by eating; nervousness corrected by eating; periodic sick headaches corrected by eating; insomnia corrected by eating; why, bless my soul, I have been shown such good results from eating as I would never have believed had my own brother told me of them, if the incontrovertible evidence hadn't been there!

Do you wonder that I call eating "the master science of them all"?

For these results do come from making eating a science.

Of course you think that making eating a science must be a bore. I thought so too. I like my food. And when I was assigned to study "the science of eating" I had visions of losing all the dearly-loved pleasures of a good appetite and a nice taste. But far from it—I have found that the science of eating not only makes eating more of a joy afterwards by eliminating the discomforts that most of us good eaters must confess to, but it makes eating itself more of a joy than I ever realized before!

It is like playing a scientific game of golf. Until we really get some good instruction all of us like to think it's more fun to play "a natural game." But not one of us but later admits we never really knew the joy of golfing until we learned "form."

And so it is with eating.

You see, the science of eating, as Eugene Christian has perfected it, is fundamentally the science of selection and combination.

You know how nicely certain things go together on the palate. Well, this man Christian has found what things go nicely together on both palate and digestion—and what things don't. Some foods, he has found, when eaten together explode in the stomach—explode just as gasoline does when mixed with air. Other combinations simply stiffen into a leather as you have seen flour do when added to hot gravy, and glut up the whole digestive organism until they can be got rid of. Others develop gases that expand and expand like a balloon—so much sometimes that the frame is pressed up against the heart. Ninety per cent of all inorganic troubles really come from eating wrongly. Just think of it, ninety per cent!

Christian has analyzed the primary food-elements in all kinds of food and thus learned how to associate them so you can plan or order a whole meal of things that are not only good in themselves and good in combination from the point of taste, but are good in combination when the stomach mixes them up.

That is why every one of the more than 100,000 men and women who have followed Eugene Christian's method say they now enjoy eating as they never did before.

But Christian has done more than that. He has worked out the special combinations that help to overcome the results of bad eating—indigestion, constipation, emaciation, obesity, nervousness, and so on. He has discovered what combinations are best for various kinds of climate, for people in various occupations, of various ages and states of health. He has found what combinations keep you cool as a cucumber in hot weather, and what ones keep you warm and sturdy in the winter.

And the amazing thing is that all his rules work—he has shown me case after case to prove every law.

And it is all so simple. Christian used to advise and prescribe only in person. But as his science has been perfected he has put it all down in a series of lessons—little pamphlets in plain, non-scientific language that any one can understand, and so clear and complete that it seems to me after having read them I know all that Christian knows—anyway I know how to eat better than I ever knew it before, how to enjoy my eating better, and how it feels to have a digestion like a boy's, once more.

And I know something else—I know where most of us have been "fall guys," as we say around the newspaper offices, in buying food. Mr. Christian has shown me foods that cost an average of 30 cents a pound at the market, that are really 70% water! Yes, sir, plain every-day water! He has shown me how I can buy the same food elements in their natural and much fresher and more appetizing form for six or eight cents and draw better water out of my own hydrant!

In these days of food conservation you don't catch me paying 21 cents a pound for water any more!

And every page of his twenty-four little lessons in eating is full of just such wisdom. I don't know of any better way to help along the cause of food regulation than to follow those lessons—especially for those of us who have been eating wrong and know that we have, by the miserable time we are having.

These lessons contain actual menus for breakfast, luncheon and dinner, covering all conditions of health and sickness, from infancy to old age, for all occupations, climates, and seasons. They include corrective menus for stomach acidity, fermentation, constipation, and the host of diseases which follow when these "warnings" are neglected. They also tell you how to select and combine your food at meals in order to reach your normal weight, whether it be under or over what you now weigh.

With these lessons at hand it is just as though you were in personal contact with the great food-specialist, every point is so thoroughly covered and clearly explained. You can start eating the very things that will remove the causes of your disease the day you receive the lessons, and it is quite possible you will secure some results from the very first meal.

If you would like to examine these 24 Little Lessons in Corrective Eating simply write the Corrective Eating Society, Inc., Dept. 349, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City. It is not necessary to enclose any money with your request. Merely ask them to send the lessons on five days' trial with the understanding that you will either remit $3, the small fee asked, or return them.

Merely tear out and mail this form instead of writing a letter. It is a copy of the official blank adopted by the Society, and will be honored at once. Advertisement

- -

CORRECTIVE EATING SOCIETY, Inc., Dept. 349, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City

You may mail me the 24 Lessons in Corrective Eating. 5 days after I receive them, I will either send you $3.00 (full payment) or remail them to you.

Name.. Address..

Progress of the War

Continued from page 941

and Austro-Italian fronts have been undertaken prematurely, and, according to one report, recklessly, largely in the hope of forcing a relaxation of the Teutonic pressure on Russia.

All of this has a very important meaning to Americans. If Russia vanishes as a factor in the war, it is not 2,000,000 men the United States may have to raise, instruct, equip and transport to France, but three times that number.

THE usual weekly report of the operations of the submarines issued by the British government came to hand August 22. While slightly larger in its totals than that of last week, the increase is so small that it is practically the same—fifteen large vessels and three small vessels fell victims.

On the western front, after a bombardment of the German lines lasting over three days, the French delivered an attack on both the east and west fronts of Verdun. This attack began at 4:30 in the morning of August 20, when the French infantry began an assault on a front which extended all the way from Avocourt Wood on the western end of the western sector of the Verdun front to beyond Vaux on the eastern extremity of the eastern sector, a distance of about twelve miles.

The Germans had been forced by the intensity of the artillery bombardment to abandon their first line trenches; but the French, after seizing and turning these trenches, rushed on impetuously and captured several lines of German trenches, at some places driving forward as much as a mile and a quarter. On the western half the French possessed themselves completely of Avocourt Wood, the southern and western slopes of Dead Man's Hill, including the two summits, the Corbeaux Wood to the east of this hill, and the ruins which once were called Cumières, still farther to the east and on the west bank of the Meuse. On the eastern half of the front the French captured Champneuville, near the east bank of the Meuse, the Talou Ridge, Hill 344, northeast of Champneuville, the Mormont farm, still farther northeast, and Hill 240, directly east of Mormont farm, and north of Louvemont. Farther east they also made progress in the woods of Fosses and of Chaume. Fighting continued all Monday night and all day Tuesday, but beyond capturing Regneville on the west side of the Meuse, and Samogneux, directly across the river, the French did not add materially to the ground gained on the first day.

In this battle, the French report the taking of about 6,000 prisoners. All told, the French have now recovered about half of the ground captured from them in the German offensive of the spring of 1916.

On Auguft 24 the French attacked again west of the Meuse, taking Hill 304, the last important height in German hands and forcing their lines some distance north of this position and of Dead Man's Hill between Haucourt and Bethincourt.

THE British portion of the front was quite animated, and battles were incessant around Lens and in the Ypres sector, on the road from that town to Menin. The fighting around Lens has been particularly hard all the week, climaxing in one day's hand-to-hand struggle between the Canadians and the Germans, which is stated by observers to have been the most desperate fighting during the week.

In the Ypres sector, the British after stiff fighting captured Langemarcke, and held their ground though subjected to repeated and strong counter-attacks. This capture was made in the course of an offensive on a front of nine miles. The British took about 2,700 prisoners and some artillery. On August 21 the British made two stabs, both rather vicious, and netted gains in each. The first was along a mile front on the road leading from Ypres to Menin, and the second was a little further north. In both cases the Germans put up a determined resistance and the British characterize the fighting as being of a most desperate nature.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

For Children Also

See What It Will Do For You

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache and nervousness. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 RASH BUILDING, SALINA, KANSAS

How to Put on Flesh

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—fill out your neck, chest, etc.

I KNOW I can because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds.

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and oh, I feel so well and SO rested!"

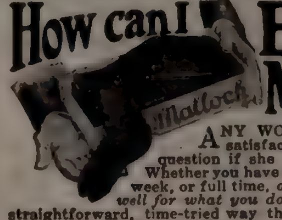
I can help you attain your proper weight. In your room. Without drugs. By scientific, natural methods, such as your physician approves.

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

Tell me your faults of health or figure.

I respect your confidence and I will send you my booklet, free, showing you how to stand and walk correctly.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept 18, 624 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago



How can I Earn Money?

ANY WOMAN will receive a satisfactory answer to this question if she will just write to us. Whether you have only an hour or two a week, or full time, our plan will pay you well for what you do. Ours is an honest, straightforward, time-tried way that has increased the cash earnings of thousands of women. You ask no favors of anybody. If you will only try, we will help you to make money taking orders for and underwear—at mill-to-wearer prices. Our line is complete and includes a variety of fabrics, weights, styles, colors, grades. Your customers buy from you precisely the goods they desire and need at prices they are pleased to pay. Satisfaction guaranteed. No experience necessary. Our "Money Back" outfit, FREE fabric samples and "Guide to Success" will start you toward a pleasant, permanent business of your own. We pay all express. Prompt deliveries. Write for details.

Malloch-Knit Hose

Guarantee Six Months

Malloch Knitting Mills, 779 Grant St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Now is the Time to Use

CONCRETE

War Bulletin No. 2, of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, says:

> "Iron and steel should be used only when the requirement is unavoidable. Every effort should be made to use wood and concrete in place of steel whenever this can be done, and construction and development work requiring steel should be postponed wherever possible . . . . cement may be had in quantity for concrete work."

Says Cass Gilbert, the New York architect:

> "There are hundreds of buildings erected in this country every year which could be just as well erected without steel, and in hundreds of others the amount of steel could be greatly reduced. An enormous tonnage could be saved if reinforced concrete, masonry or other material were used. Practically all buildings of moderate height can be erected without the use of large quantities of structural steel. Reinforced concrete or old-fashioned masonry can take its place."

Under present conditions concrete is particularly desirable. All the materials—portland cement, sand, pebbles or crushed stone—are staple products, most of them obtainable near by. Concrete is made with ordinary labor under skilled supervision. Concrete contractors have developed rapid and efficient methods of construction. There are many engineers, architects and contractors who specialize in concrete construction. If necessary we can help you get in touch with them.

CONSIDER THE ADVANTAGES OF CONCRETE—

Fireproof	Verminproof	Rigid
Watertight	Sanitary	Rapidly Built
Durable	Weatherproof	No Repairs—No Painting

Concrete is used today more generally than ever before. The smallest job on the farm and the largest engineering works are built of concrete. Use concrete to build that factory, foundry, shop, warehouse, bridge, tank or reservoir for storing liquids, coal pocket, ore bin, grain elevator, garage—any building you are planning.

Let us send you an interesting pamphlet entitled, "Why Build Fireproof?"

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION

Offices at

ATLANTA
CHICAGO
DALLAS
DENVER
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
MILWAUKEE
NEW YORK
PITTSBURGH
SALT LAKE CITY
SAN FRANCISCO
SEATTLE
WASHINGTON, D. C.

CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SOLDIERS and SAILORS FUND

For Supplying

Testaments and Christian Heralds to Our Boys at the Front

WE desire that our brave soldiers and sailors who have proved themselves so courageous and steadfast in their country's cause, should, every man of them, be provided with a copy of a Christian Herald Testament, that they might wear it next to their heart to comfort, guide and cheer. Every boy who receives one of these Testaments will carry it about with him wherever he goes—in the camp, in the hospital and in the field.

An opportunity is now afforded for all who desire to become actively interested in supplying these Testaments to do so.

A copy of God's Word in the pocket of every man in the army and navy has proved to be the surest and most direct way to reach the hearts and consciences of the men.

The Christian Herald, which distributed large editions of the New Testament in the Spanish-American War, invites the cordial co-operation of its readers in a similar work now. Every dollar received for the purpose will go toward supplying New Testaments to the men in our American military camps. We urge this Gospel campaign strongly and invite all to have a personal share in it. There is surely no more gracious way of helping our soldier boys to clean, upright, honorable lives than to have the Testament with them, in coat-pocket or kit, whether they stay on American soil or go over seas. In many a lonely hour they will find in it the solace, strength and consolation that come direct from Him "who hath the words of eternal life."

These little volumes will become precious as souvenirs and as kindly remembrances of the friends who thought of the soldiers' spiritual welfare.

The Testaments which the Christian Herald will send to the Soldiers and Sailors will be of a special size to fit easily in the pocket, and will be strongly bound, to withstand hard wear. It will cost 35 cents to make and mail each Testament. A dollar will furnish Testaments for 3 soldiers. If desired we will insert an inscription in every Testament giving the name and address of the donor. We will also enclose a post card whereby it will be possible for the soldier or sailor receiving the Testament to acknowledge its receipt direct to the donor.

You Can Also Help to Send the Christian Herald Every Week Direct to the Soldiers and Sailors

The American boys at the permanent training camp near the French front have expressed their hunger for fresh newspapers and magazines from home. The question was put up to the American Commander in Chief.

> "I thoroughly approve of the plan of sending plenty of newspapers and magazines to the soldiers," General Pershing said. "The idea is excellent. The boys here need any amount of good, wholesome reading matter from the folks at home. But one thing must be understood; the officers do not want and the men do not appreciate old papers—old printing. The literature sent to France must be current—that is, new magazines and leading newspapers despatched as soon as possible after publication."

Postmaster General Burleson has announced that magazines which have been read can be remailed to the soldiers and sailors by placing stamps on the cover, and giving them to any postal employee. When a sufficient quantity have accumulated these magazines will be shipped abroad and distributed among our soldiers and sailors. But General Pershing says: "These young Americans, massing behind the firing line, have already called attention to the need for up-to-date literature."

For this purpose we are going to organize a Soldiers and Sailors Fund. Every penny received for this fund will be used for supplying Christian Heralds direct to our soldiers and sailors wherever they may be in addition to Testaments.

First Copies Off Press Will Go to Soldiers and Sailors

General Pershing says: "Our boys will not read old magazines, but must have up-to-date issues—current numbers." The Christian Herald will arrange to send the very first copies off the press to soldiers and sailors, which will insure their getting them without delay.

Send any sum you can spare. All contributions will be placed in the fund and the amount used to put as many names of soldiers and sailors on our mailing list as possible.

Address all remittances to the Soldiers and Sailors Fund

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for September 16

The Christian's Power

Christian Endeavor Topic. Acts 1 : 1–8

OUR great-grandfathers tamed the wind and the falling water; our grandfathers chained the power of steam; in our father's day the lightning was harnessed to the tasks of men. Yet while all these are potent, there is a still greater power, the power of God working through his Spirit. This power is the Christian's power. Throughout the ages true hearts, willing hands, and consecrated souls have been used by the Spirit of God to carry the Word into the wilderness and over seas, to overturn nations, to develop liberty, and to combat greed and lust, injustice, and all the host of ills that flow from evil hearts of wicked men.

As in every other power, this power operates along definite lines and according to proven rules. Contact is made through prayer. The power flows only into that heart which is emptied of self and into that soul which seeks only service in His name. The power once given remains only while the purposes are pure. The least entrance of self-righteousness or self-pride or self-serving breaks the contact and leaves the Christian powerless.

Young People's Day

B. Y. P. U. Topic

(Send for material to 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.)

League Study Courses

Epworth League Topic. Isa. 34 : 16; 35 : 5; 40 : 29–31; II Tim. 4 : 13; 3 : 17

A MOST important element of Young People's Society activity lies in the Bible and Mission study classes organized by thousands throughout the land during the fall and winter months. Young life requires objectives. Bible and Mission study furnish these. They take the student outside his own circles and give meaning to devotion and a purpose to service. Often the student finds in the study the answer to that insistent question which every one must answer before the age of twenty-five: "What shall I do with my life?"

The Board of Foreign Missions, through Ralph E. Diffendorfer, educational secretary, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City, is prepared to furnish outlines of a new course on home mission study which is intended to help Americans to understand the Italian. Several books are offered and the whole course is planned to bring the native American and the son of Italy into that accord in Christian faith and mutual understanding which is necessary if each is to reach his best as a citizen of the American republic. The Home Missions Council, representing all the home mission boards of the United States, has asked the churches to set aside the week of November 18–25 in which to emphasize outstanding home mission needs and opportunities. They are placing particular emphasis on the Italian situation, and this study course will therefore prepare those young people who follow it, to take an intelligent part in the celebration of Home Missions Week.

◆

High Tribute to a Great Book

ONE of the ripest scholars and ablest theologians in America has paid voluntary tribute to the biographical and historical value of Boehmer's Life of Luther (issued by the Christian Herald), which is so remarkable that we feel justified in giving it for the information of those who may be interested in knowing how one eminent scholar estimates the work of another:

"900 Madison Avenue, New York.

"Editor Christian Herald:

"I have just finished reading Professor Boehmer's 'Luther.' For studious and multifarious research into original documents, for acute psychological insight, and for unbiased, well-balanced judgment, I regard it without a rival. After reading it I feel that I know the true, real, 'whole' Luther, as I never did before. JUNIUS B. REMENSNYDER."

Do You Need More Money?

To help your husband—to help your children—to help yourself? We can show you an easy way that is dignified honorable and profitable.

The happy, contented women shown above are all free from worry and with money coming in. Each of them has found d, with our help, a growing and prosperous business and every year sees each of them making more money. And these cases are by no means exceptional, for

In More Than 13,000 Cases We Have Helped ambitious, deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No previous experience is necessary—we show you how to make money in an easy, congenial and profitable way. We sell direct from the mill to the home through our local representatives, and our lines of hosiery and underwear for men, women and children are famous the world over.

Write today for our free catalog
It tells the whole story

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
Dept. 117 BAY CITY, MICH.
We have been in business here for more than 22 years

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

FOR SALE

at low price and on easy terms, a

$5,000 Pipe Organ

used for about one year for exhibition purposes.

Write us for picture and specifications.

Hook & Hastings Company
Main Office and Works
Kendal Green, Mass.

GORDON
A RELIGIOUS COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

National, Evangelical, Interdenominational, Vocational, Cultural. New fireproof building, with dormitories in Boston's finest educational district. Catalog. Address Dean NATHAN R. WOOD, GORDON BIBLE COLLEGE, Boston, Mass.

A High School Course In Two Years

Learn in your own home. Here is a thorough, complete, and simplified high school course that you can finish in two years. Meets all college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of the faculties of universities and academies.

Write for booklet. Send your name and address for our booklet and full particulars. No obligations. Write today—now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. P2496 Chicago, U. S. A.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

The Cleanly Sanitary Method. Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

FIBRE LEGS ARMS

4-POUND FIBRE LEGS — ON EASY TERMS.
Orthopedic Braces for All Deformities. Send for Booklet.
Ray Trautman, 645 Dean Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MENDETS — WONDER MONEY MAKERS mend leaks instantly in all utensils, hot water bags, etc. Insert and tighten. 10c and 25c a package postpaid. AGENTS WANTED.
Collette Mfg. Co. Box 444-A, Amsterdam, N.Y

Overland

TRADE MARK REG.

Model Eighty-five Four

$895

f. o. b. Toledo. Subject to change without notice

An Unmatched Success

Year after year for many years the thirty-five horsepower Overland has outsold, by a wide margin, all cars of such comfortable size.

An unequalled combination of power, comfort and economy, it has naturally been an unmatched success.

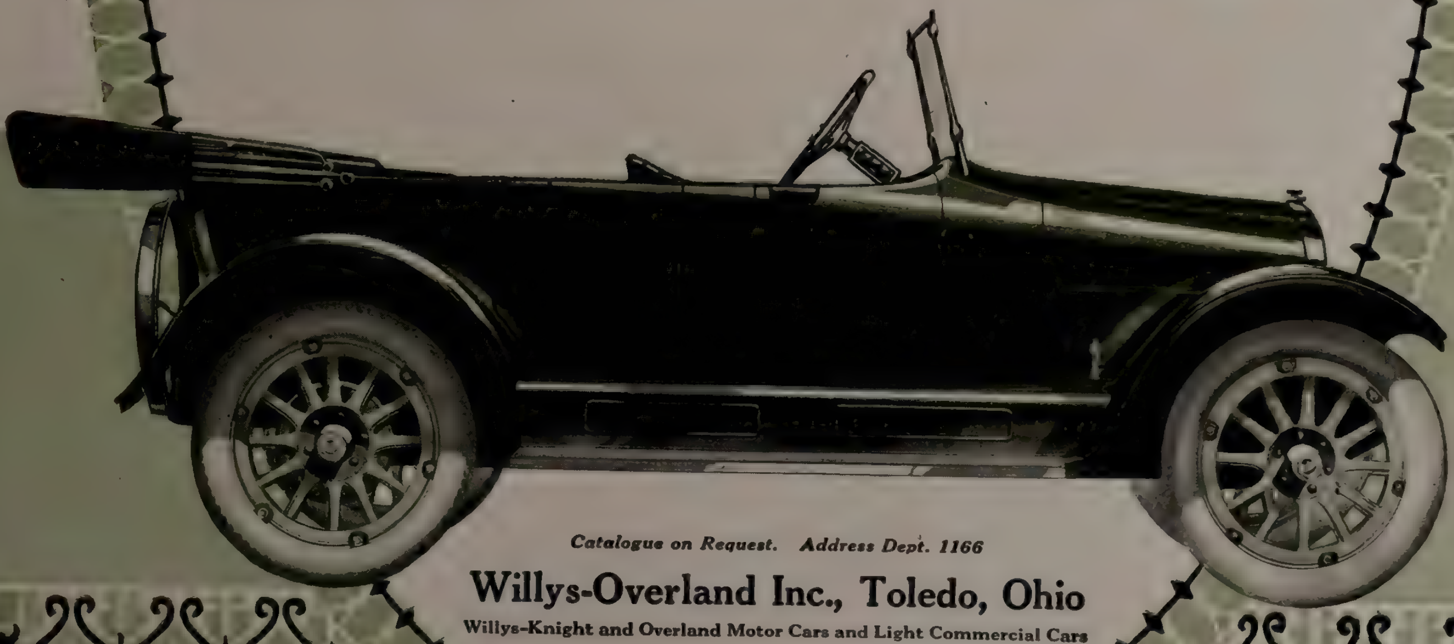
The thirty-five horsepower motor is not only unusually powerful—it is unusually economical.

The wheelbase is 112 inches—unusually long—permitting unusual roominess.

Thirty-five horsepower!
—112 inch wheelbase!!
—$895!!!

Also unusual at the price—cantilever rear springs that ease the car over rough spots—permit speed with comfort on poor roads.

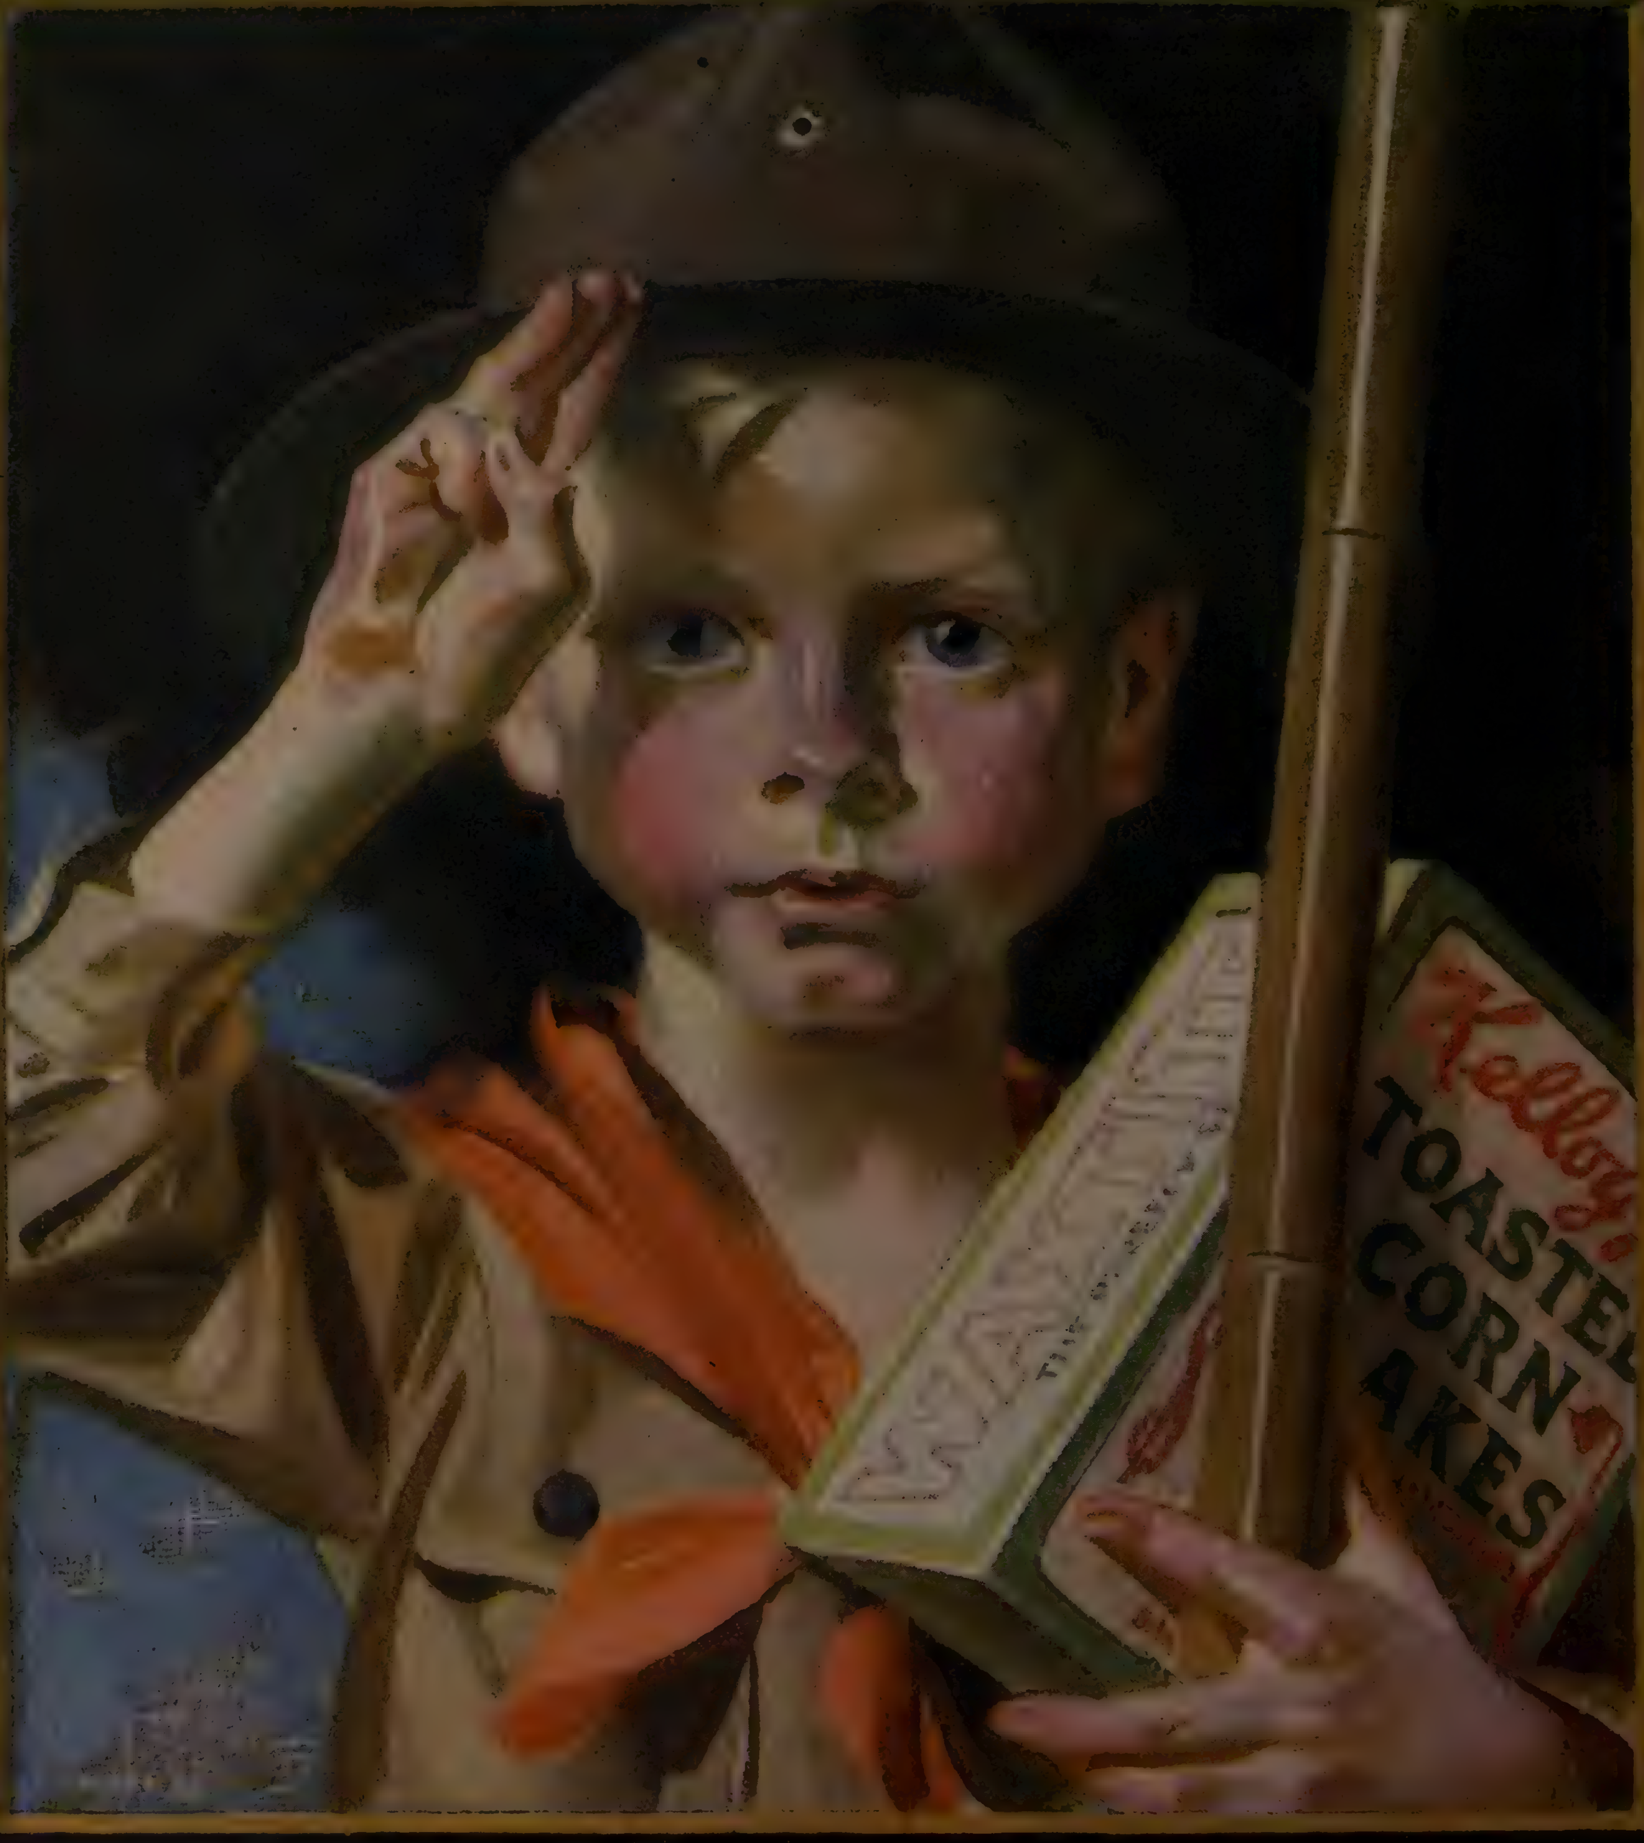
No car of such comfortable size has ever approached its success, because none has ever combined such power, comfort and economy.



Catalogue on Request. Address Dept. 1166

Willys-Overland Inc., Toledo, Ohio

Willys-Knight and Overland Motor Cars and Light Commercial Cars



WAXTITE
Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES

Copyright, 1917, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co.

All Food Experts are Saying—Eat More Corn

Kellogg's—the Original Toasted Corn Flakes—is the quality corn flakes of America, and has been for over ten years. To millions of homes it has introduced corn as a food in its most delicious form. These thin, crisp Flakes, with their fresh-from-the-oven taste, are totally unlike any other corn flakes. Made from the heart of the finest selected corn: quality in every way strictly maintained.

Every one should learn the difference between just corn flakes and Kellogg's—the Original!

W. K. Kellogg

KRUMBLES is Kellogg's all-wheat food. Every single tiny shred is thoroughly toasted.

Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES
W.K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.
WAXTITE

NOTICE TO READER: When you finish reading this magazine place a 1 cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employee and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. No wrapping—no address. A. S. Burleson, Postmaster-General.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 12, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 37. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

IDA L., Philippi, W. Va. Reared by Christian parents, I was taught from the first to love God and obey his laws. Since my girlhood I have been a Christian, loving right and truth above all things and glad to do my best for the upbuilding of God's kingdom. I have gone little to church for much of the time, because I could not, not being strong. Other years I could not go because of dear ones ill at home. For almost eleven years now I have been ill, most of the time fighting a life-and-death fight, and so have been seldom in church because mind and body are continually exhausted from suffering and overwork, for I must work ceaselessly at all I can do to earn enough, with such help as God sends me, to eke out a living. For more than two years I have not been in church for a service, am too utterly weary at the week-end to go. One prominent in church said to me recently in reproach for non-attendance at church. "There is no excuse for the neglect of a Christian duty," and added, "You have no right to work so hard that you are too tired to go to church." What can I do? I can find no relief for the brain-weariness of long and sore illness. I am forced to work always beyond my strength because I must live and meet expenses. I have not in the least lost hold on the fulness of God's love because of this. Then why should I be charged with neglect of Christian duty under circumstances which I cannot control?

Yours is a hard life, yet far from being uncommon. There are doubtless many who make the Lord's day literally a day of rest and recuperation. Where one is prevented by absolute sickness or other legitimate causes from attending service, there is, of course, a sufficient excuse; but too many, lacking any desire to go, make non-attendance a fixed habit and forget "the assembling of yourselves together" in the Lord's house. A life of long observation and experience has taught us that this way of spending the Lord's day is the cause of missing many of the blessings. "Him that honoreth me I will honor." We have known of homes remote from any church, where Sunday was observed regularly and reverently, and in which a portion of the day was set apart for a little home service. In the case of invalids (some were shut-ins), a few kindly friends or neighbors, even though they themselves had attended church, would come to join with the sick in prayer, reading and Gospel song. Bella Cooke was a prisoner of sickness in her own room in New York for half a century, but that room was a sacred place, where many of God's saints met and drank in spiritual refreshment. We do not assume to judge individual cases, however, for such matters must be left for the individual conscience to decide. If a Christian is unable to go to church, the church ought to go to that person. In every active, well-organized church there are earnest men and women who would gladly respond to such a call to duty.

B. F., Leavenworth, Kan. It is the duty of a Christian to repress, as far as his influence and example can do it, the cherishing of hate and bitterness toward any living human being. The oppression of the poor, by forcing up the cost of the necessaries of life, is a great evil, in which no one claiming to be a Christian and a good citizen should participate. Surely, riches gotten by causing others to suffer can bring no blessing with them. We should strive to be broadminded and generous, to cultivate the Christ-spirit in our thoughts and deeds, our conversation and our prayers, to help all we can in alleviating the world's suffering at this time of universal distress, to deny ourselves for the sake of others, and to lay our most precious gifts upon the altar of sacrifice for His sake who said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these." Let the churches, the homes, the individual, all feel the imperative call to help the weak in the tribulation through which the world is passing. However much we may do, still it cannot be enough.

Mr. Hedgar Pluviannes, editor of La Bonne Revue, Digne, Basses Alpes, France, writes this very kind letter, which many of our readers will welcome as a means of aiding them in getting information about the welfare of friends "at the front."

"Dear Editor: The sight of your American soldiers on our French soil is a fine and touching one. But, at the same time, it is sad to think of all those men so far from home and country. They must, especially Christians, feel very lonely sometimes. So, I have been thinking I would write to you to ask you to convey to the readers of the Christian Herald my readiness to help, in any possible way, any son, relation or friend they may have here. We live far from the war zone, but it is always a comfort for the men to correspond with Christian friends in the country, and when on a short leave, to come to see them. I put myself at the disposal of anybody wanting any service rendered for Christ's sake to their dear ones, now or later on, in our country, or even to give any information to the families in America. It is only a slight tribute of our gratitude for their splendid help in those terrible times."

Information of present address of Minnie L. Shirling, last heard of at Los Angeles, Calif., going to Redlands, is requested by Rev. J. M. Duffenwierth, Box 114, Sutherland, Fla.

Mrs. R. A. M. G., Irving, N. Y. We refer you to the articles on prophecy now appearing in the Christian Herald.

D. A. S., Gardiner, Me. 1. The Shakers and Quakers. 2. Paul's injunction to have women keep silence in the churches was written to deal specifically with the case of a church which he himself had founded, and where certain serious schisms had arisen. It is a mistake and a grievous injustice to apply these words of Paul's to women in general. They have borne too noble and useful a part in the progress of the Christian religion to be subjected to any needless criticism. There are many instances of godly women in both the Old and New Testaments. The ministry of Jesus was to both men and women equally. Many of his most devoted followers were women.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick, Albany, N. Y. We cannot criticize or disapprove of any theologians or teachers, so long as they preach Christ crucified. There are many sheep and many shepherds, and hence many methods.

Mrs. C. C. Mc.D., Celina, Texas. 1. The very purpose Christ had in mind when teaching the lessons of Good Samaritanship, as expounded in Luke 10 : 33, etc., was to demonstrate, not the ways of the law, of good resolution, beautiful moral example, but the Christlike way of doing things. Hence we are dealing with a Christian virtue. 2. When Christ, in Matt. 10 : 34, speaks of sending a sword instead of peace, he sought to forecast the inevitable result of his coming into a world lying under the wicked one—which is strife. 3. "The sin unto death" alluded to in I John 5 : 16, is the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit. Some hold that it is attributing the works of the Spirit to satanic agency. One commentator states it concisely as "constant and consummate opposition to the influence of the Holy Spirit, with a deliberate preference of darkness to light, which makes repentance and forgiveness impossible."

Doubter, New Haven, Conn. Authorities differ as to the nature of the vision seen by Paul at his conversion. Paul cannot say whether he is "out of the body or in the body." (II Cor. 12 : 2, 3.) He sees what others do not see, and hears what they do not hear, while they too hear and see enough to prove to themselves and to him that something has occurred beyond the range of ordinary phenomena. Nothing in the narrative suggests the thought of a sudden thunderstorm. In that case, the gathering gloom and the dark rolling clouds would have prepared the travelers for the lightning flash. Something supernatural did happen and the result was the confusion, alarm and bewilderment of the travelers.

Mrs. W. T. Ramsey, Columbus, Kan. Please explain Hab. 3 : 3.

The language of the chapter is figurative and descriptive of the Divine majesty. "God came from Teman" means the country south of Judea, near Edom, where Mount Paran is found. Paran is the desert region extending from the south of Judah to Sinai. Seir, Sinai and Paran are near one another and are therefore associated together in respect to God's giving of the law. Teman is so identified with Seir or Edom as here to be substituted for it.

Anxious, Dover, N. J. The Evangelists treat devil-possession as a very common form of human suffering in their time, but it is not certain that devil-possession is not merely descriptive of cases of diseases, which were and still are mysterious in origin and action. The name was probably applied to various kinds of suffering such as epilepsy, hysteria, mania, melancholia or outright delirium.

J. L. T., Minneapolis, Minn. God expects his people to give their lives unreservedly and absolutely to his service. Whether one is at work in the home or in the church, there should be the consciousness that the work is being done for God. "Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Col. 3 : 17). The question of how much time should be given to God's service in the home, and how much in church and community, must be settled in the individual conscience. "Duties never conflict." There is always one thing to do which is the thing God wants done at that particular time. It is probably true that a man's first duty is to his home, though there are exceptional cases in which a man may be called to leave his home for broader work. We should try to reconcile our home and church duties. God does not want us in his church if to go there it is necessary for us to neglect our home and family.

New Subscriber, Dodsonville, Texas, makes this comment: "W. H. L., Chicago, Ill., wonders why the mothers don't start a war on tobacco. The mothers as a rule do not use the nasty stuff, so why don't the men start it? For our part, we wish all the good land used for raising tobacco could be put in something to feed people on. Tobacco and whisky are in the same class, and a sad day it will be for the devil when they are banished. Whisky is doomed, we sincerely hope."

R. B. Y. S., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I read in your issue of July 25, in a letter from L. B. H., a most misleading translation of the Lord's Prayer. In the original Greek, the negative me quite plainly precedes the word eis which means 'into,' so that the actual translation is 'not into,' instead of 'out of,' despite the ex-rabbi's assertion to the contrary. In Weymouth's New Testament in Modern Speech (London and New York, 1903), the passage is translated as follows: 'And bring us not into temptation, but rescue us from the evil one.'"

The Woman Spoke

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

THE Woman spoke to the Dove of Peace,
  And "Your wings are white," she cried;
"Yet the battle grounds show a crimson stain
  And No-Man's land is dyed
With a scarlet dye, and the sun is red
  On the broken fields of grain!"

The Woman spoke to the Dove of Peace,
  And "Your wings are white," she said;
"White as the snow on the trampled fields
  Where a shattered host lies dead;
White as the face of the frozen fate
  That a ghastly harvest yields!"

Then the Dove of Peace looked up and spoke,
  And "My wings are white!" he thrilled;
"White as the roses that will blow
  Where a million men were killed!
White as the grain that will spring once more
In the garden spot by each cottage door;
White as the love that will fragrant grow
  In the hearts that God has led—"
Ah, the Dove of Peace looked up and spoke,
  And "My wings are white!" he said.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

One of the tented cities where America's manhood is training for battle, that Democracy may live

Let's Drum Booze Out of Camp

ONE of the many evils that usually accompany war is drunkenness. Many a boy in blue returned from the swamps of the South, a confirmed drunkard, and the Spanish war, too, left its trail of appetite. Extraordinary temptations beset the soldier, and he is surrounded by inducements to debauchery and vice in various forms. This has been the situation in the past. Now America, its government and people have resolved to make extraordinary efforts to bring about a radical change for the better.

Not only has drunkenness transformed many a well-organized and efficient force into an inefficient rabble, incapable of carrying out to advantage the plans of its leaders, but it has demoralized the individual soldier by thousands, and transformed him from an ordinarily decent, clean-minded and moral man to a brute. "Drunkenness," writes Hon. James Bryce, former Ambassador to the United States, "may turn even a soldier who has no criminal instincts into a brute who may commit outrages at which he would himself be shocked in his sober moments."

How to overcome the temptations, or to remove them altogether, is the question which is now engaging the national American mind. Congress and the President, as well as the heads of the Army and Navy, are all energetically dealing with this problem. Secretary Daniels of the Navy, in a recent communication which appeared in the Christian Herald, takes the ground that every camp where enlisted youths are stationed must be swept clean of all vice and indulgence, and that illicit drinking-places must be driven away beyond the reach of the men. He holds that "this government, from every standpoint, has a duty to protect these youths," so that when the crisis is past they can be returned to their homes as worthy of their place in the family circle as when they left for the front.

TO strengthen the hands of the government in this campaign for sobriety and morality, an organization has been formed known as the United Committee on War Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy. Through the Christian Herald it invites the hearty cooperation of all good Americans. A number of well-known organizations were anxious to have a share in this work, but the government, through the Fosdick Commission, rightly insisted that all of this work should be done by one agency and through the Army and Navy chaplains and the Y. M. C. A. secretaries. At the suggestion of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, the eighteen leading temperance organizations of the country united for the purpose into one committee. The list of participating organizations includes the Prohibition Party National Committee, National Women's Christian Temperance Union, Sons of Temperance, Temperance Board of the Presbyterian Church, United Society of Christian Endeavor, Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, Independent Order of Good Templars, Flying Squadron Foundation, the National Temperance Society; Baptist Young People's Union, Epworth League of America, Board of Temperance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Anti-Saloon League of America, Scientific Temperance Federation, the Federal Council of Churches, and others. The general committee is made up of one representative from each organization. This general committee elected the Executive Committee.

It should be understood, therefore, that this is not in any sense to be regarded as simply another competing temperance organization. It is a combination of all the great organizations created for this special purpose, and will enter into no work other than among soldiers and sailors. All unnecessary duplication of effort is eliminated.

THE officers of the United Committee are: Chairman, Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union; vice chairman, Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union; secretary, Cora F. Stoddard, executive secretary of the Scientific Temperance Federation; treasurer, D. Leigh Colvin, president of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association; chairman of Ways and Means Committee, Charles Stelzle, field secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; executive secretary, Harley H. Gill. The offices are at 389 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Executive Secretary Gill gives the following account of the organization and the methods to be adopted:

"Military efficiency demands a sober army. The welfare of the country after the war demands it, for these soldiers will be leaders in every walk of life. Our duty to young men in general demands it, for never before has there been an opportunity to reach so many young men with minimum expense as the training camps afford. The only sure method of preventing the debauchery of drink is through education, and our work is to be primarily of that nature.

"The soldiers will be directly reached by the chaplains and Y. M. C. A. secretaries. We are to pay no salaries or maintain men in the camps other than general oversight demands. It is for us to prepare the material and furnish it to the chaplains and secretaries, who will see that it gets to the men. The Y. M. C. A. is giving the closest cooperation, being represented on our board by Dr. George Fisher, and regarding us as a department of their work.

"Among other features which we propose to adopt in our temperance work for the moral uplift of the camp, we will install a stereomotograph unit in every one of the big Army and Navy training camps. With these machines we will show pictures steadily for hours every day, furnishing each stereomotograph with a new set of slides each month, the best that photography can furnish. Besides, we will place in every Y. M. C. A. 'hut' the best posters and most convincing literature that can be produced on temperance, and we will present to every soldier and sailor a specially prepared pocket manual carrying conviction on the drink question. Of course, in addition, we will have strong and popular speakers, including Governor J. Frank Hanly, Hon. R. P. Hobson, Charles Stelzle, Ira Landrith, Daniel A. Poling, and others. In short, we will leave no effort undone to accomplish all that is needed for the fortification of our soldier boys against alcohol. At these meetings there will be a strong personal plea made to the men for clean manhood, for freedom alike from liquor and its attendant train of vices.

"We have made a very careful estimate of the fund needed for the work. It is our plan to reach the sixteen great cantonments of the new drafted army, the sixteen cantonments of the National Guard, the numerous reserve officers' training camps, naval training stations, forts, and camps of aviation corps and artillerymen—in short, to reach every one of the 1,600,000 men who will be in the service. It will cost a good deal of money to do this. At least half of the fund must come from sources other than our participating organizations. The responses which have come thus far are very encouraging and insure ultimate success. The grave problem now before us is to secure the money quickly. The cantonments will soon be open, and we must be ready if we are to make the most of the opportunity.

"The different participating organizations," added Secretary Gill, "are to assist financially. Some have given lists of names from which a considerable sum has already been realized. Others have appropriated cash out of their treasuries. One organization is contributing $600 a year in form of office rent. The Christian Endeavor Society, for the first time in its history, is making an appeal to its 25,000 local societies. The New York and New Jersey Unions of the W. C. T. U. have each promised $500."

WE can think of no form of Christian work in connection with the war—on this side of the Atlantic at least—that deserves to command heartier support from our readers and their friends than this which has been taken up by the United Committee on War Temperance Activities. It is a work which, had it been omitted or left undone, would have been a vital oversight. In the armies and navies of Europe there have been at numerous times, since the beginning of the great war, abundant evidence of the demoralization and degradation caused through drink. Arthur Mee and Dr. J. Stuart Holden, in a recent publication by a British organization, relate a typical incident, which was referred to in the newspapers at the time: "On December 8, 1916, the captain of a large steamer, on which there was a gun crew, was on deck, when a British hospital ship was sighted. The captain, who was under the influence of liquor, immediately ordered his chief gunner to fire upon it. The gunner protested, and was supported by others in his protest, and the captain was told that it was their own hospital ship; but he, now blind with drunken passion, replied, with an oath, that he did not care. The men were firm, however, and the climax was the seizure of the captain, who was put in irons by his crew and kept a prisoner in his cabin and fed through a porthole. It was mutiny, but who shall say that it was not justifiable? Nine witnesses testified against the captain before the Admiralty Board, and the vindication of the gunner was complete."

Mess call never falls on deaf ears. It means temporary relaxation from discipline, comradeship and "chow"

The program of the United Committee on War Temperance Activities is one that should be universally supported throughout the nation. It gives an opportunity to talk to 1,600,000 young men regarding the drink problem. They will be in camp with hours of time on their hands each week, and it is proposed to reach them during those spare hours—not once, but many times—by speakers, posters and literature, and by having the stereomotograph running in every camp constantly, with its emphatic illustrative arguments in behalf of temperance. This campaign is to be waged during the entire period of the men's training. It has been figured out by the United Committee that the cost, per man, for the whole program will be infinitesimal.

A $1 gift will reach 16 men; a $10 gift will reach 160 men; $50 will reach 800 men; $100 will reach 1,600 men; a $250 gift will reach 4,000 men.

How many men are you willing to reach?

Here is an opportunity not only for individual contributors to "do their bit," but for churches, Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Sunday Schools, Bible classes, Ladies' Aid Societies and similar organizations to help along the cause which goes to the root of practically all the evils that have characterized military camp life in the past, and which, God willing, and with your help, it is proposed to eliminate now. The motto of the United Committee is "Clean Hands and Clean Lives for a Clean Cause!"

All contributions sent to the Christian Herald for the Camp Temperance Fund will be acknowledged and duly forwarded to the treasurer of the organization.

Some Seed Thoughts on Conservation

How to Eat

By DR. WM. H. VAIL

IN the realm of hygiene, yesterday it was eugenics, today it is conservation, and tomorrow it will be opsonism. And while the American people are limiting the problem of conservation to the preservation and consumption of the products of the soil, so that nothing shall be lost or wasted, let us turn our minds to the other side of the shield, and consider our mode of living, and see whether it is not possible to obtain a greater degree of health and efficiency from the food that we eat. If, by careful consideration of the subject, we shall be able to demonstrate that we are wasting our health and energy by the way we eat our food, and can prove that one-half of the amount of food eaten by us should produce as much efficiency as the whole amount consumed by us, we shall render as great a service to the nation as those who work for the conservation of the crops.

But the trouble is that we never think of these things. We have no time for thinking during these days of hurry and worry. Not only have we no time for meditation, but these days of automobile haste have also caused the disappearance of our old-time songs, in many instances. In days gone by we used frequently to hear the song which had for its refrain "The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket, the moss-covered bucket, that hung in the well." We hear it no more. Do you ask, "Why?" We reply, because there is no time now for moss to gather on anything; and therefore the song disappears.

In New York, since the auto has come in vogue, they have given us a new classification of mankind. We used to speak of the male and female; the white and black; the young and old, etc. Now, in New York, mankind is divided into the quick and the dead. In crossing the streets of New York, if you are not quick you are dead!

For our present purpose we divide mankind into those who eat to live, and those who live to eat; and it is wonderful how large a majority belong to the latter class, who live to eat and do not eat to live. Outside of the great war problems which confront us, there is no more important question relating to our physical wellbeing than this one, to which class of this last division of mankind each individual belongs. In the trial of the class who live to eat follow disease, inefficiency and premature death; while those who eat to live have the promise of long life, health and efficiency, together with comfort and happiness.

Another trouble that confronts us at this point is that people seem to be afraid to approach this bugbear of digestion, considering it something beyond their comprehension, whereas, in many of its most important aspects, it is very simple and readily understood. Like so many life problems, the processes of digestion are profound when we approach them from one direction, but when considered from another viewpoint, they are very simple and to a great extent chemical in their nature.

Let us elaborate this chemical feature of the process of digestion. We have four principal secretions, or liquids, that have to do with the digestion of our food: the saliva of our mouth, the gastric juice in the stomach, the pancreatic juice from the pancreas and the bile from the liver. Chemically, the saliva is alkaline, the gastric juice is acid, the pancreatic juice is alkaline and the bile is acid. Alkaline, acid, alkaline, acid—notice how they alternate. There is no doubt in the world but that this alternation of the alkaline with the acid juices in this process was a wise provision of our Creator, and that each liquid was intended to perform its function in connection with the digestion of the food which is ingested. Certainly, the first liquid secreted in the mouth was not created alkaline, unless it was intended that we should render all of our food alkaline, or semi-alkaline, before it enters the stomach.

In this connection it is most interesting to recall the derivation of the name "stomach." The word stomach is derived from the Greek word "stoma," which means "mouth"; and should you have inflammation of the mouth and consult your doctor, he would tell you that you had stomatitis, from the same word.

Now, how did the doctors come to give the name "stomach" to the organ located below the chest and diaphragm, when the word means "mouth"? The reason is very simple. They thought the process of digestion began with the stomach, and if the process of digestion began in the stomach, the name would be appropriate; but the process begins in the mouth, and there is the crux of the whole business. There is where the trouble originates in connection with the great majority of human ills. We believe, and act, as if it made no difference in what condition our food reaches the stomach, so that it gets there. We speak of ingesting our food most properly, for ingest means to throw in, and that expresses exactly the manner in which our food enters our stomach—it is thrown in, helter-skelter. We take a pleasant morsel of food into our mouth, chew it once or twice, and then wash it down into the stomach with some tea, coffee, milk or water, and expect the stomach to perform its office as well as that of the mouth, doing double duty. The stomach refuses to perform the functions of both organs, and I do not blame it.

This act of calling upon the stomach to perform the functions of the mouth and stomach both cannot be emphasized too strongly, as this is the starting-point which leads to the derangement of the whole process of digestion and assimilation, and becomes the source of more ills, diseases and discomforts throughout the whole system than any other three causes.

This is a broad statement and far-reaching, but is easily proved. The number of diseases that have their origin in the malassimilation of our food, and the condition of overacidity of the blood and secretions is legion, and they all have their starting-point in the neglect to render the food alkaline, or semi-alkaline, during the first stage of digestion, while the food is in the mouth, before it enters the stomach. Many consider this as a mere fad, a creation of the imagination, of those who are carried away with one idea. Then I want to know why in every case of indigestion we always run for the soda and ammonia remedies, in their various forms of powder, tablet and liquid? But it is always the alkaline preparation that is relied upon to cure indigestion. We never call for the acids. For the same reason, we drink the alkaline mineral waters and avoid acids. Why are the papers filled with advertisements of remedies for uric acid troubles? We never read of remedies for alkaline blood or kidney troubles. Our blood is almost universally too acid. It is one of the rarest things in the world to find the blood of anybody too alkaline. All because we fail to develop the salivary glands and to enjoy our food while it is being masticated in the mouth. From the same cause our mouths are dry, and public speakers need a glass of water to moisten their mouths when speaking.

Continued on page 969

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

VIII. The Day of the Lord—When It Comes and What It Means

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

EVEN the cursory reader of the Bible will have observed the frequent phrase, "the day of the Lord," or "that day," or "in that day." It is found in the Old Testament prophets chiefly, notably Isaiah, but also in the New Testament.

Some illustrations follow: "The Lord alone shall be exalted in that day" (Isa. 2 : 11); "And it shall come to pass in that day that the remnant of Israel . . . shall stay upon the Lord" (10 : 20); "Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand" (13 : 6); "The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood before the great and terrible day of the Lord come" (Joel 2 : 31); "His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives" (Zech. 14 : 4); "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord" (Matt 7 : 22); "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day" (II Thess. 1 : 10); "The day of the Lord will come as a thief" (II Peter 3 : 10); "The battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. 16 : 14).

II

IT is natural to ask what this phrase means, and when the time will come to which it refers. There appear to be contradictions in the allusions to it. It contains blessings for the earth, and yet it also contains judgments. What relation does it bear to what is called the "Millennium"? This last-named period has not been dealt with in these studies, but it has been assumed that our readers had some knowledge of it. "Millennium" means a thousand years, and is commonly used with reference to the thousand years named in Rev. 20 : 1-6, when Satan shall be shut up in the bottomless pit. It is the time of "the first resurrection," when Christ and his saints shall reign over the earth. The question is, will the day of the Lord come before, or during, or after the Millennium?

As a matter of fact, it will cover all these three phases of time. It begins just prior to the Millennium, it continues throughout that period, and extends somewhat beyond it. But before it begins, there are certain preliminary events which must take place. One of these is the translation of the church to meet the Lord in the air, as foretold by Paul (I Thess. 4 : 16-18). Another is the regathering of Israel to Palestine, on which we dwelt in a previous study. And a third is the federation of the Gentile nations (that is, the nations of the Roman Empire) under a single head, as we saw in the study preceding this. This person the Scriptures sometimes describe as "the beast," sometimes as "the man of sin," "the son of perdition" or "the Antichrist." Our previous studies have made us more or less familiar with all these things.

III

ON the supposition that these events have taken place, then the day of the Lord begins with the return of the Lord himself in glory. When he comes for his church (according to John 14 : 1-3, Phil. 3 : 20, 21, and I Thess. 4 : 13-18), he comes into the air and the church is caught up to meet him. But when, after a brief interval (possibly the seven years spoken of in Daniel 9), he comes in judgment on the nations, it will be to the earth that he descends. This is what is meant by "the return of the Lord himself in glory." See for this Zech. 14 : 4; Matt. 24 : 29, 30; II Thess. 1 : 7-10.

The judgment of the nations follows, and Ps. 50, Zech. 14 : 1-9, Matt. 25 : 31-46 and Rev. 19 : 11-21 find their fulfilment. Be sure to read these Scriptures, which are very full and graphic.

It is in the course of this judgment on the nations that there takes place the destruction of "the beast" and the "false prophet," with their followers, as referred to in the study preceding this. See in this instance Dan. 9 : 27, II Thess. 2 : 8, Rev. 19 : 20 and corresponding places.

The binding of Satan is next in order (Rev. 20 : 1-3), and then we have the Millennium. The binding of Satan, it should be borne in mind, is a necessary preliminary to the Millennium, or to Christ's reign in righteousness. Necessary because he must be kept in restraint. And yet there is in that restraint also a striking parallel to Christ's being sealed in the tomb by the Roman guard. Satan's emissaries thought to keep him there; but triumphantly he arose, and now Satan's own time has come. The tables are turned, and he is shut up in a prison-house for a thousand years.

It is during the Millennium that the kingdom of God is established in the earth. This is the kingdom promised to David, as we have seen in our third study, and over which his son Jesus Christ shall reign. It is the kingdom of which Daniel prophesied, as brought out in our study on "The Times of the Gentiles." It is the kingdom that Christ came to set up at his first advent, and for which Israel and indeed the whole world has been looking, in a more or less darkened way, in all the centuries. Rev. 20 : 4-6 refers to this kingdom very briefly, but for descriptions of its physical blessings one must turn to the Old Testament. The reason for this is that the nation of Israel shall then be dominant, to which people the promises were made in the Old Testament days. Read the 72d Psalm, or look at Isaiah 11 for one of the pictures of the Millennium. There, at last, the poor are being judged with righteousness, the wild beasts are tamed, there is nothing to destroy in all God's holy mountain, and the earth is "full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." It is the time when he "shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords" (I Tim. 6 : 15).

But it must not be imagined that because Satan is bound all this time, therefore there will be no sin in the earth. Isa. 65 : 20 says of that time: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." It is the period when Christ reigns, but as another aptly says: the fundamental idea of a reign, according to God, is the repression of evil. When all evil is suppressed, that is, in the eternal age, righteousness will dwell" in the earth, but it will not "reign."

IV

THE Millennium lasts for a thousand years, but still "the day of the Lord" continues, and includes in its history another resurrection. This is the resurrection of the rest of the dead that did not rise when Christ came for his church, because they were not part of it. In other words, these are the wicked dead who, in all the centuries from Adam, have died without faith, have died rejecting the testimony of God. Rev. 20 : 5 refers to this.

But, it may be asked, what about the righteous and regenerate who die during the Millennium? As to this we are unable to speak with clearness, unless we interpret Isa. 65 : 20-22, mentioned above, as indicating that none but wicked and unbelieving people shall die during that period. If this be true, then at its close "death will have none to surrender except those who will stand before the Great White Throne, and who also will be cast into hell." In this connection think of that beautiful Millennial promise in Isa. 65 : 22: "For as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall wear out the work of their hands" (Margin).

Quoting William Lincoln, "How solemn it is that the first resurrection, that of the righteous, is not contrasted by the Holy Spirit with the second resurrection, that of the wicked; but instead we read of the first resurrection and of the second death. The summoning of the wicked from their graves is termed a resurrection of judgment in John 5, but here the language is changed to 'the second death.'" Several times in this chapter the wicked are still termed dead, even after their resurrection. And dead indeed they are, not in the sense of non-existence, but in that of separation from God.

But the second resurrection seems to synchronize with the unbinding of Satan, who goes out again "to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, and to gather them to battle" (Rev. 20 : 8). This is one of the strangest and most startling facts associated with the whole teaching of the Millennium. It thus appears that while during that period Christ will be obeyed and served by the nations, yet to no small extent it will be on their part a feigned obedience and an unwilling service. See Zech. 14 : 16-19. Men will need, in that day as well as in this, to be "born again" in order to "enter into the kingdom of heaven" (John 3 : 3-7).

The nations will be ready to be again deceived, when Satan comes back into his power "for a little season," and the battle to which he shall gather them will be another attack upon Jerusalem, "the camp of the saints about and the beloved city" (Rev. 20 : 9). It is at this time that God has his last and most awful conflict with man in the flesh. "And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." The destruction of Satan follows. He is "cast into the lake of fire and brimstone," where the beast and the false prophet were cast at the beginning of the Millennium (Rev. 19 : 20), and he is there "tormented day and night forever and ever" (Rev. 20 : 10).

Rev. 20 : 3 teaches that Satan "must be loosed a little season." Why the "must"? Is it not that man may be tested or tried again? He had been tried in the garden of Eden, when he possessed the knowledge of good only; he had been tried again, when he possessed the knowledge of "good and evil," amid evil only. But now finally, at the close of the Millennium, he must be tried when he possesses the knowledge of good and evil, amid only good. Then it will be evident that, let the circumstances be what they may, man himself is not good (Lincoln).

Thus the millennial day that had dawned so brightly on earth ends as all the preceding ones ended—in disaster, so far as man is concerned. Man without Christ can only fail.

V

THE next great event divinely scheduled in the day of the Lord is the Last Judgment. Not the "general" judgment, as it is often erroneously called, for there is no such judgment; but only the judgment of the dead, the wicked dead already spoken of.

And they were "judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." They had an opportunity to be judged in Christ by faith in his blessed Name, but this they wickedly rejected. They chose rather to stand upon their own record, and not his. Their "works" were that in which they gloried, and God kept an accurate record of them. But their value was nil, for "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." "This is the second death" relatively to their preceding physical death in unbelief, but it is not annihilation, as shown by Rev. 19 : 20 and 20 : 10. As the Scofield Reference Bible reminds us, "after one thousand years in the lake of fire the beast and the false prophet are still there and undestroyed." "Forever and ever" or "to the ages of the ages" are the words, and that they carry the awful thought of unendingness is evidenced by the fact that they are used in Heb. 1 : 8 of the very Throne of God itself.

May the unbelieving and unsaved reader take warning from this solemn fact, and before it is too late fly for refuge to the hope set before us in the Gospel. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

Among the Evangelists

THE Hofmeister evangelistic campaign in Crooksville, Ohio, was held in a tent seating 1,500 people. It resulted in bringing many to a confession of Christ.

W. P. Nicholson and Bob Jones each have had successful meetings for two weeks in a tent in Paterson, N. J.

W. H. Collison is in charge of the music this summer at Ocean Grove, N. J. Homer Rodeheaver will be there again for the camp meeting the last of August.

E. H. Edgar and P. A. Stockton have had a successful season in the cities of Oregon and Washington.

The Meridian, Miss., papers give extended reports of the meetings conducted by Burke Culpepper and Harold R. Coffin. Mr. Culpepper gave his entire offering to the American Red Cross.

Clyde Lee Fife and party held a successful campaign in Robinson, Ill. There were more than eleven hundred decisions.

S. D. Gordon, the "Quiet Talk" man, is holding daily meetings in a room on the Boardwalk in Atlantic City.

The O. H. Callis party have held notable revival campaigns in Irvine, Barbourville, and Brodhead, Ky., and more recently in Tulare, S. D.

The newspapers of Augusta, Ark., say that city and community never before experienced such spiritual results as from the recent revival conducted by Culpepper and Coffin. Three hundred were converted and reclaimed, including many men of the military company, and men representing the financial and business element.

Evans and Mills report a successful campaign recently in Hunter, Okla., with many conversions.

O. A. Newlin has held a successful meeting in Farmington, Ill.

Evangelists Hart and Magann, of Madison, Wis., have finished their season's evangelistic campaigns in the South West. They report over seven thousand decisions.

F. A. Geisenheiner, of the Rural Evangelization Society, recently held special meetings in a large tent at Shelbyville, Mo. Over thirty conversions and consecrations are claimed.

PARLEY E. ZARTMAN.

Where Steel is King

The Enormous Iron Resources of the South—Rails for the World—Giant Plants—By-Products and Waste—Welfare Work that Pays

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

I AM writing this on the edge of the heights that overlook Birmingham. The city lies in the valley. Out of its center rise many skyscrapers, one of which is twenty-six stories high. Beyond the city and above and below it are the smokestacks of the foundries and rolling mills that have given the place the name of the Pittsburgh of the South. As I look I can see nine furnaces that are making pig-iron. I can see a dozen great manufacturing institutions, and can pick out a huge rolling-mill which has so many smokestacks that it looks like a vast pipe organ rising out of the green. Farther over are the buildings of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, another branch of the Steel Trust. They cover nineteen acres and form a great black spot in the center of the valley.

The Birmingham enthusiast who stands by my side tells me that pig iron can be made cheaper right here than anywhere else on the globe. I raise my eyebrows and ask why. He replies:

"It is because the good Lord intended it so. This hill upon which we are standing is one mass of iron. It is 1,000 feet high, and the iron goes down no one knows how deep. It runs all along this side of the valley. Those hills over there on the opposite side are composed of good coking coal, and between them is a great bed of limestone. Coal, limestone and iron are all that are needed for the making of steel, and the Lord has spread out here to feed our people a mighty sandwich that is unequaled anywhere else on the globe."

Pouring slag into dump trucks. When it cools it is ground into fertilizer

LET us look a little more closely at the iron mountain on which we are standing. It is part of the new residence section, and it is fast being covered with magnificent homes. It has houses which have cost $100,000 to build, and they rest upon foundations of iron. The ore crops out everywhere. It is mixed with the red of the roads, and some of the streets are walled with brown chunks which could be put into the furnace and if properly treated be finally turned into armor plate, steel rails or watch springs.

The town is full of good boosters, and it advertises its specialty in original ways. As I rode over the Fair Grounds today I saw the great iron statue of Vulcan, which Birmingham sent to the St. Louis Exposition to show the prosperity of its iron and steel. The statue is as tall as a four-story house and is so heavy that it would take 100 horses to haul it if it were placed upon wheels. It is cast iron and it cost $26,000.

Continued on page 962

A Week in the World's News

AMERICA SPEAKS. President Wilson spoke for America and the world in his reply to the Peace Proposal of the Pope, published in last week's issue of the Christian Herald. The newspapers of the country are practically a unit in holding the President's note one of the most important state papers of the war, expressing carefully, concisely and unequivocally the case of the Allied nations against the Central Empires. Ever since the recognition by America of the state of war voices from various quarters have been heard demanding statements of the reasons for American participation in the world conflict and of the causes for which we took up the sword. The editors in general hold that these have their answer in the President's reply to the Pope. "Making the world safe for democracy" is explained by the demand that those with whom we make peace shall be represented by a government in whose undertakings we may have confidence. Various editors as well as several foreign correspondents abroad are in agreement upon the real value of the President's answer to the forces now working within the German Empire for the liberalizing of that Government and the suggestion was made from Washington that if by any chance German officialdom prevented the text from reaching the German people, the text would be supplied them by air post in a manner similar to that in which the President's address to Congress in April was spread behind the German lines. It seems to be generally held that the question of peace is up to the German people. The Pope is reported as greatly disappointed.

PRODUCER VERSUS CONSUMER. The attempts of the price-fixing commission of the Food Administration to settle the price for the 1917 wheat crop almost resulted in a disagreeement. On August 29 the facts were reported to the President and on the following day it was announced that the price would be $2.20 a bushel at Chicago for No. 1 wheat. It was reported that the producers were demanding $3 a bushel or more for No. 1 northern wheat, while the representatives of labor and other organizations of consumers were seeking a price of $2 a bushel or less.

A HALF MILLION FROM PROFITS. Forced by the public opinion aroused by the arguments of Senators La Follette, Johnson, Borah, Hollis, and Gore, who pointed out pitilessly the injustice of conscripting men when wealth was permitted to go free or was taxed too lightly, the Finance Committee of the Senate on August 29 brought in an amendment to the Revenue Bill changing the tax on war profits to yield $1,062,000,000. This is $500,000,000 more than would have been taken from profits in the bill as originally reported. Senator Bankhead of Alabama also introduced a substitute amendment which would result in still further increases in the rate. A move was made on August 29 to invoke closure on the bill, and the Senate agreed to vote on it on September 10. The Senate on August 29 eliminated from the bill the increase in second-class postage rates to 1¼ cents a pound, and the tax on the net income of publishers, substituting a zone system scheme of second-class postage running from one cent a pound to six cents a pound, depending upon the distance, carried. Senator Weeks, however, was planning to offer an amendment by which postal rates would be left at the present basis.

TO INSURE THE FIGHTING MEN. A committee of the House on August 28 reported favorably the bill to create a Soldiers' and Sailors' Insurance Fund in lieu of the present pension system. The bill has been urged eloquently by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, the only objection from any quarter being that it is perhaps too liberal and might swamp the treasury. By this plan, every man who faces the enemy will know that those dependent upon him will be taken care of adequately and promptly.

LOCKING THE GATE. On August 27 President Wilson issued a proclamation by which the Exports Council was given complete control over the commerce of the United States with the neutral nations. with the Allies, and with the enemy. The proclamation forbids the export after August 30, except under conditions and licenses to be administered by the Exports Administrative Board, of arms, munitions, or explosives, or machinery or ingredients for their manufacture or use; all machinery or animals used in transportation; all articles or materials for communication; all bullion, coin, or evidences of debt, or machinery for producing the same; all fuels, foods, feeds and clothing; chemicals or drugs, fibers, non-edible animal and vegetable products, and earths, glass, etc.; medical surgical and sanitary supplies; metals or other mineral products; paper pulp, paper, books, rubber, resins, tars, and waxes, or their substitutes and articles containing them; wood and its products; coffee, cocoa, tea, wines or spirits, to Albania, Austria-Hungary, the part of Belgium occupied by Germany, Bulgaria, Denmark or her colonies, Germany or her colonies, Greece, Liechtenstein, Luxemburg, Holland, Norway, Spain or her colonies, Sweden, Switzerland or Turkey, except such territory as may be occupied by the armies of the United States or its allies. A more detailed list of articles, which however, covers nearly the same ground, is forbidden to be shipped to all countries not enumerated in the preceding list.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. M. Venizelos, premier of Greece, declared in the Greek Chamber on August 25 that monarchy in Greece was being given its last trial. . . . The United Mine Workers of America on August 28 invited the coal operators to meet them in convention on September 6 to discuss an increase in wages in the central field, embracing Illinois, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and Indiana. . . . Dispatches of August 26 reported forest fires raging in Oregon,

Continued on page 968

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

MacMillan on Way Home

WORD that Donald B. MacMillan and the other members of the long-stranded Crocker Land expedition are safe on board the rescue ship Neptune bound for home was contained in a wireless message received the other afternoon by Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History, from MacMillan. This is the message: "All well. Every one and everything on board. Hovey left Disco by Hans Egede in July. Ice very heavy Melville Bay. Captain Bob did fine work. Probably proceed to St. Johns.—MacMillan." The Hovey referred to in the message is Dr. Edmund Otis Hovey, curator of geology of the museum, who left the party at Etah in June and sledded down the Greenland coast to Disco, where he met the whaling steamer Hans Egede, which took him to Copenhagen. He is now en route to the United States. Captain Bob is Captain Robert Bartlett, former commander of Rear Admiral Peary's North Pole expedition, who took the rescue steamer Neptune from Newfoundland on July 10 and picked up the Crocker Land party. There will be a feeling of relief and gratitude when the last member of the party shall have been safely landed at home. It is to be hoped that their researches will be of value. Men will spend money, endure discomfort and risk life in their search for truth for the world's enlightenment and betterment. Truth, scientific, moral, spiritual, is of supreme importance. This paramount estimate is put on the value of knowledge, and of wisdom, which is the right use of truth: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver and gold, and the gain thereof than fine gold." (Prov. 3 : 13, 14.)

Suggests Perpetual Motion

IT is claimed that an approach toward the solution of perpetual motion has been made by Theodor Dieden of Karlsund and that a clock of his invention has been running continuously without other agency than varying atmospheric pressures since November, 1916. His invention consists of a chain of communicating boxes with elastic sides, containing air at a pressure of 757 millimeters at a temperature of plus 18 Celsius. It is asserted that an extreme movement of 28 centimeters—nearly ten inches—can be produced by extremes of atmospheric pressure, and that this movement is communicated to the clock's works. Nothing earthly has been made to run perpetually of itself. It is God's plan to hitch organization to energy for motion, and the organization wears itself out by the movement. If the clock shall continue to run, it will do so only so long as it is harnessed up to the atmospheric pressure. We can have a perpetual spiritual motion only by fastening ourself to the Divine energy. The relation is thus expressed: "For in him we live and move and have our being." (Acts 17 : 28.)

$700 Found in Hamper

IN Malden, Mass., seven hundred dollars, which had been lying since 1907 in a false bottom cleverly fitted into a clothes hamper in a vacant "haunted" house at No. 13 Baker Street, were found the other day. It was learned from the agent of the property that a man whose name was not revealed rummaged around the cottage for several hours, came out with several cloth bags containing $700 in gold pieces and immediately left for New York. In 1907, the cottage was occupied by Charles Tucker, a grand army veteran, and his wife. Mrs. Tucker died, and after the funeral Tucker left the house and never returned. For ten years nothing in the cottage had been disturbed. Everything remained as it was when the mistress of the house was alive. Even the dishes she used in preparing the last meal she ate with her husband were left on the table. What a foolish thing it was to hide that money in the hamper! The treasure became a dead thing the minute the woman put it there. If she had put it out at interest it would have doubled itself by this time; and if it was the saving instinct she wished to cultivate, that would have been the thing to do. But how much good that money would have done! It may be the woman had some poor relatives who would have been greatly blessed with that money; it may be there were some people within a few steps of her house who were very poor and suffering for need of some help; it may be some church not very far away was in great need of funds to carry on the Lord's work. Yet the woman who hid the money in the hamper represents a large class of persons who feel that one of the important things in life is to hide away some money just for the love of the thing. Christ in enforcing a very much deeper lesson condemns this hiding of money which renders it unproductive: "Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." (Matt. 25 : 27.)

© Underwood & Underwood

Lamp Twenty-eight Centuries Old

A BRITISH soldier, digging in one of the camps near Salonica, came upon a lamp which the best authority believes was used eight hundred years before the time of Christ. How eloquently the dull dead thing talks to us of the peoples, of the doings, of the civilization, of two thousand eight hundred years ago; of those in the far-off time who lived and loved, who laughed and cried, who worked and suffered and planned and hoped and sickened and died as they have done in the many generations since and are doing now! If this mute piece of antiquity had a voice, we might hear it tell of the home to which it belonged, of the other articles of furniture that had a place with it in the house, of the appearance and history of the family to whom it ministered, how at nightfall it was lighted, and how it helped in labor, learning or recreation. It is a long distance from this old lamp to our electric light, but not further than from the darkness of midnight to the old lamp. The one great lesson the lamp teaches, the one eloquent sermon that it preaches, is light, light, light. It shone a long lifetime to make people useful and happy. How natural for Christ to use the lamp as the symbol of his followers in expressing and dispensing his truth: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5 : 16.)

Sues Beauty Doctor

A YOUNG lady in one of the large cities of the country was an attractive blonde with light hair. She concluded that God had made a mistake and should have furnished her with hair of chestnut brown, and she went to a beauty shop in that city and the proprietress agreed to dye her hair brown. After weeks of treatment the color of the young woman's hair changed; but it was not the brown she expected, but a mixture of light and brown, which made her appear ridiculous. Deeply angered at the failure, she sued the proprietress of the beauty shop for $5,000. What a poor silly creature this young woman was! She illustrates thousands of other young women in the country, whom nature has adorned with attractions, but who mar these attractions by artificial appliances of one kind or another. The beauty of nature, of simplicity, of artlessness, of thought, sentiment, and character, are the really beautiful things that belong to womanhood, and will be reflected in the features and demeanor. All female beauty, all human beauty is the reflection of the beauty of the Absolute, which is the beauty of holiness. The fact is thus expressed: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." (Ps. 50 : 2.)

Boy Killed by Dogs

THE other afternoon nine-year-old Ralph Protta of New York City was killed by two dogs, which set upon him and tore him so frightfully that he died fifteen minutes later. He had been removed to Lincoln Hospital. One version of the story is that the lad saw the dogs fighting in the yard just back of him and climbed over the fence to stop the fight, and the dogs left each other and jumped on him. The neighbors heard the screams, but it seems they did not make any efficient attempt to save the boy. A policeman was summoned and shot one of the dogs, beat the other into insensibility, and took the boy to the hospital. The owner of the dogs was arrested on a charge of homicide, but was soon discharged. It seems incredible that a tragedy like this should occur in a city of millions of people. All the pleasure that all the dogs in New York City of every kind bring to their owners, men or women, cannot atone for this precious life. A large proportion of the dogs of the great cities are dangerous and should not be allowed inside of the city even though confined in the master's territory or provided with muzzles. The Jews had a very contemptible idea of dogs and the conduct of these miserable curs might justify their estimate, as thus expressed: "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers." (Phil. 3 : 2.)

Little Girl Pickpockets

FEW cases of early depravity exceed that of the three little girls arraigned in the Juvenile Court of one of the large cities of the country the other day, on the charge of picking pockets on the streets. Two of the girls were eleven years old and the other was only nine. It was not simply a sudden impulse to do one wrong act that impelled them, for six months ago they entered into a serious agreement to pursue the calling of picking pockets of women shoppers on the street. Two would jostle the woman while the third would extract her pocketbook. Sometimes this was done by a pin at the end of a stick. Their regular haul was about two or three a day, containing an average of $1.50. The theft that caused their arrest was the stealing of a purse containing $4.77. The woman suspected them and called the attention of the police, and they ran, throwing away the pocketbook as they did so, but were arrested and made full confession of their wrong. What a pitiful picture this is, and yet the people in fine houses and with delightful moral and mental surroundings, who will read this story with horror, should remember that with similar environment their children might be no better. The bad environment, however, is no apology for that loose family training which allows the children so easily to go wrong, and is sometimes in collusion with their dishonest actions. What new eloquent appeal such incidents are to increased effort in home and city missionary work. It is sad to see children, barely out of babyhood, charged in a court with infraction of this law, human and divine: "Thou shalt not steal." (Ex. 20 : 15.)

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The King's Business

ALTHOUGH only a few months have passed since the beginning of spiritual work in the newly erected military training camps, that work has already reached proportions the extent of which few realize. Religious and social uplift is now being carried on in 186 large camps, and for lesser groups and detachments at 245 other places; 265 buildings have been erected or are under construction; 63 tents are in use; 111 new buildings are authorized and 34 additional buildings are being considered; 987 Y. M. C. A. secretaries are now actively engaged, with 1,181 yet to be assigned. There are, besides, 150 other secretaries at work overseas among our American troops. There are many other workers related to various denominations now in the field, and more to follow.

This spiritual army is ministering to the needs of a constantly growing multitude of soldiers, most of them mere youths. The laborers in this needy part of the Lord's vineyard should receive the cordial support of every Christian in America.

One of the essential features of this far-reaching effort is to place the Gospel, in convenient form, in the hands of every soldier, at each and all of the camps. There is little time to do this before the troops may be scattered. It is the "King's business" in the highest sense, and it is urgent, requiring haste.

Every reader of the Christian Herald can at least be represented in this crusade for righteousness in our great army, by the gift of a New Testament to some young American soldier. These Testaments will be carried with them wherever they go. They will be a constant ministry and may be the means of winning many souls and transforming many lives.

The Christian Herald War Testament Fund is designed to promote this work. Every dollar given to the Fund will be used to supply New Testaments to our youthful American soldiers.

Time is very precious in these days and weeks of mighty events, and portentous of so many grave changes. Grasp the opportunity and do not wait until it is gone. Our Testament did splendid service among our troops in the Spanish-American war. It can do even better service now.

We would wish to see a shower of responses from our readers, bringing with them assurance that many thousands of the brave youths of America will carry with them, wherever they go, by land or sea, at home or abroad, the precious Word.

Higher Ideals for Labor

ONE of the recent developments in the labor movement is the growing feeling of friendliness among labor men toward the church. This is particularly true of the prominent leaders. For many years, at conferences composed of churchmen, one of the leading topics of discussion was the obvious alienation of the workingman from the church. Today there is no class of men among whom the movement toward the church is more conspicuous.

Organized labor has come to a very crucial period in its history. It is face to face with some of the most perplexing problems that have ever confronted the labor movement. Needless to say, no movement can long depend upon its past glory. The momentum of its former deeds will not carry it very far along. It must constantly create new policies, cutting off that which has outlived its usefulness and taking on newer and larger conceptions of its mission and purpose.

While it is still imperative that organized labor must fight for the necessities of life, the time has undoubtedly come when it must take cognizance of the larger moral and ethical issues involved. Without minimizing its efforts so far as the physical well-being of the workers is concerned, it must make a greater effort to raise their moral and ethical standards. And this, too, regardless of what may be the attitude of those who are opposing the workingmen in their endeavors to advance the conditions of the toilers.

In this new task the church may be of real service to organized labor. It is well, therefore, that church and labor are coming closer together, because when once the time comes that organized labor and the organized church can agree upon a program, there will be no opposing force which will be strong enough to resist their combined efforts.

"In All Thy Ways—"

WE note with rising hopes that the religious press is displaying a growing interest in the movement looking to the appointment of a day or days of national prayer. This projected coordination of the nation's spiritual forces in the present crisis is a duty that admits of no denial, and one which becomes increasingly urgent.

We are in the thick of naval and military preparation. A new national army of more than a million and a half of men has sprung into existence in a few months. Furnaces are roaring ceaselessly and the thousands of industries of the nation are working day and night to insure a mighty volume of production. Every material agency under our control is being urged to its limit.

But amid this universal turmoil, we are in danger of forgetting the most vital element of all. In our strength and confidence, let us not be led away from the great outstanding spiritual truth, that with all our planning, we should seek above all else to get in line with God's will and to place ourselves, as a nation, under the divine guidance.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," is the great and unequivocal promise. And until we do acknowledge him publicly as a nation, and take counsel with him to learn his will, we cannot claim the divine direction which follows obedience to the promise. He has made of this people a great nation. He can, if we but ask him in faith and obedience, endow us with the higher qualities of leadership. We need at this time the power that makes for national righteousness. He alone has it to bestow, and we cannot obtain it unless we ask it humbly and reverently.

We may not see clearly now what there is ahead of us; but if we submit all our cares and anxieties to God, as a people, he will straighten out the tangled paths and bring us safely through. Let us ask to be kept from selfishness, from false ambition, from vainglorious desires, from all unworthy and ignoble purposes. So may we become the agent in his hands to bring blessing to the world, instead of adding to the burden of its sorrows. Let us stand for the highest ideals and for the noblest service to God and our fellow men. These we can only realize by living close to him, drawing strength from the Source of all strength, potentiality from Omnipotence, wisdom from the All-Wise.

The Stirrings of Democracy and Truth

THE farmers of North Dakota have revolted. They didn't spill any blood. They just nudged old political machines into the ditch and proceeded to govern themselves. Representative John M. Baer, first congressman elected by the Nonpartisan League, tells next week how "A new party springs up from the people."

On October 31 it will be four hundred years since Martin Luther shook the world with the blows of his hammer upon the old church door in Wittenberg. Next week Pastor Junius B. Remensnyder will trace "The Finger of God in the Reformation."

Russia! Free Russia, not yet fully unshackled, is the question and the problem of the hour. Maynard Owen Williams tells next week of the proceedings of the first Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates.

The auto-truck is bringing producer and consumer nearer together. Something about that too next week.

A Manifesto Against God

IN a little Russian village on the far Baltic the people have issued a manifesto abolishing the rule not only of the Czar but of the Deity.

Poor, ignorant victims of a cruel destiny and a still more cruel delusion!

Blinded by the glowing prospect of liberty, they madly strike alike at the source of their misery and the source of their hope.

As the blinded and furious Samson tore down the pillars of the temple, so would these poor frenzied people, wild with their new strength, tear down upon themselves the sanctuary of all human rights.

The French of the Revolution tried the same thing. They, too, declared God abolished; and for a long time it indeed seemed that his countenance was forever hidden from man by the blood that flowed from the guillotines and the flames that laughed devilishly from the torture pyres, and that his ear was closed against the curses, the wailings and the shrieks of anguish and despair that turned France into an inferno.

But sanity and God returned together. There were many ghastly graves to close up, many sore wounds to heal, many woes to ameliorate in the wrecked nation; for God, who cannot be abolished, can punish and forgive.

The ignorant people of the far Russian village know little of history. The lesson must be written out for them in their own blood. Alas, many far more learned, far wiser than they, refuse to read from the open page of life that God cannot be abolished.

The Czar could be abolished—and happy the people that can set in his stead a government of good order and justice, upon which God may smile!

Churches may be abolished; priests may be abolished; creeds and rituals may be abolished or decay; but God can no more be abolished by manifesto of men than can the steady march of time or the eternal circling of the stars be stopped by a puny cry in the dark.

Physical Reclamation of Men

DR. DUDLEY A. SARGENT of Harvard University writes that "more than one-half of the male population between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years are unable to meet the health requirements of military service. Of the largest and strongest of our countryfolk pouring into our cities barely one of their descendants ever attains to the third generation."

These are startling statements, but they express what this country has suddenly been forced to realize. The exemption boards of lay physicians are finding the percentage of physically defective men amazingly large, and the final weeding out by military surgeons will increase the number.

No suggestion for dealing with material problems of the war is more sensible or likely to be so far-reaching in its effects after the war as that of reclaiming to sound physical condition this enormous proportion of the men of our country that are physically defective.

Dr. John H. Quayle, an experienced specialist of Cleveland, has proposed to the government a plan whereby he believes possibly ninety per cent. of such men can be restored to normal condition and rendered fit for any service asked of them. His plan calls for reclamation camps in which recoverable men would be recovered. Secretary of War Baker and other government heads approve the idea.

Dr. Quayle is confident that very few are irremediably impaired; most who fall below military requirements do so because of bad teeth, flat feet, hernia, imperfect vision or hearing, functional derangement of the heart, slight bone curvatures, lack of weight, excess of weight, or other affections which under proper medical and surgical treatment can be removed.

Such reclamation of men would be the means of establishing among us a new standard of physical well-being of incalculable and permanent benefit.

Love and a Cook-Stove

WHEN Sam Clarke had all his money swept away and he and his wife were left penniless, she put her arms around his neck and said: "It's all right, Sammy; we have a cook-stove left, and I can cook."

The little cook-stove was an Aladdin's lamp. They lived happily for several years in poverty.

Then Clarke got rich again. The little cook-stove went to the junk-heap. And their happiness went with it; Mrs. Clarke is suing for divorce.

Now, it doesn't follow that wealth necessarily brings unhappiness. Lots of people get on very well with riches and hanker after more. But it does often happen that so-called "success" divides the husband from the wife. To him it brings increased cares; to her it brings idleness. Such "success" is a jealous mistress that often makes a man neglect his wife. And if she has nothing else to do than worry over it there is apt to be a lively stew of trouble.

Clarke and his wife made their grave mistake when they threw away the cook-stove and went to living in hotels. A woman with nothing in the world to do is bound to discover troubles. Her chances are about even between invalidism and divorce.

Let a healthy man in the prime of life quit work, and he goes to the dogs. He becomes a pessimist, a continual grouch, and a nuisance. The best woman in the world cannot please him long. The doors of the divorce court yawn for him.

And the woman who throws away her cook-stove and sits all day long in her nice clothes, can see more faults and discover more troubles in a week than the busy woman encounters in a lifetime.

Poverty unquestionably has its disadvantages. But it cannot be denied that the family cook-stove is a sacred shrine near which domestic happiness loves to dwell.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Inexhaustible Treasury

SUNDAY, September, 16. Eph. 3 : 8. "The unsearchable riches of Christ." I once heard Dr. Rendell Harris read the chapter in which these words are found, and he read from his pocket Greek Testament, and gave his own translation. And I remember how, when he came to the above passage, he threw out his arms in a wide gesture, as he repeated the words, "the unexplorable wealth of Christ." We had a suggestion of a vast continent, not yet tracked out, with roads only here and there. We may have discovered the continent, we have not yet explored it. We have apprehended it, we have not comprehended it. Columbus discovered America: we are still exploring its illimitable resources. We have tasted and seen how gracious the Lord is: but there are the waiting wonders of an eternal feast. And that is how the life in heaven will never become stale. We shall never lose the sense of wonder, we shall have constantly expanding powers of discernment, and every new discovery will give the soul a novel and joyful surprise.

Mr. Spurgeon used to be fond of telling how he once laughed when preparing a sermon, the only time he ever remembered to have laughed in so serious a business. He was going to preach on Joseph; at least that was where he began; but everybody knows that no matter where Spurgeon began he had a short cut to Christ, and he quickly made the journey. He had drawn a picture of the colossal stores of corn in Egypt, every granary bursting with the abundance. There was a supply of corn for seven years. And there in the midst of his vivid conception Spurgeon saw a little mouse in one corner of a granary worrying itself to skin and bone in the fear that there wasn't enough to live on!

But I am afraid that believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, who have obtained access by faith into the granaries of grace, are often found worrying in the uncertainty as to whether the resources of grace are adequate to carry them through. "Shall I be able to stand?" they ask themselves in fear. "Can my sinful inclination be really conquered!" "Shall I really be perfected at last?" It is the fear of the mouse. Yes, there's corn enough in the granary! "Where sin abounds grace doth much more abound"; and there is enough for all eternity. "Having loved his own, he loved them unto the end." We shall never outlive our Saviour's love! It is a world which will never give up its last secret: it is the "unexplored wealth of Christ." J. H. J.

"A New and Living Way to God"

MONDAY, September 17. Heb. 10 : 19, 20. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." This is the quest of the ages; not for gold, but for God. Philip's words to Jesus were representative and not merely personal. "Show us the Father." But we expect no vision of the Eternal. All Philip wanted was to know how to get to God. Jesus knew what all the sons of men were seeking, and he said, "I am the Way." There have been other pathfinders, but here is One who claims to be the Path. It is not strange that the unknown author of the Epistle to the Hebrews calls Christ "the new and living way to God." The old way was formal, ceremonial. The new way is vital, a way of life and love. From the dawn of moral consciousness in man, God has besieged the human soul in efforts to fill it with his own power and presence. Barriers of ignorance have obstructed his entrance into our lives—barriers of base passion and false pride and vain thoughts and selfish desires. God can not force us to recognize and receive him without robbing us of our free will and power of choice. But the siege is never lifted. God grows never weary in his attempt to occupy a kingdom which by right is his. The Incarnation is God's utmost effort to gain access to our inner lives. Omnipotence can go no further. The Infinite has no greater resource of argument or power. It is as if a father were seeking to reveal himself to his children by gifts of his own making. Is he an artist? He paints a picture or carves a statue. But not yet do the children see their father in his works. So he writes them, writes tenderly, simply, beautifully. He reveals his mind in letters. But not yet do the children see their father in his words. At last, having prepared them for his coming, he appears among them, walks with them, converses with them, helps them in unnumbered ways and seeks by patience and benevolence to win their love. The sunset sky is our Heavenly Father's canvas. The human form is his sculpture. The Bible is his letter to us. But, all these revelations failing, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Can any father do more than that? Is there any way to God so plain, so simple, so worthy of all acceptation, as the living Way, the Way of life? "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." More directly than through symbolism, more satisfyingly than through nature, more surely than through processes of reasoning, and more personally than through a book, we see God in Jesus Christ, the new and living Way.

C. C. A.

The Slothful

TUESDAY, September 18. Prov. 24 : 30-32. "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw and considered it well: I looked upon it, and received instruction." Physical ruin following in the wake of moral inefficiency, the blight that has settled on the powers of the soul extending to the physical environments of the moral decrepit—that is the lesson which this text conveys. Most sins leave palpable traces. In the present instance the desolation that follows upon thriftlessness and idleness is depicted. A fine estate is going to waste and ruin because of the imprudence and self-indulgent ease of the owner. From every corner of his possessions there comes to him a call to be up and doing; his sagging fences, his crumbling walls, the wilderness of weeds that is creeping up to his house flashes signals of warning to him every day. He heaves a weak sigh and relapses into his accustomed indifference. He feels disgust, but not at himself. The sense of duty and responsibility is dead in him. He no longer lives but vegetates, and cumbers the ground like the briars and weeds that dispute the territory with him. A weed is more honorable in its kind than he. His sloth acts as a blight upon his God-given faculties. He hardly deserves to be honored as an intelligent human being.

The wise man has shown his wisdom in taking notice of the ways of the slothful man and the idler, and of the inevitable ruin of body and soul that results from laziness. Idleness is the beginning of every vice, says an old proverb. Temptations to sin come oftener and with stronger force to the unoccupied.

Is there a remedy for the idler? Yes; let him, in the first place, regard his sloth and laziness as a sin for which the Son of God had to suffer and die just as for any other sin. Next, let him place before himself the example of the busy, ever-toiling, never weary Jesus. What a worker was Christ! Noble ambition this, to become a worker like Him!

W. H. T. D.

Sympathy and Sacrifice

WEDNESDAY, September 19. Gen. 22 : 12. "For now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me." God's blessings come to us as to Abraham, when we willingly surrender our loved child at his call. In blessing he will bless thee, and in multiplying he will multiply thy service; especially if thou canst say "Blessed be the name of the Lord" when bereaved of thy child.

Do not the lambs in His bosom bind our hearts closer to the Saviour? Was it not expedient for you and for them that they should be called away? Your lovely little one is yours forever now. No sin will ever stain its soul, no storm disturb its peace, no sorrow lessen its bliss. How, then, could you wish it back again?

A pastor once said at the close of the funeral of his own child, "I have never been fully able to sympathize with sorrowing ones at the funerals I have attended until today. I know your anguish now as never before." The heavenly life became more real when the mansion began to be inhabited by his children. If we could only know how much the children have gained in entering the life eternal, how many evils they have escaped, how rich their life will be forever, we would be more reconciled. If we could fully understand how the sorrows have mellowed our own hearts, molding us after the image of Christ, would we not sing praises over the triumph of the loved one, rather than dirges over our losses? Is not the anguish over a prodigal child far greater than the separation of the one now safe in the Father's house?

> "Oh, not in cruelty, not in wrath
> The reaper came that day;
> 'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
> And took the flowers away."

E. W. C.

"The Faith That Overcomes"

THURSDAY, September 20. I John 5 : 4. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Given a man, a horse, strong, young and untrained, and a journey to make, the problem is to overcome the animal, to make him docile and obedient, and so to use him on the journey. If the man is wise and skilful, he overcomes, and has a valuable servant. If the man is not wise and skilful, the horse overcomes, then the man has a bad master. Given a man, a mountain, a mountain pass or trail, and the problem is to overcome the heights. If the traveler is brave and well nourished and inured to hardship, he overcomes the mountain, and arrives at his destination. Weary he may be, but he arrives. The problem of life is the same. Given us the world to be our servant to be used, to be overcome, the question is, shall we overcome the world, or shall the world overcome us? Shall we ride the world victorious, or let the world throw us, lame and defeated, at life's end? Shall we scale the heights, and stand at evening on the summit, serene and safe, or shall we let the cliffs mock us and give up and sink in our shuddering steps?

Christianity says the world may be overcome; we may be victorious over all the forces which conspire to defeat our highest aims; we may come to the end of our days hopeful, confident, buoyant, glad, and reach the Blessed Home of the Soul. C. C. A.

Grace and Accountability

FRIDAY, September 21. 1 Cor. 15 : 10 "By the grace of God I am what I am." The apostle's ministry was drawing to a close when he wrote these words. He could look back upon many years of service. It had been full of exacting duties. The apostleship had been no sinecure. No position in the church is such to a workman that realizes the just claims that men have upon him, the great opportunities open to him, and his own insufficiency to meet all. The apostle had not spared himself. He had been an enthusiastic laborer in the vineyard. His only vacations were when he was lying ill from the bruises and stripes which he had received for preaching the Gospel, or when he was a prisoner for Christ.

Two things, however, interest us chiefly in this reflection of the apostle upon his past service. In the first place, he compares the amount of work which he has performed with that of others, and claims that the record is in his favor. Now, this is a dangerous thing to do for anybody, especially for one who is engaged in church work.

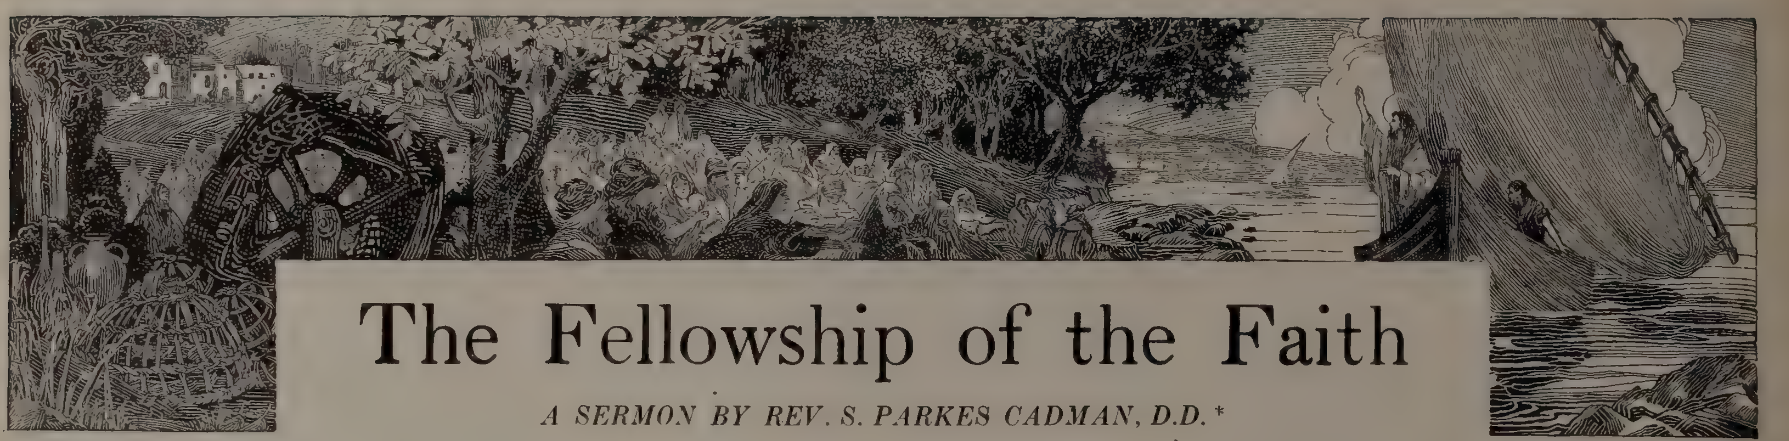
In the second place, we observe the keen sense of responsibility which grace had quickened in the apostle. He might have summed up his review of his past labors by saying: "My work was not in vain." He prefers, however, to put it thus: "His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain." The grace which was given him to minister to others he regards as a sacred trust. It is a fearful thought to him that the Lord might have misplaced confidence by assigning to him the work in which he had been engaged. His highest concern is that he be found true and faithful to his charge. The more grace we receive, the greater is our accountability. W. H. T. D.

Standing Alone

SATURDAY, September 22. Hab. 2 : 20. "Let all the earth keep silence before him." A friend of the writer once visited Westminster Abbey and was deeply impressed with the solemnity of the surroundings. As she stood in the presence of so much departed greatness, the Divine Spirit seemed to fill the mighty building. While thus communing with the departed, and worshiping in the sacred stillness of that holy hour, a priest suddenly entered and loudly muttered over, in an unknown tongue, some words of worship that seemed all out of harmony with the heavenly influences pervading the place.

In moments of overpowering agony, stillness of soul is also most expressive. Christ's silence in his great sorrow may have been partly because of his aloneness. There were none with him after the mob captured him —every one turned to his own way. Judas betrayed him, Peter denied him, and the beloved John, with the other disciples, forsook him and fled. There the matchless Master in sacred silence stood alone among his tormentors. While the shadows murmur, the deeps of such unutterable anguish are dumb. At such times words seem superficial, while silence is golden.

Behold the Man of sorrows, while he treads the winepress alone. He has no crown but that of thorns, no robe but that of mockery, no kiss but that of treachery; no wonder he stood in the Godlike grandeur that was unspeakable. E. W. C.



The Fellowship of the Faith

*A SERMON BY REV. S. PARKES CADMAN, D.D.

TEXT—Acts 2 : 47. "And the Lord added to them day by day those who were being saved."

PENTECOST was the beginning of repeated days of salvation. It inaugurated the living church, established her ministry of grace, showed how the world was to be won by divine mercy and goodness, and revealed the method of the Holy Spirit's workings in the hearts of men and women of far-separated tribes and kindreds. The entire human family was represented at that great feast which ushered in the Christian Dispensation. The power of the life-giving Gospel of the blessed God was there abundantly manifested. That three thousand souls should have been at once regenerated was indeed a magnificent victory for the risen Redeemer. But it was still more magnificent that, after the multitudes had dispersed to their respective homes, no sun rose or set without a daily increase to the holy brotherhood of the faithful. The wild Parthian, the bigoted Jew, the heathen of Asia Minor, the proselyte of the gate, the dwellers in Cappadocia, the citizens of Egypt, heard the glad tidings of the Evangel and hailed the Galilean King who had conquered death. Then was the Scripture fulfilled: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."

The gates of the grave have never been able to prevail against that revival. There was no relapse, no fatal weakness, nothing spasmodic or temporary in this spontaneous and overwhelming effusion of heavenly life. Its promise did not fade; it persisted, gathered impetus, spread to the confines of the Roman Empire, appropriated the thought and language of Greece, and within two hundred years became the predominant religion of civilization. Not only its origin in tongues of fire and gifts of speech, but its permanence, marks it as the most significant event in the annals of apostolic Christianity. Without this tenacious continuance the primitive church would have been buried in oblivion, and the fishermen who became the stewards of the mysteries of God in Christ Jesus would have disappeared from the annals of history.

MODERN revivals, while eminently useful in many respects, have sometimes been no more than a sudden gleam of celestial radiance succeeded by a denser darkness than before. How comes this? In what vital sense do they differ from their grand progenitor? The text answers the question and the context supplements the answer. The converts plucked out of decadent Judaism and proud Paganism were made steadfast and immovable by means of the apostle's doctrine and fellowship. In other words they were instructed as to what they should believe and how they should act. An ordered, systematic body of revealed truth, animated by the sincere and sacred glow of inspired love, awaited their acceptance and mediation. A tender and watchful organization which was nearer and dearer than the ties of race or blood guarded their trembling steps and encircled their lives on every side.

I am aware that the term doctrine jars on some readers, who have acquired a distaste for credal forms and dogmas. Doubtless some learned theologians have pushed their theorizings too far, and thus obscured the verities they were anxious to illuminate. But their abuse of the sacred science of theology is no argument against it. Apart from the precise statement of Scriptural teaching, the average mind would find it difficult to grasp its meanings, and the secular or prejudiced mind would riot in its misunderstandings. The conflict between the flesh and the spirit is exceedingly keen. We need these definitions and explanations which Augustine, Anselm, Calvin, Luther, Wycliff and Wesley have supplied. Their armories are full of weapons of defense and aggression. The finest intellects of the ages have spent their energies without stint that they might learn the ways of God toward men. And none can carefully study their writings without spiritual edification. Moreover, few creeds, however derided by contrary opinions, have transgressed against reality, or gone beyond the boundaries of actual human experience. The depth of iniquity, the height of pardon, the breadth of love and the length of eternity are illimitable in their dimensions. Express them as we may, their infinitudes will yet baffle us. Nevertheless, they are the substantial facts of life, whether in Time or Eternity. If we neglect them, we are in jeopardy every hour. If we disobey their admonitions and injunctions, we suffer serious detriment and face an ominous future.

WE can and we do differ on political and philosophical issues. What we think concerning art or literature is not of prime importance. But what we think of God, of Jesus Christ, of the soul, and of its immortal destiny, is transcendently important. Here, the fear of Jehovah is the beginning of wisdom, and the love of our Saviour is its end. The Alpha and Omega of human existence is contained in the apostolic doctrine.

The New Testament describes its content as "saving truths"; truths in a class by themselves; truths which we must cheerfully accept, feed upon, proclaim everywhere; truths which have interpenetrated and recovered the lost ones of every clime. They initiate in the poor prodigal and the proud Pharisee alike the processes of regeneration. They lead to repentance toward God, and to faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe how this leaven works, how it exalts and purifies the thoughts, words and deeds of the worst and the most profligate, how it molds character after the Pattern in the Mount, and stimulates exemplary conduct and sacrificial service. Then rejoice that we can still hold fast to the essence of the Gospel of Eternal Life, and that those who have made it their meat and drink have been the saving, witnessing remnant of the church in her long and stormy career.

For such saints, conversion can never be an open question. They know whom they have believed. The warm assurance that they have passed from death unto life silences their doubts and fears, and excites their liveliest trust and confidence. They utter no uncertain sound. They are not content to discuss these glorious convictions with indifference. God has actually spoken to them in the aspostolic Gospel, and his voice is always echoing in heart and memory. Superior to the allurements of Vanity Fair, and impregnable against the vices and temptations of the wicked, they pass through life and death to the fellowship of Life Eternal. If we know the day of our visitation, our Pentecost can come here and now. Oh that from heaven it might fall upon the waiting and expectant church, burn up the dross of base desire, scatter life in every part and sanctify the whole.

ONCE this miracle of miracles is renewed in believers they inevitably gravitate toward Christian communion. The earliest church membership shared, as we share, the majestic intellect of Paul, the mystic dreams of John, the practical counsels of James, the splendid visions of the Apocalypse. Not the wise and the famous, the orators and the statesmen, but a lowly and despised group divined the mind of Christ and laid bare the sources of those religious benefits which have enriched the past two thousand years. The apostolic fellowship was irresistible. It evolved out of slaves and pariahs the typical men who are necessary for human progress. We not only require better institutions, social reforms and adjustments; we also require better men to operate them. "The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul." The spiritual man is the real ruler and judge; he is the maker of destiny. He never misses his appointed way. He is subject to a leadership which can not err, to a mercy which can not fail, to a love which can not die. To have sat with Socrates and heard him discourse would have been a rare privilege. But none would think of comparing what he said with the words of those who had seen the Lord on his cross, or the empty tomb in the Garden. No wonder that the first disciples clung to the apostles, and awaited eagerly their gracious messages, which were afterward incorporated in the Evangels and Epistles.

And when these fathers in the household of faith rejoined their Lord in Paradise, believers still had a ministry, an altar, a sacrifice, a covenant. Every convert was a priest in Christ's priesthood; his offering was "a broken and a contrite heart," his charter was the promised blessing of the Gospel. So strongly did these predominate that the ordinary meal of the Christian home was transfigured and became a memorial of Christ's precious death until his coming again. The toil-worn captive, the slave scourged to his noisome den, scarcely broke bread or slept the sleep of peace and benediction without the expectation that, ere the morn, their shackles would be shattered and angels summon them to their reward above. Prayer was their constant occupation. Profound holiness and sweetness attended their supplications. It was worth while to pray, when their very persecutors believed and were made Christ's freemen. Shut in by the vast privacy of a surrounding hurricane of hate and martyrdom, their fraternity was as grateful as a winter's fire in a raging blizzard.

CONSIDER that if instead of a dwindling and depressed few, our weekly gatherings for prayer were attended—not only by deacons and elect ladies, but by the worst and most notorious evil-doers. Here kneels a Magdalene. There a Zaccheus. Yonder a Matthew. The man of infidel tendencies, the woman of selfish ease, are found side by side with the pastors and the elders. What an influence would emanate from that circle! Consider again that while the sanctuary is crowded, this or that contrite seeker, Sunday by Sunday, is asking, "What shall I do to be saved? How can I find him whom my soul desireth?" In such a Bethel and in such an atmosphere, surcharged with the apostolic fellowship, conventional and perfunctory worship would speedily vanish. Preaching would gain a seraph's flight; devotion would vibrate with the glory of the Shechinah; our joy over one sinner that repenteth would resound to the accordant strains of heaven.

Can you imagine a frigid, frozen, critical, fault-finding Pentecost? A superfluous and negligible apostolic doctrine and fellowship? Ten thousand times, No! But apply these adjectives to churches you know and are you not free to confess that they are warranted? A craving for our own deliverance, a surmounting faith in our Deliverer, must precede any adequate or successful efforts to gain disciples. As well plant a palm tree on the Alps as place a seeking soul in the cold and deadly chill of some nominal Christian churches. God will not suffer such to house the offspring of grace. He will honor us with an increase and we shall see those who are being saved added to our number day by day, when we have restored the apostolic doctrine and fellowship to their rightful paramountcy.

A Mother's Song After Battle

I DO not mourn because you call him dead—
He is not so:
I only weep to think that I instead
Was not the one to go.

Old age has nearly numbered now my days;
'Tis fit that I
Should go; but Grief suggests in countless ways:
"He was too young to die."

Could not he then far better here have served
His fellow men
By living peacefully, in right unswerved,
His three score years and ten?

Ah, thus have I so full of dumb despair
Reviewed it oft;
And sometimes, in the quieter twilight air,
God sends the answer soft:

"Too young to die? Ah, mother, say not so;
My Son, the Christ,
Of all best fitted there to serve below,
Was early sacrificed."

When thus I muse, I cease to mourn, to feel
Internal strife:
For maybe, like his Master, he could heal
More by his death than life.

TRUMAN HOLLIS WOODWARD

---

*Pastor, Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WITNESS

By Grace Livingston Hill Lutz

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

CHAPTER IV

"I THINK I'll go to church this morning, Nelly. Do you want to go along?" announced Courtland, the next morning.

Tennelly looked up aghast from the morning paper he was lazily reading.

"Go with him, Nelly, that's a good boy!" put in Bill Ward, agreeably, winking his off eye at Tennelly.

"Go to thunder!" growled Tennelly. "What do you think I want to go to church for a morning like this? Court, you're crazy! Let's go and get two saddle-horses and ride in the park. It's a peach of a morning for a ride."

"I think I'll go to church," said Courtland, with his old voice of quiet decision. "Do you want to go or not?"

There was something about Courtland's voice, and the way Bill Ward kept up winking his off eye, that subdued Tennelly.

"Sure I'll go," he growled, reluctantly.

"You old crab, you," chirped Bill, cheerfully, when Courtland had gone out. "Can't you see you've got to humor him? Give him a good dose of religion and he'll get good and tired of it. Try to toll him into a big stylish church. They're safest; but most any of 'em are cold enough to freeze the eyeteeth out of a stranger as far as my experience goes."

They chose a church at random. High-arched and Gothic were its massive walls, with intricate carving like lace in the stonework. A great silence brooded over the place, making itself felt above and beneath the swelling tones of the wonderful organ. People trod the aisles softly, like puppets playing each his part. They bent in form of prayer for a moment and settled into silence. The minister came stiffly into the pulpit, casting a furtive eye about his congregation.

They noticed almost at once that the most unpopular professor in the university was acting as usher on the other side of the church. Tennelly frowned and looked at Courtland, who sat watching the aforesaid usher as he showed people to their seats, wondering if that man had a thing he called religion, and if he was in any way related to Stephen Marshall's Christ. This was a voyage of discovery for Courtland, this visit to a Christian church. He had come to see if there was really anything in them. It did not occur to him that they had a real connection with those verses he had read in the Bible about "doing the will," or that the going or staying away from them was in any wise obligatory upon one who had allied himself with Christ. The church stood to him as to many other young pagans such as he was, for a man-made institution, to be attended or not as one chose.

The sermon was a dissertation on the book of Jonah, a sort of résumé of all the arguments, on both sides, that have torn the theological world in these latter days. Not a word of Stephen Marshall's Christ, save a sort of side reference to a verse about Jonah being three days and three nights in the whale, and the Son of Man being three days in the heart of the earth. Courtland wasn't even sure that this reference meant the Christ, and it never entered his head that it touched at the heart of the great doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. As far as he could understand the reverend gentleman the arguments he quoted against the book of Jonah were far stronger and more plausible than those put forth in its defense. What was it all about, anyway? What did it matter whether Jonah was or was not, or whether anybody accepted the book? How could a thing like that affect the life of a man?

Tennelly watched the expressive face beside him and decided that perhaps Bill Ward had been half right, after all.

On their way back to the university they met Gila Dare. Gila all in gray like a dove, gray suit of soft, rich cloth, gray furs of the depth and richness of smoke, gray suede boots laced high to meet her brief gray skirts, silver hat with a single velvet rose on the brim to match the soft rose-bloom on her cheeks. Gila with eyes as wide and innocent as a baby's, cupid mouth curved sweetly in a gracious, shy smile, and dainty little prayer-book done in gray suede held devoutly in her little gloved hand.

"Who's that?" growled Tennelly, admiringly, when they had passed a suitable distance.

"Why, that's Bill Ward's cousin, Gila Dare," announced Courtland, graciously. He was still basking in the pleasure of her smile, and thinking how different she looked from last evening in this soft, gray, silvery effect. Yes, he had misjudged her. It had been that unfortunate dress last night that had reminded him unpleasantly of the Scarlet Woman and the awful night of the fire. If he ever got well enough acquainted he would ask her never to wear red again. It was then he began to idealize Gila.

"Gila Dare!" Tennelly straightened up and took notice. So that was the invincible Gila! That little soft-eyed exquisite thing with the hair like a midnight cloud.

"Some looker!" he commented, approvingly, and wished he were in Courtland's shoes.

Courtland was like his gay old self when he got back to the dormitory. He joked a great deal. His eyes were bright and his color better than it had been since he was sick. He said nothing about the morning service, and by and by Bill Ward ventured a question:

"What kind of a harangue did you hear this morning?"

"Rotten!" he answered, promptly, and turned away. Somehow that question recalled him to the uneasiness within his soul for which he had sought solace in the church service. He became silent again, and, strolling away into Stephen's room and closing the door, sat down.

THERE was something strange about that room. The Presence seemed always to be there. It hadn't made itself felt in the church at all, as he had half hoped it would. He had taken Tennelly with him because he wanted something tangible, friendly, sane, from the world he knew, to give him ballast. If the Presence had been in the church, with Tennelly by his side, he would have been sure it was not wholly a hallucination connected with his memory of Stephen.

Why hadn't he felt its power in the church? Was it because of the presence of such people in the temple as that little mean-souled professor, whom everybody knew to be insincere from the crown of his head to the soles of his sly little feet? Was it because the people were cold and careless and didn't sing even with their lips, let alone their hearts, but hired it all done for them?

And then there had been that call of his name when he was with Gila Dare, as clear and distinct, like a friend he had left outside who had grown tired of waiting, and worried about him. Why hadn't the sense of the Presence gone with him into the room? Would a Presence like that be afraid of hostile influences? No. If it was real and a Presence at all it would be more powerful than any other influence in the universe. Then why?

Could it be that he had gone deliberately into an influence that would make it impossible for the Presence to guide?

FINALLY he locked the door and knelt down with his head upon the worn Bible. He had no idea of praying. Prayer meant to him but a repetition of a form of words. There had been prayers in his childhood, brought about by the maiden aunt who kept house for his father after his mother's death, and assisted in bringing him up until he was old enough to go away to boarding-school. They were a good deal of a bore, coming as they did when he was sleepy. There was a long, vague one beginning, "Our Father which art," in which he always had to be prompted. There was "Now I lay me," and "Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, bless the bed I lie upon; Wish I may, wish I might, get the wish I wish tonight!" Or was that a prayer? He never could remember as he grew older.

He did not know why he was drawn to kneel there with his eyes closed and his cheek upon that Bible.

Later he stood in his own room by the window, watching the great red sun go down in the west and light a ruby fire behind the long line of tall buildings that stretched beyond the campus. The glow in no wise resembled, but yet reminded him, of the fire in the glowing grate of the Dare library. Why had that room affected him so strangely? And Gila, little Gila, how sweet and innocent she had looked when they met her that morning with her prayer-book. How wrong he must have been to take the idle talk that people chattered about her and let it influence his thoughts of her. She could not be all that they said, and yet look so sweet and innocent. What had she reminded him of in literature? Ah! he had it! Solveig in Peer Gynt!

How fair! Did ever you see the like?
Looked down at her shoes and her snow-white apron!—
And then she held on to her mother's skirt-folds,
And carried a psalm-book wrapped up in a 'kerchief!—

THAT ample purple person by her side, with the dark eyes, the double chin, and the hard lines in her painted face, must be Gila's mother! Perhaps people talked about the daughter because of her mother, for she looked it fully! But then a girl couldn't help having a foolish mother! She was to be pitied more than blamed if she seemed silly and frivolous now and then.

What a thing for a man to do, to teach her to trust him, and then guide her and help her and uplift her till she had the highest standards formed! She was so young and tiny, and so sweet at times! Yes, she was, she must be, like Solveig.

CHAPTER V

IT was a great source of question with Courtland afterward, just why it should have been he that happened to carry that telegram over to the West Dormitory to Wittemore, instead of any one of a dozen other fellows who were in the office when it arrived and might just as well have gone. Did anything in this world happen, he wondered?

He could not tell why he had held out his hand and offered to take the message.

It was not because he was not trying hard, and studying for all he was worth, that "Witless Abner" as Wittemore had come to be called, had won his nickname. He worked night and day, plunged in a maze of things he did not quite understand until long after the rest of the class had passed them. He was majoring in sociology through the advice of a faddist uncle who had never seen him. He had told Abner's mother that sociology was the coming science, and Abner was faithfully carrying out the course of study he suggested. He was floundering through hours of lectures on the theory of the subject, and conscientiously working in the college settlement to get the practical side of things. He had the distressed look of a person with very short legs who is trying to keep up with a procession of six-footers, although there was nothing short about Abner. His legs were long, and his body was long, his arms were long, too long for most of his sleeves. His face was long, his nose and chin were painfully long, and were accompanied by a sensitive mouth that was always on the quiver with apprehension, like a rabbit's, and little light eyes with whitish eyelashes. His hair was like licked hay. There was absolutely nothing attractive about Wittemore except his smile, and he so seldom smiled that few of the boys had ever seen it. He had almost no friends.

He had apparently just entered his room when Courtland reached his door, and was stumbling about in a hurry to turn on the light. He stopped with his lips aquiver and a dart of fear in his eyes when he saw the telegram. Nobody but his mother would send him a telegram, and she would never waste the money for it unless there was something dreadful the matter. He looked at it fearfully, holding it in his hand and glancing up again at Courtland half helplessly, as if he feared to open it.

Then, with that set, stolid look of prodding ahead that characterized all Abner's movements he clumsily tore open the envelope.

"Your mother is dying. Come at once," were the terse, cruel words that he read, signed with a neighbor's initials.

The young man gave the gasp of a hurt thing and stood gaping up at Courtland.

"Nothing the matter, I hope," said Courtland, kindly, moved by the gray, stricken look that had come over the poor fellow's face.

"It's mother!" he gasped. "Read!" He thrust the telegram into Courtland's hand and sank down on the side of his bed with his head in his hands.

"Tough luck, old man!" said Courtland, with a kindly hand on the bowed shoulder. "But maybe it's only a scare. Sometimes people get better when they're pretty sick, you know."

Wittemore shook his head. "No. We've been expecting this, she and I. She's been sick a long time. I didn't want to come back this year! I thought she was failing! But she would have it! She'd got her heart so set on my graduating!"

"Well, cheer up!" said Courtland, breezily. "Very likely your coming will help her to rally again! What train do you want to get? Can I help you any?"

Wittemore lifted his head and looked about his room helplessly. It was plain he was dazed.

Courtland looked up the train, 'phoned for a taxi, went around the room gathering up what he thought would be necessities for the journey, while Wittemore was inadequately trying to get himself dressed. Suddenly Wittemore stopped short in the midst of his ineffective efforts and drew something out of his pocket with an exclamation of dismay.

"I forgot about this medicine!" he gasped. "I'll have to wait for the next train!"

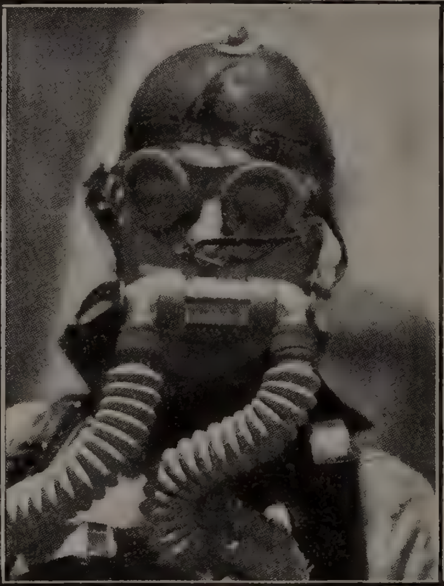
He seized his hat and would have gone out the door, but Courtland grabbed him by the arm.

"Hold on, old fellow! What's up? Surely you won't let anything keep you from your mother now."

Continued on page 962

Places and People in the News

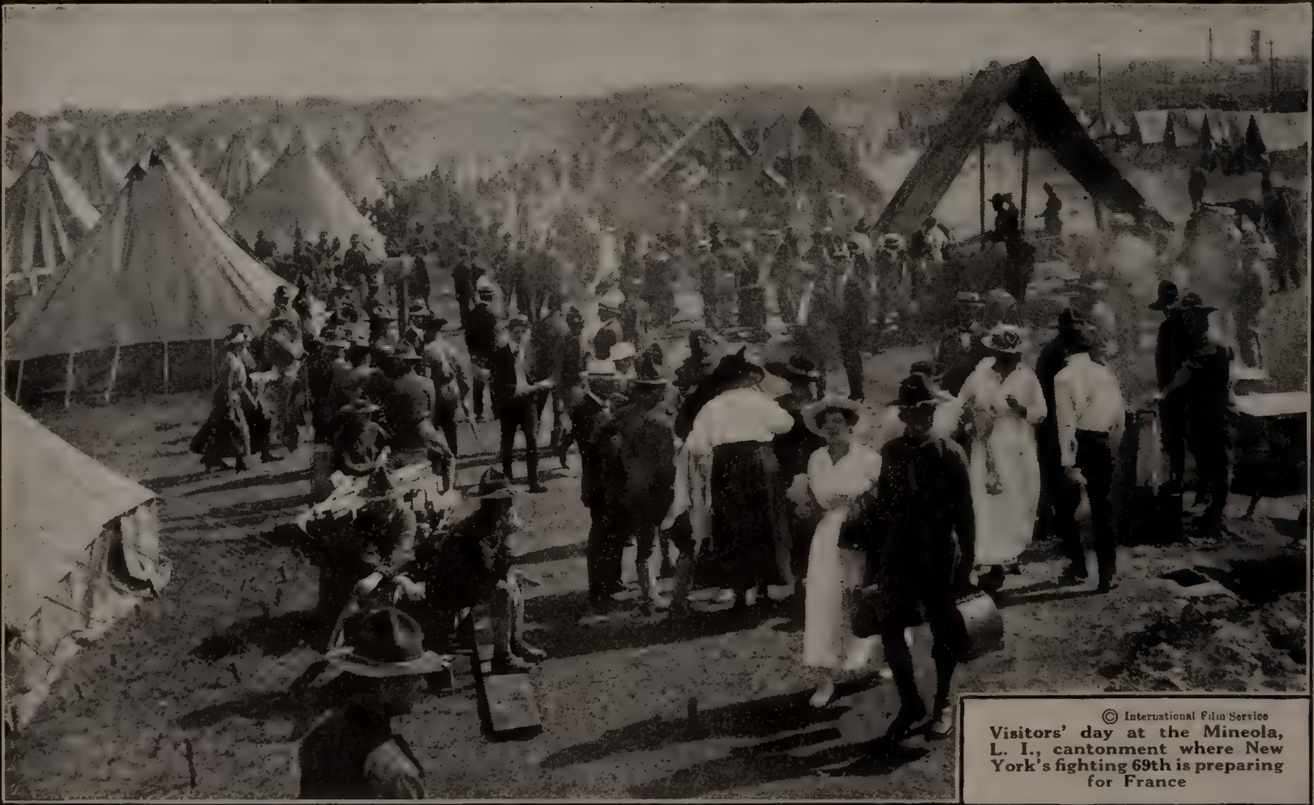
Donald MacMillan, Arctic Explorer, Returning Home



American Soldier ready to meet a gas attack

Captain J. W. Mattes, 2d Ill. Art., killed by rioting negro soldiers at Houston, Texas

A crow's
tion post
Wood, ar
French ar
ing Dea



© International Film Service

Visitors' day at the Mineola, L. I., cantonment where New York's fighting 69th is preparing for France

This "Sammy" speaks French and the horse looks as if he understands

Below, Wash Day at a Naval training station

© International Film Service

servacourt
the tack-
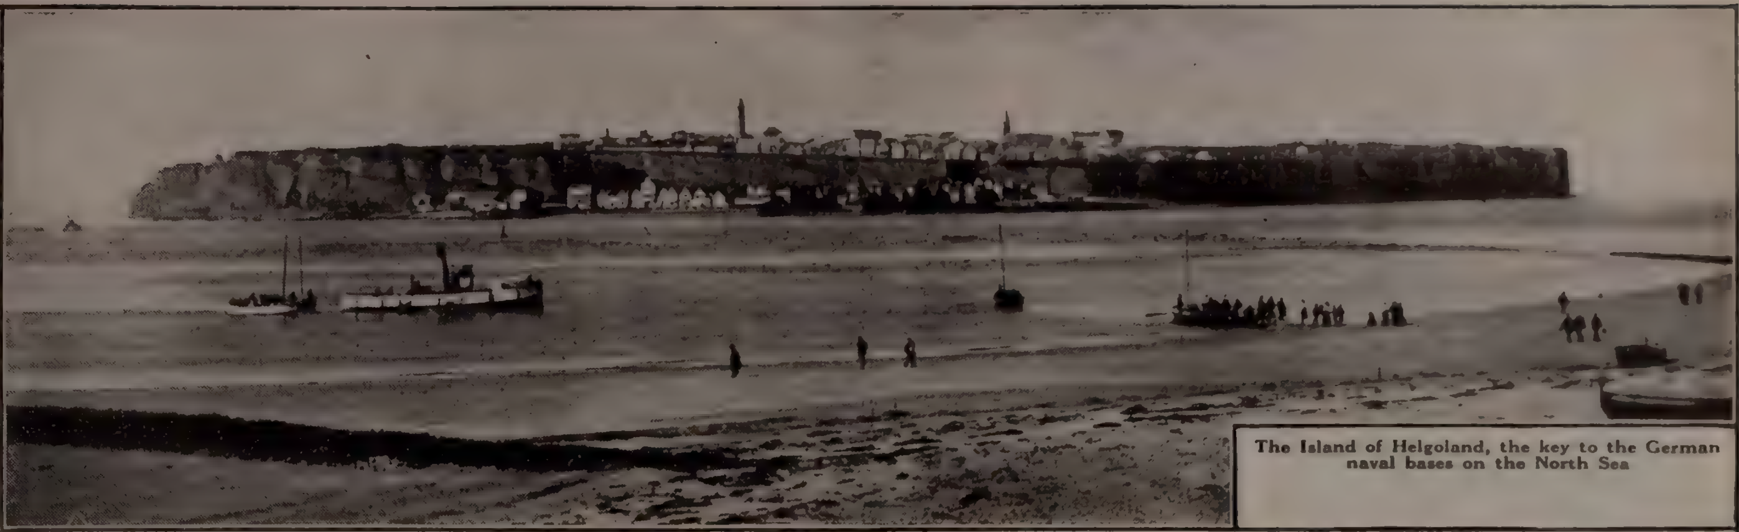
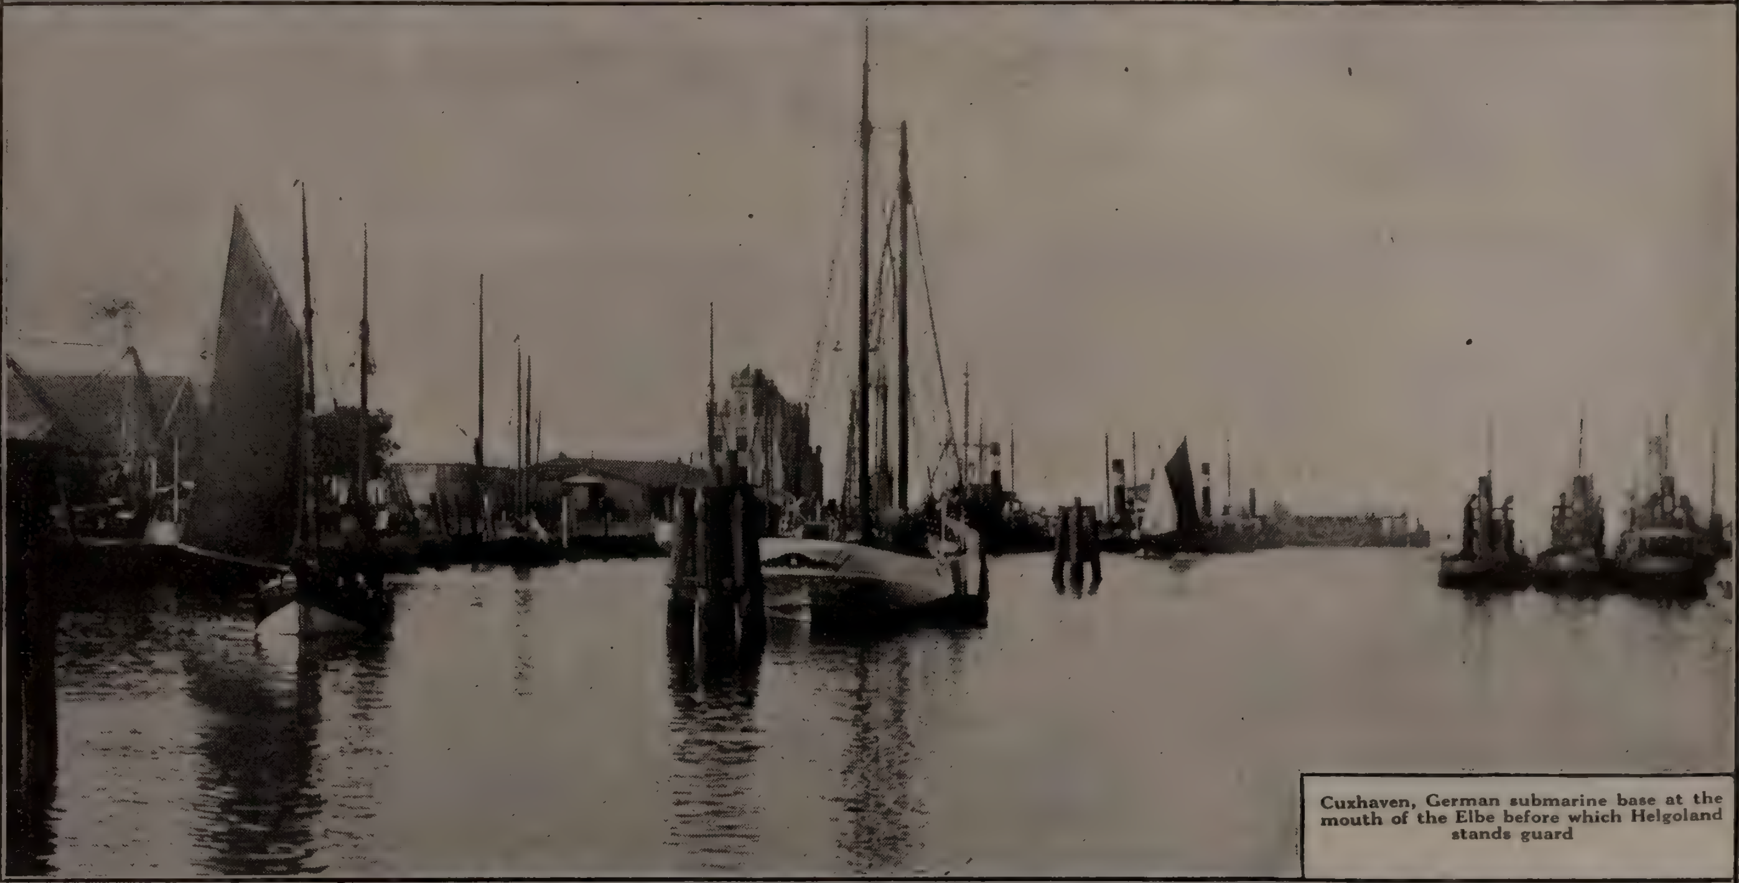
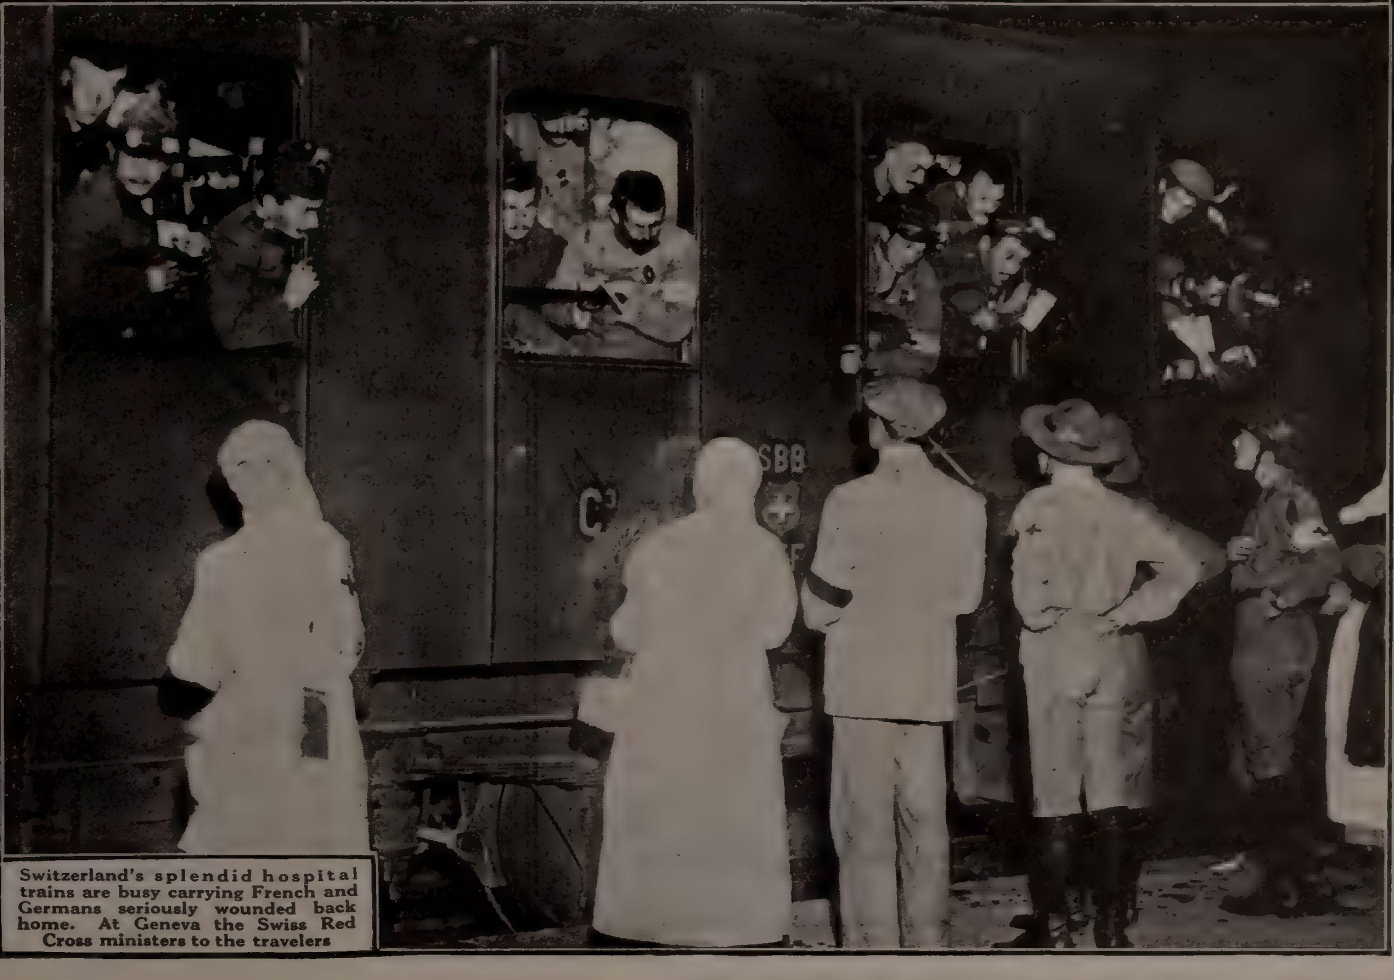
Hill



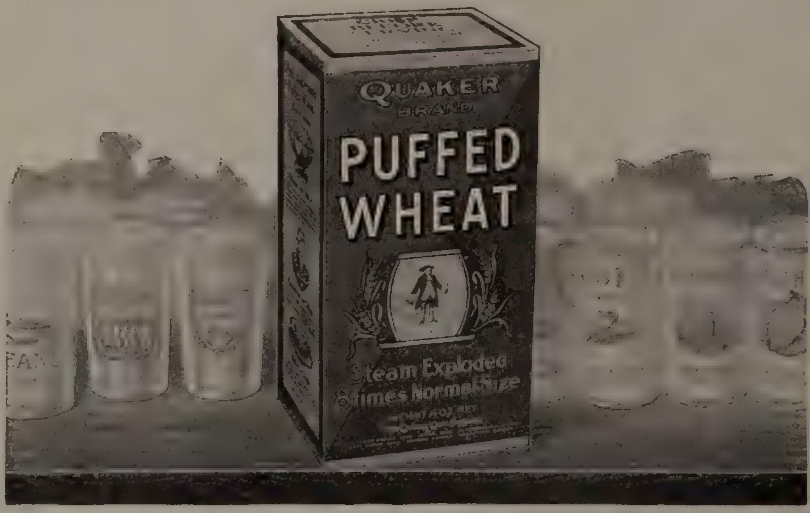
The Island of Helgoland, the key to the German naval bases on the North Sea



Cuxhaven, German submarine base at the mouth of the Elbe before which Helgoland stands guard



Switzerland's splendid hospital trains are busy carrying French and Germans seriously wounded back home. At Geneva the Swiss Red Cross ministers to the travelers



The One Lone Package

On the Pantry Shelf Shows a Wrong Idea of Puffed Wheat

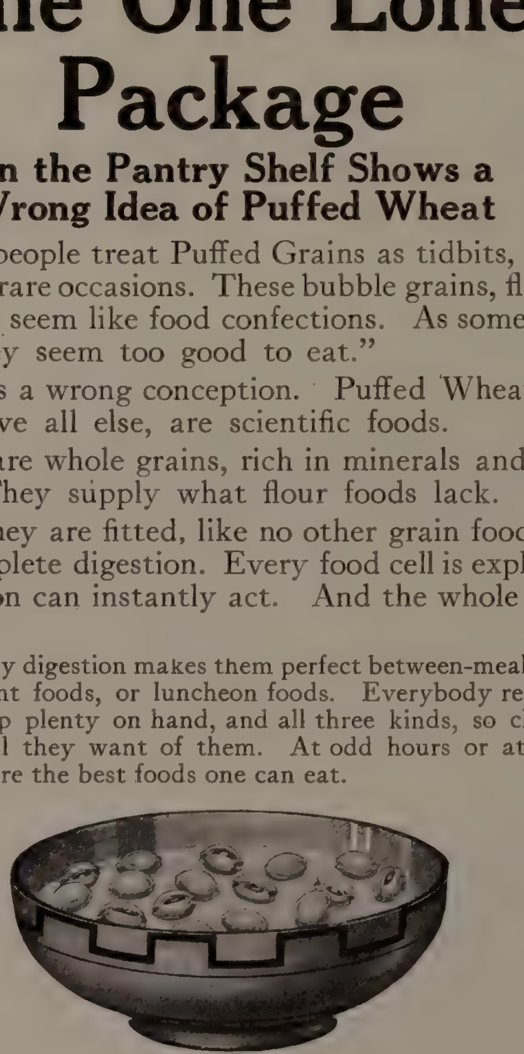
Some people treat Puffed Grains as tidbits, to be served on rare occasions. These bubble grains, flavory and flaky, seem like food confections. As some folks say, "They seem too good to eat."

That is a wrong conception. Puffed Wheat and Rice, above all else, are scientific foods.

They are whole grains, rich in minerals and vitamines. They supply what flour foods lack.

And they are fitted, like no other grain foods, for easy, complete digestion. Every food cell is exploded, so digestion can instantly act. And the whole grain feeds.

Their easy digestion makes them perfect between-meal foods, or good-night foods, or luncheon foods. Everybody revels in them. Keep plenty on hand, and all three kinds, so children can have all they want of them. At odd hours or at mealtime, they are the best foods one can eat.



Puffed Wheat in Milk

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice

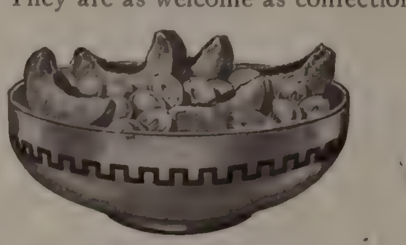
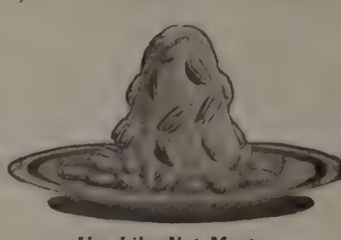
and Corn Puffs

Each 15c Except in Far West

Serve in the morning with sugar and cream, or mixed with any fruit. For luncheon or supper, float in bowls of milk. Use as wafers in soup, as nut-like garnish for ice cream. Douse with melted butter, like peanuts or popcorn, for an after-school delight. They are as welcome as confections, and far better for the child.



Mix With Fruit



Use Like Nut Meats

(1685)

The Witness

Continued from page 959

"I must!" The words came with a moan of agony from the sensitive lips. "It's medicine for a poor old woman down in the settlement district. She's suffering horribly, and the doctor said she ought to have it tonight, but there was no one else to get it for her, so I promised. She's lying there waiting for it now, listening to every sound till I come. Mother wouldn't want me to come to her, leaving a woman suffering like that when I'd promised. I only came up here to get car fare so I could get there sooner than walking. It took all the change I had to get the prescription filled."

"Confound it all, Wittemore. What do you think I am? I'll take the medicine to the old lady—ten old ladies if necessary! You get your train! There's your suit-case. Have you got plenty of money?"

A blank look came over the poor fellow's face. "If I could find Dick Folsom I would have about enough. He owes me something. I did some copying for him."

Courtland's hand was in his pocket. He always had plenty of money about him. That had never been one of his troubles. He had been to the bank that day, fortunately. Now he thrust a handful of bills into Wittemore's astonished hands.

"There's fifty! Will that see you through! And I can send you more if you need it. Just wire me how much you want."

Wittemore stood looking down at the bills, and tears began to run down his cheeks and splash upon them. Courtland felt his own eyes filling. What a pitiful, lonely life this had been! And the fellows had let him live that way! To think that a few paltry greenbacks should bring tears!

A few minutes later he stood looking after the whirling taxi as it bore away Wittemore into the darkness of the evening street, his heart pounding with several new emotions. Witless Abner for one! What a surprise he had been! Would everybody you didn't fancy turn out that way if you once got hold of the key of their souls and opened the door?

To be continued

Where Steel Is King

Continued from page 954

Just now we need a great deal of steel for shipyards and also for the Army and Navy. There is an additional demand for motor trucks and steel cars, and also for barbed wire for entanglements along the lines of the trenches. In one week the government orders included 1,000 tons of sheets to be made into camp equipment and powder tanks; and we have to supply railroad material not only for the United States, but also for our Allies, including the Russians. They are making steel shells at several plants within a short distance of Birmingham, and the great munition plants are eating up steel by the thousands of tons. The prospect is that there will be a steady expansion of the iron and steel industry as long as the war lasts, and at its close the demand for the products will continue on account of the rehabilitation of Europe and the exports demanded by the cessation of steel shipments during the war to many parts of the world. Indeed, there is no industry in the United States that cuts so great a figure today as that of iron and steel.

And now let me show you something of the iron and steel resources of the South. The Southern states have, it is estimated, about 75 per cent. of the coking coal of the country, and the United States Geological Survey has figured that its iron resources are in the neighborhood of three billion tons, of which almost one-third is already available. In this Birmingham district alone there are ore reserves of nearly 360,000,000 tons ready for use, and an equal amount can be brought forth for the future. There is another district near here, which is known as the Chattanooga-Gadsden region, in which the available ore reserves are over 86,000,000 tons, with an ultimate product more than five times as large. Great beds of iron are scattered throughout the southern Appalachian mountains, and there are valuable deposits in Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

TO give you some idea of what the South is doing in iron and steel, I have gone through some of the great plants here at Birmingham. Take, for instance, that of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, which is situated at Ensley, not far from the city. The property belongs to the United States Steel Company, which has expended about $32,000,000 for improvements since it was taken over, and which has now authorized the rapid expenditure of $11,000,000 more to meet the demands of the war. This plant is now working at its full capacity upon orders for the United States government. It is turning out steel rails and structural steel and it will install machinery for other products in connection with the needs of the nation.

The buildings of the Ensley plant already cover almost twenty acres. They include blast furnaces as big around as a haystack and as high as a ten-story house. These furnaces are largely heated by gas, which is a by-product of the coke ovens. They have altogether a capacity of 2,000 tons of pig iron per day.

Everything is on an enormous scale, and that after such cost-efficiency methods that the savings are calculated to the hundredths of thousandths of a cent. Everything possible is done by machinery, and the human labor, which includes the work of an army twice as large as that which Xenophon led on his march to the sea, is reduced to the minimum. Nothing is wasted, and the company is alive to new ideas.

DURING my stay I followed the processes of making the iron ore into steel rails. I saw the iron and coal as they came from the mines, and watched them as they were dumped with the limestone into the furnaces. The Birmingham ore is mixed with other impurities. Only about one-third of it is pure iron, and the whole has to be smelted or turned to a liquid in such a way that the impurities may be taken out and only the iron left. This is the work of the draft furnaces. The ore is put in with limestone and coal, and from the bottom a hot blast is introduced which turns the whole interior to a boiling, bubbling liquid. The blast has been heated in great stoves to a temperature of 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit, and it is blown into the boiling liquid at a pressure of twenty pounds to the square inch. It reduces the mixture of coal, limestone and coke to a golden liquid in which the impurities rise to the top and float, as foam does upon water. The iron, which is the heaviest part of the mixture, sinks to the bottom, and the furnace men know just where it ends and where the floating impurities, known as the slag, begin. At the latter point a hole is made in the side of the furnace and the slag is drawn off, leaving the iron below. Later, the molten iron is drawn out through a hole much lower down. It is now pig iron, and is ready to be turned into steel.

After this the iron goes to the Bessemer converter, an immense egg-shaped barrel hung upon axles. The converter is made of steel plates and lined with material that will withstand the fierce heat of the molten iron. In the bottom are set cylinders of fire clay which are so arranged that an air blast may be forced in at a pressure of thirty pounds to the inch. The barrel is turned on the side while the molten iron is poured in, but it rises to an upright position as the air roars through the metal. As it does so flames leap forth from the top. They come out in millions upon millions of sparks, forming mighty fireworks of giant skyrockets, which grow and grow until the sparks join together in flames. As the blast continues the flames rise higher and higher. They grow whiter, reaching up and licking the steel roof far overhead. The torch of flaming gases is ten feet in diameter. It is a fireworks display that is to be seen nowhere outside a steel plant. The heat is about 3,000 degrees; it is an artificial volcano of flaming fire. The flames contain most of the impurities that have been left in the pig iron. The converter drives them out, and at the end of twelve minutes the liquid iron has been turned to liquid steel.

Here in Birmingham the metal is further treated by the open hearth process to remove some other impurities and fit it for making the purest of steel.

At the end the steel comes out from the furnaces in the shape of ingots, which are molded from this molten liquid. Each ingot weighs three tons. It is a great block of steel about a foot square, reaching from the ground to the height of your shoulder. It is now the raw steel of commerce and is ready to be run through the rolling mills and other machines which turn it into the thousands of products used in our various industries.

THE war is revolutionizing the steel industry of the United States. It is increasing its efficiency and wiping out the waste. It is creating new by-products and is making our country independent of many things which it formerly imported from Germany and other parts of the world. One sees evidences of this at every step in going through a great plant like that of the United States Steel Trust at Ensley. Just back of the mighty furnaces, which are now smelting more than three-quarters of a million tons of iron a year, are long rows of the old-fashioned bee-hive coke ovens, which only a few years ago made most of the coke of the United States. These ovens are of brick. Each of them is about twelve feet in diameter, and so tall that a man could stand upright within it. The coal was put in by hand through a hole in the top. It was fired by hand.

Today the coal is turned into coke in ovens which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to build. The ovens are in a great series as high as a three-story house and several hundred feet long. They are charged automatically by steel cars, which carry the coal on tracks high above them and drop it into the ovens. After the coke is made, steel hands worked by machinery push the blazing chunks into steel cars, and the train is carried under a sprinkler which floods it with water. As the cold water touches the super-heated mass a volcano of steam rises like a mighty cloud into the air. It takes only fifty-five seconds to cool the great mass.

In this new method of making coke about the only thing that is lost is this steam.

By means of the by-product ovens they save at Ensley every month more than 43,000 tons of coal, which would be a big monthly output for one of our largest coal mines; and such a mine would probably be exhausted within thirty years.

They use the coke dust and nut coke as fuel, and the result is hundreds of millions of cubic feet of gas, which are used for running the works. Twenty-five million cubic feet of such gas goes to the steel plant, where it is used for the creation of power. And then they have the by-products from the gases created in making the coke, which yield in round numbers, from each hundred thousand tons of coke, more than one million gallons of tar, over fifteen hundred tons of sulphate of ammonia, and almost sixty-three thousand gallons of benzol products.

During my stay at the works I have gone through the by-product plant which creates these great savings. The sulphate of ammonia, which is so largely used for fertilizer, comes from the ammonia gas in the coal. This is passed through sulphuric acid and the mixture is reduced to a powder by running it through a centrifugal machine like that in a sugar refinery. When the stuff comes out it looks much like brown sugar, but it is really a combination of sulphur and coal. It is worth about $90 a ton at the present war prices, and the saving in this product alone amounts to about $4,500 per diem.

I understand that a great deal of this ammonia fertilizer is now being saved in the by-product ovens of this part of the South. It is said to be one of our chief sources of nitrogen, and some authorities claim that there is a sufficient amount of it in a single acre of bituminous coal four feet thick to maintain the fertility of an acre of soil for 640 years. Within the past year or so something like 2,000,000 tons of coke have been made in the by-product ovens of the state of Alabama alone, and such ovens are now being built in Kentucky, Maryland, Tennessee and other southern states.

DURING 1915 the by-product coke plants of the United States made altogether about 16,000,000 gallons of benzol. This is the product which the Germans use largely for making dyes, colors and medicines of one kind or other. It has risen greatly in value since the war, and this has led to the building of many benzol plants. The one here is said to have cost something like a million dollars. I have gone through it during my stay. It consists of great stills and other machinery. It makes various kinds of oil from which chemical products are formed, including not only dyestuffs and medicines, but also photographic material and important explosives.

Another valuable by-product of the furnaces is the slag. This formerly went to waste. You may see mountains of it about almost any old smelting works. It defaces the landscape and it costs a great deal to carry it away and throw it onto the dump heap. Here at Birmingham this slag is crushed and ground into a fertilizer, which sells at wholesale at $10 and upward per ton. It is bagged up like cement in little sacks of 100 pounds each, and is shipped over the country to the farmers and gardeners, who use it to increase our food supply. The slag is also turned into brick. This has been attempted again and again without much success, but they are now making a brick which is as smooth as porcelain and almost impervious to water. The slag, in fact, has been turned from a loss to a profit.

One of the surprising things about the modern steel plant is the small part that man has in the work. The machinery is largely automatic, and although there are 17,000 employees connected with the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company you see but few of them about the furnaces and in the great rolling mills.

President Crawford believes that the health and spirits of the men in the plants are as important a cost-efficiency item as the character of the machinery and the raw material that go through it. He has altogether about seventeen thousand workmen, of whom eight thousand are negroes, about seven thousand white Americans, and, in addition, more than two thousand foreigners.

AS it is now, the steel plant has a medical corps of thirty-eight doctors, and these are stationed at the mines and villages which are away from the cities. There are also some in the main plant. It is arranged so that the doctors will take care of a workman and his family at a fixed charge of 75 cents a month the year round. The men pay their bills on the principle of the Chinese. That is, they pay the doctors to keep them well, and the longer they are sick the more it costs the doctor. This service is not compulsory, but I understand that 85 per cent. of the men have accepted it and have themselves and their families cared for in this way.

In connection with the welfare work of the plant is the industrial village of Fairfield, modeled after the town of Gary, on the shore of Lake Michigan. This was not built by the steel company, but by a local syndicate, which sent men over the country to study industrial villages and make the plans. The town was laid out by a landscape gardener, and it is one of the model mill towns of the South. It covers altogether about 240 acres, which include an athletic field, a central park area and amusement grounds, a town hall, a library, a Y. M. C. A., a public bath, a bank and some stores. The colored laborers have a settlement of their own over the hills nearby.

BLUE STREAKS

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

They Can Reclaim Your Bicycle

On the inviting autumn roads to woods and river, you'll very likely find more bicycles equipped with Blue Streak Tires than you saw last spring.

If you are one of those who trudge around on holidays and after school instead of riding where you please, you probably know the reason.

The wheels that had poor tires went back to garret and shed during the summer because tire trouble took all the sport out of riding.

In this best bicycle season of the year their owners are reclaiming them with Blue Streak Tires.

If you have an unused bicycle, take off its most troublesome tire and compare it with one of these Goodyears.

You'll find the Goodyear lighter and therefore use will prove it vastly stronger.

The toughest tire rubber is live and very light.

That's the kind of rubber out of which we make your Blue Streak.

We could make the tire much heavier by using only a small amount of light real rubber mixed with heavy chemicals.

But such a tire wouldn't last as Blue Streaks last.

And they won't make pedalling as easy as Blue Streaks make it for you.

In every way they help you get all the trouble-free sport and easy speed out of your bicycle.

If you go to several dealers before you buy, you'll find that the price everywhere is $3.25 for this non-skid tire with the good looking blue streaks.

And you'll generally notice that they are the only tires for which the demand is so great that they are sold by more than one dealer in your locality.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.
Akron, Ohio

Boys everywhere are wearing Goodyear Bicycle Caps. Ask your dealer. They're especially popular with Bicycle Clubs—name of club printed on the cap.

GOODYEAR
AKRON

ACME QUALITY
The Sign of Paint Success

THERE are Acme Quality Paints and Varnishes for every painting need. Not a room in your home, from kitchen to attic, but will be brighter and cheerier for a touch of Acme Paints now and then. The "Acme Quality Painting Guide Book" and our smaller book on "Home Decorating" will tell you what kinds, colors and quantities of paint to use for any purpose. Both books are free on request. If your dealer cannot supply you, write us.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS

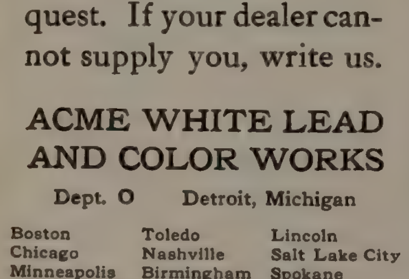
Dept. O Detroit, Michigan

Boston Toledo Lincoln
Chicago Nashville Salt Lake City
Minneapolis Birmingham Spokane
St. Louis Fort Worth Portland
Pittsburgh Dallas San Francisco
Cincinnati Topeka Los Angeles

Have an
Acme Quality Shelf

For the many "touching-up" jobs about the house, keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; a quart of Acme Quality Floor Paint of the right color.



Daniel in the Lions' Den

International Sunday School Lesson for September 23
Daniel 6

A Story of Heroic Loyalty

By Rev. George D. Allison

WE close our brief study of the book of Daniel with that favorite story of childhood, "Daniel in the Lions' Den." It is so familiar that we are in danger of failing to do it justice. If we teach it in the Sunday school we must find means of renewing interest. for the boys and girls think they know all about it.

Link it up, then, with the experiences of the Christian martyrs who were not miraculously saved, but none the less were beloved of God. Get your scholars to find, if possible, some modern heroes who braved death and danger because of steadfast loyalty. Look up Adoniram Judson's imprisonment in Burma, for example.

Tested in Old Age

Though far past the threescore and ten, Daniel is yet to undergo his sorest trial. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego had been tested in youth; Daniel's proving comes with age. The moral is that at no time of life are we exempted from the common lot. Sooner or later the severest proving descends upon us all. The trustworthiness of these Hebrew captives is founded on religious habits of life—prayer, self-control, knowledge of the will of God.

We can all make this a lesson for our own lives, with its unexpected testings, its fiery ordeal, its proof of the harmlessness of the threats of the enemy. The Jews regarded it also as a type of their experience as a nation, which came through the fiery furnace of war and the lions' den of captivity with increased loyalty to Jehovah.

A Good Man's Enemies

Rulers come and rulers go, but Daniel is still useful and distinguished. However, we learn that he, like his friends, has bitter enemies. Why was this? In all probability he was too conscientious an administrator to please the corrupt and selfish officials. His integrity was a continual rebuke to their unscrupulousness. No doubt he suffered the unpopularity that besets a reformer nowadays when he interferes with the "graft" of dishonest public servants.

So Daniel's experience throws a light on Jesus' saying, "Woe to you when all men speak well of you." He means that for apostles, for missionaries, for all Christians with a real mission. Sooner or later they will find some one opposing them because of their cause. Then they may know that they are accomplishing something.

Woe to the Christian Church when she has no enemies!

The foes of the Jewish statesman plotted his ruin by processes of law! What a foolish and absurd statute for any king to sign—that no petition should be asked of God or man except of the king for thirty days!

But there are many silly and some sinister statutes proposed every year in our forty-eight state legislatures and innumerable city councils. Some of them are pernicious laws, intended to be broken; others are subtly planned for unworthy ends. Terrible now as then is the use of law for wicked purposes.

Men of conscience must obey God rather than men. While Christians have great respect for the "powers that be," as the apostle enjoined, there come times when laws cannot be kept. There are times when we feel that laws are not binding on our consciences. But we must be very sure before we act.

Open Windows

Those open windows of Daniel account for his getting more light on a good many subjects. They are typical of the open hearts and seeing eyes that men of prayer achieve. The windows of their souls are ever open toward higher and nobler things.

Daniel remembered Zion though it was far away beyond that Babylonian horizon. He remembered the God whom he had worshiped in that beloved temple. Though the temple were ruined now, the God of Israel still lived, and in Daniel's heart hope was kindled for the return from exile and the new Israel now near at hand.

How it brightened his life to go apart into that "upper room" where he saw beyond Babylon's gold and clay and breathed a fresher and diviner air! Alas that countless lives are darkened because they never go up to the place of prayer and never fling open those windows of the soul that look out toward the kingdom of the ideal!

A Good Habit—and Not Ashamed of It

Who shall estimate the safeguarding power of prayer? Countless deeds of evil needed only the second thought that comes with meditation before the White Throne to be nipped in the bud. It is a psychological impossibility to make a real attempt at prayer, and be just as mean and just as selfish as before. During his long life, Daniel was kept straight by the steadying influence of good habits. In Babylon's turmoil he walked with a serene heart, because he had listened for the voice of God.

Daniel had never paraded his praying "to be seen of men." But he felt that this was no time to close his Jerusalem windows. He could have prayed in a dark corner and no one would have been the wiser; but he chose to stick by his colors openly. There is a time to show where you stand, and he felt that such a time had come.

Do you remember, in "Tom Brown," the story of the boy who said his prayers on his knees beside his bed in the dormitory? Many a lad compromised his principles in just such a way. First, saying a prayer in bed, instead of on the floor. What difference does it make? Too often it means no prayers at all within a month.

What did Daniel pray? He just gave thanks as he usually did. Not a word about praying for deliverance from the approaching danger. He quietly went on his way trusting.

Another Royal Blunderer

When Darius discovered how the conspirators had used his decree, he realized what a fool he had made of himself. He showed some sense by being "sore displeased with himself!" Like many another man given great power, he simply blundered in the exercise of it. So he fretted and fumed and tried to find some way of glozing over his mistake.

He found none. He dared not openly admit his error and break his own absurd decree, as he should have done.

So this timid autocrat allowed himself to be used as a puppet, like most absolute rulers of every age.

The Den of Lions

There are plenty of records of the use of wild beasts in persecutions before and after this. Such cruelties were visited upon many Jews and Christians ere we could enjoy the spiritual liberty won for us by these steadfast martyrs. Some of them God may have delivered by "stopping the mouth of lions," but more went up to him in agony and prayer.

However, there are spiritual dens of lions into which confessors are still thrust. There are yet occasions when brave men are sorely tried by a hostile and vicious environment. When we look into the midst of the snarling sarcasms and snapping criticisms, we can remember that Daniel was not spared from the night in the den, but nevertheless came out triumphantly by the help of his God.

God's Angels

Even today we need the Hebrew faith in the nearness of divine help. Either by his Spirit or by the forces which he controls, God is at hand.

Daniel quietly tells the king of his deliverance. There is no bitterness at the injustice he has suffered, the ill-return for long and devoted service. Instead, he gives utterance to the very

Are You Watching the Jews?

The Jews ought to be watched.

Perhaps you don't like Jews. It's not strange. A good many centuries ago God said they were going to be disliked by the whole world. He said he would "make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so bad." They would be "tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms of the earth, to be an execration, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all."

But you and I had better not have any part in fulfilling that prophecy against the Jews.

The Jews are a sensational people. They always have been; they always will be.

What promises to be the most sensational series of articles on the Jews ever written for popular publication is just starting in The Sunday School Times.

It has been planned in consultation with one of the greatest Christian Hebrews of our day, David Baron, of London.

This startling series on the Jews will include masterly discussions of such topics as the following:

Why the World Hates the Jew
Why Is the Jew the Keystone of the World?
Ought the Jews to Have Palestine?
What Kind of Messiah Do the Jews Still Expect?
What Does Zionism Mean?
What Does the Jew Think of Christianity To-day?
Are the Jews Finally to Convert the World?
Has This War Any Relation to the Jews' Prophesied Future?

Some of the strongest writers in the world, on both sides of the ocean, are going to let in the light.

This extraordinary series of articles starts at once in The Sunday School Times. They will appear twice a month or oftener.

You can secure the first three months of the series for 25 cents.

The Sunday School Times will be sent to you every week for 13 weeks, commencing with the first Jewish article, for the special rate of a quarter of a dollar, if your order is received by Saturday, September 22. The regular single-subscription price is $1.50 a year; you are saving one-third by replying at once.

And remember: this sensational Jewish series will give both the Bible and the newspaper a new and thrilling interest.

The Sunday School Times Company
1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

What five or ten friends,—ministers, Sunday-school workers, Bible students, or uninterested folks who ought to be interested,—can you think of who would be lastingly grateful to you for getting this Jewish Series into their hands?

Send us their names and addresses, and we will gladly mail them a free specimen copy of The Sunday School Times containing an article in the Jewish Series. To insure this, just write "Jewish Series" on the list of names you send us.

"What can I do to make her stronger?"

Your physician has told you that it is simply one of the thousands of cases of "debility." You have tried certain "tonics" without avail, but you have not yet tried Sanatogen, the true food-tonic.

And Sanatogen may well prove her salvation, for remember that thousands of women who were weak and weary have derived new strength, a new joy of living from its use.

Olive Schreiner, the famous writer, gratefully exclaims:

> "Nothing that I have taken in years has given me such a sense of vigor as Sanatogen."

Lady Henry Somerset, one of the thousands of well-known people who have endorsed Sanatogen, writes:

> "Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep, invigorates the nerves and braces the patient to health."

This help of Sanatogen is not the false help of a mere stimulant, but the constructive aid of a true food-tonic which gives the exhausted system the natural elements for building up the blood, strengthening the nerves, improving digestion.

How well it performs this function, physicians in every land—21,000 of them have endorsed Sanatogen in writing—know from actual observation.

This is the best possible assurance you could have that you will never regret using Sanatogen.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

Sanatogen comes as a fine, white powder which may be taken easily, dissolved in water, coffee, milk, etc. Sample package will be sent FREE on request, together with the new "Text Book on Sanatogen." Address The Bauer Chemical Company, F 26 Irving Place, New York City.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes, from $1.00 up.

THE FOOD-TONIC APPROVED BY SCIENCE

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913.

Sanatogen

ENDORSED BY OVER 21,000 PHYSICIANS truth of our Golden Text, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them."

Retribution

The fifty-seventh Psalm furnishes the key to this story in the sixth verse.

This is the exact experience of Daniel's adversaries. Their scheming and planning, their infamous decree, bring them into the lions' den where they sought to cast others. Such is the retribution that befalls the malicious.

Alas, that they brought their wives and children there too! For the fierce wrath of the tyrant was not quenched with a limited penalty. It was cruel and unjust. Yet it remains true and unutterably pathetic that those who stoop to iniquity drag down others with them, and especially those who are dearest and nearest. Next to himself, the family, the children, of an underhanded and vengeful man suffer most the retributions which he plans for others.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN,

Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Get Good Music

WITH the small school and large, good music is half the making of a good session. Good music, like other worthwhile things, doesn't happen. It comes as the result of planning and hard work. Certain essentials must be had.

1. The Leader. That leader need not be a man. Women as a rule have better technical training in music than men. Almost every community has a music teacher, some young woman who can play and who, with a little encouragement, can transform bad singing into good.

2. The Book. In the last few years, the leading denominations have been issuing splendid Sunday school hymnals. Any Sunday school supply house will probably send samples of several of the fine independent hymnals. The words should be carefully looked into as well as the music; for music, after all, is but a vehicle for the word.

3. Select Hymns in Advance. It is almost criminal to select the hymns upon the platform. Music and words should fit the lesson thought and impress some truth to remain in the memory. The opening hymn should be bright and the closing one a consecration or prayer-song as the last impression.

4. The Orchestra. More and more, in small schools as well as large, young people who play the violin or cornet or some other musical instrument are taking part in the school music.

5. Hymns and Authors. One splendid way of interesting the school in music is to have once a month a day for hymns and authors. There is an interesting story attached to nearly every hymn.

Material for such hymn-Sundays can be found in the following books:

Sankey's "Story of the Gospel Hymns" (Sunday School Times Co.).

"Famous Hymns of the World" (Allan Sutherland).

"Story of the Hymns and Tunes" (T. Butterworth & Brown).

6. Learning New Music. Use ten minutes before or after the session for this, or a week evening with a social time to follow.

The words of the new hymn should first be read to catch their meaning and spirit. They may be read by a good reader, scholar or teacher. Then the melody should be played several times, with a violin, if possible. Then attack the song with confidence.

7. Get All at It. See that words or music are in the hands of all. Introduce competition of class against class, section against section, boys against girls. In the Junior Department I have at times found splendid results from the boys whistling and the girls humming the verse or chorus. Avoid pieces pitched too high or too low.

Luther said, "Music is the fairest gift of God," and Bevan, "Singing is one preparation for heaven; for John has left us in no doubt of its large place in the life of the redeemed."

6 dish-washing hints

WE recently asked a Domestic Science expert who is devoting her life to the cause of women's work in the home, to give us a few practical suggestions on dishwashing. She lately devoted three months to a close study of dishwashing methods.

The information she gave us proved so interesting that we decided to give it to our women friends throughout the country. Probably some of the suggestions will not be new to you, but among the following you may find two or three new dishwashing helps worth trying.

1 To cleanse vinegar cruets and other glassware on which unsightly deposits have accumulated, fill the bottle with a half-dozen buckshot or small pebbles, and warm water to which is added a pinch of baking soda and a sprinkle of washing powder. Shake vigorously. If the deposit is very thick, leave overnight. Then rinse thoroughly with clean, hot water.

2 The drainboard should always be at left of the sink, and high enough to prevent stooping at work. Have stacking surface to the right. Wash dishes of same size together. The dishpan should conform to the size and shape of the sink. Sitting down to work makes the strain less.

3 To clean a tea- or coffee-pot which has a rim of deposit inside, fill the pot with warm water to which one-half teaspoonful of washing powder is added. Let stand until the next meal; pour off, rinse in clear, hot water and lay with top off in the air and sun.

4 Never place dishes or utensils which have contained custard, gelatine, egg, or starchy food directly into hot water; always scrape thoroughly first, and rinse in cold water; then wash in hot water.

5 One of the important uses of dishwashing is to sterilize the dishes so they will be perfectly sanitary before the next meal. This can be done only if the water is hot enough, and also if it contains some natural sanitary cleansing agent like a good soap or washing powder.

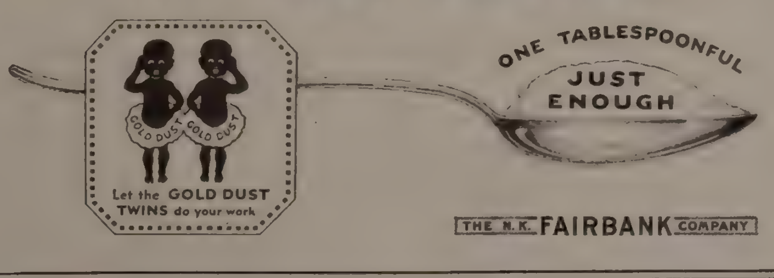
6 A factor in easy, thorough dishwashing is the complete mixture of the water and the grease-cutting agent. This can be accomplished by using a grease-dissolving washing powder such as Gold Dust which dissolves quicker and more uniformly than soap in cake form.

If your experience confirms what this woman authority says about grease, we believe it will pay you to sprinkle a heaping tablespoonful of Gold Dust in your dishwater. You will find that it quickly dissolves the grease. And with the grease out of the way, your dishes will wash and dry a great deal quicker.

Gold Dust is economical to use whether in large or small packages. Be sure it is Gold Dust you get. For sale everywhere.

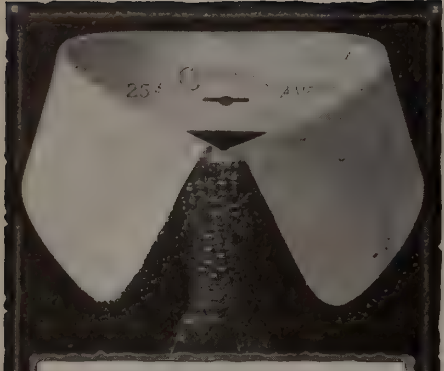
GOLD DUST

The Busy Cleaner



ONE TABLESPOONFUL JUST ENOUGH
GOLD DUST
GOLD DUST
Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work

THE N.K. FAIRBANK COMPANY



Challenge
Cleanable Collars

Freshened in a jiffy—with a bit of soap and a damp cloth. Cleanable instantly. Challenge Collars laugh at collar smudging, dirt and perspiration. Of course, an exact "linen" collar appearance.

25c each—at your dealers or direct. Try them. State style and (half) size. Illustrative booklet on request.

E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co.
THE ARLINGTON WORKS
725 Broadway, New York
DU PONT

Snug Comfort for Tired Feet
in
Parker's
Arctic
Socks
Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.

J. H. PARKER'S ARCTIC SOCK

Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 50c a pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

"She's the Best Dressed Woman in Town"

"I wonder how she does it! I spend twice as much on clothes as she does and yet she has more dresses and they always have a style that I can't buy."

"Why, don't you know? She makes all her own clothes. She learned at home through the Woman's Institute."

Learn Dressmaking at Home

Through the Woman's Institute you, too, can learn at home, in spare time, to make all your own and your children's clothes and hats and save half on everything. You can make last year's dresses over into stylish new garments. You can make fashionable dresses from inexpensive materials.

Wonderfully simple and practical courses explain every detail. Graphic pictures show just what to do.

If you wish, you can take up dressmaking or millinery as a business. Our training fits you to secure a position with good pay or to open a shop of your own.

What Some of Our Students Say

I am so proud of the dress I have made. My clothing bills are less than half what they were before.
Mrs. James Walton, Pocatello, Idaho.

I have made many interesting garments from the instructions. They seem to have an individuality that you do not get from a ready-made garment.
Mrs. J. MacLean, Providence, R. I.

I have earned enough making dresses for relatives and friends to pay for my entire course.
Miss Dorothy Harmeling, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Have made four hats from old materials and like them better than any I have ever had and have always paid 8 to 20 dollars for my hats. Have never before made or trimmed a hat.
Mrs. E. A. Tombler, San Francisco, Calif.

I have, with knowledge already gained and past experience, made, trimmed and sold hundreds of dollars' worth of hats to satisfied customers.
Miss Beulah Johnson, Coats, N. C.

I wonder why we stay untaught when the way is so easy and pleasant and within the reach of everyone.
Mrs. J. O. Reynolds, Corning, N. Y.

Send this coupon, or a letter or post card today for handsome illustrated book and learn from the experience of 6000 delighted students what the Woman's Institute can do for you. Please state which subject interests you most.

Woman's Institute of Domestic Arts and Sciences, Inc.
Dept.37-W, 425 Fifth Ave., New York City
Please send me booklet containing full information about your course in the subject marked X.
☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Millinery
☐ Professional Dressmaking
Name________________________
Specify whether Mrs. or Miss
Address______________________

The Human Side

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

EVERY magazine and newspaper, lately, has been publishing war photographs. They appear on editorial pages, and in the advertising sections, and on front covers. And the average reader of magazines and newspapers looks at them more or less interestedly and finds in each one a timely value—a vague value—and nothing more.

And yet, a few days ago, a little letter from a Texas woman drifted into the Christian Herald offices and, separating itself from the chaos of other mail, came to our attention. And each of us who read it, I think, felt a lump in his throat and brushed away a misty feeling about the eyes. This is the letter:

"The Editor of the Christian Herald: It was with great surprise and delight that I found the picture of my boy, my curly-haired boy Jack, in the group of Army and Navy pictures in a recent number of your magazine.

"It seems so strange that out of the thousands of Navy boys, and in a group of only four, there stands Jack. I do hope that three other mothers were made as happy as I.

"My boy left as soon as war was declared, and I only received a censored message, occasionally, from him, and I know that he is somewhere on the great sea looking for periscopes. So you can understand how my heart rejoiced to see that picture. Thank you for printing it."

AFTER I laid the letter down I looked up the picture that she mentioned. It was on the center page of the August 8 issue of the Christian Herald. It was a picture that I had noticed casually, as I would have noticed any other used for illustrating purposes. But after reading the letter, I found myself really seeing the boy who was standing up in the foreground, with the ocean breeze ruffling his curly hair. And I thought of that mother who only knew that he was "somewhere on the great sea hunting for periscopes"—the mother who had looked at the picture, and who, perhaps, with a soft little cry, had snatched it close to her breast. The mother who had, very likely, kissed the coldly impersonal gray and white sheet of paper.

I do not think that I will ever again look at war photographs in a careless way. Not if they are pictures of the boys and men who are going bravely into battle on land and sea. Every time, after this, that I see a picture—be it a cheap newspaper cut or a handsome photogravure—I will look at it carefully, prayerfully, thinking of the woman heart somewhere that would rejoice to see it.

It's hard to go out into a world of guns and battle smoke and biting flame to fight for an ideal—particularly if one is as young, as normal and happy-souled as Jack—Jack with the curly hair. But it is infinitely harder to sit at home and wait for the small censored message that may come, and may not. It's a thousand times harder to sit at home with a prayer on one's trembling lips and the vibrations of a million guns in a tortured heart. But that's what countless mothers—the mothers of every face that looks out of a war photograph—are doing, Jack's mother among the rest.

The human side of war is the side that most of us, across an ocean from the actual fighting, miss. We see defeats as a number of men killed—but men that are just men not our men. We see victories as just a group of men who have triumphed over mighty odds. But they, too, are not our men. And yet, now that United States troops are actually in France and that other troops are on the way to foreign homes, it will be our men who are losing or winning. It will be our men—our brothers and sweethearts and husbands and sons. And we shall find ourselves watching the grim lists that come back; we shall find ourselves worriedly scanning the minutest of news items; we shall find that each picture holds a real meaning for each of us.

"It seems strange," says Jack's mother, "that out of the thousands of Navy boys, and in a group of only four, there stands Jack. I do hope that three other mothers were made as happy as I."

It does seem strange that, out of all the thousands of Navy boys, the one face in the world that matters to her should peer out at Jack's mother. It does seem strange until one remembers that there are eyes so tender that they can notice even a tiny sparrow's fall. It does seem strange until one thinks that back of the little earth with its little wars—back of the great luminous stars that hang gem-like in the sky—there is a Presence that knows. And then it doesn't seem strange at all. It seems just the sort of a thing that should happen.

I wonder, with the writer of the letter from Texas, if the other three mothers were as glad as she was. I wonder, with her, if the other three mothers saw the photograph. And I hope, with her, that they did. For a small thing like a dimly pictured face can often ease an aching, lonely heart.

WAR is cruel. War always will be as cruel as long as the world strives for its existence with gun and sword and bayonet. But war is also a great opener of blind eyes, a great leveler of persons, and above all a great magnifying glass, a magnifying glass which shows up many facts that one would regard as unimportant, would not see in their truly gigantic size.

The letter from Jack's mother is of the magnifying sort. It tells us that little things like photographs can be worth while—that all the human side of the world, all the warm loving side, cannot be swept away by anger and strife. The letter from Jack's mother was one of the bright spots of a dark time. It showed that somewhere, even in the depths of uncertainty, there may glow a light of inspiration—of hope.

Wayside Ministry and Spiritual Clinic

IN connection with the unique open-air evangelistic meetings which Rev. Dr. Robert F. Y. Pierce, pastor of the North Baptist Church of New York City, has been conducting for several years past for business men in Wall Street and other financial centers in New York, he has instituted a practical form of Christian work which has been styled by the press of the city "a spiritual clinic." Dr. Pierce is called "The Wall Street Preacher," and his evangelistic addresses, illustrated with original and artistic crayon sketches, are listened to with deep interest by large numbers of bankers, brokers and business men and by women of all classes. The meetings are held three or four times a week, from May to October, in front of the Stock Exchange and at Broad and Wall Streets, during the noon hour. He speaks from an automobile, and from eight hundred to a thousand men attend each service to hear the Gospel message presented in a forceful and manly way to men. An average of a hundred men daily at these meetings lift the hand for prayer. Many conversions have followed, families have been reunited, and untold good has resulted. Young men "missing from home," who have come to the city with high hopes, but have been caught in the whirl of the city life and have gone down in the tides of sin, have been rescued and either returned to their homes or have made good in positions which Dr. Pierce has helped them to secure.

Dr. Pierce has an office on Wall Street in the vicinity of the Exchange, where he spends an hour or two following his open-air services to talk privately with those who desire spiritual or moral help. Much good has already come of this personal work. In a spiritual sense it is a "clearing house."

Dr. Pierce was led to undertake this peculiar ministry during his pastorate in Scranton, Pa.

MAGAZINE
BARGAINS

Prices Subject to Change Without Notice

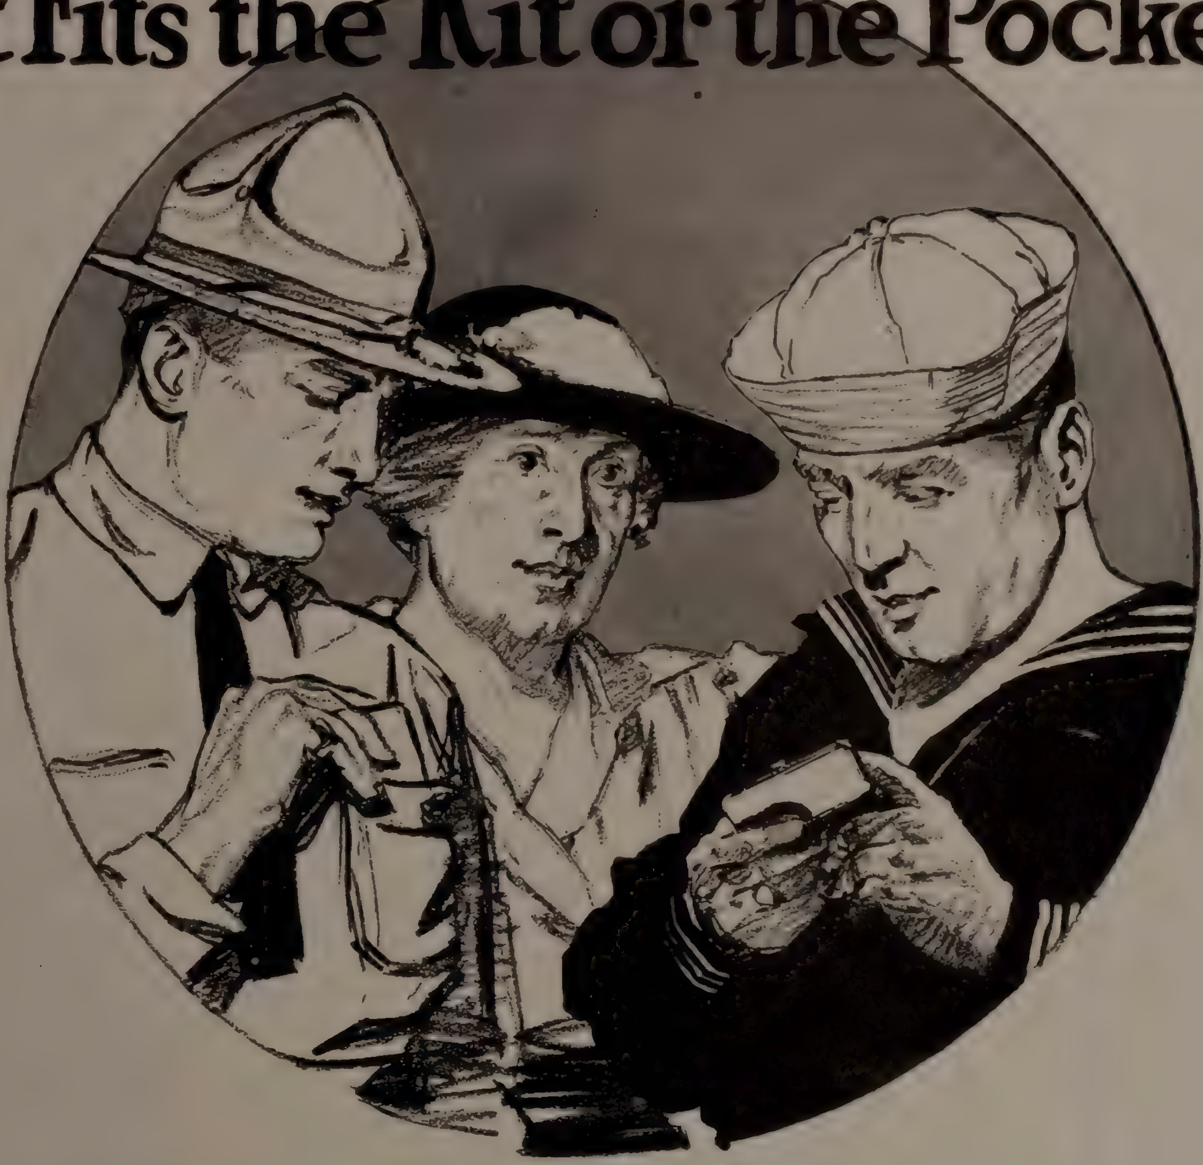
THE prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, except in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower prices. If the magazines wanted are not given below, ask us for special quotation. Canadian postage, 50c additional; foreign, $1.00.

Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife.	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's World....	$2.00 .50	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Christian Herald... People's Home Journal..........	$2.00 .50	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Christian Herald... Mother's Magazine	$2.00 1.50	$2.10	Save $1.40
Christian Herald... Ladies' World......	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Every Week........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Boys' Magazine....	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife. McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .75 .75	$2.25	Save $1.25
Christian Herald... Etude (Music).......	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Little Folks..........	$2.00 1.00	$2.50	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald, 1 yr. Am. Poultry Ad., 2 yrs. Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen....	$2.00 1.00 .50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald.. Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.25	$2.60	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald.. McCall's (pattern). Woman's World... Plain and Fancy Needlework......	$2.00 .75 .50 .50	$2.60	Save $1.15
Christian Herald... Delineator.........	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review...	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald.. McCall's (pattern). People's Home Journal........... Ladies' World.......	$2.00 .75 .75 1.00	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern).. Youth's Companion	$2.00 .75 2.00	$3.75	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... *Woman's Home Companion..... *American..........	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.00	Save $1.00
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.25 1.50	$4.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.50	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... *Youth's Companion *Review of Reviews..	$2.00 2.00 3.00	$4.75	Save $2.25
(*Must go to same address)

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York, N. Y.

Gillette U.S. Service Set

It Fits the Kit or the Pocket



SOMETHING SPECIAL FOR OUR BOYS

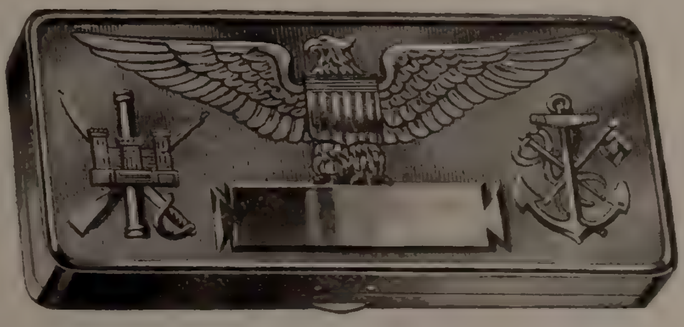
THERE is little enough one can do for the brave fellows who are going to the Front — few things one can give them to take along. A soldier's kit is reduced to the bare necessities: most gifts have to be left behind.

But here is something that is a prime necessity to every man in every branch of the Service. The U. S. Regulations call for a clean shave—every man jack must have a shaving outfit.

The new Gillette U. S. Service Set represents three years' War experience, condensed into one compact little metal case — that fits the kit or slips into the breast pocket. The solid metal case is heavily nickel-plated and embossed with the Insignia of the U.S. Army and Navy.

There is a nickel-plated Gillette Safety Razor and Blade Box with an indestructible Trench Mirror inside the lid.

No Strops or Hones. Nothing to carry but the compact little case, and new Blades can be had anywhere in France, England, Russia and Italy.



The Gillette U. S. Service Set is a leading specialty with Gillette Dealers everywhere—$5

GILLETTE SAFETY RAZOR COMPANY, BOSTON, MASS., U. S. A.

GILLETTE SAFETY RAZOR COMPANY OF CANADA, Ltd., 73 St. Alexander St., Montreal

If he has already gone, you can send him a Gillette U. S. Service Set by mail. If your dealer does not have this Set, send us $5 and your Sammie's address, and we will make free delivery direct to his hands from our Paris Office, or to any American Cantonment from our Boston Office.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 954

Idaho and Montana. Oregon troops patrolling the forest were ordered to kill any person found starting a blaze. . . . Official investigation of an explosion and fire which killed five men at the Mare Island Navy Yard on July 9 reported that the explosion was the result of a plot. . . . The Federal Shipping Board announced on August 27 that five cargo ships, aggregating 27,500 tons, would be put into service on October 1 to give fortnightly service to South American Pacific ports, via the Panama Canal. This is a service for which the South American west coast has been waiting for twenty-five years. . . . Earl Grey, former Governor-General of Canada and trustee of the Rhodes' Scholarship Trust, and a great friend of the United States, died in England on August 29. . . . The 1918 class of the United States Military Academy at West Point was graduated on August 30, ten months ahead of the schedule. . . . On account of the riot in Houston, Texas, it was announced on August 29 by the War Department that they would not call for service negroes drawn by the selective draft until the question as to the quartering of these negroes in the South had been settled.

Lets Children Work. Federal Judge Boyd of the Western District of North Carolina on August 31 declared unconstitutional the Keating-Owen Child Labor Bill under which Congress prohibited the handling in interstate commerce of the products of child labor. The court based its judgment on the admission of government counsel that the law was intended to prevent undue labor of minors within the states, even though permitted by the state laws. The government will appeal and the Department of Justice is confident that the Supreme Court will uphold the law.

More Bonds. The Ways and Means Committee on September 1 reported to the House a bill providing for further bond issues to a total amount of $11,538,945,460, of which all but $4,000,000,000 is for the loans to the Allies. Appropriations for various war expenditures under consideration in the House on September 1 totaled $7,065,000,000. Secretary McAdoo announced that the next offering of "Liberty Loan" bonds would probably be made about October 1, the sale to be completed by November 7 and the amount offered to be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000.

◆

Progress of the War

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

INTEREST during the past week has again been centered on the developments, both military and governmental, in Russia and on the Italian offensive on the north Isonzo front.

In Russia the State Council—a gathering of representative men from all parts of Russia—met at Moscow and continued in session for three days. As far as is known, it accomplished little more than to show that there are such radical differences of opinion among the various political factions into which the Russian people are now divided as to make the present prospect of any agreement between them very slight. Later reports indicated that much good might ultimately result from the conference.

General Korniloff, who attended, presented a rather pessimistic picture of the conditions in the army, arising from the breakdown of discipline and the general demoralization resulting from the revolution. He demanded authority to reintroduce the death penalty for refusal to obey orders, insubordinations, etc. This the provisional government has granted. From some of the speeches made at the Council, it can be gathered that the Russian railways are in a very bad condition. Three years of war have strained the permanent way and the rolling stock tremendously, particularly in view of the fact that far less than the usual repairs have been done during this time. Indeed, one of the high Russian railroad officials stated that the Trans-Siberian—Russia's only way of bringing in supplies after her northern ports are frozen up—was hardly working at all at present on account of the lack of coal and the general condition of the line, and that unless help were speedily brought, the entire Russian system of railroads would cease working by November 1. Such an occurrence would mean the most terrible suffering in Russia this winter by famine, and would render it absolutely impossible for her to even feed her armies, let alone supply them with the other things necessary for them to keep the field.

On the Riga front, near Prinsk, near the center, on the Galician front near Brody, on the Bukowina front to the east of Czernowitz, and finally on the Rumanian front, Russian troops have thrown away their arms and abandoned their positions in droves without waiting even to be attacked. This abandonment was particularly noticeable on the Rumanian front north of Fokshani. Here, one day last week, a whole Russian division, 20,000 men, deserted their trenches, and on the next day nearly as many others followed their example. The result was that the Russian troops who remained on duty, and their Rumanian allies, were obliged to fall back all along the line, and permitted the enemy to occupy important crossings of the Sereth River, which afford easy entrances into eastern Moldavia.

THE disposition of the forces of the Teutonic allies is said, on good authority, to be as follows: Western front—German, 148 divisions, or 1,960,000 men. Eastern front—Germans, 88 divisions; Austrians, 41 divisions; Bulgarians, 4 divisions; Turks, 6 divisions; or 2,840,000 men. Macedonian front, including Albania and Serbia—Austrians, 8 divisions; Germans, 3 divisions; Turks, 6 divisions; Bulgarians, 20 divisions; or 740,000 men. Italian front—Austrians, 38 divisions, or 760,000 men. About two German divisions, or 80,000 men, are said to be in Turkey.

The Allies report that since the beginning of the spring campaign, on April 9, they have taken 167,780 prisoners on all fronts.

The Argentine Republic and Germany have settled their differences arising from the torpedoing of the Argentine ship Toro.

The Canadian conscription law was signed on August 28 by the governor-general and became law.

The Italian offensive on the Isonzo front has now lasted sufficient time for us to judge, to some degree at least, the objective which this offensive has in view. Plotting the gains of ground mentioned by the Italian bulletins, it becomes at once evident that they are practically all to the north of Gorizia, and extend from that town about twelve miles to the north, and at the point of maximum penetration about eight miles to the east of Canale. A couple of miles north of the northern end of the newly won territory along the Isonzo is the point where the rivers Idria and Baca fall into the Isonzo. North of the Idria River, running east and west, is a range of rugged and steep mountains, broken by deep valleys, which culminates north of Tolmino in Monte Nero, 7,376 feet high—higher than any mountain in America east of the Rockies.

The formidable barrier of this mountain chain is traversed by only one railroad. Behind this mountain chain, to the north, is a very difficult broken country for sixty or seventy miles, which leads to nothing, and lacks roads to such an extent that it is practically impossible for artillery.

Hence, it seems hardly probable that the Italians could have any object in advancing north of the Idria River.

TURNING now to the eastward limit of the Italian advance. Here, from this limit to Laibach—the nearest point having a definite strategic value—are about thirty-five miles of mountainous country, as rugged and broken as the country north of the Idria, and more roadless even, and also sparsely populated. It hardly seems probable that the Italian offensive would attempt to force its way through to Laibach, and yet, as far as we can see now, Laibach is its objective.

On the Carso plateau the offensive has made some progress. From where the Italians now are, they have to climb a steep 1,000 feet through an extraordinarily difficult and very stony country, before they reach the culminating ridges of the Carso. One correspondent informs us that the Italians have constructed rafts, from which they are firing guns larger than any heretofore known, and with which they are bombarding the Hermada, the last mountain barrier separating them from Trieste, which city is also under fire from the sea and being evacuated by the civilian population. British monitors were reported as assisting in this bombardment, while a fleet of destroyers and scout ships protected them from submarines and held the Austrian fleet helplessly bottled up in the harbor of Pola, nearby.

THE western front has had bad weather most of the week, which has greatly cut down the fighting activity. Lens is still untaken, and in general it can be said that the situation is unchanged from the end of the previous week.

Just like Riding in a Rocking Chair

YOU can be as comfortable in your Ford on rough roads as in a rocking chair at home. All it needs to make it ride as easily as a $2000 car is a set of the

HASSLER For Ford Cars
Shock Absorber

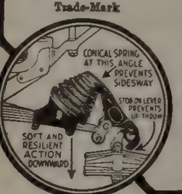
Forms a cushion between the road and you. Absorbs all jolts and jars before they can reach the body of car or the passengers. Changes the usual bouncing up and down into gentle springy action that lets you remain on the seat. Prevents the sudden rebound and sideway. Makes it easier to hold the steering wheel and less tiring to drive. Reduces risk of accident on bad roads at night. Saves wear and tear on the car, cutting up-keep a third. Lets tires last longer, the extra mileage from every set being enough to pay for the shock absorbers. Over 200,000 Fords now running on Hasslers.

Trade-Mark

FREE TRIAL OFFER

See for yourself how much the Hassler would mean to your comfort by having a set put on your Ford for a ten days' trial. No money in advance. No obligation. No risk. Write today for FREE TRIAL BLANK and illustrated folder with testimonials from users.

Robert H. Hassler, Inc.
Dept. 7-A Indianapolis, Ind.



CONICAL SPRING AT THIS ANGLE PREVENTS SIDESWAY
STOP ON LEVER PREVENTS UP THROW
SOFT AND RESILIENT ACTION DOWNWARD

AUTO TIRES
WHOLESALE PRICES

A tire carrying a 4000-mile guarantee isn't a novelty. There are many on the market. But a tire guaranteed for 4000 miles at a price ⅓ less than any other on the market is something for you to think about.

BUCKSKIN
PLAIN & NON-SKID
Guaranteed TIRES

give you this mileage—and they give you more mileage at the price, because they are absolutely the lowest priced tires in America. We sell direct from the factory. We have no agencies, no salesmen—JUST YOU to deal with. Plain and non-skid tires and red and gray tubes at the same low prices. We use only best quality Para rubber and finest grade of fabric. Buckskin Tires "Save Money by the Mile." Write for free illustrated booklet and price list for car owners.

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO.
East Street Carrollton, O. 19
Western Dist. Office, 1436 S. Mich. Av., Chicago

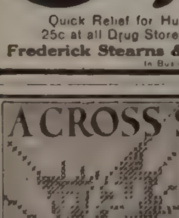
LOWEST PRICES IN AMERICA

WANTED—Women to become nurses. The need was never so great as now. We have trained thousands of women in their own homes. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—with actual experiences. Specimen lesson pages free.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Clear Your Throat with Zymole Trokeys

Quick Relief for Husky, Hoarse, Tickling Throats
25c at all Drug Stores Sample for two-cent stamp
Frederick Stearns & Company, Detroit, U. S. A.
In Business Over Sixty Years



A CROSS STITCH GIFT

Two brand-new, large sheets of beautiful Cross Stitch designs in full color, daintily boxed, with charming Gift verse, only 30c postpaid. For Sale Everywhere or Direct
Send for Catalog 232
ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway St., Boston, Mass.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

John Wanamaker
NEW YORK

All American families living in towns or cities away from New York
Who cannot find in their own stores
the fashions they want
Ought to consider having a Wanamker Catalog in their homes.

****

Your copy of this
Fall Fashion Catalog
(war-time edition)
showing many specials at economical war-time prices will be sent upon request.

****

Write today
asking for Catalog GG

John Wanamaker, New York.

Two Great New Rodeheaver Songbooks

Just from the press and just the songbooks needed in all churches and Sunday Schools. Compiled and edited by Homer A. Rodeheaver and Chas. H. Gabriel. Printed from new plates and finely bound.

Gospel Hymns and Songs—and—
Rodeheaver's Sunday School Songs

A sample copy of either of the above books sent for free examination if you will state that you will return in good condition or remit retail price within 15 days.

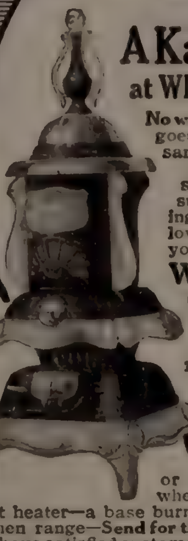
Christmas Services

Rodeheaver's Christmas Services are made up of pleasing text and singable music. Send 10c for samples of three new services.

Send 15c for a copy of Rodeheaver's Christmas Recitations, a 32-page booklet of recitations, drills, exercises, etc.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
1027 Monon Bldg. Chicago
627 Commercial Bldg. Philadelphia

Kalamazoo Stove Co Kalamazoo Mich
A Kalamazoo Direct to You



Your Stove Ready To Be Shipped TO-DAY

We Pay Freight

A Kalamazoo at Wholesale Price

No waiting—your stove goes on the car the same day your order arrives. Our big stocks on hand insure immediate filling of your order at lowest "direct-to-you" wholesale price.

Write Today

Get our new stove book showing newest designs in stoves and ranges, learn what "A Kalamazoo Direct to You" means in saving money. No matter what kind of a stove or range you want—whether a fine hot-blast heater—a base burner—or a beautiful kitchen range—Send for this book—it's free. We have satisfied customers in nearly every county in the United States. Cash or easy payments. 30 days' trial. We pay the freight and guarantee safe delivery. Over 300,000 satisfied customers boosting for Kalamazoo quality. Ask for Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co.
Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Michigan

We manufacture Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Timothy 2:15

Correspondence Bible Study

This year The Moody Bible Institute offers eight strong courses for systematic Bible study by correspondence. For all unable to attend a Bible Institute, correspondence study is a practical, efficient and economical method of securing a deeper, clearer knowledge of the Bible. Our courses are thoroughly tested and popular. We have a course for everyone, young or old, beginner, student or instructor.

The Moody Bible Institute

has a fully equipped department, exclusively devoted to teaching by correspondence. You will be instructed by competent, practical Christian teachers. Over 5000 students in all parts of the world last year studied one or more of our courses. Now is the time to write for further particulars. Our courses will satisfy your needs.

The Moody Bible Institute
153 Institute Place. Dept. F-8. Chicago, Ill.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50

Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

"I PRAY not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil."

This petition from the Lord's prayer of consecration may well be our guide in these dark days of war and strife when men must once more die for Liberty. Christ did not pray that we should be taken out of the world, but that we should be kept from its evils, kept from them in the sense that while we were in the midst of them they should have no power over us.

Just now hundreds of thousands of our young men are reporting at military cantonments; thousands of them are from Christian homes. How shall we pray who stay behind and follow them with our prayers? We can hardly pray that God will shield them from all harm, for they are going forth into danger at the call of their country, to do their duty as it comes to them, and duty means danger. Some of them will fall, some will come back to us shattered and maimed. All will come back with their lives permanently blighted in some degree by the terrible agony of modern combat. To pray for shielding from harm means to pray that a man may be relieved of his duty. If our boy is shielded, some other mother's son must take his place. Such a prayer is therefore infinitely selfish. But we can pray that the Spirit of God will brood over these sons of ours, and cover them all with his protecting care, so that the evils through which they pass will have no power over their souls.

Yet, whether they fall or whether they return, we can pray that they may be kept. And we should pray, too, that those soldiers who are not Christians may find the way through the Y. M. C. A. and the chaplains and the Testaments and Bibles which are given them. Many a man since August, 1914, has found the way of life through the path of death. Many an American boy who has laughingly deferred the things of Christ in days gone by, in the trenches will find the Saviour, will walk with him through the days and nights of terror, through attack and counter-attack, until he goes home, perhaps home to the heavenly Father, maybe home again to America.

As we pray for these boys, let us pray mightily that they may find a full, free and saving faith, a companionship of the Holy Spirit which will save them and sustain them in the new life of struggle to which they are going. Let us pray that God will give them courage to do the right, both for him and for their country; strong hearts and ready hands and willing feet, and that through it all they may be "kept."

J. E. M., Mansfield, Ohio, requests prayer that God will grant a very special blessing on the young men and women who have given their full measure of devotion in foreign lands, in camps, in trenches and in hospitals.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Somers, Wis.; Dahlen, N. D.; Russellville, Pa.; Oneida, Kan.; Whartleberry Springs, Tenn.

M. A. R. asks prayer that a pastor may be found for the U. P. Church in Greensboro, Vt.; Mrs. J. E. M. asks prayer that they may be able to start a church at Dahlen, N. D., and have a Sunday school; Mrs. A. A. K. asks prayer that the way may be opened for a minister to secure a charge in the East; Firm Believer asks prayer that a certain blessing desired by the Baptist Church at Westmoreland, N. H., may be granted; F. C. asks prayer for a new church building in Bakersfield, Calif.

Sixteen persons ask prayer that sight may be strengthened or restored.

Six friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing.

Thirty friends ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Twenty-eight friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Fifty-six friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives. Thirty-nine friends ask prayer for the healing of themselves.

Fifteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; six wives, their husbands; twenty-one for other relatives and friends.

Some Seed Thoughts on Conservation

Continued from page 952

Why should we not chew our food more? One reason is that our food is too sloppy, too soft. There is no incentive for chewing it. Our food should be harder and drier, so that we should be induced to chew it, and enjoy the flavor. We fail to get the delicate flavors from our food from this very lack of chewing. How many times shall we chew the food? "Chew it while you taste it," is the best rule, and there is a reason. Not only do you add to the enjoyment by thus chewing the food, but one ounce of food, properly masticated, will nourish you as much as two ounces eaten the way we usually do it.

There is where economy is connected with this system of digestion. Masticate your food properly and you will not eat over half the quantity you do now, and that half will render you more efficient and healthful and you will enjoy your food more. It is only while the food is in the mouth that we enjoy it. It is only while the food is in the mouth that we taste it. It is only while the food is in the mouth that we have any control over it. As soon as it passes beyond the mouth, toward the stomach, we lose all control over it. It then passes under the control and supervision of the other nervous system, the one that presides over the processes of digestion, assimilation and nutrition.

Again, the act of chewing exercises the teeth, and tends to their preservation and health. It is true of the teeth as it is of every other part of the body, that exercise tends to strengthen them while disuse leads to atrophy and decay. The teeth are no exception to this rule, which is universal in its application, being one of the rules that has no exception. Go to the wilds of Arabia or Africa, where the people subsist upon roots and herbs, and you will see perfect teeth. What are the teeth for, if not for chewing our food? They are the hardest substance in the body and they are placed at the entrance of the mouth to masticate the food.

Again, if we have more front biting with the teeth, we will have less backbiting with the tongue. This is true, for the tongue is placed in the mouth to aid in the mastication of the food, and if not used in that direction, it may go to backbiting between meals.

Remember, it is not what we read that makes us wise, but what we remember. It is not what we earn that makes us rich, but what we save. It is not what we eat that makes us strong, but what we digest. Let me give you these wise sayings in a better way, bringing out the truth more fully. It is not what we read that makes us wise, but what we assimilate, that is what we make a part of ourselves, our very being. One may commit the whole dictionary, and yet be a fool. We used to believe that knowledge is power. We know better now. Knowledge is not power. It is the proper application of knowledge that is power. It is not what we earn that makes us rich, but what we assimilate. The millionaire is not necessarily rich. Very often he has learned only how to make money. Who knows how to spend it? The boys, you say, and they do. That man alone is rich who knows how to make money and how to spend it for the good of mankind and the glory of God. This is assimilating the wealth he has made.

It is the same way with our food. It is not what we eat that makes us strong, but what we assimilate; making our food a part of our brain, bones and brawn.

Send for Catalogue

We Pay Shipping Charges

$4 SATIN LINING FREE

Your first suit lined with a guaranteed $4 satin lining without charge—a special proposition to introduce the wonderful values offered by our system of tailoring. We have no agents—no dealers—no traveling salesmen—our values make their own customers—and once a Bernard-Hewitt customer, always a Bernard-Hewitt customer. That's why, to secure your first order, we sell you this high-grade guaranteed all-wool

Blue Serge Suit $15
Made to Your Measure for Only

and line it with a fine grade of satin free.

The suit is hand-tailored to your individual measure, from the very finest all-wool blue, light blue, black or gray serge (usual $25 value), in any of the latest styles you may select and by the very best tailors in this city.

If you don't care for a serge suit, our Fall Catalog, which we will send, contains generous samples of the latest fabrics, plain and fancy mixtures. The satin lining goes with any selection.

All we ask is that you make a trial of our system, that you learn how easy it is to take your own measure and save money on every suit. We take all the risk, you none, for this is our

GUARANTEE

Complete Satisfaction or Money Refunded

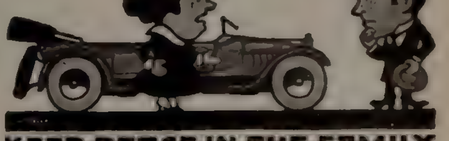
You must be pleased in every particular—in fit—in style—in workmanship and materials, or we don't want your money. Could anything be fairer? Write today—wear tailor-made clothes of exceptional style and value—dress better and save money.

Catalog—70 Samples FREE!

Our big, new Fall and Winter Book is ready for you—contains 70 samples latest woolens—also lowest prices on men's hats, shoes and furnishings. It is your guide to correct and economical clothes buying. Write now.

Please mention Christian Herald so that we can identify this special offer.

BERNARD-HEWITT & COMPANY
424-434 S Green St., Desk F-69, Chicago, Ill.



KEEP PEACE IN THE FAMILY
PAINT YOUR CAR YOURSELF WITH

Effecto AUTO FINISHES

Not a wax or polish, but a durable, quick-drying, high-luster auto enamel. Made in seven colors. Sold by paint, hardware and auto accessory dealers. Send for Color Card. Pratt & Lambert-Inc., 143 Tonawanda St., Buffalo, N. Y. In Canada, 89 Courtwright St., Bridgeburg, Ontario.

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF PRATT & LAMBERT VARNISHES

$2.50 A MONTH Buys a Visible Writing L. C. SMITH

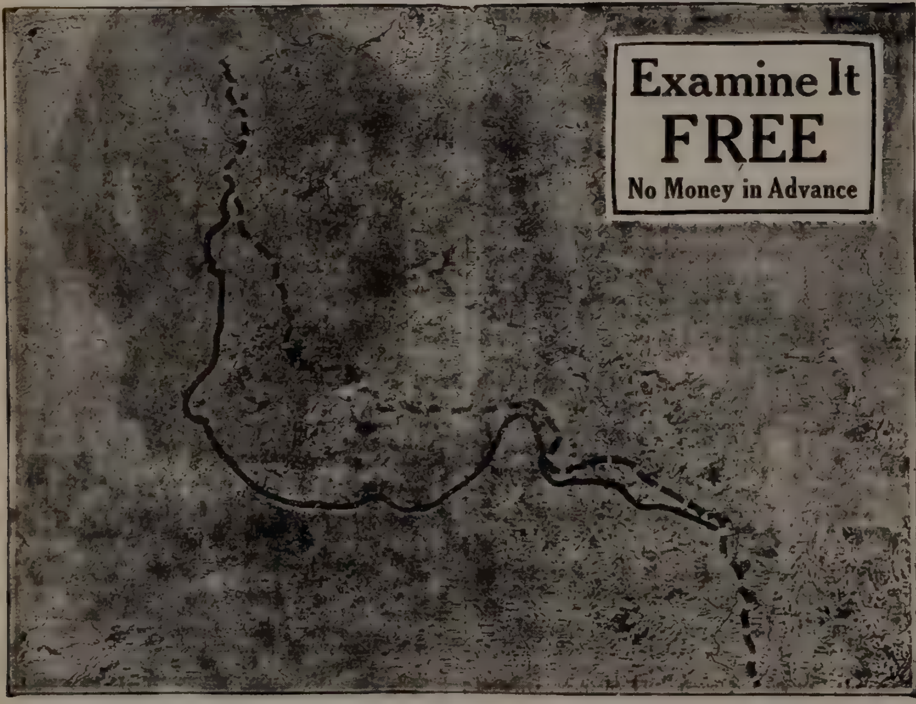
Perfect machines only of standard size with keyboard of standard universal arrangement—has Backspacer—Tabulator—two-color ribbon—Ball Bearing construction—every operating convenience. Five Days Free Trial. Fully guaranteed. Catalog and special price sent free.

H. A. SMITH, 374-231 N. 5th Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The Most Complete Single Map of the Western Front



Follow the American Troops in France

THE photograph above is a reproduction of the most complete single map of the Western Front ever published. It is 28 x 36 inches in size, but folds into a convenient cover, 5½ x 7½ inches, just right to be carried conveniently in the pocket for frequent consultation. It is printed on excellent paper, and can be had mounted on cloth, if desired, at slight extra cost.

Most existing maps of the Western Front are valueless because they are not indexed, or because they do not contain the smaller places.

Over 7,000 Villages, Towns and Hamlets

On this new map there are shown more than 7,000 places. The State of Illinois contains about the same number of square miles as shown on this map, and in Illinois there are less than 1,700 places of 100 or more inhabitants.

In addition to over 7,000 towns, villages and hamlets, this new map gives all woods, fortresses, fortified towns, naval arsenals, forts, redoubts, batteries, aircraft depots, wireless stations and railways. The forests and woods are indicated in green, giving the map an attractive appearance, and adding a strategical feature of importance.

The scale of the map is 10 miles to the inch. It extends west to Ashford, England; north to Antwerp, Belgium; east to Frankfort, Germany; and south to Orleans, France.

It shows for comparison the battle line of 1914, when the Germans were almost at the gates of Paris. The ground gained by the Allies, therefore, may be plainly seen.

It is without exception the most satisfactory map of the Western Front which has been engraved. It has been prepared especially to throw light on movements as they occur. It may be examined with ease, for the type is bold and clean cut.

A Complete Index Makes Locating Easy

An index of towns and villages accompanying a map of this kind has been proven an absolute necessity. The smaller towns are the ones usually mentioned in the news dispatches. They are not to be found on ordinary maps, and the locations of most of them were, and still are, utterly unknown to the general public, but unless their locations are known their strategical importance cannot be grasped.

Nothing is more unsatisfactory than searching all over the map for a small place that may and may not appear upon it. However, this loss of time and patience is now at an end, for the index which accompanies this map makes it vastly more useful and valuable. The index contains over 7,000 names. An idea of the importance of this statement may be gained from the fact that 90 per cent. of the war maps available today contain less than 500 names. This index is bound in with the map and enables one to locate instantly any one of the 7,000 places mentioned.

Send No Money

The great value of this map is so apparent that a copy will be sent on approval, without a penny in advance. If, after examining this map, you decide to keep it, send only $1.00 for the plain, or $2.00 for the cloth-backed, map. If not delighted with the map and index simply return it and you will owe nothing. With America actively engaged in the war—with American troops already in France and thousands more going, interest in the Great War is more vital than ever and Americans will want to follow every change in the situation from day to day. To intelligently read your newspaper, you must know the location of the various towns, vantage points and other places mentioned. This map will return to you many times its cost in your clearer understanding of conditions. Every real American will have constant use for this map during the coming months.

Nelson Doubleday
Dept. 279 Oyster Bay, N. Y.

Free Examination COUPON

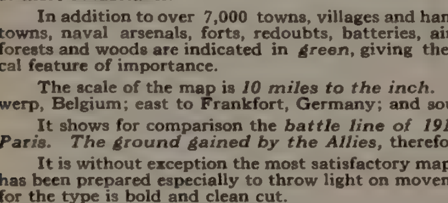
Nelson Doubleday
Dept.279, Oyster Bay, N.Y.

Please send me the Large Scale War Map of the Western Front on approval. If it suits me, within five days I will send you $1.00. Otherwise I will return it.

Name ....

Address ....

If you want the map mounted on cloth, greatly increasing its durability, at the special price of $2.00 if it suits you, write "yes" here..........



IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 72 Stewart Blk., Cincinnati, O.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by
MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
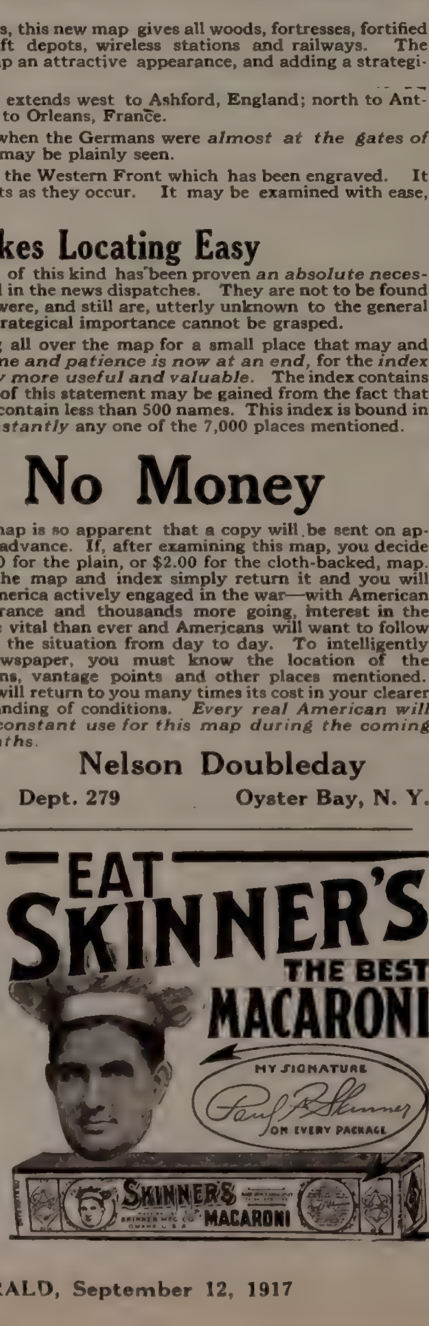
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.



Young People's Topics for September 23

Appreciation as a Strategical Method of Approach

Epworth League Topic. John 1 : 47-51

THERE is an old adage that you can catch a great many more flies with molasses than with vinegar. It is an axiom of salesmanship that the friendship of the buyer is half the sale. Many a man with a happy smile and a hearty handshake, who knew little about merchandise, has sold goods and succeeded where a technical expert with a cold-storage approach failed completely. Humanity likes to be praised; it likes praise even when it knows that it deserves censure. Therefore, if you would win men for Christ, or if you would inspire Christians to greater activity, it is wise to gain their interest by showing as much appreciation as you honestly can of their good points and their abilities. If you want something done and you know a member of the League who is enthusiastic and earnest and willing, it is entirely right and proper to go to this one and say, "Here is something I believe you can do, and do well. Try it, and I will help you all I can." Such a one will leave no stone unturned to deserve the confidence thus expressed. On the other hand, the leader who is constantly casting doubt upon the ability of those with whom he works will soon find himself alone at the head of a disorganized and discouraged band. A compliment, even though in itself unimportant, may be the key that will unlock the abilities and energies of one who would otherwise be inactive.

How We Should Work Together

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. John 17 : 20-26

WE should work together by being of one mind, by doing each of us our part of the task, without questioning the choice of somebody else for some other part, by all pulling in one direction, by each rejoicing as much at the success of another as at his own. In a tug of war, the side that pulls together and pulls continuously nearly always wins, even though outweighed. It is not in the least important whether we are given special notice, or whether we stand in the front rank, or whether our names are on the program, or whether anybody knows we are there or not. It is only important that the enterprise in which we are engaged shall go forward, and that nobody is putting sand on the track by failing to do his part. If we work well in the minor parts that are seldom mentioned, we will soon find ourselves called higher. We need not worry if some unworthy one, according to our thinking, has gained prominence and favoritism, for such preferment is an empty bubble that soon bursts. Love is the centripetal force, the cohesive element which will bind us together and make our work effective. Envy, spite, self-seeking, indolence, carelessness are centrifugal forces that shatter our plans and scatter our efforts. Working in the love of Christ, each preferring others before himself, we will find our efforts blessed of him and will reach goal after goal of our desires.

◆

Merry Moments

SENSITIVE. "Please, auntie, the new lady next door says, her compliments, and will you play very low, because her husband is extremely musical."

FEASIBLE. Mabel—"Was your bazaar a success?"

Gladys—"Yes, indeed; the minister will have cause to be grateful."

Mabel—"How much were the profits?"

Gladys—"Nothing. The expenses were more than the receipts. But ten of us got engaged."

THE RULE OF THREE. Preacher—"Do you go to school, Elsie dear?"

Elsie—"Yes, and I like my teacher."

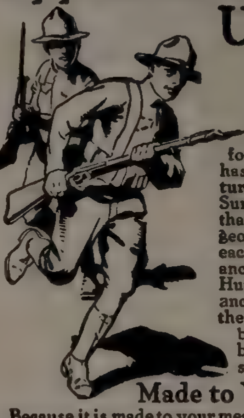
"What do you learn there, dear?"

"Reading, writing and gozintas."

"Gozintas—what are they?"

"Don't you know? Why, three gozinta twelve four times, five gozinta fifteen three times, like that."

Brooks Rupture Appliance Used by U.S. War Dept.



The United States Department of War, for the past nine years, has ordered Brooks Rupture Appliances. The Surgeon-General states that the Examining Surgeons have "certified in each case that the Appliance was satisfactory." Hundreds of these appliances have been sold to the War Department, but never has one been returned as unsatisfactory.

Made to Your Measure

Because it is made to your measure, it fits perfectly. Because it fits perfectly, it gives complete support, permitting the wearer to engage in activities otherwise denied. Soft, pneumatic cushion adheres to the flesh, and slipping is impossible. No dangerous springs. No hard, unyielding pads. No steel to rust. Durable—cheap.

Prove Its Merits At Our Expense

A word from you will bring the Brooks Rupture Appliance on 10 days' free trial. You are the sole judge of its merit. If you return the appliance, no questions will be asked. Place your case in our hands; we are specialists with 30 years' experience. Write today for catalogue and measure blanks. The Brooks Rupture Appliance has relieved thousands. It will relieve you.

BROOKS APPLIANCE CO.
398F State St. Marshall, Mich.

TRADE MARK
C. E. BROOKS

Send Us Your Old Carpets
We Dye Them and Weave
Velvety Rugs

Beautiful new rugs in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns — any color you want, any size—totally different and far superior to other rugs woven from old carpets.

Rugs, $1.00 and Up

Reversible, seamless, soft, bright, durable rugs, guaranteed to wear 10 years. Money back if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

You Save 1-2

Your old carpets are worth money, no matter how badly worn.

FREE Write for book of designs in color, our liberal freight payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. A-28, 40 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

How can I Earn Money?

ANY WOMAN will receive a satisfactory answer to this question if she will just write to us. Whether you have only an hour or two a week, or full time, our plan will pay you well for what you do. Ours is an honest, straightforward, time-tried way that has increased the cash earnings of thousands of women. You ask no favors of anybody. If you will only try, we will help you to make money taking orders for and underwear—at mill-to-wearer prices. Our line is complete and includes a variety of fabrics, weights, styles, colors, grades. Your customers buy from you precisely the goods they desire and need at prices they are pleased to pay. Satisfaction guaranteed. No experience necessary. Our "Money Back" outfit, FREE fabric samples and "Guide to Success" will start you toward a pleasant, permanent business of your own. We pay all express. Prompt deliveries. Write for details.

Malloch-Knit Hose
Guarantee Six Months

Malloch Knitting Mills, Dept. 779, Grand Rapids, Mich.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

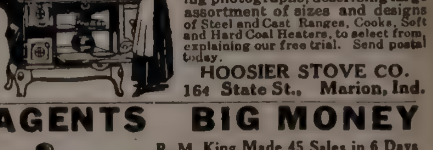
To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.

Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

AGENTS BIG MONEY

R. M. King Made 45 Sales in 6 Days



15 IN ONE

Forged steel. Patented. Low priced. Sells to auto owners, farmers, mechanics in the shops and the home. Not sold in stores. No competition. Sales easy. Big profits. Ten-inch sample to workers. Write at once.

THOMAS TOOL CO., 3124 East St., Dayton, Ohio

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1938 Ry. Exch., Chicago

"Here's One Part of the Old Boat That's Still Good" —says the Car Wrecker

He knows that wear is the final test of quality.

His is the last word, his the final judgment on the parts that give the best service.

After the motor-car has passed through the hands of one owner after another; when it has been overhauled by the garage man for the last time, when it can no longer be sold as a unit—it goes to the wrecking establishment.

Most of it is worth only the market price for old metal, but here and there are parts so good that they might again be used for their original purpose.

And when the wrecker finds the car equipped with Timken Bearings he is pleased, for it gives him a chance to say, "Here's one part of the old boat that's still good."

Here's a word to the point from S. F. Cottrell of the Auto Parts Exchange, Sacramento, California.

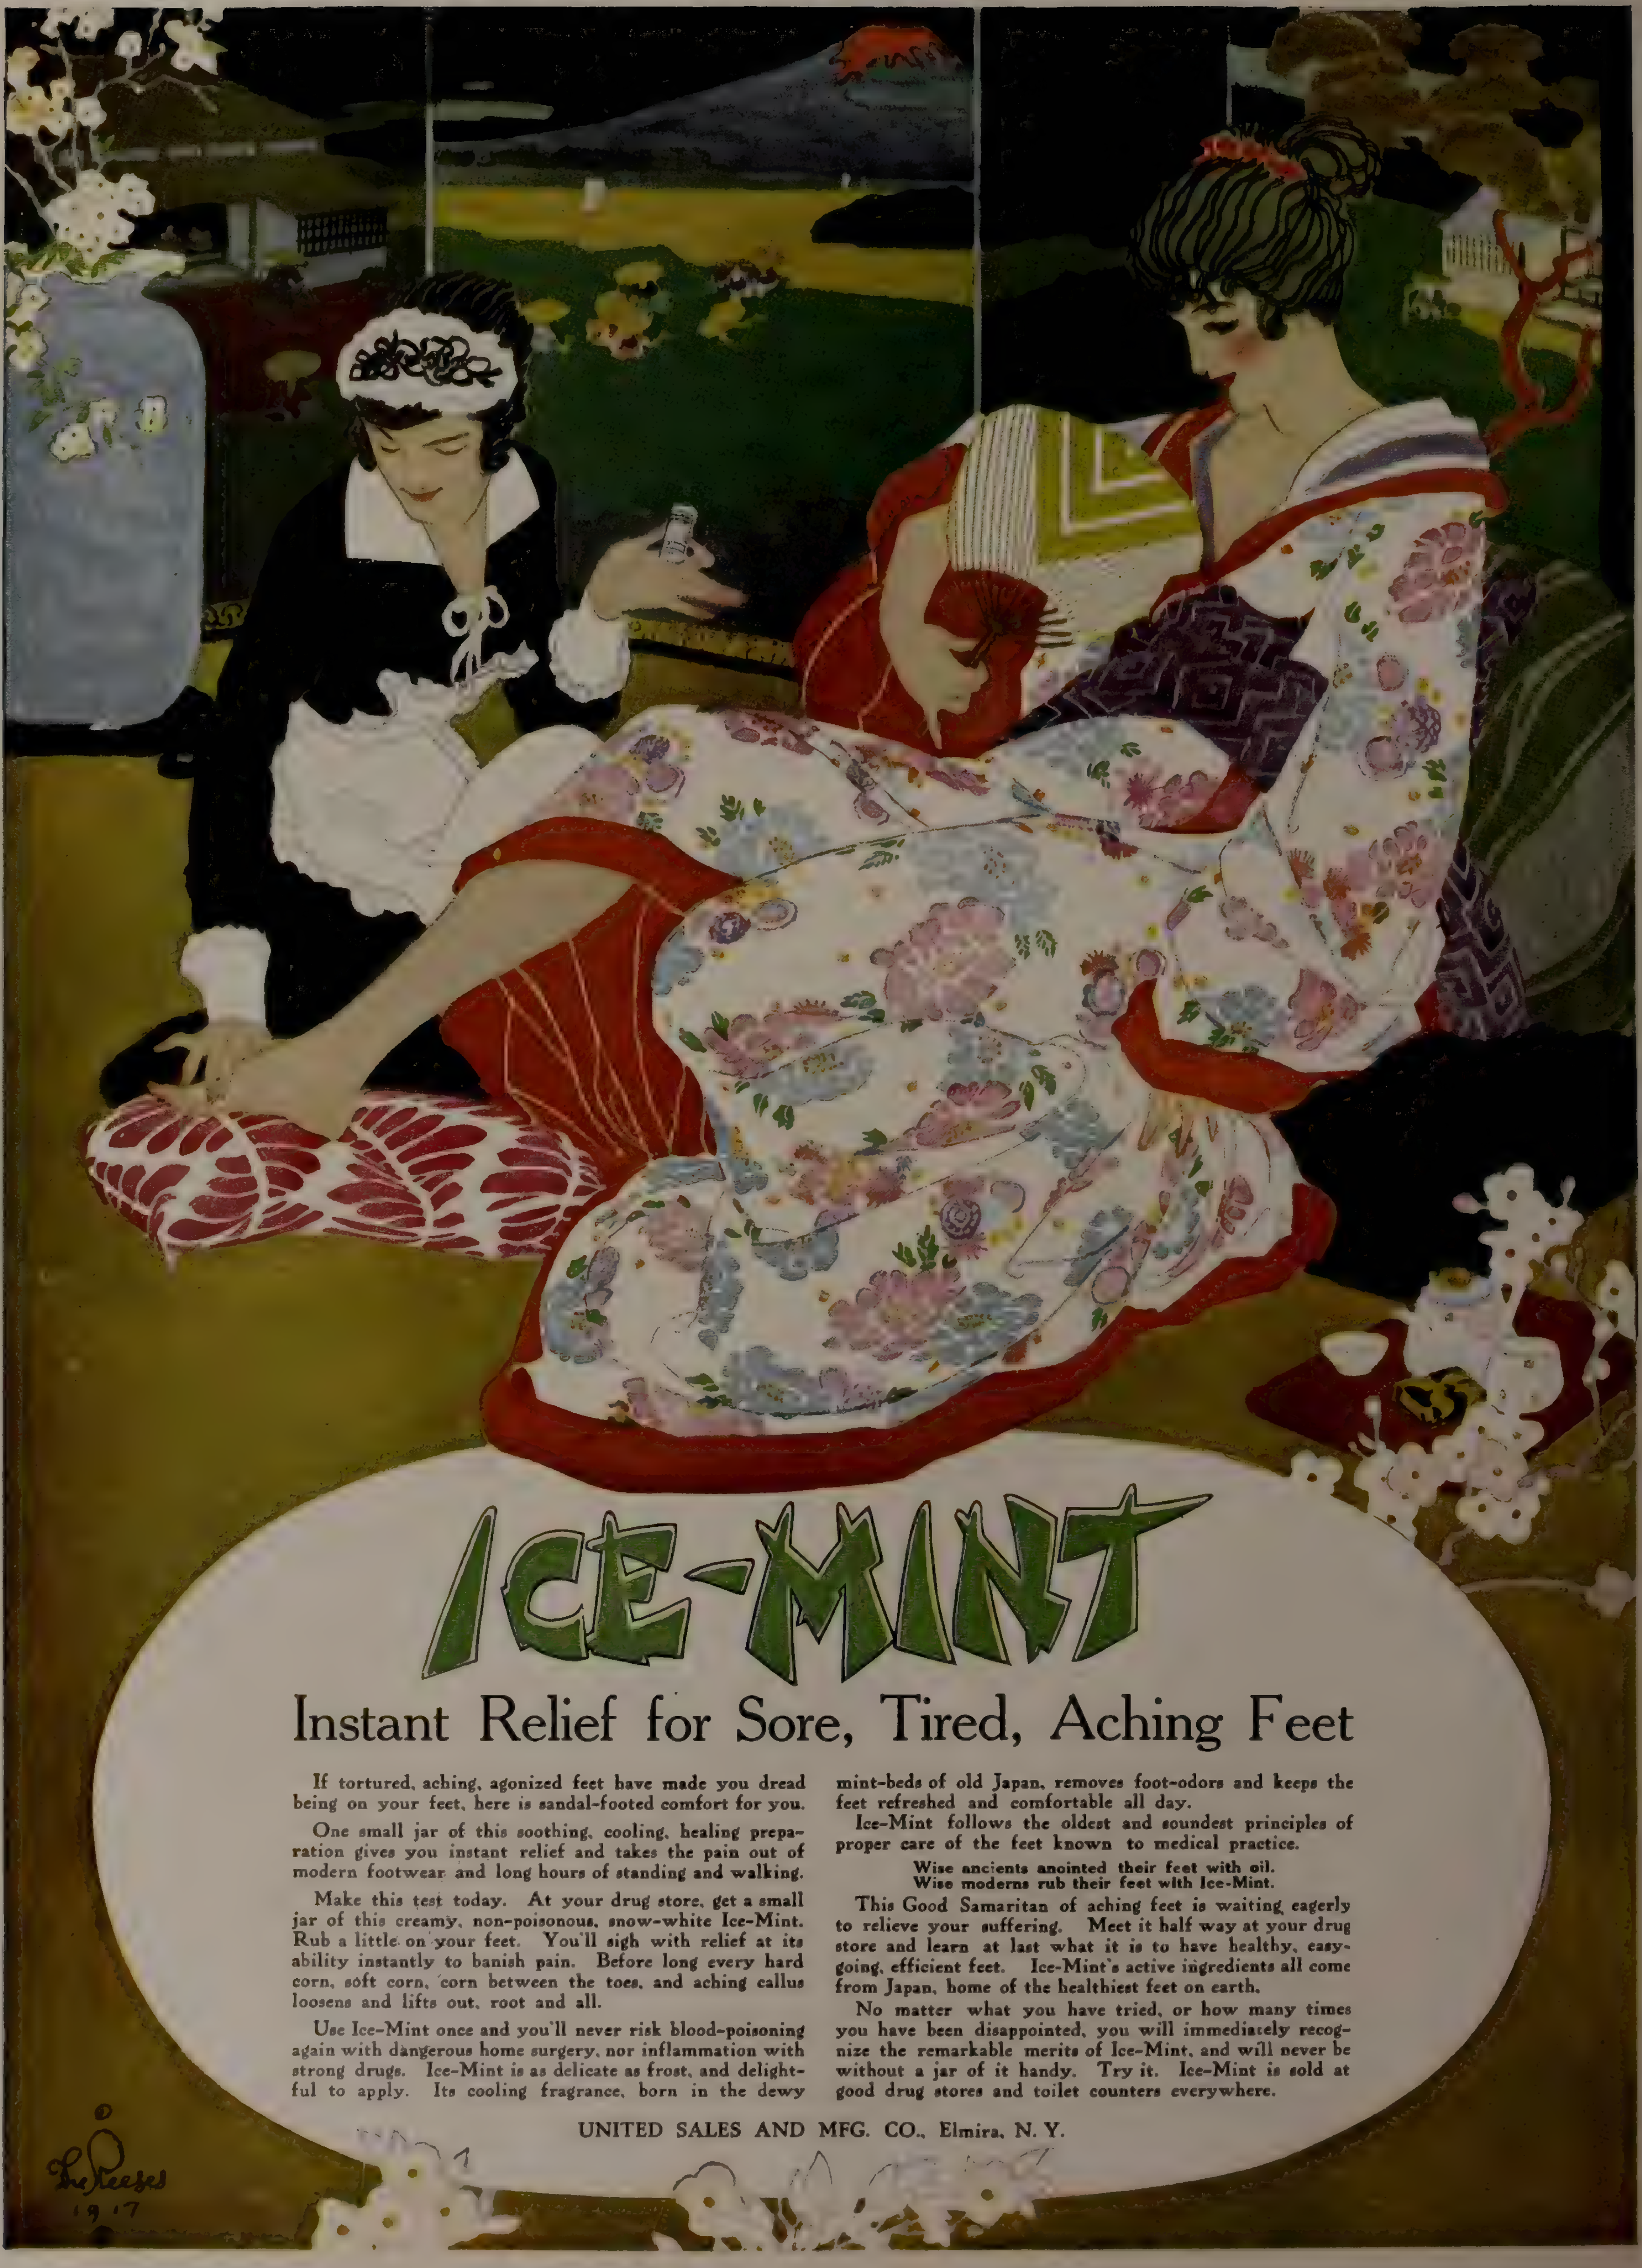
> "In our business of wrecking cars we have learned that there is one bearing for service, and that is a Timken. Last week we wrecked an old Holsman (how many people ever heard of it?) 1904 model along with several other cars with Timken Bearings, and I am happy to state that these bearings were in absolutely A-1 shape. Some record!"

If you'd like to know why Timken Bearings outlast the great majority of cars in which they are installed you'll find the answer in the Timken Booklet, D-11, "How Can I Tell."

Sent free, postpaid, on request to

THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING CO.
Canton, Ohio

TIMKEN BEARINGS



Instant Relief for Sore, Tired, Aching Feet

If tortured, aching, agonized feet have made you dread being on your feet, here is sandal-footed comfort for you.

One small jar of this soothing, cooling, healing preparation gives you instant relief and takes the pain out of modern footwear and long hours of standing and walking.

Make this test today. At your drug store, get a small jar of this creamy, non-poisonous, snow-white Ice-Mint. Rub a little on your feet. You'll sigh with relief at its ability instantly to banish pain. Before long every hard corn, soft corn, corn between the toes, and aching callus loosens and lifts out, root and all.

Use Ice-Mint once and you'll never risk blood-poisoning again with dangerous home surgery, nor inflammation with strong drugs. Ice-Mint is as delicate as frost, and delightful to apply. Its cooling fragrance, born in the dewy mint-beds of old Japan, removes foot-odors and keeps the feet refreshed and comfortable all day.

Ice-Mint follows the oldest and soundest principles of proper care of the feet known to medical practice.

Wise ancients anointed their feet with oil.
Wise moderns rub their feet with Ice-Mint.

This Good Samaritan of aching feet is waiting eagerly to relieve your suffering. Meet it half way at your drug store and learn at last what it is to have healthy, easy-going, efficient feet. Ice-Mint's active ingredients all come from Japan, home of the healthiest feet on earth.

No matter what you have tried, or how many times you have been disappointed, you will immediately recognize the remarkable merits of Ice-Mint, and will never be without a jar of it handy. Try it. Ice-Mint is sold at good drug stores and toilet counters everywhere.

UNITED SALES AND MFG. CO., Elmira, N. Y.

NOTICE TO READER: When you finish reading this magazine place a 1 cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employee and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. No wrapping—no address. A. S. Burleson, Postmaster-General.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 19, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 38. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Dutch Boy PRODUCTS

Paints that parry the thrusts of time

Against your home, day and night, year after year, Time is hurling the darts of the wind, the sleet, the snow, the hail, the driven rain, and the scorching sun. A coat of armor — a weatherproof paint — must be provided to resist these attacks, or decay and destruction will result.

Dutch Boy white-lead thinned with pure linseed oil is the paint to use. It is as waterproof as the metal lead from which it is derived. Its surface is so smooth that the destructive elements can find no place to hold to.

It contracts and expands with the wood and will not crack nor scale. In fact, it penetrates into the surface, so that it is like a part of the wood itself.

On exteriors and interiors Dutch Boy white-lead may be tinted any color desired. Indoors, when mixed with a flatting oil, it gives to walls and woodwork a finish as soft and rich as velvet; it is as washable as a china plate and therefore highly sanitary. Harmony, beauty and distinction are secured by its use.

Protection for Metal

As Dutch Boy white-lead protects wood, so Dutch Boy red-lead keeps rust from iron and steel, preserves the gutters, railings and roofs of buildings, implements and machinery of factory and farm, bridges of highway and railroad.

For useful knowledge on paints and painting, send for Paint Facts No. 66.

Metals that stop the ravages of friction

Friction is a necessary condition in this world of ours. Without it wheels would not grip the tracks, electricity could not be generated. But friction in the wrong place and at the wrong time is the arch enemy of progress. It lays its retarding grasp on every machine the rushing locomotive, the fleet motor, the busy milling engines—and turns their power to self-destruction.

Standing guard between the machines and this destroying friction are the bearing metals.

Dutch Boy bearing metals include compositions for every form of machine, for meeting every kind of friction. Whatever the machine, whatever the friction, they minimize both friction and cost.

There is Dutch Boy Phoenix metal for heavy strains and high speeds, No. 1 Journal for heavy strains but low speeds, Special Genuine for hardware and mill trade, and many other grades.

So also, Dutch Boy solders embrace a complete line. Each exact composition is numbered and can always be duplicated.

Consult our laboratory on babbitt and solder needs. Our metallurgists have made a life-study of these metals and can probably enable you to get better babbitt and solder results at lower cost. There is no charge for the service.

If you would like further information, ask for Metal Facts No. 66.

DUTCH BOY
WHITE LEA

NATIONAL LEAD
COMPANY

New York Cleveland Boston Buffalo Cincinnati Chicago
San Francisco St. Louis

(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia) (National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Palestine Facing a Famine

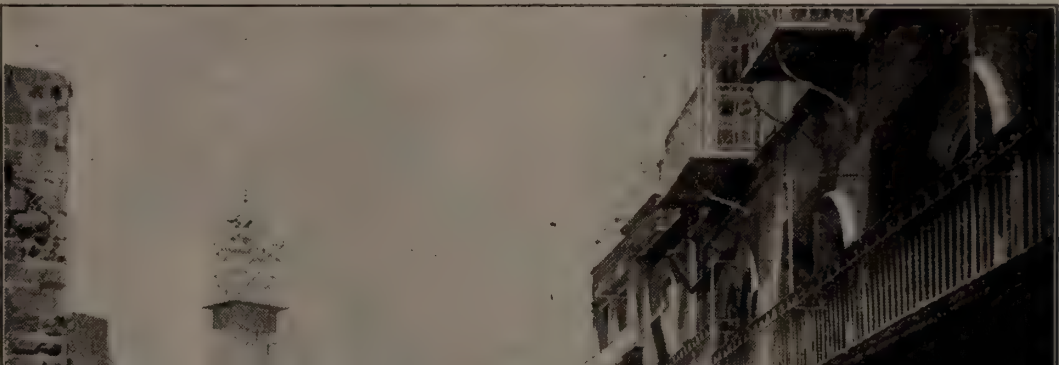
The Story of a Three-Years' Battle With Hunger and Disease
Jerusalem's Dark Outlook

By MARY BUTTERFIELD, C. and M. A. Mission

MANY who have sent relief money to Palestine during the past three years, probably have been discouraged because they received no reports of its receipt and distribution. As one of a party of missionaries just returned from Jerusalem to the United States, I wish to assure you that your contributions went straight into needy places and saved lives. It may be that reports were sent you which failed to get through, or it may even be that none could be sent; for there were reasons which made it seem best not to send reports, sometimes.

You will be interested to learn some of the conditions in Palestine, as we saw them from the fall of 1914 to May 15, 1917, when we left Jerusalem—or rather up to July 20, when we left Constantinople.

Very soon after the war began in 1914, evidences of distress appeared. Money was all tied up for a time. Able-bodied men were taken from their only means of providing for their families to serve in the army. The best animals and carriages were requisitioned, and all over the city there was almost a panic over economic conditions. At that time, however, it was more fear for the future than actual present need. But by January, 1915, some who had always had plenty were in real need, and began to sell articles of furniture at any price, in order to subsist. Some went from place to place pleading for employment. Others, who would have scorned to do so before, went around from door to door begging bread! Still others, too proud to make their need known, stinted themselves almost to the starving point, until friends helped them anonymously.



© Underwood & Underwood

Just inside the Jaffa Gate. A typical scene in the Jerusalem of today. The Tower of David in the background

FOR a month or two this condition was intensified. People waited longingly for help from friends in America, to whom they had written. At that time the way had not yet been opened for money to get through. The Greek and Latin Churches, which had been giving bread to their poor (the weekly portion being sufficient for only two days), suddenly ceased doing so, their funds being exhausted. The strain in the city was very great. Consuls and religious and philanthropic societies were constantly turning away people who were asking help. Men who were fortunate enough to have access to their money loaned to those who had none at exorbitant rates of interest. People all over the city, with strained faces, were saying one to another, "What shall we do? What is going to become of us?" To make matters worse, the first swarm of locusts passed over the city just about that time, and famine was prophesied.

Our mission had not yet received any relief money, but we had a small amount on hand in the mission treasury, out of which we decided to spend $40 for relief. It could not go very far, but it could help some. So, as one and another came begging from us, we told them to bring us needlework, or some home-made dolls in native costume, and we would give them bread tickets or orders for flour. We urged them to secrecy, hoping to avoid the rush which we knew would come if our charity should become public. But it leaked out in spite of us, and people began to come to us in numbers. It was a great problem to sift out the most needy, and to keep the distribution within the limits of the number we were able to help. In fact, our fund was greatly overdrawn when we paid our bread and flour bills. We used the occasion as an opportunity to give out the Bread of Life as well as bread for the body, and found many open hearts.

This distribution was carried on while currency was in circulation and before prices were so high, and we were able to feed more then with forty dollars than we could today with two hundred. We had desired to bring the dolls and lace with us, to use in raising relief funds, but owing to various difficulties decided to leave them in Jerusalem.

When this money was used up, we had to tell the people we could give them no more, and finally had to hire a boy to stand at our gate and send them away. Others had to deal in a similar manner with crowds that gathered at their doors. Our American consul and his wife heard a commotion in their yard one day. Upon looking out, they saw two or three hundred Russian women on their knees with hands outstretched for help. The consul had not yet received any relief money, and with breaking heart he had to refuse them at that time. Later he was enabled to give some bread to many of them, when a large sum of money from the Christian Herald for relief reached him. Let me say, in passing, that U. S. Consul Glazebrook is a modern hero. He was the man for the situation there, and he met it with the wisdom that comes from on high. He was loyal to his government and also to the one with which he had to deal. Though physically weak, he did not spare himself, even when he might have done so, especially when he saw any possibility of giving help to a needy person.

When he received this Christian Herald relief money, he immediately notified all missions, churches, and philanthropic societies to send him a list of the neediest people under their charge. Then he issued tickets with the names of those to be relieved, and the amount each was to receive. The allotment was according to the number of persons in a family and their degree of need. Mrs. Glazebrook stood for hours at a time handing out rolls of coin in exchange for cards brought to her by those to whom the cards had been distributed by different committees. Committees were also appointed to distribute portions of this fund in Ram Allah and Bethlehem in the same way. Could those who gave the money have seen the demonstrations of gratitude which the distributors saw, they would have felt rewarded for any sacrifice.

AFTER this fund was exhausted, there were still thousands in need, and in a short time those who had been relieved were in need again. But soon money began to come through more easily, and many individuals were temporarily relieved by receiving more or less sent directly to them by relatives in America. Funds came through to the Greek and Latin churches and they resumed their work of relief, thus lightening the strain considerably.

Then the locusts, hatched from the eggs laid by the swarm which had passed over about a month and a half previously, came marching ruthlessly into the city and villages. Gardens and fruit trees were devoured. The ground was a seething mass of green and black creeping locusts, and in a few days the air was filled with flying ones. People fought them from their gardens until, from sheer weariness, they had to give it up and watch their only means of livelihood disappearing. This affected both rich and poor, for those who had money could not buy what was not in existence. But God was gracious to the land. There never had been a better wheat crop than there was that year, and it was so near harvest time that the locusts could not hurt it. The wheat crop that summer saved Palestine from famine.

There was another element which played its part in saving the country at that time. It was the relief ship. Oh, what a time there was in Jerusalem for weeks before the contents of that ship came to Jerusalem! Consuls, churches and relief committees were besieged by hundreds clamoring to have their names written down for some of the supplies. Dr. Glazebrook and his staff worked early and late at arrangements for the best possible way for distribution. Almost insurmountable difficulties stood in the way of the transportation of the supplies from Jaffa to Jerusalem, but they were overcome and, in time, flour, sugar, rice, hominy, beans, peas, onions, coffee, tea, etc., were divided into portions according to the need of different families which had been reported to the consul by various committees in the city.

The need had been relieved but not met. When the supplies were given out, there were still hungry people, and soon those who had received help were in need again. Some had sold their portion of sugar and rice at an exorbitant price, and bought bread with the proceeds. By that time many of the gardens which had been devastated by locusts had been replanted, and before long vegetables were obtainable again, only the supply was less than the demand. People longed for another ship, but none came.

THE distress of that fall and winter (1915–1916) was increased when typhus fever broke out in the army, and finally spread into the homes. The death-rate ranged from twenty to one hundred a day in Jerusalem, and was almost as high in Beersheba, Bethlehem and Hebron. Ram Allah also had a share in this plague, but the death-rate was not so high. Nearly all the small villages surrounding these places suffered also. With the coming of warm weather the plague was stayed, though the disease has not ceased to be in evidence since.

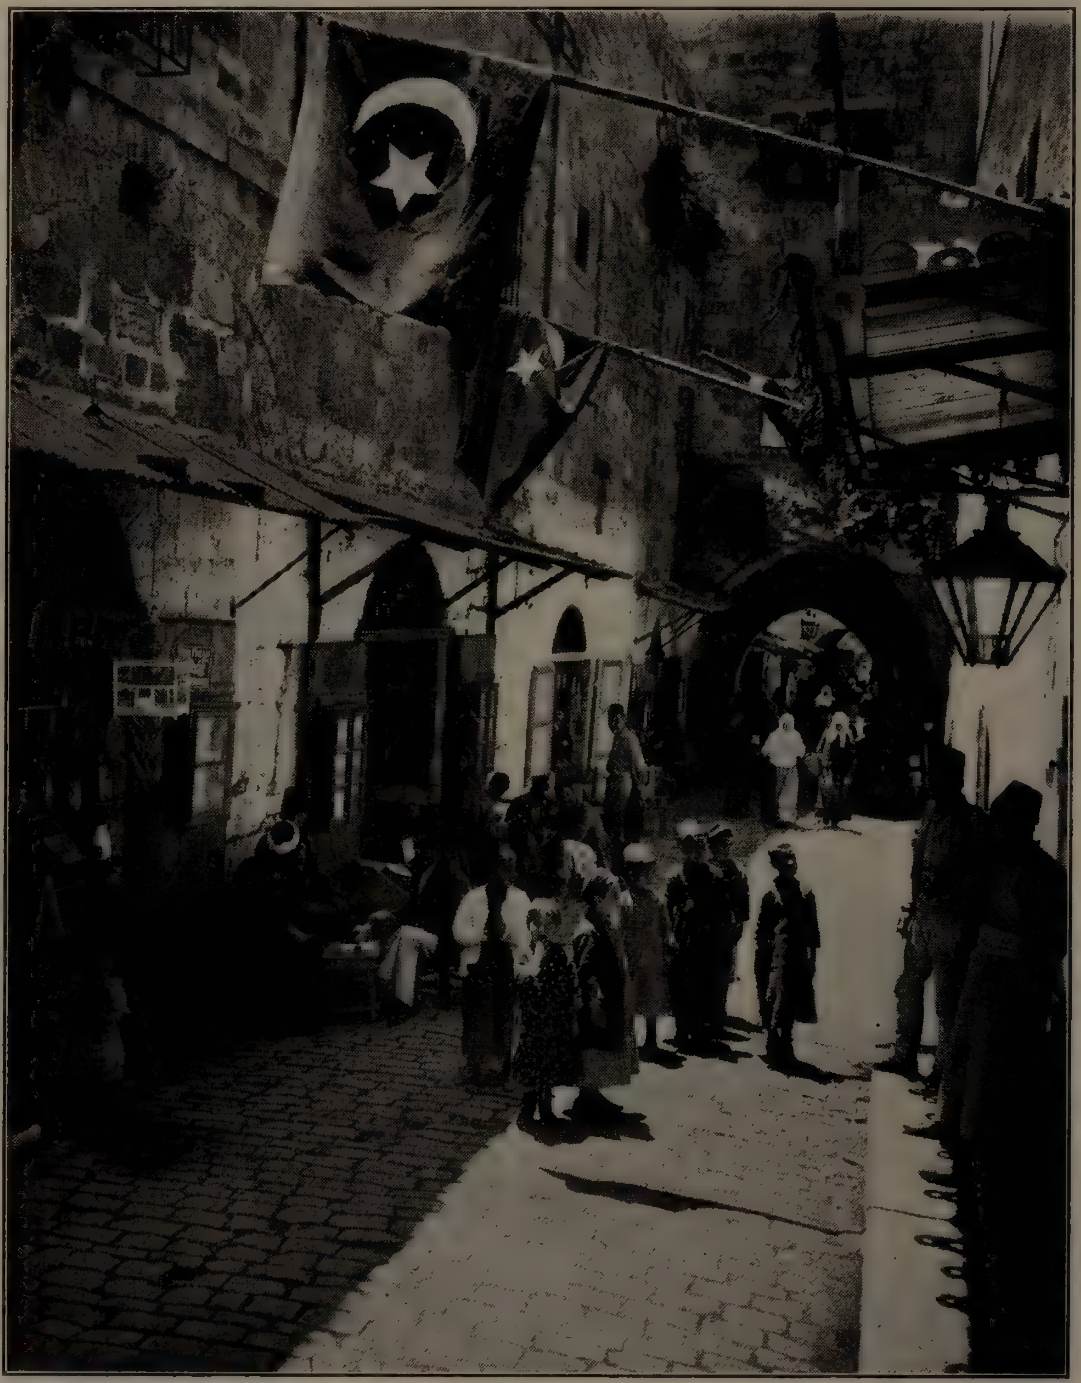
During this time various amounts of relief, large and small, reached the city through different channels, but the whole was only a drop in the bucket. Missions, churches and committees gave to the straining point.

In the summer of 1916 cholera broke out and whole villages were wiped out in northern Palestine. German, Austrian and Turkish doctors fought it off valiantly, and by means of compulsory vaccination, prevented it from spreading. Only a few cases were found in Jerusalem, but we heard that hundreds died of it in Beersheba and some surrounding places, before the disease was checked.

In that same summer there were several weeks of scorching heat, which destroyed many of the vegetables, especially the tomatoes and the onions, which people there consider among the staple foods. Prices increased tremendously alongside of extreme depreciation of the money in circulation. People said, "This is worse than locusts! When locusts were here we could eat them; but now we have little to eat, and we cannot buy that little with what we have in our hand."

You will see that by the winter of 1916–1917 the condition was very serious. All summer long there had been extreme difficulty in getting wheat or bread. The bridge across Jordan was closed, and the abundance of wheat reported to be over there could not be brought over. Also the Arabs in that district wanted gold for their wheat, and gold was a nonentity on our side. The government would have brought more wheat over, if paper money could have brought it; but you know that war conditions tie up gold.

A Wheat Commission was started by the bankers and business men, with the consent of the government, and some plan was put through by which sufficient wheat was to be brought into the city. People were to deposit a certain amount per person for their supply for a year. This deposit was to be returned to the depositor with interest at the end of the year. Wheat was to be brought into the city at stated intervals, and each depositor could buy a portion of what he had ordered for the year at a certain rate, at each interval. This awakened some hope, and people who could get money in any way made deposits. Those too poor to deposit money were to be provided for in another way. The first allotment of wheat was received and sold and the commission fell through.



© Underwood & Underwood

A Christian Street in Jerusalem

A certain percentage of deposits was returned, with the promise that the balance would be returned later.

A great wail went up all over the city, and people said, "What shall we do?" A crowd of native women went directly to Jamal Pasha, the Turkish military commander, and pleaded with him to relieve the situation. He responded by buying some wheat and having it distributed to the poor. He also promised to have wheat depots established where people could buy. In time, some wheat and bread depots were established. The difficulty in this arrangement was the fact that there were always more people to be supplied than there was wheat or bread to sell. Consequently those who were physically strong enough to fight their way through the crowd to the counter got their share, while others got none, even though they had a ticket entitling them to it, and may have been standing waiting most of the day. A broken arm or a bruised face was no unusual occurrence at these places, because the desire for bread was greater than the love for a neighbor in the struggle to get food. It was an awful summer for many. A malignant form of malaria, which defied quinine and medical skill, became prevalent. There was one or two sick-beds in nearly every home, sometimes a death-bed; and, too many times, hungry children crying for bread which mother, or brother, or sister could not get.

Later a new commission was formed, and the unpaid balances of depositors were allowed to count on the new deposit. This time wheat was secured, though it was only a meager portion for a person at a time. But it helped people to exist.

During that winter, Dr. Schneller, in charge of a German orphanage, virtually kept hundreds alive by giving out a weekly portion of wheat or flour to many who could not buy, giving them permission to pay for it after the war, if they should find that they could. He distributed to as many of the needy as he had funds for, regardless of creed or nationality. He had had the funds sent to him by friends in Germany.

Sister Theodora Barkhaussen, in charge of the large German hospice on the Mount of Olives, gave soup daily to hundreds. Dr. Grussendorf, of the German Hospital, and the Sisters in Sister Charlotta's School, and others connected with German mission work, gave to many needy people.

THE American Colony in Jerusalem saved hundreds by their soup kitchens and distribution of wheat, lentils, etc. They also bought needlework from many poor people week by week with the money sent to the Colony by the Christian Herald. Friends of the American Colony will be interested to learn that the Colony are remaining in Jerusalem, and, at their own request, have been given charge of a military hospital. The government requisitioned the Grand New Hotel, inside of Jaffa Gate, for this purpose. Some ladies of the Colony have been doing a great deal of house-to-house relief work.

Thousands of dollars were sent by American Jews for Jewish relief in Palestine. Some was distributed by different Committees for Jewish relief and some by Consul Glazebrook himself. He supplied thousands daily. Every dollar sent by one individual for another was placed in the hands of the person for whom it was intended. He never paid out general relief money to any one without making every effort to find out first if it was a case of actual need. Mrs. Glazebrook had the oversight of a large soup-kitchen for Jews, which was supported by money sent for the purpose. Both of these loyal friends of the needy also gave liberally from their own private funds to various individuals who appealed to them.

Miss Lovell, in charge of a school for blind girls, fed many a hungry one at her door, or gave them money to buy food outside. Miss Brown, an independent missionary, gave two hundred loaves of bread weekly from the balance in the W. C. T. U. treasury, and when that fund was exhausted, gave from other funds sent her, as long as bread was obtainable in large quantities.

Our own mission (the Christian and Missionary Alliance) received a number of contributions for relief in our monthly remittances from the Board, which were distributed in a quiet way among some of the neediest people. There were also other relief committees, including the Red Cross—or the Red Crescent, as it is known there—each doing its utmost to relieve the suffering. In fact, every person in the city with any heart at all, who could spare anything that would bring relief, did so. There were many touching sacrifices. Once our washerwoman, whose family had not infrequently gone supperless to bed, handed me her day's wages, and with tears in her eyes begged me to send it, with some relief money which our little church was gathering, to Armenian refugees who were suffering in Es Salt.

Notwithstanding all the relief which came to the city, the need was beyond description. Thousands in Palestine are suffering from malnutrition, and, though it had not become general while we were there, there there were some cases of death from actual starvation. These were usually people who gave their share to others out of compassion for them. But the day is rapidly approaching, and may have arrived, when starvation will be the common occurrence.

When we left Jerusalem on the 15th of May, there had been many cases of death from diseases brought on by malnutrition. We could not walk a block without meeting one or more, and often a whole

Continued on page 999

Hunger, the New Czar of Russia

Transportation of Food for the Stricken Nation Dependent on American and Other Foreign Aid—Politics in Manchuria

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

Mailed at Harbin, Manchuria, July 27

Mr. Williams cables to the Christian Herald from Moscow this later message, which reached New York August 31:

"First General Church Assembly since 1668 now meeting here. Recommendation made for separation of church and state; also urges popular election of priests and bishops, women voting, prelates to decide doctrinal and ritual affairs, priests and laity to decide budget revenues and property. Full story later. Hope to go to Astrakhan, Samarkand, and Tiflis."

A NEW Czar, Hunger, is assuming control in Russia. His rule may be as autocratic, his pressure as unrelenting, and his cruelty as great as that of any of the Romanoffs. His coming to power may be as disastrous to democracy as would be a victory for militarism, for it may lead to that.

America is the power that Russia looks to in this hour of trial, and the instrument of emancipation from this dread autocrat may be the American locomotive and freight car. The American railway commission now in Petrograd is working to prevent the catastrophe that threatens the Russian people. At present the railways are greatly disorganized.

Day after day, as I came from Peking to Harbin, I passed through fields of growing grain that stretched to the far horizon. In spite of the fact that farmers are refusing to accept the paper money of their government and are demanding articles of trade in barter for their foodstuffs, there is plenty of food in Russia. Nowhere is there famine or food shortage as yet. There is plenty of money in circulation, though the ruble is worth less than half its former value.

The financial situation is already affecting the food supply, and today the rumor comes that the Chinese customs at Mandschuria, on the Siberian frontier, have closed, because they refuse to accept the ruble as a medium of payment for customs bills. But this is not the main danger. The thing most dreaded is that with plenty of food in certain parts of Russia, the trenches and the parts immediately behind the battle line will feel the grip of Hunger. Lack of transportation may veto the strongest efforts of the new rulers of Russia to carry on a foreign war, at the same time that they undergo the greatest internal change that has ever taken place in the world's history.

Courtesy "The World Outlook"

Along Lake Baikal on the Trans-Siberian Railroad

AT Harbin, in Manchuria, two great railways and the river traffic on the Sungari, which fills to overflowing scores of steamers and freight lighters, hold the key to the situation so far as help from the East is concerned. Whether imports be sent to Vladivostock or to Dairen, or whether they come from Peking or the valley of the Amur, they must all pass through Harbin. In this city there are stacks of soy beans awaiting shipment or manufacture into oil and oil cake for fertilizer, which I am told have been awaiting shipment for two years. In this year, when the world is turning to a more intensive cultivation of the soil in order to escape world starvation, some of the best fertilizer to be obtained is tied up here and throughout Manchuria for lack of shipping facilities.

At present the Chinese Eastern Railway, which forms a "Y" with branches to Russia, Vladivostock and Dairen, Peking, and the Yangtse Valley, is in the best condition of any of the Russian railways. But the political situation and the control, or rather the lack of it, by the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, threatened for a time the proper operation of this most important railway line. Russia owes its railways to autocracy, such as could drive the straightest line of railway to be found anywhere, from Petrograd to Moscow, overcoming obstacles that weaker forces would avoid by deviating from the direct path.

The strong man in control of the Chinese Eastern Railway is General Horwath, general manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway and virtual governor or commissioner of North Manchuria, though he of course bears no such title. Theoretically the Russian authorities in Manchuria only control the narrow zone of the railway. Actually the dictator of the whole of North Manchuria is General Horwath.

This railway and political lord is a big man in every way. Six feet three in height, his massive head—with a long, straight nose and with a forked beard reaching almost to his waist—rises from a pair of shoulders so massive that they almost dwarf it. As he shook my hand I realized the immensity of the man, for my fingers were lost in his huge grasp. His face is kindly and honest. He is a giant Santa Claus in military uniform, with benignity and cordiality belying his great power. He has the love of most of the people and the respect and confidence of the whole foreign community. Under him Manchuria has had a wise and benevolent government, strong enough to preserve peace amid most aggravating conditions. But he served under the old régime. All his efficiency was as an official under the Czar. For this he has had to pass under severe criticism by the representatives of the workmen and soldiers. But even they know that if his control is sacrificed, if he is harmed or removed from office, anarchy alone can be the next page of Manchuria's history.

WHO are the revolutionists? How do they conduct their affairs? What is their attitude toward the gentry and those officials who served the former government? What elements have they which will enable them successfully and expeditiously to change from the most autocratic despotism to the most socialistic freedom? Are their assemblies orderly? Do they rely on reason or force? Can they control Russia? Can they control themselves? Was the revolution empire-wide, or were its effects evident only within sound of the guns of the men under the red banner at Petrograd? Is the outcome to be anarchy and the failure of Russian arms in the Great War, or is democracy to triumph alike in internal affairs and in the fight against Prussianism on what the world knows as the "eastern front," but which is really semi-Oriental Russia in the long expected clash with the West?

As a document in present history of Russia and as an evidence of just what is going on here, I herewith present a report of the last two meetings of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates in Harbin, translated from the Russian press. This report may be hard to understand in spots, but it gives a true picture of the way things are going in Manchuria, which to all intents and purposes is Russian, though it is nominally Chinese. It is of especial interest in that it does not have to pass a Russian censor and in that it emanates from a district where the rights of a free press are being jealously fought for by those who have known the despotism of vague silence.

Notice that the meeting was open to the general public; note the distinction already made between a Counter-Revolutionist and a Restorationist; the direct connection between a council of workmen in remote Manchuria and the Minister of War in Petrograd, five thousand miles away; the insistence of the soldiers on energetic war measures; the fear of the Chinese and Japanese, which seems to have reversed since the war began. But in the midst of confusion and disorder, note the real element of sanity and moderation.

THIS meeting of the COUNCIL OF WORKMEN'S AND SOLDIER'S DELEGATES, of July 6, at Harbin opened with a large attendance of the delegates and the general public, Mr. Rutin in the chair. The report on the Political Position of Manchuria was read by Chairman Rutin:

"Four months ago, in Russia, there was a revolution, during which the authority (of government) came into the hands of workmen, farmers and small (lower) bourgeoisie, out of the hands of the gentry and feudal lords. Here, in view of the special economic position and political responsibilities, the revolution did not have the same sweeping character, and there has not been that amount of "cleaning up" as in Russia.

"The local organizations, strong in their faith, as for example the Council of Soldier's Delegates, before its incorporation with that of the Workmen's Delegates, had to struggle against those elements which were not receptive to the revolution—the (haute) bourgeoisie—whom the war had only touched in their material well-being, and who had not yet smelled powder and blood. Thus is explained the

Continued on page 1001

The Finger of God in the Reformation

By JUNIUS P. REMENSNYDER, D.D., LL.D.

THE Bible tells us that God suffers men to go on for a time of their own free will, but that when they transgress too far in evil paths he intervenes to give victory to the right. This is shown in those wondrous theophanies of the Old Testament where a miraculous sign tells of the divine presence. One of the most thrilling of these instances was that when to the revelers in the blasphemous feast at Babylon there "came forth fingers of a man's hand" and wrote on the wall that startling "Mene, Mene," which was the sign that the thunders of divine wrath were about to scatter the hosts of wickedness.

Thus, ever and anon, at signal crises in the history of man, has the Almighty bowed the heavens and come down to intervene. And the believing Christian can easily recognize the hand of God in those epochal movements which affect the welfare of the whole human race.

Preeminently was this true of the Reformation of the church, in the sixteenth century. If ever the finger of the Almighty was visible in any great revolution on earth, clearly it was in that event. In its marvelous beginning; in its humble instrumentality; in the remarkable combination of events setting it forward; in its rescue from crises threatening its destruction; and in its unexpected progress and transcendent success, there can be found but one reasonable explanation—the intervention of Providence.

And as now the whole Protestant world is commemorating the quadricentennial, or four hundredth year, of this event, it will stimulate our faith and piety to recall the proofs in it which point so inevitably to the visible finger of God.

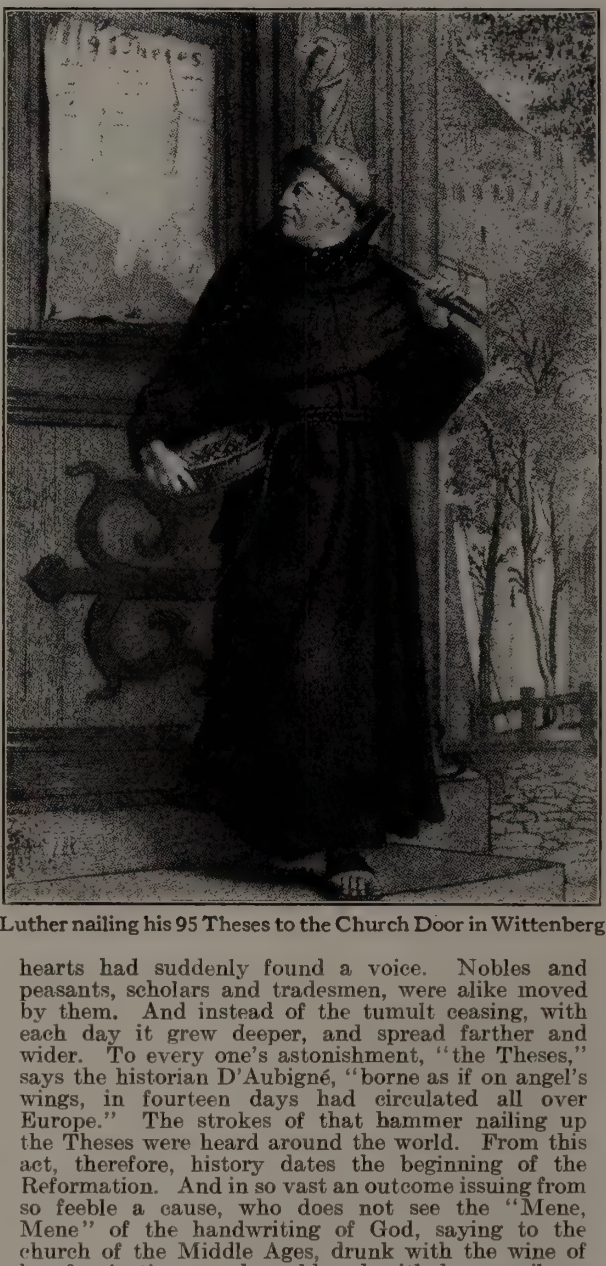
WE note first the preparation. Although to a superficial observer Rome seemed more than ever secure in her supremacy, there were certain conditions which were omens of a mighty upheaval. One of these was the great advance in learning and the larger dissemination of knowledge. Falsehood, superstition and tyranny can never endure the light. The most potent ally of Rome is ignorance. To this day she holds her spell chiefly over the untutored masses. And as education began to disperse the darkness of the mind, men rose up here and there who would no longer bow in blind submission. The renaissance of science, literature and art; the mystics, as Suso, Eckhardt and Tauler, who insisted on the right of the individual to seek Christ without ecclesiastical mediation; the great humanists who asserted the freedom of conscience and the natural rights of man; the era of Raphael and Michael Angelo—all these were foretokens that the world could not always be held in bondage to a sacerdotal and irrational system. Above all, the discovery of the art of printing came at the opportune time. It quickened and multiplied a thousand times the agencies opposed to spiritual slavery.

There was then a preparation in the soil of the world; a fitness in the times; a readiness in the opened minds of men; an impulse of freedom springing up in Europe, and especially in Germany, which indicated that the Almighty Ruler was about to inaugurate some revolutionary change, some new epoch, some mighty stride of progress, which would wonderfully advance the welfare and happiness of the race.

WE observe further the hand of Providence in the Beginning of the Reformation. Notwithstanding the favorable conditions preparing the way for a mighty change, yet never did the church of the Middle Ages seem more firmly entrenched and secure in her power. Her authority was universally recognized as supreme. Kings and states bowed unquestionably to her voice. The mightiest civil potentates humbly received their crowns from the Holy Father. The Pope, clothed with the investiture of infallibility, was absolute ruler of the bodies and souls of men. As the vicegerent of Christ on earth, his judgment announced the voice of God.

At so apparently unpropitious an hour as this, an humble, unknown monk, meditating in a monastery, concluded that all this august authority was sheltering a false and corrupt system. And one Tetzel, coming to his city, Wittenberg, and setting up a huge red cross, heralded the papal decree for the forgiveness of sins and the delivery of souls in purgatory by the purchase of an indulgence. The money realized by the traffic was to be used for the erection of the magnificent cathedral of St. Peter, building at Rome. The motto on the cross read, "The moment the money clinks in the chest, the soul escapes from purgatory."

This the monk Luther felt to be sacrilege, and indignant at the wrong, and pitying the poor deluded multitudes, he drew up ninety-five Theses showing its error from the teaching of Scripture. Then, all alone, on All Saints' Eve, October 31, 1517, he nailed these Theses upon the doors of the cathedral. It was a daring deed indeed, but its author retires, little dreaming of the consequences of his act. The next day the multitudes read them with astonishment. From mouth to mouth they flew. What was in many hearts had suddenly found a voice. Nobles and peasants, scholars and tradesmen, were alike moved by them. And instead of the tumult ceasing, with each day it grew deeper, and spread farther and wider. To every one's astonishment, "the Theses," says the historian D'Aubigné, "borne as if on angel's wings, in fourteen days had circulated all over Europe." The strokes of that hammer nailing up the Theses were heard around the world. From this act, therefore, history dates the beginning of the Reformation. And in so vast an outcome issuing from so feeble a cause, who does not see the "Mene, Mene" of the handwriting of God, saying to the church of the Middle Ages, drunk with the wine of her fornications, and maddened with her sacrileges and tyrannies over the human mind and conscience, "Thou art fallen, O Babylon! and the hour of thy judgment is come!"



Luther nailing his 95 Theses to the Church Door in Wittenberg

THE divine interposition in the Reformation is shown again in the means. This was the simple Word of God. What was it that Luther in his theses set forth as opposing the errors and corruptions and falsehoods being taught in the name of the Holy Catholic Church? The authority of the Scriptures, especially the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as contained in the New Testament. Armed with naught but this Word of God, Luther bade defiance to all papal decrees and ecclesiastical councils. "What are you," he said, "but mere fallible, sinning mortals, like myself? Why then shall I submit to you? God's Word alone is infallible, and to it I make my appeal." So Luther went to the Bible, and not to the fallible church, for the teaching of the way of Life. And when he had there uncovered the closed fountain of truth, he gave to thirsting souls the waters of life. Hence, his very first act, after his notable challenge to Pope and councils on the great stage at Worms, was the translation of the sacred Scriptures. These he then sought to have circulated everywhere. And he advocated the right of the poorest and humblest to "search the Scriptures" for himself and to find therein "the true light that lighteth every one that cometh into the world." And always and everywhere, Luther refused to employ any other means. To his mighty friend Frederick the Wise, when he would have taken up arms to resist the oppressive measures of the enemies of the Reformation, he replied: "Sheathe your sword. If this be God's work, he will take care of it; your armies can not uphold it." In the fact, then, that this great movement was born and carried forward by no other means than the study and writing and preaching of the Word of God, we see the divine handwriting ,the illustration of that promise that the kingdoms of this world should become the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

THE progress, growth, wondrous results, and beneficent effects of this movement also prove it to have been divinely ordered. Well has it been named the Reformation, for it reconstructed, changed the face of the world. It was the source of the awakening of the nations. It roused Europe from the paralysis of the Middle or Dark Ages. It was the awakening of religion to spirituality, of faith as against mere order, of life as against formality, of worship as against ritual, of the authority of the Scriptures as against the decretals of the church. It was the cradle of liberty of thought. It awoke the slumbering giant of democracy. It founded, through the suggestion of Luther, public libraries and the system of free public schools. It has transformed all classes of society and recreated all states of civilization. Two hundred millions of Christians and the most enlightened and progressive nations of the world—England, Germany, the United States, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland—now march under the banner of Protestantism. If the over-ruling purpose of God be not visible in these almost miraculous changes and in this incalculably beneficent progress, then never has it appeared on the historic stage.

LASTLY, in the unique personality of Luther we see the agent divinely formed for this gigantic task. Writes James Freeman Clarke: "The hour was indeed ripe, but it had been ripe often before and passed; it was only when the hour and the man came together that success was achieved." "Luther's words were half-battles," wrote Richter. He combined qualities seldom united in the same personality. He was a saint and a scholar; a logician and a mystic; a writer and an orator; a poet and a musician; a recluse, and yet gay, bright and humorous in society. He was by nature timid, saying, "I thought I would die at facing an audience;" and yet, when driven to bay by his foes, before the most splendid gathering of Emperor, Princes, Cardinals, and Magnates of earth at Worms, he manifested a courage and thundered forth an eloquence reaching the topmost peak of sublimity.

There, at the peril of his life, he proclaimed the Magna Charta of civil and religious liberty. So we can say in the splendid tribute of Carlyle: "I will call this Luther a true Great Man, great in intellect, in courage, affection and integrity: one of our most lovable and precious men. Great, not as a hewn obelisk, but as an Alpine mountain—so simple, honest, spontaneous, not setting up to be great at all: therefore quite another purpose than being great! Ah, yes, unsubduable granite, piercing far and wide into the heavens: yet in the clefts of it fountains, green beautiful valleys with flowers! A right spiritual hero and prophet; once more a true son of nature and fact, for whom these centuries, and many that are to come yet, will be thankful to heaven!" Had Calvin or Erasmus or Knox, great as they were, been at the head, the Reformation would doubtless have been a failure; but this myriad-minded Luther, he was the chosen hero, the man with the requisite gifts of leadership, which alone could conduct it to success.

IN all these exceptional agencies concurring together in the Reformation, and in the world-wide victory and blessed revolution thereby achieved, can we fail to see, gleaning athwart the moral skies, the glittering finger of God? Even such Roman Catholic scholars as Dr. Döllinger and Professor Michelet have felt compelled to recognize its beneficent influence, and would like not to see the world turned back again on its axis to its condition before the Reformation.

Most important is it, then, as Archbishop Söderblom, the primate of Sweden, says in a recent message to America, sent through the writer, "that Protestants of all churches should observe this Quadricentenary, by emphasizing afresh the vital truths of the Reformation." Also, by studying the life of its prime agent, Luther, in such a fine biography as that of Professor Böhmer, issued by the Christian Herald.

And may God give Christians of our time the faith, zeal, courage and sacrifice of these great leaders of the sixteenth century, that we may preserve and transmit unimpaired their precious heritage to future ages.

Motor Trucks as a Rural Asset

How Farm Labor Shortage, Railroad Congestion and Threatened Food Shortage Can be Met by Increased Efficiency

By HARRY WILKIN PERRY

Secretary Commercial Vehicle Committee, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce

THREATENED food shortage, greater production, scarcity of labor, increased efficiency, freight congestion, priority of shipment, high prices, economy in delivery—these are topics we see and hear discussed daily with regard to their bearing on the great war, the protection of the American public against the rapidly increasing high cost of living, and the rescue of the poor from near-starvation.

It is a situation all must face and help to relieve to the extent of their ability. The one thing in the world absolutely indispensable to life is food. On the farmer rests the responsibility of producing enough to feed America and her allies and supplying the food deficiencies of those neutral countries that do not raise enough foodstuffs to meet their own needs. Transportation must haul the farm products to market and distribute them to consumers. Flour and grist mills, canneries, slaughtering-houses and meat-packing establishments must convert greater quantities of foodstuffs into forms for ultimate consumption.

All this calls for more effort, greater acreage, more efficient methods. But immigration has fallen off to almost nothing during the last three years. Many thousand foreign laborers have returned to their own countries to become soldiers, and the United States is raising an army to send abroad.

The condition that confronts the country, then, is how to do more work with fewer workers. The answer is, more machinery—less manual labor. America already leads the world in the use of labor-saving machinery, both on the farm and in the factory; but there is room for much more extensive use of machinery and improvement in methods.

TRUCK GARDENER
JOHN H. SELL
NORWOOD PARK ILL.

Courtesy Autocar Company

The motor truck will even feed the horses cheaper than they can feed themselves

TAKE the farmer—and by farmer is meant all who make their living from the soil, whether it be the 10,000-acre wheat king, the fruit-grower or the truck gardener. He should be a power-farmer. By means of a farm tractor he can plow, harrow and cultivate the land with much less labor or "help" than if horses are used. He can reap, bind and thresh with the traction engine, chop fodder and ensilage with a gasoline engine, or shell corn, grind feed, churn butter, saw wood, pump water—in fact, do most of the farm work—by mechanical power.

The market affords giant traction engines for pulling up to twenty gang-plows, or little tractors costing no more than a good team of horses for plowing and cultivating fifty-acre truck gardens. Yet, with 6,500,000 farms in the country, there are only some 30,000 farm tractors in use.

Another great aid to the farmer that has only begun to come into use is the motor truck. It would seem almost unnecessary to point out to the farmer the advantages to him of the motor truck, when it is so well known that farmers are today the largest users of automobiles. The great agricultural states of the West already lead in the ratio of cars to population. In Iowa there is one to every nine persons, in Nebraska one to every ten, in California one to every twelve, in Kansas and South Dakota one to thirteen, in Minnesota and North Dakota one to fourteen, in Montana one to fifteen, while in the manufacturing states of the East there are only one-third to one-half as many motor vehicles, including trucks, in proportion to population. For example, in New York and New Jersey there is only one to thirty inhabitants, in Massachusetts one to twenty-eight, in Rhode Island one to twenty-four and in Connecticut one to twenty.

It would be reasonable to expect that farmers and ranchers, who are buying and using passenger automobiles in such large numbers, would appreciate the advantages of the motor truck as well, but such statistics as are available do not show this. While in New York State, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts one motor vehicle in every six registered is used for commercial purposes, in Missouri only one in twenty is a motor truck or delivery wagon, in Maryland one in twenty-two, in Georgia one in nineteen, in Montana one in fifty-three, and in Utah one in eleven. Trucks are not registered separately in most of the Western states.

THE motor vehicle, whether it be a passenger car, a truck or delivery wagon, is a means of transportation, and no part of the country is so desperately in need of more and better transportation facilities than the rural sections. More thickly populated parts of the country have more steam and electric railroads and water transportation. The farmer is just as dependent on transportation as the owner of a factory, yet he is far removed from the railroad, whereas the factory can be and is built close to the track. To overcome his handicap, the farmer, who cannot locate his farm alongside a railroad and have a siding built to his shipping platform, must provide his own transportation.

For these reasons the farmer needs the motor truck more than the city man needs it. Under the pressing conditions that are developing he is sure to realize this in the immediate future. The manufacturer and merchant in the city has learned that he can do his hauling to and from the railroad and steamship lines and do local distributing cheaper with motor trucks than with horses, but the farmer, dairyman and rural merchant have this still to find out. Because many breed their own horses and raise the hay, corn and oats to feed them, they do not figure out the cost of using horses as compared with motor trucks.

IT has been determined by the United States Department of Agriculture that five acres of land are required to maintain a horse. Now this land ought to raise 75 bushels of wheat, worth, at $2.20 a bushel, $165; or say 250 bushels of potatoes, worth—well, any farmer knows what five acres of good land are worth.

But a motor truck does the work, not of one horse, but of at least three horse-drawn vehicles, or say six horses. By using a motor truck, therefore, the farmer can devote thirty acres of good tillable land to the profitable production of human food. In wheat this would represent nearly $1,000 a year. The labor involved in raising the wheat would be no greater than in raising oats or corn for horse feed and the horse would eat the oats while the wheat could be sold.

There are in the country at least 1,650,000 farms of 160 acres or more in size, every one of which could make good use of one or more trucks. These trucks would do the work of probably 10,000,000 horses, and this would release 50,000,000 acres of arable land. As only three acres are required to support a human being, these would feed nearly 17,000,000 people. What a tremendous help that would be in the present threatened food crisis!

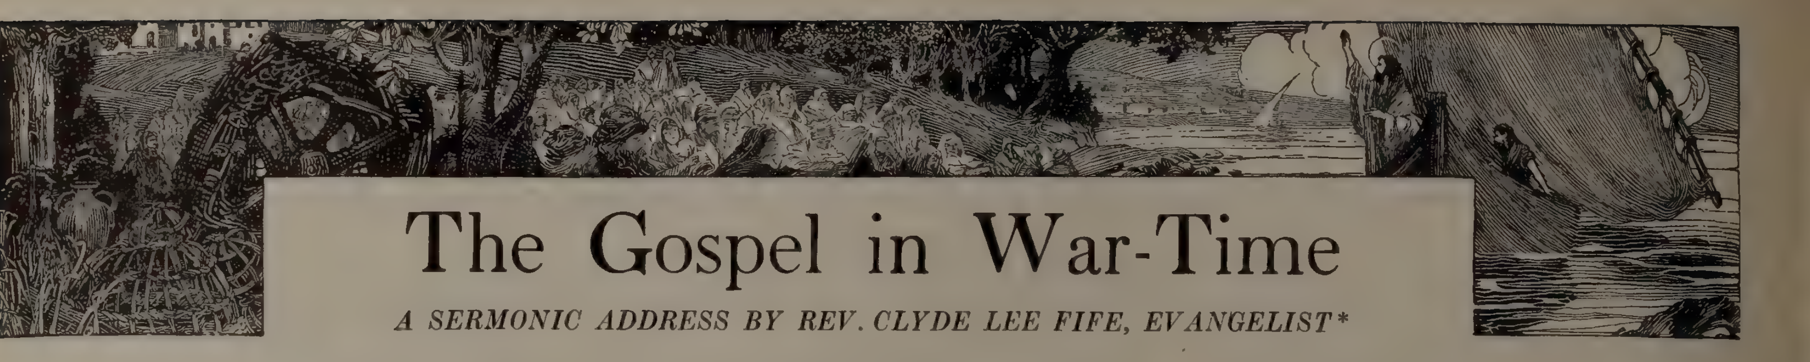
Government investigations show that the horse is the most inefficient power source in common use. The horse averages only three hours' work a day on the farm, and his work costs twelve to thirteen cents an hour. The average cost of hauling farm produce to market is about 24 cents for each ton hauled one mile. In cities, where the cost of operating motor trucks is much higher than in the country, the cost of haulage by motor averages less than 18 cents per ton mile. On this basis there should be a saving of 25 per cent. in haulage by the use of a motor truck.

There are other economies to consider. One man can drive and take care of a motor truck and do as much work with it as three men driving teams. Here is a saving of the hire of two men—and farm help is scarce and high-priced. The cost of raising, feeding and caring for horses is constantly rising, whereas the cost of motor trucks has as constantly been going down, until today good motor trucks and delivery wagons can be bought at from fifty cents to $1 per pound of carrying capacity.

BY the use of a truck for hauling, the horses and men can be kept at work in the field, and several trips to market or railroad can be made in a day instead of one trip, and advantage be thus taken of dry weather when the roads are in good condition to market the season's harvest or to reap the benefit of high market prices before they drop. Or the motor truck can bring into profitable use land too far from a shipping-point for successful use where horses are depended upon for hauling, because a truck can haul a load twenty-five miles or more to market and return the same day, while the limit for a team is twelve miles.

In fruit- and truck-growing and in dairying the motor truck has peculiar advantages. Perishable products deteriorate rapidly with handling and time. Rail shipments are subject to many and long delays, particularly now when there is such freight congestion and when preference is given by the carriers to munitions and other high freight-rate shipments, when priority of shipment is being given to fuel, steel and army supplies, and embargoes on various kinds of freight are being ordered by the railroads. Motor trucks are used in California, Michigan, Ohio, New Jersey, and various other states to haul fruit and garden truck long distances directly to market in the large cities or

Continued on page 1002



The Gospel in War-Time

*A SERMONIC ADDRESS BY REV. CLYDE LEE FIFE, EVANGELIST

TEXT—Phil. 3 : 13, 14. "Forgetting the things that are behind, I press forward to the mark of the high calling of God, which is in Christ Jesus."

UNDER the dripping light of stars or under the blazing sun, each of us must stand alone to commune with God; to see the divine handwriting on the wall of his future; to hear within his heart the still, small voice that urges him on to conquest and to certain victory. From under a cloud of war as wide as the world, and which hovers over forty millions of men under arms, we look through the mist of our tears to the rainbow of God's promise of a love undying for all men. Breathing a prayer for strength and help in this time of need, we ask him to give us the vision splendid, and we stand, like Samuel of old, to say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

With a prayer that God may help us to rise above selfishness and personal desires; that we may be enabled to drink of the cup of which our Redeemer drank, to be baptized with the baptism of suffering with which he was baptized, and that we may be able to enter into his sufferings and those of all humanity—thus praying, we peer beyond the veil that hides from our eyes the future and mercifully conceals the burdens which only a beneficent Christ can help us to bear.

I see, first of all, the vision of a new day, with a changed order suited to the different tasks now given to us as God's servants. I see in this picture evangelists who will tell the truth from the platform, if it shames the devil; whose word will be as good as their bond; who will realize that it is just as necessary and as much expected that an evangelist should regard sincerity and truth as his nearest and dearest friend, as for a business man to adhere to truth and the Golden Rule. They will care less for numbers and flaming reports and for four- or five-figured checks, and more for the vital things, conversion, regeneration and godly example. I see a new standard by which to judge of effectiveness and permanency in evangelistic effort. Whether we like it or no, the criterion is different, the demands, the expectations, the hopes, are all changing.

I have supreme faith in the sincerity, the honor of truth of our men who go forth as exponents of the Gospel—the only Gospel that has ever gladdened the heart of this sin-cursed world. They are preaching mightily the only prescription for human happiness. But in this vision of the future there will be a better understanding and a more accurate knowledge of cause and effect.

OUR next vision is that of more amicable agreement and amiable fellowship among evangelistic leaders and their helpers. I believe that, in cases where misunderstandings have arisen, they have not been due to wilful violations of obligations, but rather to a lack of the sense of common integrity and business discipline which is so often wanting in our spiritual leaders, who are signal successes as dispensers of the Word of God. There never was a good preacher in the world who has not been constantly cut to the heart by an ever-present sense of the fact that he is not able to live out his own teachings as well as he would like.

I see again, in this vision of the new evangelism, no stealing of helpers, no appropriations of another's sermons, even for a suggestion. There will be no disloyalty, no heart-breakings because of finer gifts bestowed on some members of the party who were more popular than others, while the less popular ones looked on.

And I see also in the vision of the coming evangelism a new satisfaction, a contentment and a peace that passeth understanding, such as can only come to those who are willing to work in the smaller fields of God's vineyard; workers who are contented with the results of their labors until God shall lead them by his Spirit into larger fields of endeavor. It is a great injustice to the smaller fields to apply to them the high-pressure methods used in the large city campaigns, and to expect attendance, converts and financial support out of all proportion to the real possibilities of the field itself. When we fall into this condemnation of the devil, we overdrive the lambs and do a permanent injury to the blessed work in which we are engaged.

Another and even more inspiring aspect of this new evangelism which presents itself is that of an evangelistic force filled with a glorious and confident optimism. It is my belief that evangelistic pessimism is more damning than gas bombs or liquid fire. Any preacher or evangelist who will go before his people while they are under such a strain as the American people are under today and preach to them a Gospel of tears and pessimism, and who will cross dark bridges over turbulent waters before he comes to them, is in the same class with the doctor who calls on a hysterical patient and himself becomes hysterical and begins to sob and moan at what he believes to be the certain approaching death of his patient.

There is still another type who is just as ill-fitted to lead, and that is the evangelist or preacher who carries his doubts and bickerings into the pulpit on Sunday and leaves his faith at his fireside, or to the quietude of his study. For such I have absolutely no forbearance. Unless our preachers and evangelists themselves catch the vision of a God-fearing, spiritualized, energized, vitalized America, and seek through a helpful Gospel to bind up the broken-hearted, to pour in the oil and wine of consolation and give to the world a radiant hope on which no shadow of doubt can rest more than one hundred million American people will pass through the deep waters of tribulation and go into a long night of sorrow uncomforted and deprived of the gracious consolation which the Gospel alone can give.

TURNING to another picture which rises before me in this vision splendid, I see a reconstructed America. I see food thieves punished and suppressed and the starving mouths fed. I see billions of dollars coming from the national depositories back into the hands of the humble tillers of the soil. I see an increased wage for the day laborer, and a dollar that will buy more meat and bread and potatoes than at any time since the war began. I see a better understanding between the captains of industry and the men who furnish the brawn to make the wheels hum and to fill the waiting cars.

From talks with men who know I learn that employment is now 121 per cent; so great is the demand for labor of all kinds that women are being put to work on railroads in place of men. The railroad offices of the Pennsylvania and other roads are being rearranged and all accommodations for company employees are being made over for women instead of for men.

God and the crops are saving America. Never before has such an acreage been planted, carefully tilled and nourished by sunshine and rain. A larger acreage will be planted next year, war or no war.

The President's Welcome to the New National Army

The White House, Washington.

To the Soldiers of the National Army:

You are undertaking a great duty. The heart of the whole country is with you. Everything that you do will be watched with the deepest interest and with the deepest solicitude not only by those who are near and dear to you but by the whole nation besides. For this great war draws us all together, makes us all comrades and brothers, as all true Americans felt themselves to be when we first made good our national independence.

The eyes of all the world will be upon you because you are in some special sense the soldiers of freedom. Let it be your pride therefore to show all men everywhere not only what good soldiers you are but also what good men you are, keeping yourselves fit and straight in everything and pure and clean through and through. Let us set for ourselves a standard so high that it will be a glory to live up to it and then let us live up to it and add a new laurel to the crown of America.

My affectionate confidence goes with you in every battle and every test. God keep and guide you!

WOODROW WILSON.

I see, too, in my vision that the days of multi-millionaires will automatically cease. This will come simply through the fact that the rich will have a new philosophy of life and conduct, and will realize that money is a means to an end and not an end in itself, and that it must be spent to be rightly enjoyed. Finances for evangelistic campaigns, through the generosity of men of wealth as well as of the common people on whom God has always depended, will be more generous than ever before. Instead of real evangelism being hindered and church life weakened and prostrated, I am confident that we are now entering upon a season of the mightiest moral and religious upheaval that the world has ever known. I have made research for myself as to the bearing that other wars in this land have had on missionary and evangelistic work. It was during a war that the first missionary ever sent out by the Presbyterian General Assembly was given his commission and the benedictions of a praying brotherhood. In the war of 1812 there were tremendous revivals of religion. During the great Civil War there came from the hearts of the people of both North and South a cry to God for the blessings of his Holy Spirit, which was answered by refreshing showers of revivals. New missionary efforts were born and missionaries were equipped; men consecrated themselves anew and, shod with the preparation of the Gospel, went forth to preach the undying love of Christ to a dying world. In this war there will come a period of spiritual reconstruction and evangelization in our churches, in which the unworthy will be eliminated and only the genuine will remain. Are ye able to drink this cup?

WE should tell the people of America not to observe an hysterical economy. That doctrine almost ruined trade in this country for a time. Men then began to discover that if no one buys from the other, then no one can pay his bills. For that reason, finances which had been liquid were congealed. The true course for Americans to follow today is not a false economy, but a resumption of all payments, of all proper buying and to withhold nothing that can be let go. In other words, I pay you so you can pay me; I buy from you so you can buy from me.

The further I go and the more I study men, the more convinced I am that the only security worth a pinch of snuff is the man himself. I value less and less any kind of contract. The white and black is not enough. If a man is a thief and starts in to beat you, he will probably accomplish his purpose. But if he have honor and at least a "fair" memory, he will do the right thing, contract or no contract. I like the old-time Kentucky way observed when I was a boy, to do things by word of mouth, and on the principle that a man's word is as good as his bond.

One more picture I see in this vision splendid, and that is of an evangelistic force with a new song, that rises above all others and, emphasizes Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of the world, and the Gospel as the only panacea for the evils that exist. Nothing else can cure the broken heart; nothing else can comfort the sad and lonely.

I talked with a famous preacher about what we should tell America now. We talked of the needs of the Red Cross, of the Liberty Bonds, and agreed that we should tell every one to join the Red Cross and to buy a bond if possible. We agreed that we should preach patriotism and we should boost the Health and Welfare Leagues, and the societies that knit socks and send soup and all kinds of provisions and comforts for the boys in camp and at the front. Then came a pause in the conversation, for it had a sense of incompleteness. It was finally suggested that, more than army, more than navy, more than bonds, more than angelic ministries, to our soldiers we should tell the world that Jesus saves.

"We have heard the joyful sound, Jesus saves! Jesus saves!
Tell to sinners all around, Jesus saves! Jesus saves!
Wake, ye islands of the sea; echo back ye ocean waves;
This our song of jubilee, Jesus saves! Jesus saves!"

Go, men, for the sake of Jesus, and preach it this year as never before. Keep the vision before you; accept it as born of love and hammered out on the anvil of experience. And next year, come and tell me if it has not helped you to bear your burdens better, and if you have not found in this something that shall let your year's work end with a sense of completeness, and glow like a flaming sun as it falls into the sea of gold, to rise serenely on another day, attended by the peace that the faithful preaching of God's ministry alone can give.

---

*Delivered at the International Association of Evangelists, Winona Lake, Ind., August 23.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Struggle's Priceless Gains

SUNDAY, September 23. Heb. 12 : 11. "Nevertheless afterward!" The apostle Paul is great at looking at the immediate hour in its relationship to a larger season. He never allowed any moment to act aggressively, as though it were the entire day, and he never allowed the day to usurp the throne of the year. The passing experience was only a princeling and not a king. Everything was regarded as a fragment, and not as an integer. The link was not the chain. The cloud was not the summer. Everything had its "afterward"; and only in the afterward could it be wisely interpreted. Paul refused to acknowledge the final sovereignty of the immediate hour. The hour was part of the fuller day.

And in the cultivation of his larger outlook memory had come to the apostle's aid, and had become the minister of hope and vision. Yesterday was filled with significant experiences. God's love in times past is a guarantee of golden revelation in times to come. Paul had seen the apparently adverse happening "turn out to the progress of the gospel." He had seen how the sharp harrow is related to the golden grain. He had seen how the December snow has something to do with the song of "harvest home!" And these vital fellowships between seemingly opposite things had emerged so frequently out of obscurity that it had now become the apostle's habit to expect and to look for them. "Tribulation worketh patience, and patience . . . hope." "This light affliction, which is only for a moment, worketh a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Out of the black carbon is to come the flashing diamond. The April showers are to bring May flowers.

In one of his letters Robertson of Brighton makes this confession: "The most valuable book I possess is a remembrance of times at which I repined, but which I now see were sent in answer to my prayer to be made a minister." The things that once seemed to him like life's bitter ironies were afterward seen to have been the vital ministries of love and grace. The apparent antagonists were answering his own prayer, and the gracious visitors came in the guise of unfriendly presences. They were God's angels but veiled! And it was only afterward that the veils were lifted, and the angels showed their faces, and they were bright with the gentle radiance of the Lord. In Christ Jesus the morrow belongs to us as well as today, and a great part of our sacred treasure lies in its unseen hands. J. H. J.

The Whole Family

MONDAY, September 24. Eph. 3 : 14, 15. "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." As sometimes between two mountain peaks we see a vast expanse of sky, or as between rifts in a cloud at night we see the shining stars, all the brighter because of the darkness of the framework through which we see them, so here and there in the Scriptures we get glimpses into eternal meanings. Only casually in the words just quoted is it intimated to us that the human family is unbroken by death—that it is one family still, whether on earth or in heaven. "Part of the host have crossed the flood, and part are crossing now." Let us be thankful for these quite incidental gleams of light, these sudden and unexpected revelations of our inheritance with the saints in glory.

A score of years ago a gentleman wrote to a friend of his who had just lost his wife: "I am thinking of you in your loneliness. There was a time when I too was bereaved. The joy of my life was suddenly withdrawn, and torrents of sorrow overflowed my soul. Then it was I came to be a guest at your house. One night, after you and your family had retired, I found it impossible to sleep. Dressing myself, I walked out upon the lawn, and spent an hour or more at midnight. In the yard I saw a beautiful tree, a great Norway maple, stately and tall as an elm, and very rich with foliage. Yet I did not see all the tree, since half of it at least was in the shadow. I saw only that part of it upon which the moon shone. Then the thought suddenly occurred to me that the other part of the tree, the part that was in the shadow, was as truly a part of the tree as that I saw. And somehow, from my memory of Scripture, there came to me a sentence which vastly comforted my heart. The sentence was this, an incomplete one, and yet perfectly adapted to my need at the time: 'The whole family on earth and in heaven.' I remembered then what I had forgotten, that she who had gone out of my sight was still mine—that the family was still complete, though a portion of the family had gone into the shadow."

This is what Christian faith makes of death. It delivers us from hopeless fear into the liberty of the resurrection hope, and our souls move up into the joy of life triumphant and of love enthroned. C. C. A.

Subjugation of Self

TUESDAY, September 25. Gal. 5 : 24. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." The fifth chapter of Galatians begins with an appeal to Christians to recognize their evangelical liberty and make full use of it. The spirit of Christ that is in them cannot submit to that legalism which perverse teachers sought to foist upon the Galatians. However, liberty is not license. The Gospel of the forgiveness of sin for Christ's sake is not intended as a downy pillow for the old Adam in us: we cannot refresh our guilty hearts with the consolations of the Gospel and at the same time indulge the flesh in its sinful propensities. The liberty with which Christ has made us free is a liberty not only from the guilt but also from the power and dominion of sin. Wherever the blessed conviction, "God has pardoned me!" is truly alive in a sinner's heart, it acts as a constant and powerful restraint upon the natural inclination to sin which is ever present even in Christians. When men remember the awful price that had to be paid for their redemption, when they contemplate the agony of the Son of God on the cross, they do not find sinning easy. From a living faith in Christ and the atonement which he wrought for the sins of the world there springs a loyal devotion to him. Christ is recognized as the relentless enemy of sin, and allegiance to him embraces the duty of battling against every form of sinning. W. H. T. D.

The Death of Self

WEDNESDAY, September 26. Col. 3 : 3. "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Christ died once for all, but we die daily to self, sin and the world. Crucified with Christ, Paul said, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." As nature, after the death of winter, bursts forth into the glory of springtime, so we die to live, suffer to reign, that we may grow up into Christ. This life is our winter, full of storms, trials, frosts, pain and conflict; but the life to come is full of beauty beyond our fondest hopes.

Here we die to the love of gold, honor, fame, sinful pleasure; we suffer the loss of all these things that we may win Christ. He is the lofty ideal that lures us. How low and empty are the ideals of earth, such as fashions, feasting, splendid homes and equipage, leisure, pleasure and self-gratification! At the last they are crushed baubles.

It may seem a dream to the blinded soul, but it is a glorious reality to the eyes of faith. We here realize our citizenship of an everlasting kingdom; we possess riches which the unrepentant soul cannot count. He lives for that to which we are dead. He has nothing left but the worm that dieth not. "Reckon ye yourselves therefore dead indeed unto sin and alive unto God"; "for out of the womb of death eternal life is born." The death of self is therefore a glorious achievement, for it is the golden pathway to the only real life. Our cry should be, "Let me die to the world of sin, be buried with Christ; let me feel his resurrection power, bringing my heart into new life and union with him forever." E. W. C.

Alive for Evermore

THURSDAY, September 27. Rev. 1 : 18. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore. Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." He who spoke these words is the same who had said, more than sixty years before, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." We must not forget that in his lifetime he claimed to be superior to death, and that immediately after he was indubitably dead, his disciples believed he was alive. If he was alive forty days after his death, or four years after, or forty years after, it is easy to believe he is alive eighteen hundred years after his death. When Rufus Choate was sailing for Europe, in ill health, a friend, meaning to encourage him, said, "You will be here a year from now." He replied, "Yes, and a hundred years from now." The great advocate meant to say he had written his name on the roll of earthly immortality. When Jesus promised to be alive after his death he meant much more than that. To be sure, even if Jesus did not rise from the dead, and even if he be not alive now, there is a sense in which he lives in historic influence as no other character does. But he meant more, if words have any meaning. And his promise is not unsupported.

Influence is an inadequate word to represent the life of Christ in the world in all ages since the Incarnation. His is the power of a vital, persistent and unconquerable Personality. Not only are the words he spoke spirit and life, but his spirit is life-giving, and nothing gives life that is not itself alive. C. C. A.

The Atheist

FRIDAY, September 28. Ps. 14 : 1. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt; they have done abominable works; there is none that doeth good." The Spirit of revelation here draws aside the veil of secrecy by which some men tried to hide certain thoughts of their hearts from others. Atheism, it seems, was not boldly and publicly avowed in David's days as it is in ours by some who think themselves wiser than the rest. Modern atheism loves to parade as the highest achievement of the human mind in the matter of religion. The "scientific conscience" of enlightened men in our day, we are told, absolutely forbids their acceptance of the old-fashioned belief in a personal God. Formerly men seem to have been ashamed to let others know that they had discarded the belief in a God; they whispered their horrible notion to themselves; they wished that there might be no God and proceeded to persuade themselves that there was no God. The reason for their pitiable infatuation is found in their conduct: they live a life that is a continuous contradiction of God. Their conduct is evidence that they have dethroned God in their hearts. They act as if there were no God who will call them to account. In such a case it is an easy matter for a person to embrace infidel tenets.

It is remarkable, too, that David speaks of the human corruption which leads to atheism, yea, which is the evidence of the practical atheism of every wrongdoer, as a universal thing. No person is by nature better than his fellows; no person is naturally immune from atheism in some form. It is only by the grace which pardons man's guilt and reclaims him from his iniquities that a person is preserved from the insinuating folly of atheism. Whoever has found the true God in Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave himself for us, is not afraid to acknowledge that there is a God. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou has sent." (John 17 : 3.) W. H. T. D.

The Vision of Nations

SATURDAY, September 29. Deut. 32 : 1, 3, 4.

"Give ear, O ye heavens.
Hear O earth, the words of my mouth.
I will publish the name of the Lord:
Ascribe greatness unto our God.
He is the rock, his work is perfect.
Just and right is he, a God of truth."

Moses' final writing was a heavenly inspired song. It reminded Israel, after his departure, of the way God had led them and of the unchangeable principles of truth and justice, the supremacy of law, and obedience to the Law-Giver and Life-Giver.

Almighty God is here pictured as the moral ruler of the universe, with all nations of the earth subject to his will. This song was no doubt a portion of the inspiration in the hearts of the Pilgrim fathers who founded our Republic on the Rock of Ages, proclaiming liberty, freedom, equality and inalienable rights to all the people.

Nations who forget God and their true relationship to each other perish in war or crumble early in the dust of centuries.

No nation can safely become neutral regarding the great moral principles of Holy Scripture. Some have in the past asserted that there is no God but nature, no future beyond death, while others have said, "Might is right"; that neither God, man nor the devil have any individual personality or accountability. Meroz was cursed not for aiding the enemy directly, but because he did not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The fig tree was blasted, not because it was baneful, but because it was barren.

The nations of wider vision behold, as Moses did, beyond the narrow horizon of the present earthly Canaan, out into the infinite spaces, an everlasting country. If the pillar of fire and cloud of the personal presence of God is followed, we shall lead other nations out of the hell of war, of bigotry, superstition and paganism, into the uplands of enlightenment and universal peace. E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The Door Still Open

AMID the excitement of our own affairs on this side of the world, it is not surprising that some are liable to err in judgment of conditions at a distance. This seems to have been the case with a considerable portion of the American press in its estimate of Europe's attitude on the Pope's peace note, and especially with regard to the American reply. Now, however, there is a tendency on the part of our leading dailies toward reversal of judgment, since they are beginning to learn that the President in his letter to Pope Benedict did not, after all, close the door to peace negotiations, nor put up an effectual barrier to all discussion on that subject, as they at first believed. They are now rather disposed to regard the American note as more calculated to advance the cause of peace than otherwise.

As up to this writing there has been no authoritative information from Berlin which would give any indication as to what is tô be expected from that quarter, opinions from other sources concerning Germany's attitude must be taken for what they are worth. Such opinions may prove to be mere conjecture, or they may be a genuine foreshadowing of approaching German democratization. This will be strictly in line with the conviction expressed by the prominent Vienna journal the Zeit, at the time of Von Hollweg's retirement, when it declared that the German people believed "that the road to peace lies through political freedom."

That the fact of this growing sentiment in both Germany and Austria was in the mind of the President when he wrote his reply to the Pope, is now evident. His declaration in the note that "the will and purpose of the German people themselves" must be represented when peace finally comes, is clearly to be interpreted as meaning that the government should be one that is responsible to the Reichstag as the representatives of the German people.

But if the President's note has been misinterpreted at home, it has not been misunderstood by the two leading Central Powers. The New York Staats-Zeitung takes the view of the Vienna journal already quoted, in declaring, as it did in a recent issue, that it is desirable that Germany should come "into harmony with the political convictions of the advanced nations." In other words, that it should become democratized to the extent of having a thoroughly representative government.

It is in this light, and no other, that we must interpret the President's note. It points out the opportunity for "a democratized Germany to be the peace-bringer" if it will. There is nothing cryptic about it.

Her Home and Child

A POPULAR soprano has given up a successful vaudeville career for motherhood and the home. "Don't let's talk about art," she said as she prepared for her final appearance. "What's art, compared to the home? I have a home and a baby. Applause is mine today; tomorrow it goes to somebody else. But my home and my baby are mine indeed, and they are the things worth while in life."

A wise head and a true heart!

The woman who has a home and a baby has her career cut out for her by the Almighty. She has the true gold, and can well afford to give up for it the glistening tinsel.

It must seem fine to a talented woman to be able to sway the feelings of vast audiences with her song. But it must be infinitely finer for her to soothe her own little one to sleep with a lullaby. Ripples and roars of applause must be sweet. But the lispings of a woman's own child must be immeasurably sweeter.

True, there is place on the stage and in business and in the professions for women. Hundreds of thousands of them in this country are making good in public life, as teachers, stenographers, nurses, clerks, doctors, and even lawyers. And none would bar or hinder them. They are faithfully and efficiently performing noble service to humanity.

But few of these have homes and babies. The woman who has these and properly cherishes them need have no envy of her more strenuous and seemingly more brilliant sisters. Hers is the jewel of great price. She may think sometimes that life is dull and drudging. But so do the others, far oftener perhaps than she. So, alas! do all of us.

But if there is anything that, more than all else merely human, lifts us in this life to true purposes, sets us in tune with the infinite, and gives us foretaste of heaven, it is that little corner in creation we call home.

The woman with a ribboned and scented dog hugged to her heart may imagine she knows love. The woman living in the elegantly appointed hotel may think she knows luxury.

The woman who has no cares may think she knows happiness.

But the woman in her own home, with her own child at her breast, knows all these, and knows them better than all the others do.

The home may be humble, but it is her home.

The child may be a care, but it is her child.

And in all the ages since woman was created for motherhood, woman nature has not changed in this respect one whit.

One of the greatest crimes possible against mankind is committed when a home is broken up by outside forces. Lives torn loose from accustomed moorings and without chart or compass are set adrift upon an unknown, cruel sea. The sea is black with rotting hulks broken in the sundering of family ties and the crushing of the sweet influences of home.

The Interpreter's House

IN these days of insecure wealth and crumbling fortunes, one cannot but be struck with the timeliness and force of the old Biblical warnings against putting our trust in riches. They take wings and fly away; they vanish in a night; they rust and corrupt; they are the prey of the plunderer; they are of value only as we use them rightly.

In Bunyan's beautiful story, when the Pilgrims were being shown through the Interpreter's House, they came into a chamber where there was a man "who could look no way but downward," busily at work raking to himself straws, small sticks and the dirt of the floor. So intent was he on this task that he gave no heed to the visitors, and was apparently blind to the presence of a Hand that held above his head, and quite within reach, a glittering crown of gold, which he could easily have had for the taking. Like the man with the rake, many of us have been so intent on the accumulation of worldly riches that we have forgotten "the riches that perish not."

We are living in the Interpreter's House today, where character, individual and national, is being sifted out. Great fortunes have been heaped together, and these are now to be largely conscripted—taken for fuel to keep up the world-conflict. The same sifting process is going on in all the nations, and began in many of them long ago. The hoarded treasures of monarchs, no less than those of the rich civilians, are being used to feed the conflagration.

The only wealth that is imperishable is that of character. Pure, kindly, generous thoughts, good deeds, noble ideals, unselfish sacrifice—these dignify life and bring peace and happiness to the soul. They are the spiritual treasures that are safe and enduring.

The Misfits in Life

A ONE-LEGGED man is attracting attention by walking across the continent. Another misdirected genius claims to be the champion one-armed wrestler of the world.

The misfits of men and their occupations might be numbered into the millions. The very commonness of these is their protection against popular remark. It is only the rare man that has found his right place who excites comment.

It is said that when a hungry Indian goes hunting he kills the first thing he sees, if it is only a crow. Then if he kills a duck he throws away the crow, and if he gets a deer he throws away the duck. How many men are like the Indian in selecting their purposes and pursuits in life!

The gravest problem any man has to solve in life is that of selecting his occupation. And it is the problem before which man is the most helpless. Few are able to analyze and estimate their own abilities or even correctly to test their own inclinations.

It is perhaps absolutely true that there is no one born into the world, however poorly equipped, who has not some place awaiting him in which he might be a complete success. But how is he to find that place? How is he to recognize it even if by chance he should stumble upon it? This gravest of problems gets the least practical attention. The universities teach a young man everything but what to do with what they give him. Circumstance decides for most, and we are its slaves ever after. We may drop the crow when we get the duck and drop the duck if we get the deer, but we never know but that there might be still better game awaiting us.

The occupational training movement in some of the public schools is beginning to make good. It is a movement that promises incalculable results.

The Bird on the Hat

IT is a baffling psychological mystery why woman wants a bird on her hat.

It is a confession, carried aloft like a banner, that she needs unnatural aids to make her beautiful. For the bird adorns the woman; no woman adorns a bird.

To refined minds, the woman is prettier without the bird; to all minds, the bird is prettier without the woman.

The bird on the woman's hat is a mark of murder the most cruel and heartless that the mind can conceive. And it is a mark of even more than that. It is a constant reminder that the vanity of woman can ruthlessly throttle the sweetest music that ever kissed the soul, enslave the most perfect type of freedom, mar the purest thing of beauty in the world, and can then place the evidence of her heartless crimes above her brow and ask us to look and think her more beautiful!

Is it, then, to be wondered at that humanity has sickened of it, and is saying, through the law and the game wardens, that the song-birds shall stay where God put them—in the fields and the woods?

There, in their native element, the song-birds are our first and sweetest inspiration. They taught mankind his first note in music and gave him his first dream of liberty. They are the greatest optimists in all the world, teaching always cheer and hope. They croak no melancholy dirges, but sing only songs of love and praise. They bring into our hearts nothing but brightness, and drive from us naught but gloom.

And let them stay where God put them—in the brightness of the fields, in the deeps of the woods, and in the brightness and the deeps of human souls.

"Entire Integrity and Loyalty"

LOYAL support to every measure that will strengthen and sustain our nation in the war does not necessarily involve personal hatred, abuse and persecution of the German people living among us.

President Wilson has felt it necessary to utter a true and timely rebuke to that psuedo-patriotism which preaches hatred and abuse. "I have been made aware from various sources," writes the President, "of the unfortunate position in which a very large number of our loyal fellow citizens are placed because of their German origin or affiliations. I am sure that they need no further assurance from me of my confidence in the entire integrity and loyalty of the great body of our citizens of German blood. You know that not only once but many times in my public addresses I have expressed this confidence."

The pettiness of attitude which the President thus rebukes has nothing to do with true patriotism. The President himself had previously made it clear that the war is against German autocracy and not against the German people. Certainly it is not a war upon the German people of our own country.

The great body of Germans among us are placed in a most trying position. Their position is but one of the many evils of war for which they are not at all responsible, but for which they nevertheless suffer. It is not in keeping with the American spirit of fair play that their sufferings be accentuated by wanton cruelty. And it is to be said to the credit of our country that it is not the native-born Americans who are at fault. The true American has an innate sense of chivalry that extends even to a foe in battle and a of feeling tolerance for unfortunates at home.

Before this war began we Americans felt that we knew the German people living among us, and they had a warm place in our hearts. We had good opportunities for knowing them, and we found them to be in every way rational, honorable, kind-hearted and considerate. They were good neighbors, good citizens. We freely admitted that they were contributing enormously to the progress, prosperity and social, moral and religious character of our common country.

It is inconceivable that any people should suddenly degenerate into barbarians and moral imbeciles. The Germans among us are still what we knew them to be. The idea that our former quiet and kindly German neighbors have become demented and demoniacal is acceptable only to feeble minds. Truth has a poor chance in war time.

That there are obnoxious braggart Germans among us is true, but they are not representative. There are German spies here, no doubt, for there are spies of all kinds everywhere in war. But the great body of our German neighbors are neither braggarts nor spies, but so keenly intent upon nothing as keeping out of the troubles that encompass them.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Shade Tree Grows Lilacs

THERE are shade-trees on which lilacs grow; not a new variety of lilacs, but the same deliciously fragrant old-fashioned ones that used to bloom in the dooryard of the farmhouse whose memory is precious to so many old people today. Huge shade-trees covered with lilac blossoms will be familiar sights at Glen Ellyn, Illinois, if the recent discovery of Dr. Frank Johnson, village forester, proves practical on a large scale. Dr. Johnson announced that after a long series of experiments he had at last succeeded in budding lilacs to a common variety of shade tree. He refuses for the present to tell which variety, but exhibited a sprig with a lilac bud grafted to it. "I can cover an entire tree with lilac blossoms," he asserted, "and ordinary varieties of bugs will stay away from it because the blossoms are so bitter. Six trees so budded will blossom next spring at Glen Ellyn." It is to be hoped that the experiment will be successful. Who would not like to sit under the shade of a forest tree full of lilac bloom mingling its purple with the green, the sweet perfume breathed from among the leaves that make the shade? Then if it shall be proven that the flowers drive away the insects from the trees, what a beneficent discovery it will be! In this there would be beauty combined with utility. The Almighty in building a house for himself gave orders that there should be strong pillars for support, but directed that they should be beautifully decorated with the artist's chisel. The sturdy qualities of manhood and womanhood that hold up character are to be decorated with the gentle Christian graces. The art of grafting one plant into another was known in olden times. The apostle uses the custom to teach the lesson that we are grafted into Christ, and grow beautiful blossoms and delicious fruit from his life, as the olive branch grafted in the tree bears good fruit. The thought is thus expressed: "The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in." (Rom. 11 : 19.)

Dirigible Balloon's Successful Trial

RECENTLY there was an official trial of the first of the nine dirigible balloons which the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company was commissioned, several months ago, to build for the United States Navy, to be used in coast and harbor patrol duty. On the trial flights, just held, which were witnessed by official representatives from the United States Navy Department, every contract requirement was attained and comfortably exceeded. These tests covered speed, endurance, altitude, quick ascent and rapid descent. Just now when airplane performances are claiming the lion's share of public attention, we believe that the American people will be interested to know that the Navy Department has not limited our aerial forces to one kind of equipment, but has taken steps to provide itself with dirigible balloons of the "Blimp" type, which have accomplished such wonderful results abroad. Congress authorized the expenditure of $640,000,000 for a navy of the air. It is reported from Washington that by ordering aircraft in great numbers the Aircraft Production Board has reduced the cost of machines one-half, and there is the possibility of a still greater reduction. Peace is more likely to be secured through the instrumentality of American warships than through any other. It is believed that an air navy large enough and equipped with strong American young men will be able to defeat the enemy's airships over the submarine base, destroy those shelters and abate the undersea menace. Something more than half a billion dollars will provide the finest fleet in existence, and the best fliers and finest fighting men to man it. If the war is to be determined in the air, then let us fill the sky with airships thick as blackbirds and secure a swift victory and a speedy peace. The young men of Europe are dead, and there is weeping in every home, and the common people of the world are longing and praying that God in his providence may so direct that there shall be a settlement of the conflict, honorable and acceptable to all, that will insure a lasting world peace, and that our precious sons who have so loyally offered themselves may return to their families and to the arts of peace. In the spiritual realm man has feet to walk and wings to fly. The divine endowment necessary for spiritual flight is thus mentioned: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." (Isa. 40 : 31.)

School Children Save $250,000

CHILDREN under eighteen years of age have on deposit in the 180 savings banks connected with the public schools of New York City the immense sum of $250,000. It is as necessary to teach the children the value of money and the importance of saving it for good uses as it is to teach them to read and write and spell, to add and subtract, to multiply and divide. The school teacher should take great pains, however, to caution the child against the danger of getting money for the money's sake, and laying it away simply for the satisfaction of having it. The class should be taught that money represents brains, labor, behavior, economy, and that it should be used for the necessaries, even luxuries of life, to bless others, to build up the kingdom of God, and for a seasonable provision for a rainy day. The tiny individual savings of the school banks remind us of Christ's lesson of economy in small things: "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." (John 6 : 12.)

Cotton Crop $2,000,000,000

IN the opinion of Charles H. Markham, president of the Illinois Central, the new cotton crop has a value of $2,000,000,000. Returning from a tour of the South, President Markham said: "The South was never more prosperous, and conditions point to another banner year. The value of the cotton crop last year amounted to $1,500,000,000. This year the value will be $2,000,000,000. The crop will equal last year's, which was a little below the average. It might be called a medium crop with high prices. Sugar, rice, tobacco and corn are all good crops with good prices. Sugar is selling for double what it did three years ago. Cars are moving freer and there will be no serious trouble moving crops this fall. The old South was great; the New South is a greater empire. In its agricultural products, its mining and manufacturing and commerce, its industry, its thrift, its high moral standards and its splendid civilization it is making great progress and marching with the North to the highest national prosperity. Good crops are thus used by Christ as a symbol of a fruitful spiritual harvest: "And others fell on good ground, and sprang up and bare fruit a hundredfold." (Luke 8 : 8.)

Russian Museum Robbed

BY a telegram from Petrograd it is learned that art treasures and pictures valued at 5,000,000 rubles have been stolen from the great historical museum of the late Grand Duke Michael Nicholaievitch. A painting by Corregio, valued at $250,000, was taken. Early this month six armed robbers stole silver statues and antiques valued at $750,000 from the Senate building. It is a mean thing to break into a residence and take away jewelry and money, to blow open the bank safe and carry off the bags of gold; but these thefts are not so mean as that of the robbers who stole the art treasures and the immortal work of the painter from the museum—things so precious that no money can compensate their loss. It is hoped they may be found and returned to their place, and that the thieves may be punished. The peril to earthly treasures is employed in Christ's Sermon on the Mount to teach the necessity of laying up mental and spiritual riches, which cannot be corrupted by time nor carried away by the robber: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." (Matt. 6 : 20.)

Wheat Gambling Stopped

WHEAT futures passed from the Board of Trade in Chicago on August 25, when the closing gong sounded, probably for the period of the war. It might be a good idea to let the futures stay in the past for good. Gambling in the idea of grain in the future, instead of dealing with the actual grain itself, is a sin that has not at all been confined to Chicago. The man who gambles on cards, dice, wheels or chips is branded as a criminal and put behind the bars when convicted. But the one who gambles in wheat he never saw and never will see, which he never owned and never will own, has been considered the keen grain operator. In serious war-time, when bread is so necessary, it was found wise to put an end to the folly and fraud of "future" wheat gambling. What is needed and is generally found in business life is the standard of integrity recognized in the selection of the first deacons: "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom." (Acts. 6 : 3.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

The waterfront at Riga, Russian port captured by the German army in its drive toward Petrograd. Riga may become the base of German operations against Russian naval establishments at Reval and Kronstadt

Gen. Radko Dimitrieff, commander of the Russian army that gave up Riga

"GOOD-BY BOYS, AND GOD BLESS YOU." Twenty-five thousand boys in khaki marched down Fifth Avenue in New York City on August 30, under a low-hung, murky sky that finally soaked them with copious showers. In battle array they marched with bayonets fixed, with wagon trains loaded, and more than two million people lined the city's most magnificent street to bid them farewell and godspeed. Across the avenue swung a banner, and it bore the message of the city, of every swelling heart in all the throng, "Good-by boys, and God bless you."

The marchers were the men of the recently organized Twenty-seventh Division, U. S. A., formerly National Guardsmen of the Empire State. They were scheduled to leave in a few days for a training camp in the South, there to be prepared for an early start to the battle-scarred fields of France, where the fight rages for world democracy. Most of the regiments had been recruited in the Greater City itself.

The watchers were first the mothers and fathers and wives and sisters and sweethearts and friends and boys and girls of the marching men. They wore a special badge which won for them, as their accepted right, the foremost places on the curb, on the stoops of many a mansion, and in many a window usually given up to merchandising. Back of them in surging ranks the general public stood and craned its neck and waved its arms, and cheered now and then, and did its part in the greetings of farewell. But in the crowd and in places of honor in the stands appeared also uniforms of blue, and under the blue coats beat understandingly the hearts of men who had marched forth in the sixties to save the Union, many of them in these same regiments again marshaled to the colors.

And how they marched! From upper Central Park to the Washington Arch, five miles, with swinging stride, in perfect lines, their faces lighted with the fervor of those who face danger for an ideal and face it fearlessly, yet with the flickering smile that marks the young American unafraid. With roar of drum and blare of trumpet, to stirring tunes and popular airs they marched steadily onward. And the crowd? It cheered now and then; it waved saluting handkerchiefs at times; it applauded certain popular units of the division; but mostly it was a solemn crowd and many a cheer was stopped by a rising lump that closed the throat, while many a handkerchief had surreptitious business about the corners of its owner's eyes, and many a flag was waved by a hand that felt still the parting clasp of one who might be marching for the last time at home.

AND then, on September 4, New York and nearly every city in the country again stood to do homage to marching men, as the men of the new National Army passed in review before the citizens whose battles they had been called to fight. In Philadelphia this review was held on September 1, 35,000 men marching past the cradle of Liberty. Here there was little khaki; only a few reserve officers and Regular Army men to direct the march; but the lines of men in citizen's clothes marched as steadily, with as sure a step—if with a slightly less perfect alignment—marched as bravely as the guardsmen of the previous parade. Again the watching millions cheered openly and wept secretly. Again the nation bade a brave farewell to its sons, to the sons of its heart; going forth to lay their futures, their hopes, their lives, perchance, upon the altar of liberty; going forth to prove to the world that men can still die for the right; that liberty, bought at such a fearful price, defended in the sixties at such a terrible cost, lacks no champions in this day.

All On the Platter

A WEEK ago Dr. W. H. Vail told us how to eat. Next week Dr. Vail tells us what to eat—and he knows.

"The Witness" is a gripping story. We are violating no confidence in telling you that next week Courtland meets Rev. John Burns, a real man and minister, who he suspects may know the "Presence."

Frank Carpenter has found out a great deal about cotton and the processes by which it becomes clothes. He tells us next week some of the things he knows about it.

"Following Jesus" is the sermon message next week, brought by the Rev. Richard Braunstein, a most eloquent Methodist minister.

We promised that "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy" would be followed by further articles by Dr. Gray. A letter just received gives the titles of these as follows: "What Does the Bible Teach About Russia?" "What Does the Bible Teach about the Restoration of Babylon?" "The Millennium, What, When and Where?" "The Present War and Coming Events."

In Washington the President, the Cabinet, members of the Congress and of the diplomatic corps marching on foot, led the men of the new legions, and Pennsylvania Avenue was once more pressed by the feet of citizen soldiers, not marching homeward as victors, but marching forward to the victory of democracy. Then on September 5 to 10 the first men reached the sixteen great cantonments, where the chosen citizens are to be made into soldiers and built into an army.

SENATE GOES EASY. The Senate by varying votes rejected all amendments to the revised war profit section of the Finance Committee's War Revenue Bill and finally adopted by 72 to 7, the graduated war profit tax proposed by the committee. These rates, it is estimated, will take about $1,286,000,000, or about one-third this year's excess profits. It is expected that the total revenue produced by the taxes carried in the bill will be in the neighborhood of $2,522,000,000. The bill passed the Senate September 10, and was sent to conference.

ON THE TRAIL OF TREASON. Federal agents, acting on the same minute by a prearranged schedule, on September 5 raided offices throughout the country of the I. W. W., arresting a number of leaders and taking several tons of printed matter and records which were taken before Federal Grand Juries. The National headquarters of the Socialist Party at Chicago were also raided. The Department of Justice charges that the I. W. W. was planning a nation-wide destruction of growing crops and timber. The organization is also charged with responsibility for trouble in the copper mines and the lumber regions, where its activities are looked upon as being undertaken with the intent of hindering the government in the prosecution of the war.

THE FIVE-CENT LOAF. The United States Grain Corporation, acting for the National Food Administration, entered the wheat market on September 4, putting a stop to sales above the government price of $2.20 per bushel. Mr. Hoover claims that it will be possible to sell a loaf of bread for five cents, but that this price can only be made to those who carry it away. The sugar interests of the country on September 5 were reported as completing arrangements by which the National Food Administration would control all imports of raw sugar. Arrangements are being made with Cuban producers to fix the price of Cuban sugar for the year. Dr. Garfield of the Food Administration stated on September 5 that he would exert every effort to see that the public benefited directly from the government control of prices, and that the coal supply of the country would be distributed equitably.

LABOR, LOYAL AND OTHERWISE. Two conventions were called to meet at Minneapolis on September 5. One was arranged by the People's Council of America for Democracy and Peace representing certain elements of the labor movement, a few groups of Socialists and pacifists, most of whom had been associated together before the war in peace efforts which had brought them somewhat under suspicion of German influence. In order to show that the People's Convention did not truly represent the labor movement, Samuel Gompers, in company with other labor leaders and prominent citizens, organized a big Loyalty Conference under the auspices of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy to meet in Minneapolis on the same day on which the other convention was called. Both conventions expected to parade. Fearing violence if both conventions met, Governor Burnquist of Minnesota forbade the meeting of the People's Council's Convention within the state. The organization was then offered an opportunity to meet in North Dakota, but chose Hudson, Wis., as being nearer the original meeting-place. Being turned out of Hudson, they considered Milwaukee, but the governor of Wisconsin followed the lead of the governor of Minnesota and barred them out.

Continued on page 996

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A New Party Springs Up from the People

Hon. John M. Baer, Sent to Congress by the Nonpartisan League in North Dakota, Tells of This Sweeping Farmers' Movement

Hon. John M. Baer

As a newly elected congressman from the First District of North Dakota, I am confronted with unusual responsibilities. I have been chosen to represent a congressional district in which the voters have declared their independence of the leaders of the old political parties and have launched boldly into the open forum to consider impartially the problems and better understand the truths that concern the social, political and business relations of the plain people.

No secrets are to be concealed; consequently we have no secrets. In North Dakota we have abandoned the practice of allowing others to think for us; therefore I must express, so far as I am able, the thoughts of the people whom I have the honor to represent.

As I am not a "native son" of North Dakota, my residence in that state may be considered an accident of fortune; nevertheless my election to Congress as the deliberate choice of the plain people was no accident. I do not flatter myself that their choice was merely personal. On the contrary, it was impersonal. The campaign was made on a program which the voters themselves had planned.

Most of us in North Dakota are farmers. Our principal industry is the production in immense quantities of foods and food materials.

In the early history of the state it was natural—even necessary—for the farmers to devote all of their time to the initial work of preparing the land for production, to the erection of proper buildings, to procuring the necessary machinery and implements with which to work, to raising live stock for the farm and frequently for market as well; but the growing of crops for market was the big thing for which all these other preparations were made, and therefore it figured as the most important.

As the state was exceedingly productive and the people thrifty we had much to sell, and desired to buy all the necessaries which we did not produce. For years we gave no detailed consideration to buying and selling advantageously, nor to the public affairs of the state. When we sold, we had the worst of the deal. When we bought, we were given the worst of the deal. Our return for taxes paid was nil. In this way things continued for many years.

In the meantime, the political leaders and "Big Business" built up a machine exclusively for their joint selfish interests, and worked day and night to achieve their own ends, with absolute disregard of the producers' interest. Consequently, grafting became bolder and bolder in every public movement which required taxation. In our private affairs, whenever we were forced to deal with "Big Business" we were outrageously robbed. Numerous millionaires rose from poverty to wealth on what was stolen from the farmers.

This exploitation became so bold that the leaders of the game finally placed themselves in the attitude of defying us to attempt to improve matters. Not only were our financial interests at stake, but we saw that our intelligence and resolution were actually insulted and challenged.

The leaders in the political parties had only helped to rob us. I need not dwell upon the methods employed by "Big Business" and political leaders to fleece the public. Those methods are the same everywhere and are too well known to require explanation. What was to be done? That was the question.

All the conditions were right for concerted action. Our people were intelligent and energetic. Our interests were mutual, and we required only cooperation among ourselves to save that of which the political leaders and "Big Business" were robbing us.

Under the guidance of A. C. Townley and a few able assistants, we began to organize. Two years ago we formed the Nonpartisan League, and in the first election we swept the state clear of many political grafters. We elected a people's Governor. Good results developed immediately but there were still "hold-overs"—state senators—in office, who blocked progress in many instances. This difficulty, however, will be overcome in the next election.

Individual states can provide local reform only. The main political and economic difficulties are national in their scope. The fact that these difficulties are acute makes the people at large alert to any reform movement that promises success. Therefore, when it was observed that the Nonpartisan League in North Dakota was actually achieving results, the demand arose that its scope should be made national, and the League accordingly enlarged to meet the public demand.

The sudden death of the late Congressman Henry T. Helgesen created a vacancy in the North Dakota contingent in Congress. For some time no nominations were made to fill the vacancy, and during that time the idea of aspiring to the position never occurred to me. My nomination by the League came as a complete surprise.

Under ordinary conditions the League's candidate was sure to be elected, but under existing war conditions a new issue was raised which involved the conduct and purposes of our nation in relation to the war. This problem had formed no part of the League's original platform; nevertheless, when the emergency arose, the League was ready with definitely outlined purposes in relation to the war.

Stated in general terms, the League advocates the conscription of war profits and of "swollen fortunes" to pay the entire cost of our share of the war.

The League sees no justice in the conscription of men to be slaughtered in war, while at the same time the existing Administration proposes to return in full to the original possessors the money and property required to prosecute the war.

This war issue figured largely in my election campaign, on the basis that in many respects the Administration is following a mistaken policy in the conduct of the war. On that issue I carried the First District of North Dakota with a majority over the combined votes of my six opponents. The Administration candidate received only 3,300 votes out of a total cast of 28,000.

The people of my district are loyal and patriotic and stand firmly for the principles that gave birth to the American flag. They believe in true democracy.

They know that the people of this nation are entitled to complete information on the purposes of our entry into the war; and that those purposes should be primarily for the United States, and consistent with the rights of universal humanity. John M. Baer.

Mr. Rubincam's Son Wore His Neōlin Soles Eight Months—His Leather Soles Five Weeks

Neōlin Soles last noticeably longer than sole-leather. Often twice longer. And frequently longer than that. Of ourselves we would hesitate to make such claims.

But many letters from men-wearers show that there is no sole-wear quite like Neōlin sole-wear. Letters from women-wearers show the same thing, too. And to the scuffling, pounding, sliding kiddies Neōlin gives the same unequalled super-wear. Here is a letter which tells of even a six times greater wear for Neōlin Soles over leather soles:—

The National Petroleum Corporation

Denver, Colo., April 18, 1917

Gentlemen:—

"I have a boy who was fifteen years old in February. He is a 'regular' boy. He is a Boy Scout, indulges in hikes and all the various boyhood pastimes that play havoc with clothes and shoes.

"I bought him a pair of shoes with Neōlin Soles and he wore them almost continuously for eight months. At the end of that time the soles were still good but the uppers were gone. His next pair had leather soles and lasted just five weeks.

"I cannot refrain from advising you of this remarkable illustration of the lasting qualities of Neōlin." Yours very truly,

(Signed) H. C. RUBINCAM

Secretary-Treasurer of The National Petroleum Corporation

Neōlin Soles are not a substitute for, but are literally superior to, leather shoe soles. They are more resilient, more springy, more foot-easy. They are waterproof. They grip the ground securely, even in wet. They're easy on floors.

And Neōlin Soles are not rubber.

They are as flexible, but yet lighter than rubber.

They won't crack or stretch out of shape or tear loose like rubber soles. Look for the name Neōlin underneath each shoe sole. That will protect you against deteriorating soles made to look like Neōlin. In black, white, tan, in all sizes and styles of shoes.

Mark that mark; stamp it on your memory: Neōlin—

the trade symbol for a never changing quality product of

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
Akron, Ohio

Wore six times better than he leather sole

Neōlin Sole, worn one-sixth through in 33 days, on right foot of experimenter.

Leather Sole, worn clean through in 33 days, on left foot of experimenter.

Neōlin

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Better than Leather

SCAR-NOT FLOORLAC
Flat-Tone
FLOORLAC
MAHOGANY
THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.

A Floorlac Finish saves a lot of work

A ROUGH, worn floor is an added burden to the housewife. It is hard to clean and it will not stay clean. Why struggle with such a floor when a can of Sherwin-Williams will give it a durable, glossy surface and a rich, attractive color—all in one operation? Floorlac will transform a soft, pine floor into a fresh, bright, easily cleaned floor of oak, mahogany or one of several other colors. It is equally good for furniture and woodwork.

FLOORLAC

The All Around Varnish-Stain

On pine woodwork, cupboards and pantry shelves use Sherwin-Williams Family Paint. It gives a smooth, hard surface that does not collect dust, holds its color and can be washed. There are many pleasing colors to choose from.

There is a Sherwin-Williams dealer near you carrying just the right S-W finish for every home use. Send for free decorating suggestions and our painting text book "The ABC of Home Painting."

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
PAINTS & VARNISHES
COVER THE EARTH

Address all inquiries to THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.
719 Canal Road, N. W., Cleveland, O.
Showrooms—New York, 116 W. 32d St.; Chicago, People's Gas Building;
San Francisco, 523 Market St.
Sales Offices and Warehouses in principal cities. Best dealers everywhere.

The Witness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

STEPHEN MARSHALL, a young college freshman, misunderstood because of the fineness of his faith, was being put through the customary process of hazing by the students, who arrayed him in a fantastic costume and carried him to a theater where a very questionable play was on the stage. While the play was in progress, an alarm of fire was given, and in the resulting confusion Stephen Marshall performed an act of heroism in saving several lives before he himself fell a victim to the flames. Paul Courtland, one of the students, who had been deterred from taking part in the hazing by his instinct of fair play, but had not had courage enough to protest, was in the theater and witnessed the heroic death of Stephen. He himself joined in the work of rescue, and barely escaped with his life and lay for days in the hospital. When the bandages were removed from his eyes and he could walk around the college, he saw in Stephen's room the Bible, the portrait of Stephen's mother, books and other signs of the fine Christian personality of the young man who had died for others; and he felt himself the Saul who had held the clothing of those who had slain the young martyr. Then for the first time he announced to his fellow students that he stood for Stephen Marshall's Christ. The students planned to neutralize this new spirit through the medium of Gila Dare, a worldly young lady, who was to invite Courtland to her house to tell him how she admired his heroic conduct at the fire. After Courtland's visit to Gila Dare, Abner Wittemore, a misfit who because of his slowness was called "Witless Abner," and who was specializing in sociology, having received a telegram telling him that his mother was dying, asked Courtland to carry a package of medicine to a poor old woman in whom he was interested.

CHAPTER V—Continued

COURTLAND had no small trouble in finding the street, or rather court, in which the old woman lived.

He stumbled up the narrow staircase, lighting matches as he went, for the place was dark as midnight. By the time he had climbed four flights he was wondering what Wittemore came to places like this for! Just to major in sociology? Didn't the nut know that he would never make a success in a thing like that?

He knocked, with no result, at several doors for his old woman, but at last a feeble voice answered: "Come in," and he entered a room entirely dark. There didn't even appear to be a window, though he afterward discovered one opening into an air-shaft. He stood hesitating within the room, blinking and trying to see what was about him.

"Be that you, Mr. Widymer?" asked a feeble voice from the opposite corner.

"Wittemore couldn't come. He had a telegram that his mother is dying and he had to get the train. He sent me with the medicine."

"Oh, now ain't that too bad!" said the voice. "His mother dyin'! An' to think he should remember me an' my medicine! Well, now, what d'ye think o' that?"

"If you'll tell me where your gas is located I'll make a light for you," said Courtland, politely.

"Gas!" The old lady laughed aloud. "You won't find no such thing as gas around this part o' town. There's about an inch of candle up on that shelf. The distric' nurse left it there. I was thinkin' mebbe I'd get Mr. Widymer to light it fer me when he come, an' then the night wouldn't seem so long. It's awful, when you're sufferin', to have the nights long."

He groped till he found the shelf and lit the candle. By degrees the flickering light revealed to him a small bare room with no furniture except a bed, a chair, a small stove, and a table. A box in the corner apparently contained a few worn garments. Some dishes and provisions were huddled on the table. The walls and floor were bare. The district nurse had done her level best to clear up, perhaps, but there had been no attempt at good cheer. A desolate place indeed to spend a weary night of suffering, even with an inch of candle sending weird flickerings across the dusky ceiling.

His impulse was to flee, but somehow he couldn't. "Here's this medicine," he said. "Where do you want me to put it?"

The woman motioned with a bony hand toward the table. "There's a cup and spoon over there somewhere," she said, weakly. "If you could go get me a pitcher of water and set it here on a chair I could manage to take it durin' the night." She was little and old. Her thin white hair straggled pitifully about her small wrinkled face, her eyes looked as if they had been burned almost out by suffering. He saw she was drawn and quivering with pain, even now as she tried to speak cheerfully. A something rebellious in him yielded to the nerve of the little old woman, and he put down his impatience. Sure he would get her the water!

"I be'n thinkin'," said the old lady, quaveringly, when he stumbled, blinking, back into the room again with the water, "ef you wouldn't mind jest stirrin' up the fire an' makin' me a cup o' tea it would be real heartenin'. I ain't et nothin' all day 'cause the pain was so bad, but I think it'll ease up when I git a dose of the medicine, and p'r'aps I might eat a bite."

COURTLAND was appalled, but he went vigorously to work at that fire, although he had never laid eyes on anything so primitive as that stove in all his life. Presently, by using common sense, he had the thing going and a forlorn little kettle steaming away cheerfully. The old woman cautioned him against using too much tea. There must be at least three drawings left, and it would be a long time, perhaps, before she got any more. Yes there was a little mite of sugar in a paper on the table.

"There's some bread there, too—half a loaf 'most—but I guess it's pretty dry. You don't know how to make toast, I s'pose," she added, wistfully.

Courtland had never made toast in his life. He abominated it. She told him how to hold it up on a fork in front of the coals and he managed to do two very creditable slices. He had forgotten his own supper now. There was something quite fresh and original in the whole experience. It would have been interesting to have told the boys, if there weren't some features about it that were almost sacred. He wondered what the gang would say when he told them about Wittemore! Poor Wittemore! He wasn't as nutty as they had thought! He had good in his heart! Courtland poured the tea, but the sugar-paper had proved quite empty when he found it; likewise a plate that had once contained butter.

The toast and tea, however, seemed to be quite acceptable without its usual accessories. "Now," he said, with a long breath, "is there anything else you'd like done before I go, for I must be getting back to college."

"If you just wouldn't mind makin' a prayer before you go," responded the little old woman, wistfully, her feeble chin trembling with her boldness. "I be'n wantin' a prayer this long while, but I don't seem to have good luck. The distric' nurse, she ain't the prayin' kind; an' Mr. Wittemore he says he don't pray no more since he's come to college, and there ain't anybody else come my way for three months back."

Courtland stood rooted to the floor in dismay. "Why—I—" he began, growing red.

Suddenly the room which had been so empty seemed to grow hushed and full of breathless spectators, and One, waiting to hear what he would say—whether he would respond to the call. Before his alarmed vision there came the memory of that wall of smoke which had shut him in, and of that Voice calling him by name and saying, "You shall be shown." Was this what the Presence asked of him? Was this that mysterious "doing His will" that the Book spoke about, which should presently give the assurance?

He saw the old woman's face glow with eagerness. It was as if the Presence waited through her eyes to see what he would do. Something leaped up in his heart in response and he took a step forward and dropped upon his knees beside the old wooden chair.

"I'm afraid I shall make a worse bungle of it than I did of the toast," he said, as he saw her folding her hands with delight. She smiled with serene assurance, and he closed his eyes and wondered where were words to use in such a time as this.

"Now I lay me" would not do for the poor creature who had been lying down many days and might never rise again; "Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John" was more appropriate, but there was that uncertainty about it being a prayer at all. "Our Father"— Ah! He caught at the words and spoke them.

"Our Father which art"—but what came next? That was where he had always had to be prompted, and now, in his confusion, all the rest had fled from his mind. But now it seemed that with the words the Presence had drawn near, was standing close by the chair. His mind leaped forth with the consciousness that he might talk with this invisible Presence, unfold his own perplexities and restlessness, and perhaps find out what it all meant. With scarcely a hesitation his clear voice went on eagerly now:

"Our Father, which art in this room, show us how to find and know you." He could not remember afterward what else he said. Something about his own longing, and the old woman's pain and loneliness. He was not sure if it was really a prayer at all, that halting petition.

HE got up from his knees greatly embarrassed; but more by the Presence to whom he had dared to speak than by the little old woman, whose hands were still clasped in reverence, and down whose withered cheeks the tears were coursing. The smoky walls, the cracked stove, the stack of discouraged dishes, seemed to fade away, and the room was somehow full of glory. He was choking with the oppression of it.

The old woman was blessing him. She held out her hands like a patriarch: "Oh, that was such a beautiful prayer! I'll not forget the words all the night through and for many a night. The Lord himself bless ye! Are you a preacher's son, perhaps?"

He shook his head; but he had no smile upon his face at the thought, as he might have had five minutes before.

"Well, then, yer surely goin' to be a preacher yerself?"

"No," he said; then added, thoughtfully, "not that I know of." The suggestion struck him curiously as one who hears for the first time that there is a possibility that he may be selected for some important foreign embassy.

"Well, then, yer surely a blessed child o' God himself, anyhow, and this is a great night fer this poor little room to be honored with a pretty prayer like that!"

Scarcely hearing her, he said good night and went thoughtfully down the dark stairs, a strange sense of peace upon him. Curiously enough, while he felt that he had left the Presence up in that little dismal room, it yet seemed to be moving beside him, touching his soul, breathing upon him! He was so engrossed with this thought that it never occurred to him that he had given the old woman every cent he had in his pocket. He had forgotten entirely that he had been hungry. A great world-wonder was moving within his spirit. He could not understand himself. He went back with awe over the last few minutes and the strange new world into which he had been so suddenly plunged.

Scarcely noticing how he went, he got himself out of the intricacies of the court into a neighborhood a shade less poverty-stricken, and stood upon the corner of a busy thoroughfare in an utterly unfamiliar district, pausing to look about him and discover his whereabouts.

A little child with long, fair hair rushed suddenly out of a door on the side-street, eagerly pulling a ragged sweater about his small shoulders, and stood upon the curbstone, breathlessly watching the coming trolley. The car stopped, and a young girl in shabby clothes got out and came toward him.

"Bonnie! Bonnie! I've got supper all ready!" the child called in a clear, bird-like voice, and darted from the curb across the narrow side-street to meet her.

Courtland, standing on the corner in front of the trolley, saw, too late, the swift-coming automobile bearing down upon the child, its head-lights flaring on the golden hair. With a cry the young man sprang to the rescue, but the child was already crumpled up like a lily and the relentless car speeding onward, its chauffeur darting frightened, cowardly glances behind him as he plunged his machine forward over the track, almost in the teeth of the up-trolley. When the trolley was passed there was no sign of the car, even if any one had had time to look for it. There in the road lay the little broken child, the long hair spilling like gold over the pavement, the still, white face looking up like a flower that has suddenly been torn from the plant.

The girl was beside the child almost instantly, gathering him into her slender arms, calling in frightened, tender tones:

"Aleck! Darling! My little darling!"

The child was too heavy for her to lift, and she tottered as she tried to rise, lifting a frightened face to Courtland.

"Let me take him," said the young man, stooping and gathering him gently from her. "Now show me where!"

CHAPTER VI

INTO the narrow brick house from which he had run forth so joyously but a few short minutes before, they carried him, up two flights of steep stairs to a tiny room at the back of the hall.

The gas was burning brightly at one side, and something that sent forth a savory odor was bubbling on a little two-burner gas-stove. Courtland was hungry, and it struck his nostrils pleasantly as the door swung open, revealing a tiny table covered with a white cloth, set for two. There was a window curtained with white, and a red geranium on the sill.

The girl entered ahead of him, sweeping back a bright chintz curtain that divided the tiny room, and drew forth a child's cot bed. Courtland gently laid down the little inert figure. The girl was on her knees beside the child at once, a bottle in her hand. She was dropping a few drops in a teaspoon and forcing them between the child's lips.

"Will you please get a doctor, quick," she said, in a strained, quiet voice. "No, I don't know who; I've only been here two weeks. We're strangers! Bring somebody! anybody! quick!"

Courtland was back in a minute with a weary, seedy-looking doctor who just fitted the street. All the way he was seeing the beautiful agony of the girl's face. It was as if her suffering had been his own. Somehow he could not bear to think what might be coming. The little form had lain so limply in his arms!

The girl had undressed the child and put him between the sheets. He was more like a broken lily than ever. The long dark lashes lay still upon the cheeks.

Courtland stood back in the doorway, looking at the small table set for two, and pushed to the wall now to make room for the cot. There was just barely room to walk around between the things. He could almost hear the echo of that happy, childish voice calling down in the street: "Bonnie! Bonnie! I've got supper all ready!"

He wondered if the girl had heard—and there was the supper! Two blue-and-white bowls set daintily on two blue-and-white plates, obviously for the something hot that was cooking over the flame, two bits of bread-and-butter plates to match; two glasses of milk; a plate of bread, another of butter; and by way of dessert an apple cut in half, the core dug out and the hollow filled with sugar.

"Go over to my house and ask my wife to give you my battery!" commanded the doctor in a low growl.

Courtland was off again, glad of something to do.

He pushed aside the curious throng that had gathered near the door and were looking up the stairs, whispering dolefully and shaking heads:

"An' he was so purty, and so cheery, bless his heart!" wailed one woman. "He always had his bit of a word an' a smile!"

THE whole weight of the sorrow of the world seemed suddenly pressing upon Courtland's heart. How had he been thus unexpectedly taken out of the pleasant monotony of the university and whirled into this vortex of anguish! Why had it been? Was it just accident that he should have been the one to have gone to the old woman and made her toast, and then been called upon to pray, instead of Tennelly or Bill Ward or any of the other fellows? And after that was it again just coincidence that he should have happened to stand at that corner at that particular moment and been one to participate in this later tragedy? Oh, the beautiful face of the suffering girl! Fear and sorrow and suffering and death everywhere! Wittemore hurrying to his dying mother! The old woman lying on her bed of pain! But there had been glory in that dark old room when he left it, the glory of a Presence! Ah! Where was the Presence now? How could He bear all this? The Christ! And could He not change it if He would—make the world a happy place instead of this dark and dreadful thing that it was? For the first time the horror of war surged over his soul in its blackness. Men dying in the trenches! Women weeping at home for them! Others suffering and bleeding to death out in the open, the cold or the storm! How could God let it all be? His wondering soul cried out, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here!"

It was the old question that used to come up in the class-room, yet now, strangely enough, he began to feel there was an answer to it somewhere; an answer wherewith he would be satisfied when he found it.

It seemed an eternity of thought through which he passed as he crossed and recrossed the street and was back in the tiny room where life waited on death. It was another eternity while the doctor worked again over the boy. But at last he stood back, shaking his head and blinking the tears from his kind, tired, blue eyes.

"It's no use," he said, gruffly, turning his head away. "He's gone!"

It was then the girl brushed him aside and sank to her knees beside the little cot!

"Aleck! Aleck! Darling brother! Can't you speak to your Bonnie just once more before you go?" she called, clearly, distinctly, as if to a child who was far on his way hence.

"Oh, darling brother! You're all I had left! Let me hear you call me Bonnie just once more before you go to mother!"

But the childish lips lay still and white and the lips of the girl looking down upon the little quiet form grew whiter.

"Oh, my darling! You have gone! You will never call me any more! And you were all I had! Good-by!" And she stooped and kissed the boy's lips with a finality that wrung the hearts of the onlookers.

The doctor stepped into the hall. The tears were rolling down his cheeks. "It's hard luck," he said in an undertone to Courtland.

The young man turned away, to hide the sudden convulsion that seemed coming to his own face. Then he heard the girl's voice again, lower, as if she were talking confidentially to one who stood close at hand.

"Oh, Jesus, will you go with little Aleck and see that he is not afraid till he gets safe home? And will you help me somehow to bear his leaving me alone?"

The doctor was wiping away the tears with a great, soiled handkerchief. The girl rose calmly, white and controlled, facing them as if she remembered them for the first time.

"I want to thank you for all you've done!" she said. "I'm only a stranger and you've been very kind. But now it's over and I will not hinder you any longer."

Continued on page 990

Sure—

"I'll have 'em ready for you at 4.30 — put 'em on while you wait if you like. Yes, sir, I know the kind you want. Every one says the same. It's always

CAT'S PAW CUSHION
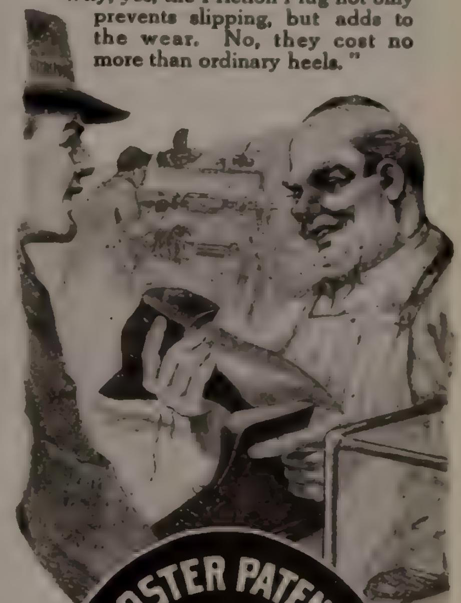
RUBBER HEELS

"It's that Foster Friction Plug which prevents slipping that people like. Then there are no holes to track mud and dirt into the house — that adds to the popularity, especially with the women.

"Women use the Cat's Paw Spanish Heel, you know."

"You say they wear longer than the ordinary kind?"

"Why, yes, the Friction Plug not only prevents slipping, but adds to the wear. No, they cost no more than ordinary heels."



50c. attached, black, white or tan. For men, women and children, all dealers

FOSTER RUBBER COMPANY
105 Federal St., Boston, Mass.
Originators and Patentees of the Foster Friction Plug which Prevents Slipping

ON LAND AND SAND WITH THE PHOTO

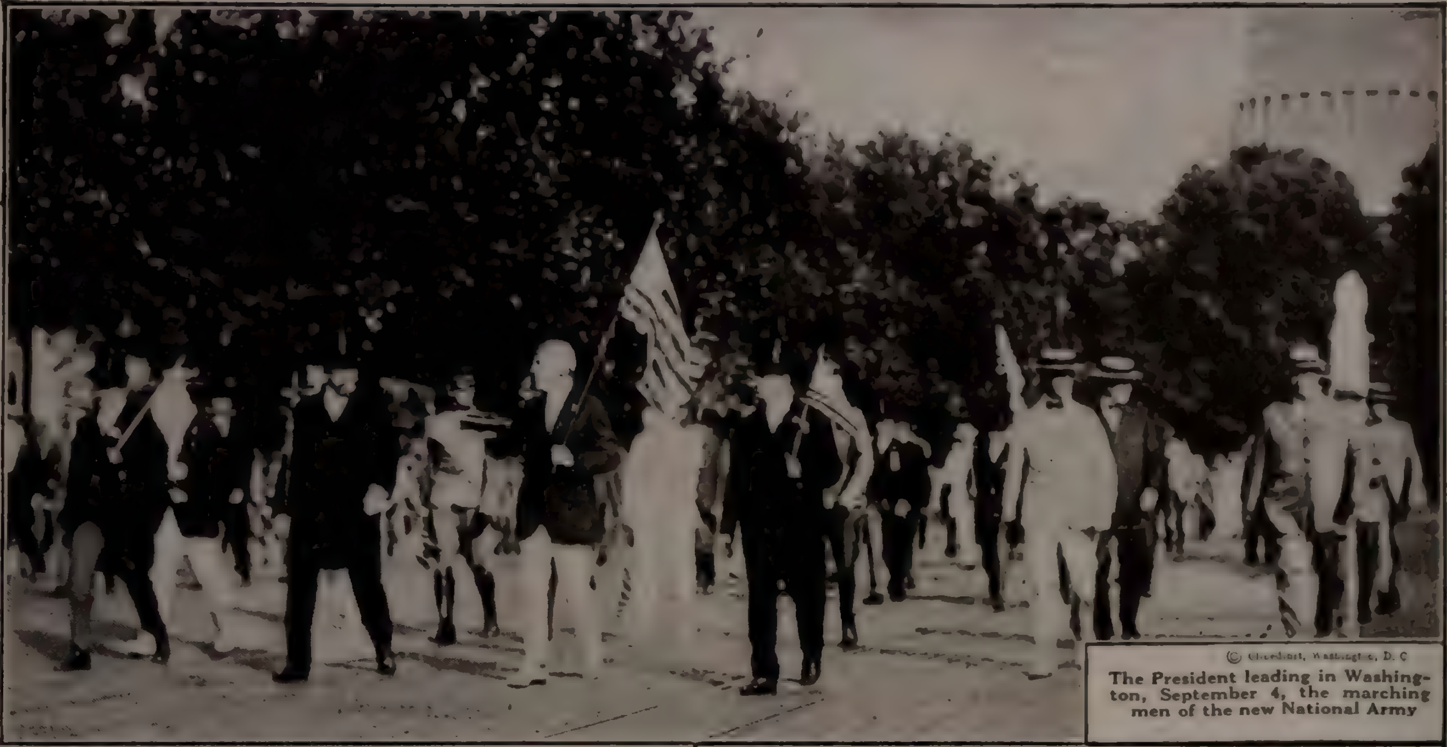
A German submarine driven ashore near Calais by French scout ships. The crew was captured by Belgian cavalry

© Underwood & Underwood

Old Glory at the head of American troops welcomed by cheering Londoners

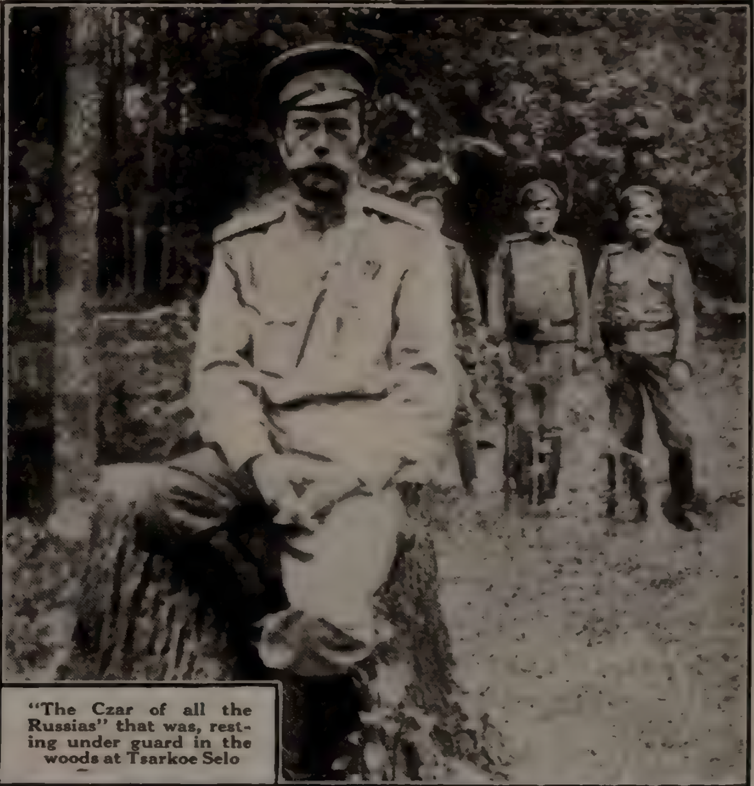
New York National Guardsmen of the 27th Division, reviewed in Fifth Avenue August 30, marching through the Washington Arch

APHERS

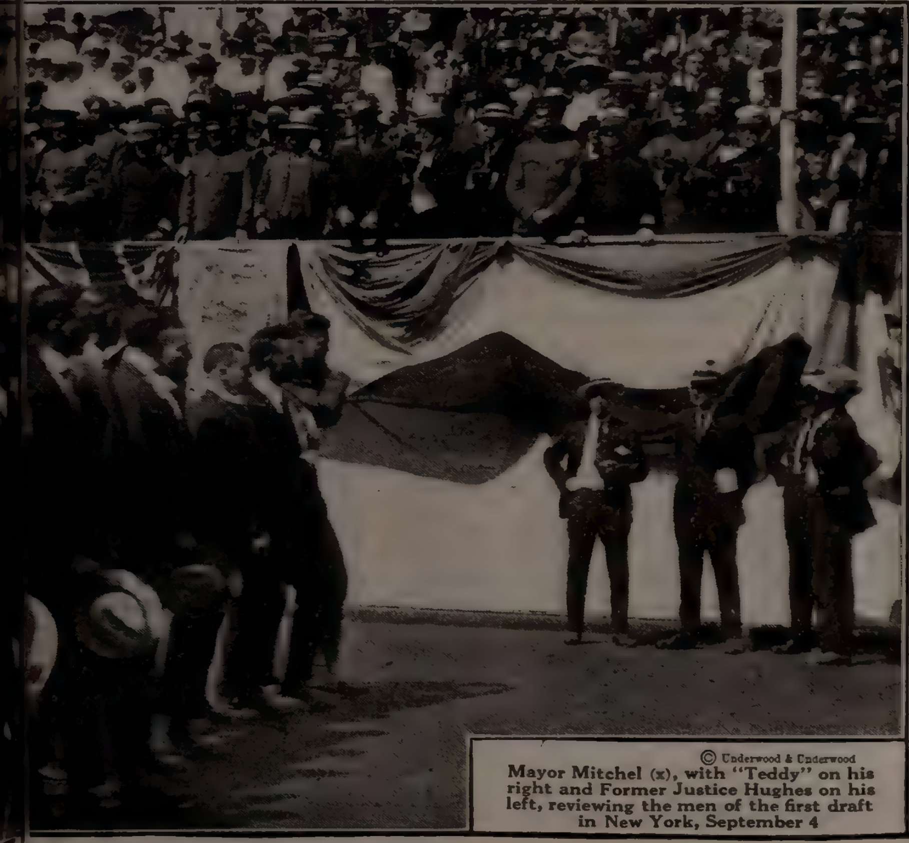


© Clinedinst, Washington, D. C

The President leading in Washington, September 4, the marching men of the new National Army

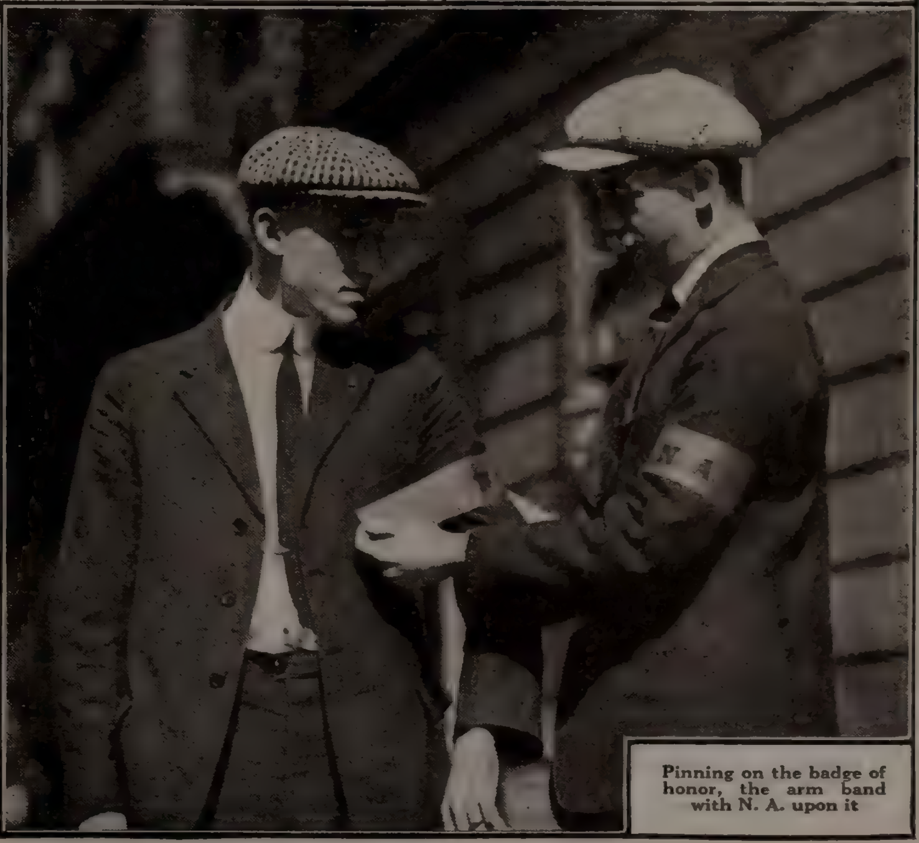


"The Czar of all the Russias" that was, resting under guard in the woods at Tsarkoe Selo

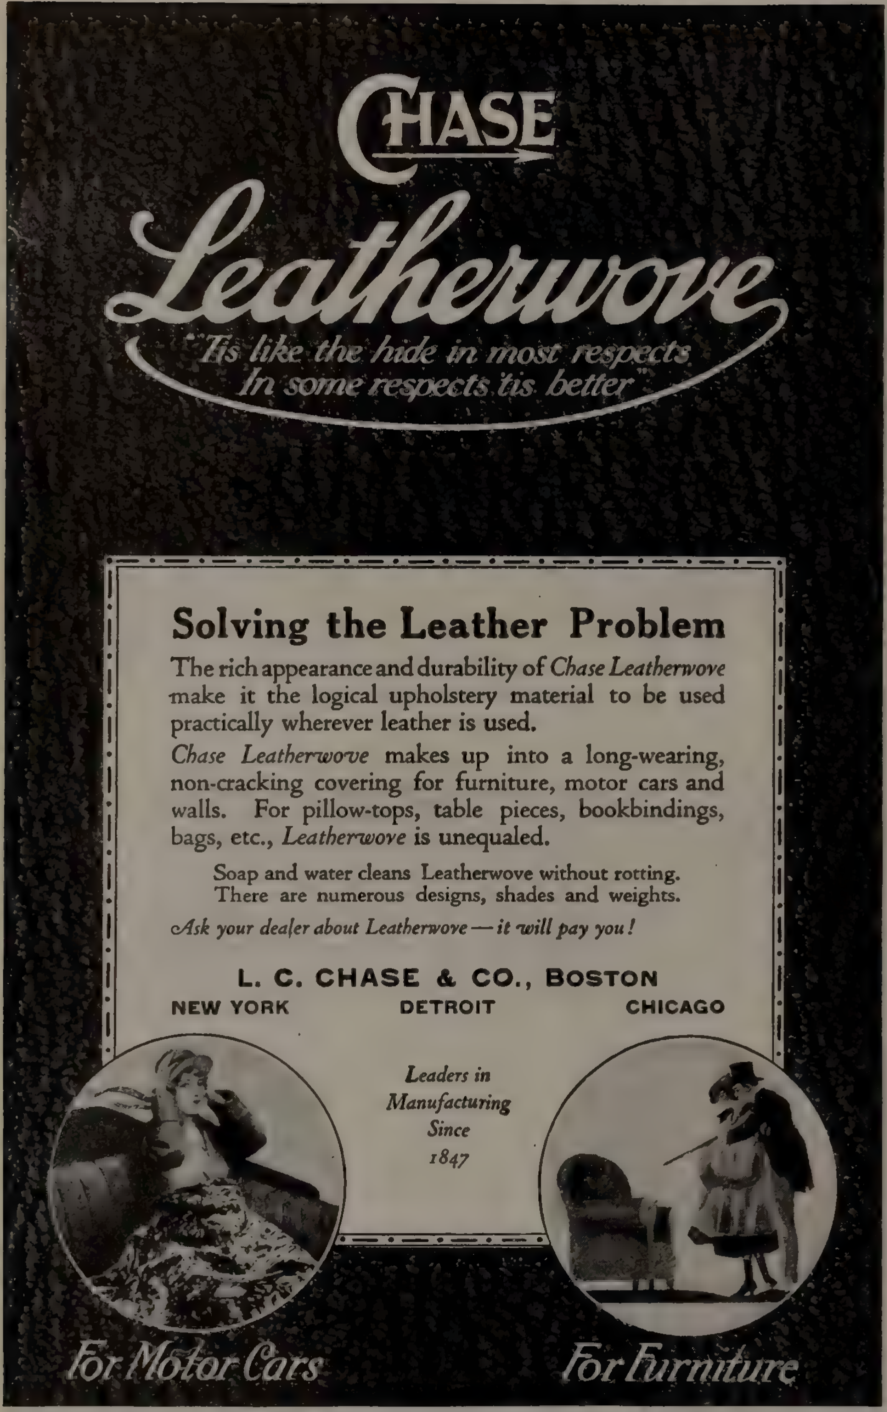


© Underwood & Underwood

Mayor Mitchel (x), with "Teddy" on his right and Former Justice Hughes on his left, reviewing the men of the first draft in New York, September 4



Pinning on the badge of honor, the arm band with N. A. upon it



CHASE

Leatherwove

"Tis like the hide in most respects In some respects tis better"

Solving the Leather Problem

The rich appearance and durability of Chase Leatherwove make it the logical upholstery material to be used practically wherever leather is used.

Chase Leatherwove makes up into a long-wearing, non-cracking covering for furniture, motor cars and walls. For pillow-tops, table pieces, bookbindings, bags, etc., Leatherwove is unequaled.

Soap and water cleans Leatherwove without rotting. There are numerous designs, shades and weights.

Ask your dealer about Leatherwove — it will pay you!

L. C. CHASE & CO., BOSTON
NEW YORK DETROIT CHICAGO

Leaders in Manufacturing Since 1847

For Motor Cars For Furniture

How can I Earn Money?

ANY WOMAN will receive a satisfactory answer to this question if she will just write to us. Whether you have only an hour or two a week, or full time, our plan will pay you well for what you do. Ours is an honest, straightforward, time-tried way that has increased the cash earnings of thousands of women. You ask no favors of anybody. If you will only try, we will help you to make money taking orders for and underwear—at mill-to-wearer prices. Our line is complete and includes a variety of fabrics, weights, styles, colors, grades. Your customers buy from you precisely the goods they desire and need at prices they are pleased to pay. Satisfaction guaranteed. No experience necessary. Our "Money Back" outfit, FREE fabric samples and "Guide to Success" will start you toward a pleasant, permanent business of your own. We pay all express. Prompt deliveries. Write for details.

Malloch-Knit Hose

Guarantee Six Months

Malloch Knitting Mills, Box 779, Grand Rapids, Mich.

FREE! "So-Handy" Sewing Bag To Your LADIES AID

Thousands of Societies have earned big money with the "BUCK" line of utilities. Why not yours? We make the wire frames. You make the bags and the money. One complete 50c "So-Handy" Bag absolutely free to your society, with full particulars of 18 fast sellers, by return mail. Send 10c to pay postage and packing.

RACINE WIRE WORKS, Dept. C Racine, Wis.

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

The Cleanly Sanitary Method. Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

PATENTS That Protect and Pay Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services

WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

Free Book for the DEAF

Just send a post card for this new book on DEAFNESS—Its Causes and Treatment. Filled with valuable facts that every deaf person should know. If you are only slightly deaf, don't let it go until it is too late! Or if you are almost totally deaf there may be a chance of restoring your hearing completely. This book will tell you. It also explains the Wonderful New "Intensitone"

Ear Phone, with its remarkable 96 Tone Adjustment, and our great 10 Day Free Trial Offer. Not a penny unless you hear perfectly. But first write for the free book, NOW, before our supply is exhausted. Remember, there is no cost or obligation of any kind. Address:

MEARS EAR PHONE CO.
Dept. 19, 45 W. 34th St., New York, N. Y.

Stop Forgetting

The Key To Success

Memory the Basis of All Knowledge

The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, faces. Enables you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience. Easy. Simple. The result of 20 years' experience developing memories of thousands.

Write Today for free booklet "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Memory Test, also how to obtain my FREE book, "How To Speak In Public."

Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal

Dickson School of Memory, 1701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85

THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

The Witness

Continued from page 987

SHE wanted to be alone. Yet it wrung their hearts to leave her so.

"You will want to make some arrangements," growled the doctor.

"Oh, I had forgotten!" The girl's hand fluttered to her heart and her breath gave a quick catch. "It will have to be very simple," she said, looking from one to another of them anxiously. "I haven't much money left. Perhaps I could sell something!" She looked desperately around on her little possessions. "This little cot! It is new just two weeks ago and he will not need it any more. It cost twenty dollars!"

Courtland stepped gravely toward her. "Suppose you leave that to me," he said, gently. "I think I know a place where they would look after the matter for you reasonably and let you pay later or take the cot in exchange. Would you like me to arrange the matter for you?"

"Oh, if you would!" said the girl, wearily. "But it is asking a great deal of a stranger."

"It's nothing. I can look after it on my way home. Just tell me what you wish."

"Oh, the very simplest there is!"—she caught her breath—"white if possible, unless it's more expensive. But it doesn't matter, anyway, now. There'll have to be a place somewhere, too. Some time I will take him back and let him lie by father and mother. I can't now. It's two hundred miles away. But there won't need to be but one carriage. There's only me to go."

"Any special clergyman?" asked the doctor, kindly.

She shook her head sadly. "We hadn't been to church yet. I was too tired. If you know a minister who would come."

"It's tough luck," said the doctor again as they went down-stairs together, "to see a nice, likely little chap like that taken away so. And I operated this afternoon on a hardened old reprobate around the corner here, and he's going to pull through!"

Courtland walked on through the busy streets, thinking it all over. He had a dim current of inner perception that suggested there might be another way of looking at the matter; a possibility that the wicked old reprobate spoken of by the doctor had yet something more to learn of life before he went beyond its choices and opportunities; a conviction that if he were called to go he had rather be the little child in his purity than the old man in his sin.

The sudden cutting down of this lovely child had startled and shocked him. It brought the other world so close. It made what had hitherto seemed the big worth-while things of life look so small and petty, so ephemeral! Had he always been giving himself utterly to things that did not count, or was this a perspective all out of proportion, a brain distorted by nervous strain and over-exertion?

He came presently to a well-known undertaker's, and, stepping in, felt more than ever the borderland-sense. In this silent house of sadness men stepped quietly, gravely, decorously, and served you with courteous sympathy. What was the name of the man who rowed his boat on the River Styx? Yes! Charon! These wise-eyed grave men who continually plied their oars between two worlds! How did they look on life? Were they hardened to their task? How could they bear it all, this continual settled sadness about the place! Not all the lofty marble arches, and beauty of surroundings, not all the soft music of hidden choirs and distant organ could take away the settled, final fact of death! One moment here upon the curbstone, golden hair afloat, eyes alight with joyous greeting, voice of laughter; the next gone, irrevocably gone, "and the place thereof shall know it no more." He caught that word in carven letters twined among lilies above the marble staircase. Resurrection! Yes, there would need to be, if there was to be any hope ever in this world!

HE made selections with a memory of the girl's beautiful, refined face constantly before him. He chose simple things and everything all white. He asked about details and gave directions so that everything would move in an orderly manner, with nothing to annoy. He even thought to order flowers, not so many as to make her feel under obligation. He took out his check-book and paid for the whole thing, arranging that the girl should not know how much it all really cost, and that a small sum might be paid by her as she was able, to be forwarded by the firm to him; this to make her feel entirely comfortable about it all.

As he went out into the street again a great sense of weariness came over him. He had lived — how many years had he lived!—in experience since he left the university at half past five o'clock? How little his past life looked to him as he surveyed it from the height he had just climbed. Life! Life was not all basketball, and football, and dances, and fellowships, and frats, and honors! Life was full of sorrow, and bounded on every hand by death! When you came to think of it, life was a terrible thing! Take that girl now, Miss Brentwood—Miss R. B. Brentwood the address had been. The name her brother had called her fitted better, "Bonnie."

It occurred to him to wonder if there would be any such sorrow and emptiness of life for any one if he were gone. The fellows would feel badly, of course. His father? Oh, yes, of course he would feel it some, but he had been separated from his father for years, except for brief visits in vacations. No, his father would not miss him much!

He got back to the university and entered the dormitory at last, too engrossed in his strange new thoughts to remember that he had had no supper.

"Hello, Court! Where have you been? We've looked everywhere for you. You didn't come to the dining hall! What's wrong with you? Come in here!"

Tennelly hauled him into Bill Ward's room and thumped him into a big leather study-chair.

"Why, man, you're all in! Give an account of yourself!" he said.

"P'raps he's in love!" suggested Pat from the couch.

"P'raps he's flunked his Greek exam.," suggested Bill Ward, with a grin.

"Cut it out, boys," said Courtland, with a weary smile. "I've seen enough. Wittemore's called home. His mother's dying. I went an errand for him down in some of his slums and on the way back I just saw a little kid get killed. Pretty little kid, too, with long curls!"

"Good-night, nurse!" said Pat from his couch. "Say, that is going some!"

"Ferget it!" ejaculated Bill Ward, coming to his feet. "Had your supper yet, Court?"

Courtland shook his head.

"Well, just you sit still there while I run down to the pie-shop and see what I can get."

Bill seized his cap and went roaring off down the hall. Courtland's eyes were closed. He hadn't felt so tired since he left the hospital. His mind was still grappling with the questions that his last two hours had flung at him.

Pat made silent motion to Tennelly, and the two picked up the unresisting Courtland and laid him on the couch. Pat's face was unusually sober as he gently put a pillow under his friend's head. Courtland opened his eyes and smiled.

"Thanks, old man," he said, and gripped his hand understandingly. There was something in Pat's face he had never noticed there before. As he dropped his eyelids shut he had an odd sense that Pat and Tennelly and the Presence were all taking care of him.

Down the hall a nasal voice twanged at the telephone, shouting each answer as though to make the whole dormitory hear. Then loud steps, a thump on the door as it was flung open:

"Court here? A girl on the 'phone wants you, Court. Says her name is Miss Gila Dare."

To be continued

Close of Season at Mont-Lawn

"Mont-Lawn bells, ring—Oh ring!
Join the chorus with the birds that sing."

THREE hundred joyous voices joined in this and other songs; three hundred thankful hearts were thrilling with the blessings of Mont-Lawn.

Special exercises on Monday, September 3, marked the close of one of the most successful seasons in all the long and delightful history of Mont-Lawn,

IN the season just closed the thoroughly equipped hospital building was in little demand; there was not one case of serious sickness, and no accidents, except minor bumps and bruises.

Superintendent Emma Goering's staff consisted of fifteen teachers and a total of forty-eight employees in dormitories, kitchen and grounds. It has been an administration of highest efficiency in every department.

Chapel-time, the time of song and worship at Mont-Lawn

"The Children's Paradise," maintained by Christian Herald readers.

During the season of three months more than 1,500 girls and 800 boys have been entertained for ten-day periods. These children mostly came from the crowded tenements in the hot, evil-smelling, evil-breeding districts of the big city.

The pure air and clear sunshine of Mont-Lawn, the birds, flowers, trees, and nature's many charms mean to them a new world of undreamed-of beauty and blessings.

The shower-baths and clean clothes, the delights of the grassy, shady playgrounds, the perfect comforts of the seven spacious dormitories, the wholesome food in Fort Plenty, the spiritual lessons in the Temple—all this is lasting leaven to these lives. Memories and ideals are implanted that never will die out of their minds and hearts.

Present at the closing day exercises were Mrs. Louis Klopsch, widow of the founder, Mrs. Stephen Merritt, Mr. Otto Koenig and Mr. Theodore Waters.

The exercises in the Temple were led by the president of the Home. Dr. Franklin Babbitt of Nyack made the invocation, Professor Henry Noll conducted the children's singing, and Dr. Ferdinand C. Iglehart pronounced the benediction.

A unique entertainment for the children was given on the lawn by Mrs. Olive Howard Miller and Miss Etta Robertson, who are authorities on American Indian music and customs, and gave songs and stories in costume, to the perfect delight of the children.

There were flag drill and promenade on the campus, folk dances on the lawn, races, games, etc., with the usual awards. It was a happy ending of a happy season for all the little ones.

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE Russian and Austro-Italian fronts were the most active during the past week. On the Russian front on Saturday, September 1, the Germans seized the Russian positions on both sides of Uxkull, on the south side of the Dvina River, about fifteen miles east of Riga. On Sunday this was followed up by the capture of Uxkull itself, which is located directly on the river. As soon almost as they entered Riga, the Germans set their engineers to work and the same day threw two pontoon bridges across the Dvina. The Russian artillery destroyed one of these, but the German infantry poured across the other, and by Sunday evening were thoroughly established on the north bank of the river. During Sunday night they attacked the Russian positions northeast and north of the bridgehead.

To the east, the Russian troops showed little disposition to fight, and regiment after regiment left their positions and began to retreat to the northeast. The result, of course, was that the Germans moved along the northern bank of the Dvina River with very little opposition and entered Riga that afternoon. The next day Dünamünde at the mouth of the Dvina was captured, and its coast defense guns of very large caliber were found intact. The Russians southwest and south of Riga toward Mattau were, by this capture of the northern bank of the Dvina, completely cut off from the rest of the Russian army and surrounded, so that their capture followed as a matter of course.

The Russian army to the north of the bridgehead seeing the Russian troops to the east retreating, followed their example and moved to the northward, abandoning their positions. The next day, Tuesday, the retreat of these two armies—who were hotly pursued by the Germans—became almost a rout, thousands of prisoners and much artillery being taken by their pursuers. As these lines are written, the Russians have fallen back nearly forty miles from the Dvina River and have hardly attempted to make a stand at any point during this retreat, though they had good defense lines at both the Great and Little Jaegel Rivers, which parallel the Dvina some distance to the northeast.

Apparently there is a disorganization of the Russian troops to a far greater extent than we knew. Riga itself was burning in several places when the

Continued on page 996

Setsnug
UNDERWEAR

Smooth, snug-fitting, of fine-ribbed fabrics made on the famous Cooper Spring Needle Machines. Provides unusual elasticity to the fabric that gives and stretches with every bodily motion. A graceful, comfortable covering that provides ample warmth and protection.

The patented "V-H" Gusset means a protected crotch that stretches when you bend over—no binding or chafing.

In ladies' suits the patented extra wide bust and, in two-piece garments, the pant with sliding waistband that fits the waist without a wrinkle—provide further comfort.

Dainty trimmings. Close fitting cuffs. Sizes and styles to fit most all men, women and children—and tailored from living models. The "Better Underwear at Popular Prices."

Avalon Knitwear Co.
Utica, N. Y.

Illustrated Booklet sent free.
Knitted Doll's Union Suit sent with Booklet for 10c.

The Pullman Car

1867 - 1917

FEW were the comforts and conveniences of the Pullman car of half a century ago; slight was its contribution to the safety of travel.

But to the travelers of that day it was a marvel of luxury and elegance.

It was constructed entirely of wood, lighted by oil lamps, and was heated by box stoves which burned cord wood.

It rested on blocks of India rubber instead of springs, platforms were open and four wheel trucks were used with iron wheels.

Nevertheless, the introduction of the Pullman car inaugurated a revolution in railroad transportation.

Today 7,400 Pullman cars built in the shops of the Pullman Company, are operated by its own trained employes.

Today twenty-seven million passengers are afforded assurance of safety, comfort and convenience on 137 railroads embracing 223,489 miles of track.

Staunchly constructed, electrically lighted, sanitary, ventilated and steam heated, they include every feature for the personal convenience and luxury of the passenger.

In addition, the cars of the Pullman Company afford a uniform and continuous service unequalled by that of any like organization in the world.

THE PULLMAN COMPANY
Chicago

LISTERINE
LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY

LISTERINE
The Safe Antiseptic

A clean wound heals rapidly. Prevent infection of cuts and abrasions by promptly using Listerine.

4 SIZES
15c, 25c,
50c, $1.00

JAP ROSE SOAP
DELIGHTFULLY REFRESHING

A High School Course In Two Years Learn in your own home. Here is a thorough, complete, and simplified high school course that you can finish in two years. Meets all college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of the faculties of universities and academies.

Write for booklet Send your name and address for our booklet and full particulars. No obligations. Write today—now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. P2496 Chicago, U.S.A.

The Goodness and Severity of God

International Sunday School Lesson for September 30

Daniel 9 : 3-19

The Times of Restoration

By Rev. George D. Allison

WE have traced the decline and fall of the kingdom of Judah, and ere we review the course of events we would do well to study carefully the reading for this week in Daniel 9. For it points forward to the restoration to come, and helps us out of the shadow of Israel's failure.

The visions of Daniel are designedly obscure and have been diversely interpreted. But it is certain that some clearly refer to the return from Babylon (as our present text seems to do) and that others just as certainly have to do with the events of a much later time. These later allusions deal with the circumstances of the persecutions under Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria, and aim to inspire hope through the recollections of the return from Babylon. Because of the severe repression of Jewish national hopes at this time, messages of cheer had to be veiled in mystery.

Daniel's Proverb

The Bible abounds in model prayers. Here we have one uttered by a captive who has achieved distinction in a foreign land. Daniel the administrator becomes Daniel the unofficial high priest as he intercedes for his desolate nation. His prayer is the humble and contrite supplication of a true servant of God, who cannot relinquish hope that Jehovah will not cast off forever. He makes full confession for national sins and implores forgiveness and another opportunity.

Here is unmeasured contrition: "We have sinned and have dealt perversely, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled." According to Daniel, the sin was largely deliberate, in the face of knowledge of God's will. It was downright rebellion. "Neither have we harkened unto thy servants the prophets." Refusing to give heed to the prophets of God is the critical point in the defection of any nation that goes wrong. He hath not left himself without a witness among any people, but too often, as today, we find whole nations following the false prophets of pride and wealth and power.

Results of National Sin

In Daniel's prayer the consequences of a people's transgression are summed up in two expressive phrases. The first is the reaction from excessive pride to overwhelming shame—"O Lord, to us belongeth confusion of face." What boastings there were in ancient Israel! Remember how the leaders mocked Isaiah: "Whom will he teach knowledge? and whom will he make to understand a message?" Does he think we are children to be given lessons, line upon line and precept upon precept? But the man of God foretold the coming of a different spirit—

The lofty looks of man shall be brought low,
And the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down,
  And the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.
For there shall be a day of the Lord
  Upon all that is proud and haughty
  And upon all that is lifted up;
    And it shall be brought low.

"All this evil is come upon us." How natural that the shame and the confusion should outweigh even the exile and its miseries. But these physical ills were also the retribution for wrongdoing. The nation had brought these things upon itself. Suffering in captivity and desolation at home because the people had been unteachable and self-willed.

In the nations of the earth today we hear the same word—"peccavimus," we have sinned! Therefore is all this evil come upon us.

Answer to Prayer

"Whiles I was speaking"—he instructed me! There are two sides to prayer, though we too often forget it. Daniel says that while he was speaking and praying and confessing and making supplication, the angel of God was coming to him and touching him and instructing him and talking to him. Frequently there is "much speaking" and little listening. Sometimes there is no waiting, no susceptibility to the touch of unseen hands. "Be still, and know that I am God." Occasionally there is no docility of heart by which we may learn of the Great Teacher.

The answer to Daniel's prayer was given for the people who read the Book in the time of persecution. It was clearer to them than to us, being veiled in symbol, as the Revelation of John was veiled to avoid the condemnation of Nero and Domitian. Yet its chief points belong to all times of suffering and waiting: Patience and Hope, without which patience soon languishes.

"Seventy weeks are decreed"—a long time, but a limited time, a time shorter to God than to man for whom it seems years, a fixed time—when the results are accomplished the punishment shall cease.

"The commandment to restore and build Jerusalem"—an assurance of reconstruction for the beloved nation. God's ultimate goals are always constructive—though he seems to work by means of cataclysms as well as by patient building.

"Wrath shall be poured upon the desolator"—an assurance of justice to be done regardless of the persons of men. This was part of the message of reassurance then, as it is part of the pledge given to stricken Belgium today.

The Times of Restoration

Parallel with all the denunciations of the prophets are the promises to the faithful of restoration and rebuilding. Most rapturously beautiful in the later chapters of Isaiah, but found everywhere.

The ransomed of the Lord shall return,
And come with singing unto Zion;
  And everlasting joy shall be upon their heads:
They shall obtain gladness and joy,
  And sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Sing, O ye heavens!
  For the Lord hath done it;
Shout, ye lower parts of the earth!
Break forth into singing, ye mountains!
O forest, and every tree therein!
  For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob,
  And will glorify himself in Israel.

This is part of the very staff of life of the Christian believer. God is, and he is a rewarder of them that seek after him. How natural the marginal prayer in the diary of Nehemiah, "Remember unto me for good, O my God, all that I have done for this people." Christ himself looked beyond the cross to the coming kingdom that shall be. Peter asked on one occasion what the disciples should receive for the sacrifices they had made. "More in this life," responded Jesus, "and in the world to come, eternal life."

In every time of exile, loss and sorrow, let us, like Daniel in Babylon, look forward to the times of restoration. In large and full degree in this life for most of us. For wrongs not righted here, for toil unrequited, the promise of the presence and the joy of our Lord hereafter.

The Review for the Quarter

We have scanned the bearings of Daniel's prayer on our life and need; let us now undertake our quarterly review.

The lessons for these twelve weeks have illustrated from the history of the Jews the two great characteristics of God in the title of this lesson: God is good, God is severe. Sometimes men have forgotten his goodness and mercy, and have trembled before his moral fervor and iron laws. In our day many have persuaded themselves that God is indulgent and easy-going; they have forgotten how severe he is, how sure is iniquity to bring penalty, how absolutely the wages of sin is death.

The Great War will serve to restore a balance. It shows again the fruits of national wrongdoing. It exhibits once more the suffering of the innocent with the guilty, and the solidarity of the human race. We are brethren. More than ever before, "No man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself." Also no nation liveth or dieth alone.

A Review of Persons

ISAIAH: The Call and Commission of God. His prominence in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah suggests the need of the idealist and the spokesman of God in every nation and age. Consider the probable consequences if America had failed to listen to the noble prophets of God who showed her the sin of slavery. Are not the preachers and poets of democracy the Isaiahs of our strenuous day?

HEZEKIAH AND AHAZ: Faithful and Unfaithful Stewardship. Here were two men with the same opportunities and privileges, both listening to the same divinely commissioned teacher. One was conscientious and successful, the other unscrupulous and a menace. Consider the need of good followers, in church and state, as Hezekiah followed and Ahaz ignored the leadership of Isaiah. Conscientious citizenship—that is the modern application of Hezekiah's fidelity.

JOSIAH AND MANASSEH: Reformers and Debauchers of the Commonwealth. Consider the periodic need of civic cleansing, like Josiah's, sixty or seventy years after Hezekiah's. But is not this because of the Manassehs who let things deteriorate? Josiah, a real teacher, putting before the people of the land the best ideas he could find. Manasseh, a typical libertine, allowing every form of evil to flourish because of a lack of moral conviction in his own soul.

DANIEL AND HIS FRIENDS: Loyal to the Uttermost. Could there be anything more insidious than the appeal of lower standards to these men? They were young, prisoners, members of a despised race, but through steadfast loyalty to principle became increasingly free and powerful. In the day of temptation, faith in God alone can enable a man to be victorious.

GOODNESS AND SEVERITY. It was Paul, that deep thinker in the affairs of the soul, who first joined the terms "goodness" and "severity" as descriptive of God's attitude toward man. He, too, was moved to do this by a consideration of the dealings of God with the "chosen people." Read the eleventh chapter of Romans as a commentary on today's lesson.

"Behold then the goodness and severity of God: toward them that fell, severity; but toward thee, God's goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off."

Sunday School Methods

BY FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

The Boy Who Became a Judge

THIS is a true story from life, for discouraged teachers:

When as a young man of twenty-one they made me superintendent of the mission we had just started in Evergreen Avenue, Brooklyn, I found in the neighborhood a bunch of boys about fourteen years old, who needed a big brother. They were coy at first, but soon we had them together each Sunday, in the rear end of the storeroom which we had converted into a mission. There were about ten of them. They were the live sort. I can see them now, after thirty years, with the gleam of mischief in their eyes, hands that were always seeking some weak spot in the machinery of the other boy. There was Dan Esquiro, Harry Hale, Steve Jones, Will Clark, Lewis Fawcett, and the rest.

How to get hold of that group was the question. I was near enough to my own boyhood to remember that good "eats" went a powerful way in getting a boy. Fortunately, I had just been married to a girl who united good cookery with her other accomplishments. So to our new home the boys were invited, once a month, for a good time.

They came, a bit modestly at first, for they felt a trifle out of place in their new surroundings; but they came. And we saw to it they had reason to remember their coming.

One night I had a special game with big agates. This we played in the parlor. We placed a ribbon or string across the carpet, placed the boys some feet away, and they then rolled the agates toward the mark, striving to stop right at the line. The resistance of the thick carpet made this quite an exciting bit of work. The boys, in their interest, dug their shoe toes in the new carpet, making ridges and digging up the material. They had a great time.

The next morning, as we went into the parlor and surveyed the wreck, my wife threw up her hands and cried: "Oh, Frank! My carpet! My carpet!" and I called back, "Yes, my dear, but my boys, my boys! I think we have the boys."

Some twenty-five years after, a judge in our city invited me to sit with him on the bench one Monday morning, while he sentenced the prisoners. Many of these were boys in the later teens. He would say, in cases of first offenders, "Did you ever go to Sunday school?" Often they would answer "Yes." "Why did you leave the Sunday school and your good Sunday school teacher? If you had stayed by your teacher and the school, you would not be here today. If I give you another chance will you go back to your Sunday school?" And that judge said that rarely did such a boy ever come before him again.

Afterward he introduced me to a supreme court judge as his old Sunday school teacher. And I thought of that boy as I remembered him twenty-five years before, with that bunch of boys digging up our carpet in our new home. And I said to myself, "What's a mile of carpet to a yard of boy!"

That boy became a teacher in my school and a lawyer, a leader in the city, a county judge, and may go even higher. He has made a record for fearlessness against vice and crime and for uprightness that has been recognized throughout the country. Best of all, he has neglected no good opportunity of telling men of affairs that their duty was to stand by the church in their community, as the institution that was vital to the community's welfare.

Jesus and the Toiler

"Lift the stone and thou shalt find me; cleave the wood, and there am I."

ALTHOUGH not recorded in the Bible, this is a quotation attributed to Jesus. Various interpretations have been put upon it, but whatever else it may mean, it indicates that the presence of Jesus is with the man who toils. Men have sometimes made the distinction between "secular" work and "religious" work.

Jesus never made such a distinction. To Him all work was sacred. Even before He performed a miracle or had begun His career as a preacher, Jesus had this testimony from His Heavenly Father: "This is my beloved son, in Whom I am well pleased." Jesus had pleased God as a carpenter.

When it is remembered that Jesus was a carpenter at a time when the philosophers declared that a purchased slave was better than a hired one, and when, in accordance with this teaching of the philosophers, half the world lived behind prison bars, the coming of Jesus into the home of a humble artisan and the living of His life for thirty years in the atmosphere of a working man's home, becomes all the more significant.

He lifted labor out of the pit. He gave the working man a place in human society which he had theretofore never enjoyed. The principles which he taught have since made the working man the equal of every other man, no matter what his vocation in life may be.

CHARLES STELZLE.

"It's one thing to wear your clothes out where they'll be admired for their spotless cleanliness," says the Fels-Naptha Home Maker, "and quite another matter to wear them out in boiling water and over a hard scrubbing board."

HOW often you hear a woman exclaim, "This waist will only stand one more washing!"

She knows how boiling water weakens the fine fibres, and how hard scrubbing does more damage than any amount of every day wear and tear.

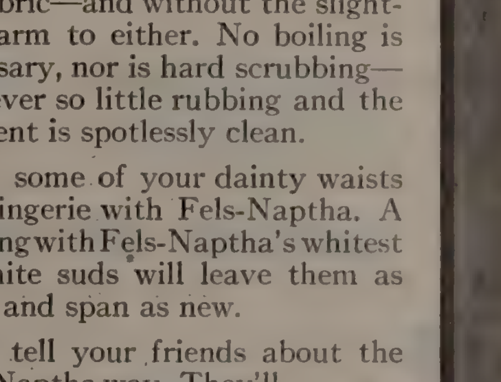
And it's so unnecessary!

Fels-Naptha soap, in cool or lukewarm water, cleans the paintiest overalls as thoroughly as the daintiest fabric—and without the slightest harm to either. No boiling is necessary, nor is hard scrubbing—just ever so little rubbing and the garment is spotlessly clean.

Wash some of your dainty waists and lingerie with Fels-Naptha. A tubbing with Fels-Naptha's whitest of white suds will leave them as spick and span as new.

Then tell your friends about the Fels-Naptha way. They'll appreciate the hint you give them.

Fels & Co.
Philadelphia



The Story of 2 Minutes

Into a mud hole—hub deep, bare tires. No chance to back up or move forward to run on chains. No place for jacking the car. But thanks to the

Easyon Chains

in two minutes out of the mud hole and on the way.

This light, compact Easyon Chain can be attached when you are "in a hole." Not necessary to jack car or move it back or forward. Can be attached from running board if necessary.

Send for FREE Booklet which explains other famous auto accessory parts made by this well-known manufacturer.

DEALERS Write for Proposition and open territory. Handle these necessary automobile accessories which sell on sight. Write NOW—Today.

WOODWORTH MFG. CORP.
2040 Whirlpool St., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Packed in a set of eight in a bag, four for each rear wheel, enough to give a good grip on any road.

Size 3½ fits 3" or 3½" tires. $4.00 a Set
Size 4½ fits 4" or 4½" tires. $5.00 a Set
Size 5½ fits 5" or 5½" tires. $6.00 a Set

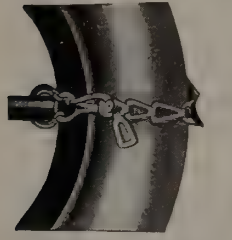
EASYON CHAINS will be sent prepaid on approval to any part of United States or Canada on receipt of price. If you are not satisfied after examining, return them at our expense and we will refund the full amount paid.

Ask about Easyon Truck Grips for solid tires.

"Grip like Mud Hooks Ride like Bare Tires"



Half the bulk and weight

Use It Everywhere

Here is a wonderful new finish for all woodwork and furniture. It combines in one operation what was formerly three separate jobs; it stains the wood, varnishes it and

Gives the Fashionable Soft Finish

Velvo-Tone produces the same effect that staining, varnishing and hand rubbing give, and at a fraction of the cost. It places this beautiful soft finish within the reach of everyone.

Lucas VELVO-TONE FINISH
For All Woodwork and Furniture

stands absolutely alone in the field of wood finishes. There is nothing else like it; no other product combines the hand-rubbed effect with a stain and varnish. And it is very simple to use. You can transform all the woodwork and furniture in the house with Velvo-Tone; change its old, highly varnished or Mission finish to the beautiful dull effect. No skill or experience is necessary.

Ask your dealer to show you Velvo-Tone color card. Or send us 30c for a can large enough to finish two chairs. Mention shade desired—Old Oak, Golden Oak, Fumed Oak, Weathered Oak, Mahogany, Cherry Fruit, Zarina Green, Black Flemish, Natural.

John Lucas & Co., Inc.
Office 135
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The First Step

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

I HAVE seen gayer parades. I have seen Fifth Avenue dressed in brilliant bunting, and blossoming tropic trees, and illuminated signs. I have seen usually dingy cross streets ablaze with light. I have seen dark doorways festooned with green vines. I have seen gayer parades; but I have never seen a more impressive parade than the one that I watched yesterday.

For yesterday—with its hands outstretched in warm-hearted farewell, and with "God be with you till we meet again" on its lips—New York City as a body watched the National Guard of the state march down Fifth Avenue from One Hundred and Tenth Street to Washington Square in a great swinging line. New York watched, and knew as it watched that some of the marching men would leave immediately after the parade for camp, and that the others would follow in a very few days—knew that some of the men might never march again down the broad avenue. Many of the spectators felt for the first time the blasting nearness of the war.

New York was neither very much decorated nor very bright-hued. The color note of the city was olive drab, and the throngs that lined the streets were not flower-laden. There was a vague flutter of white from every curbstone as handkerchiefs were waved, but many handkerchiefs made a crumpled blur against lips that would quiver and eyes that would fill with tears.

I STOOD next to an old man with white hair, somewhere in the vicinity of Twenty-third Street. Crowds jostled us, and traffic policemen cleaned the way brusquely every few minutes and the sun beat down rather fiercely upon us; but we held our places half-fearfully, half-defiantly. It was after we had been standing side by side for perhaps fifteen minutes that the old man turned and spoke to me.

"I'm from up-state," he began, quite without prelude.

"Yes?" I questioned, tearing my gaze from the rhythmic line of marching figures in their businesslike khaki. "Yes?" I questioned.

"I never came to New York," continued the old man, "but once before. . . . I hate the city!" he added.

"Was it," I asked, noticing as I spoke the silver halo that the sunlight made on the old man's uncovered head, "was it long ago?"

"It was over fifty years ago," the old man told me. "I went marching down this street—it's changed now—just as they"—he jerked a thumb in the direction of the moving column—"are marching. It wasn't as big a thing as this, though."

From somewhere up the street sounded a roar of cheering. It came closer, sweeping over the crowd as the wind sweeps over a field of wheat, leaving shiny ripples in its wake.

"It's the Seventh coming," said the old man. And he disappeared into the crowd, while I stood on tiptoe to catch a glimpse of the men.

The Seventh New York Infantry always receives a great ovation when the National Guard does honor to its country. But with sun-tanned faces straight ahead the boys marched quite passively along under the storm of applause, with never a glance to right or left. A blonde girl beside me clutched my arm and tried to see over the heads clustered in front of her.

WHEN I was a very little girl I used to play a game called "The Farmer in the Dell." I remember how we, a group of us, would join hands and, swinging in a circle, sing:

"The farmer in the dell;
The farmer in the dell;
Heigho the cherry O!
The farmer in the dell."

Most of you who have been children—real normal, play-out-of-doors children—will remember the silly little words and the merry, rollicking, half-silly little tune that went with them. Yesterday, for the first time in a space that is measured by years, I heard that song. It wasn't sung by a dancing little circle of merry-eyed children; it was played by a band that marched in front of a grim body of men—a regiment going to war. For a moment I didn't recognize it; then memory caught at my throat and I remembered. And as I thought of the little song and all it stood for—and of the marching men and all that they stood for—the contrast rose up, a gigantic thing, before my eyes.

On and on the troops marched. It was over an hour that I had been watching. I had seen faces until faces became only dim blots of white; dark-shod feet keeping in step until they made me dizzy. And yet the thrill of the spectacle held me at my post—the olive-drab, martial thrill of it!

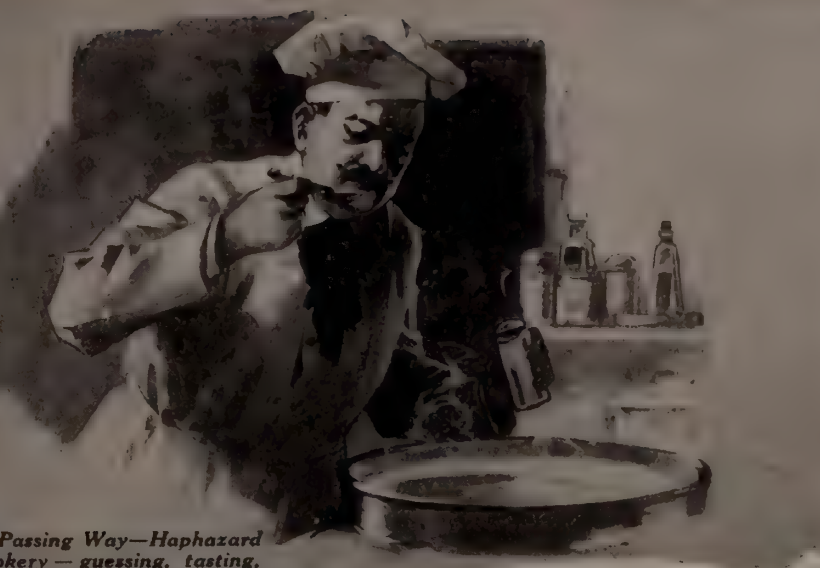
There were very few middle-aged men in the ranks. The hot sun beat down upon boyish faces—faces unlined, with eyes that had glanced hastily on love and not at all on partings. The lips, albeit set firmly, were lips that had smiled upon life. Very few of the hands of them, sun-browned though they were and strong, had ever pulled a trigger that held death in its metallic click. It was youth that I saw marching past me—vivid, radiant, exotic youth, with all the high purpose and the unshaken ideals of youth. It was youth with an untried courage that I know would come out, a strong and splendid thing, from the fiery forge of war.

YESTERDAY was a very great day in the history of the city. It was a day that brought memories to the older hearts, memories of a time when other boys, with their youth still glowing and beautiful, marched away to save the Nation. It brought memories of a time, nearer quite, when bands all over the city played a jingly ragtime tune and still other boys marched off to a southern island. It brought many memories, and, turning my back on the soldiers, could see them reflected in the faces of the crowd.

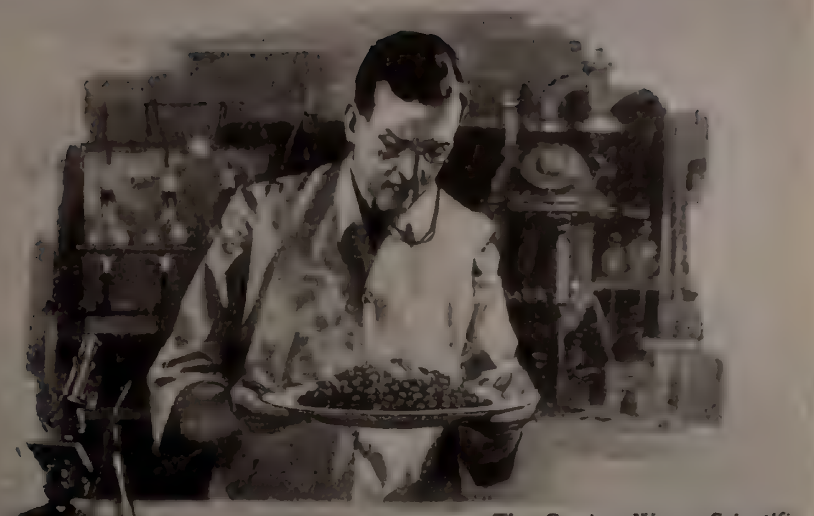
I saw three women together. They were leaning forward, searching the khaki sea in front of them. One was a woman with a deeply-lined face and a rusty black widow's bonnet tied under her chin; another was a middle-aged woman with a hungry look (that did not come from lack of food) in her face; and the third was a sparkling girl with all of life agleam in her eyes. They didn't speak to each other, but for one tense moment I saw the girl lean forward with a small hand outflung, and I saw the middle-aged woman bite her under lip with her teeth, and I saw the old lady lay quivering fingers on her breast. And I knew that some one had passed down the street—some one who, in three lives anyway—meant more, than anything else on earth.

I have seen gayer parades than the one I saw yesterday. And yet, late in the afternoon, when it began to rain and the thrilling drum-beats had quite died away, I saw a battery of artillery resting under my office window. I was up five stories from the street, but I leaned far out, and I saw faces and waving hands. I was up five stories, but the unquenchable youth that had sprung out at me even from the grim, marching lines answered my smile with a good-humored grin. It was raining, but as the boys stood there, shaking themselves free of the water, a commissary wagon drew up at the curb, unloaded coffee and sandwiches and fruit. And I heard laughter, and a snatch of song, and a catchy whistle. The officers relaxed a bit from their vigilance, and the boys—who despite their uniforms were nothing but boys—threw off their rigidness and were unaffectedly natural. I shall always be glad that I saw them that way, laughing and singing through the gray mist of rain. I shall always be glad that I saw the youth of them triumphant at the end of the march.

August 31, 1917.



The Passing Way—Haphazard cookery — guessing, tasting, changing. Sometimes right and sometimes wrong—never twice alike.



The Coming Way — Scientific exactness—materials analyzed and measured—results accurately recorded. Once right, forever right.

Scientists—Not Chefs

Why No Other Kitchen Anywhere Can Match a Van Camp Creation

New Culinary Methods Offer Multiplied Delights

THIS announces, for the first time, a new advance in cookery. The results surpass the finest dishes chefs have ever cooked. And they will change all your conceptions of some familiar foods.

No More Chefs

These Van Camp kitchens were long noted for their high-priced master chefs. We had English chefs, Parisian and Italian, and each was famed for some supreme creation.

Those chefs are gone now, with their recipes and dishes. Their place is taken by a staff of scientific cooks. Now a corps of experts, trained by famous universities, produce such dishes as a chef could never cook.

Analysis now takes the place of guesswork. A model laboratory directs every kitchen process. Instead of recipes we now have formulas—the result, sometimes, of a thousand careful tests.

Two or three years are often spent on one formula. Ingredients are blended in countless proportions. But when we arrive at the acme of flavor, the formula never varies. All its pages of minute directions are followed to the letter. So any Van Camp product is exactly like the finest dish of that kind we have ever made.

Our materials are selected by analysis, to fit extreme requirements. Our vegetables are grown on studied soils, from seeds of the choicest plants.

Every item has a standard such as chefs have never fixed. For instance, all our butter is made where pastures are at their best.

But ease of digestion is the chief aim of this scientific cookery. Every food element is cooked exactly as it should be, as proved by laboratory tests. That is all-important. Yet there, chef methods fail completely, especially on Pork and Beans.

The New-Method Pork and Beans

Van Camp's Pork and Beans, as now prepared, reveal the result of these methods. No other common dish depends so much on scientific cookery.

Here are beans grown on special soils, extra-rich in nitrogen. Each batch is analyzed before we start to cook.

They are boiled in water freed from minerals, because ordinary water makes beans hard to digest. They are baked in steam ovens, so hours of fierce heat can be applied without crisping.

They are baked without bursting, baked without crusting, baked so every food cell can digest. They are baked with a sauce whose zest and flavor no one ever matched. It is the final result of 856 formulas.

You will marvel at this scientific dish. The quality, the flavor, the ease of digestion will be a revelation. No royal kitchen, no famous chef, has ever produced its like.

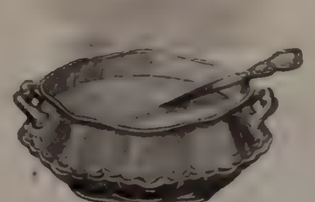
You can always have Pork and Beans like this if you simply ask for Van Camp's. The dish never varies. Try it today, and see what expert methods have done for this famous dish.

Van Camp's
SPAGHETTI

Van Camp's
Spaghetti
Italian style—made from a formula perfected by three years of tests. Naples never served a dish one-half so good as this.

Van Camp's
Peanut Butter
Made from a perfect blend of Spanish and Virginia peanuts, with every touch of bitter flavor taken out.

Van Camp's
Pork and Beans
Baked as no chef has ever baked it, and with a matchless sauce.



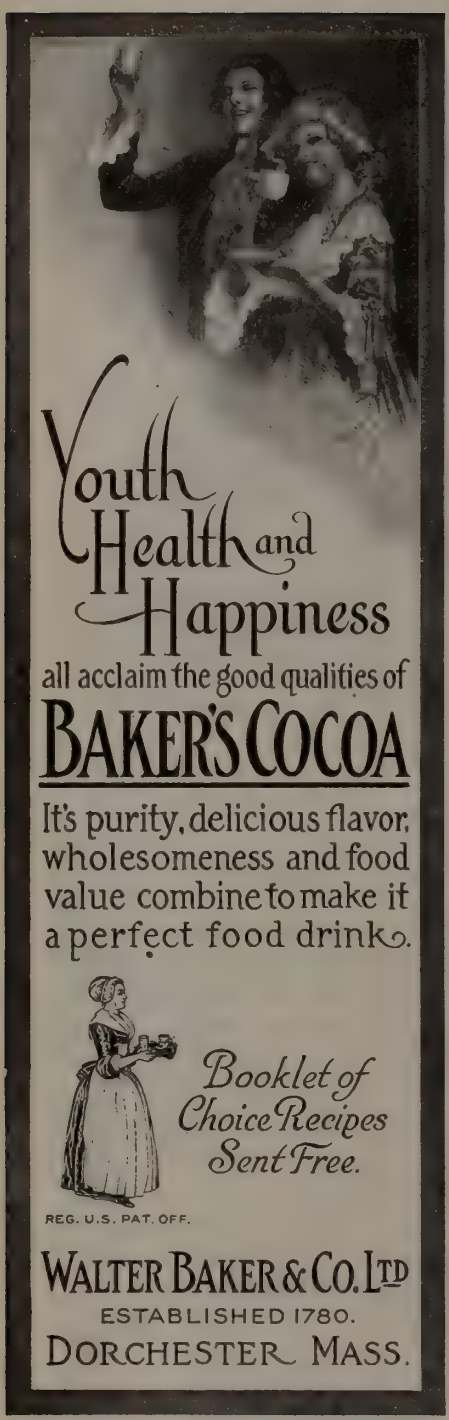
Van Camp's
Soups
18 kinds, each an ideal creation. In all our experience, no French chef ever made one like them.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce

THREE SIZES

Prepared in the Van Camp Kitchens at Indianapolis



Youth Health and Happiness all acclaim the good qualities of BAKER'S COCOA

It's purity, delicious flavor, wholesomeness and food value combine to make it a perfect food drink.

Booklet of Choice Recipes Sent Free.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD
ESTABLISHED 1780.
DORCHESTER MASS.

How to Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I KNOW you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 86 lbs., and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you how to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what yo should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you an illustrated booklet FREE, showing you how to stand correctly. Write me. I will respect your confidence.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 18, 624 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI
MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S MACARONI

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 984

Their next move was to Chicago, where their first meeting was prevented by the police acting under the direction of Governor Lowden. On Sunday, September 2, Mayor Thompson of Chicago defied the governor and provided police protection for a short meeting of the People's Council, at which they completed their organization and voiced a demand for free discussion of peace. The governor of Illinois sent troops to Chicago instructed to put a stop to the meeting, and it was hurriedly adjourned. The Chicago City Council, on September 4, by a vote of 42 to 6, upheld the governor in his action forbidding the convention. The Loyal Labor Convention leaders, after an attempt to secure permission from the governor of Minnesota for the opposition meeting which he had forbidden, went ahead with their convention. The convention passed resolutions supporting conscription and pledging to the Goverment the loyal support of organized labor, but they also demanded that conscription be made to apply equally to life and wealth, to men and to the dollar. Samuel Gompers was elected president of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy.

LANSING INVOLVES SWEDEN. Neutral and belligerent countries were taken by surprise on September 9 by an official announcement at the State Department at Washington that the German charge at Buenos Aires, Count Luxburg, had been sending military information to the Berlin Foreign Office in the Swedish official cipher. These messages probably had been forwarded to Berlin by the Swedish Foreign Office. Aside from the breach of neutrality indicated, the messages themselves, three of which were made public, were such as to astonish the world. Luxburg referred to the acting Minister of Foreign Affairs in Argentina "as a notorious ass and Anglophile," and he urged the German authorities either to let Argentine vessels pass the submarine blockade or to sink them without leaving a trace, or, as he said, that they be "spurlos versenkt." The Swedish minister at Buenos Aires denied that he had sent or caused to be sent any telegram for the German legation. It was pointed out, however that for some time past the minister has been ill and that the sending of the messages might have been done without his knowledge. The publication of the dispatches aroused great indignation in Argentina, which had lately come to an agreement with Germany over submarine sinkings.

NO FOOD TILL DECEMBER. The Exports Council on September 1 announced that no foodstuffs would be permitted to be exported to any neutral country contiguous to Germany before December 1, and that after that date shipments would only be permitted upon the submission of unassailable evidence that the supplies were absolutely necessary for their own needs.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. Complete returns from the income tax receipts for the last fiscal year show the total returns to have been $359,481,228, of which individual incomes made $180,108,340, the balance coming from the corporation tax. . . . Herbert C. Hoover on September 2 asked the Federal Reserve Board to initiate a movement by which the banks of the country would loan money to cattle raisers at not more than 7 per cent. interest. . . . The War Department on September 1 confirmed reports that about one-third of the small arm ammunition sent to France for the use of Pershing's troops had been found defective. Investigation developed the fact that the potassium chlorate used in the primers had contained small amounts of bromide, . . . The police of New York City have been kept busy in the last two or three weeks stopping meetings and arresting orators speaking in the streets under the auspices of the Society for Irish Freedom, the speeches consisting largely of abuse of Great Britain, resulting in more or less disorder and stopping traffic. The speakers have been arrested for blocking the highways. . . . The New York State Convention of the Woman Suffrage Party passed resolutions at the final session on August 30 condemning the picketing of the White House because it "tends to harass the government in its time of great stress." . . . Loans by the United States government to the Allies on September 5 totaled $2,226,400,000. . . . Secretary McAdoo on September 4 offered $300,000,000, in treasury certificates bearing interest at 3½ per cent. payable December 15. . . . The big eleven-billion dollar bond bill passed the House on September 6. Speaker Clark and other members urged that the expense of the war should be borne as much as possible, up to 50 per cent. at least, by this generation.

The Progress of the War

Continued from page 991

Germans entered the city; but these fires were soon extinguished.

THE capture of Riga has some strategic importance. Not only would the Riga-Dunaburg line along the northern bank of the Dvina be much better for the Germans to winter on than their former positions, but the possession of Riga itself, with its great dockyards, etc., gives the Germans not only a naval base with many advantages to operate against Reval and Kronstadt, the chief Russian naval base where the bulk of the Russian fleet is now supposed to be, but also against the southern coast of Finland. If the Russian fleet should be destroyed, the Germans could easily make the Baltic a closed sea.

Many military critics seem to think that Germany will now attempt to push northward and take Petrograd by a combined naval and military attack. It is quite possible that this is not beyond her powers, but the strategic advantage to be gained by so doing is not clear. It would be far more advantageous for her to push down the Dvina eastward to Viterbsk, and thence southward to the Dniester River, a stretch of only fifty miles, and then establish herself on this line of the Dvina River and the Dniester River from Riga to the Black Sea, which would form a natural line of defense of great strength, and besides would include within the German lines the best of the Russian wheat lands.

The interior situation of Russia continues bad. In Petrograd the elections have been carried by the radical parties by very large majorities. A plot to restore the Czar, involving several of the Grand Dukes, including Michael, the brother of ex-Czar Nicholas, is reported to have been discovered by the provisional government, which has made hundred of arrests, including Michael, and other members of the imperial family. The workmen's and soldiers' councils persist in their refusal to permit the penalty of death for insubordination, disobedience, etc., to be reintroduced into the army as General Korniloff has repeatedly demanded. The whole situation is exceedingly complicated. General Korniloff, on September 8, demanded that Premier Kerensky turn over to him all civil and military powers. Kerensky replied by ordering General Korniloff to hand over his command to General Klembozsky, commander on the northern front.

THE Rumanian front has been on the whole rather quiet during the week. Rumania is reported as negotiating for peace.

The British reported on Monday, September 3, a small advance on the Gaza front in southern Palestine, the first movement on this front in some time. Fighting has been resumed in German East Africa.

A great many important air raids took place during the week. The British twice raided Bruges in Belgium, with a large number of machines, and also Adrianople, in Turkey, and report that they inflicted much damage in both cities.

The Germans raided England three times in succession, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday of this week. The first raid was unimportant; the second, which was directed against the important naval base and dockyards at Chatham, must have been effective, as the Admiralty reports 108 sailors killed and 86 wounded. The third was on London and apparently accomplished little.

The Austro-Italian front was animated the early part of the week, calm in the middle, and again animated toward the close. Southeast of Gorizia the Italians reported the capture of the two mountains which dominate the town, and thus secured their possession thereof. On the southern part of the front, late in the week, the Austrians launched a counter-offensive against the Italian positions on the Carso. Here the Austrians, after a very violent bombardment, attacked the Italian positions on the whole line from Castagnarizza to the sea. According to the Italian account, the attack in the northern sector, after varying fortunes, was repulsed, while in the center, between Korite and Celle (Selo), the Italians successfully resisted seven assaults. Up to date the Italians claim a total bag of about 20,000 prisoners in this offensive.

The U-boats increased their toll of larger ships over 1,600 tons to 20, but decreased their total of small vessels under 1,600 tons to 3 this week, according to the report of the British Admiralty.

The Ribot ministry in France resigned in a body on September 7. President Poincaré asked Premier Ribot to form a new cabinet. He accepted the mission, but, the Socialist Party refusing to collaborate with him, he notified the president on September 9 that he was unable to form a cabinet. The fall of the Ribot cabinet is said to have been caused by similar reasons to those which led to the fall of the Asquith ministry in England, there being a well-defined feeling that the cabinet was not pressing the war with sufficient energy.

The French launched an attack north of Verdun on September 8, occupying German positions along a front of a mile and a half. German counterattacks on the following day recovered most of the positions. The French reattacked and claimed to have regained all of their earlier successes.

Four Americans were killed on the night of Thursday, September 6, when German airmen bombarded one of the American hospitals behind the French front. Those killed were the First Lieutenant, William T. Fitzsimons of Kansas City, adjutant of the Harvard Hospital Corps, and Privates Leslie C. Woods of Streator, Ill., Rudolph Rubino, Jr., of New York, and Oscar Le Tugo of Boston. The bombardment of the hospital was said to have been deliberate.

A special correspondent of the New York Times in London telegraphed on September 9 giving the total tonnage sunk by German submarines since January 1 as 4,561,000 tons, the sinkings by months being as follows:

Month		Total Tonnage	Sunk Weekly
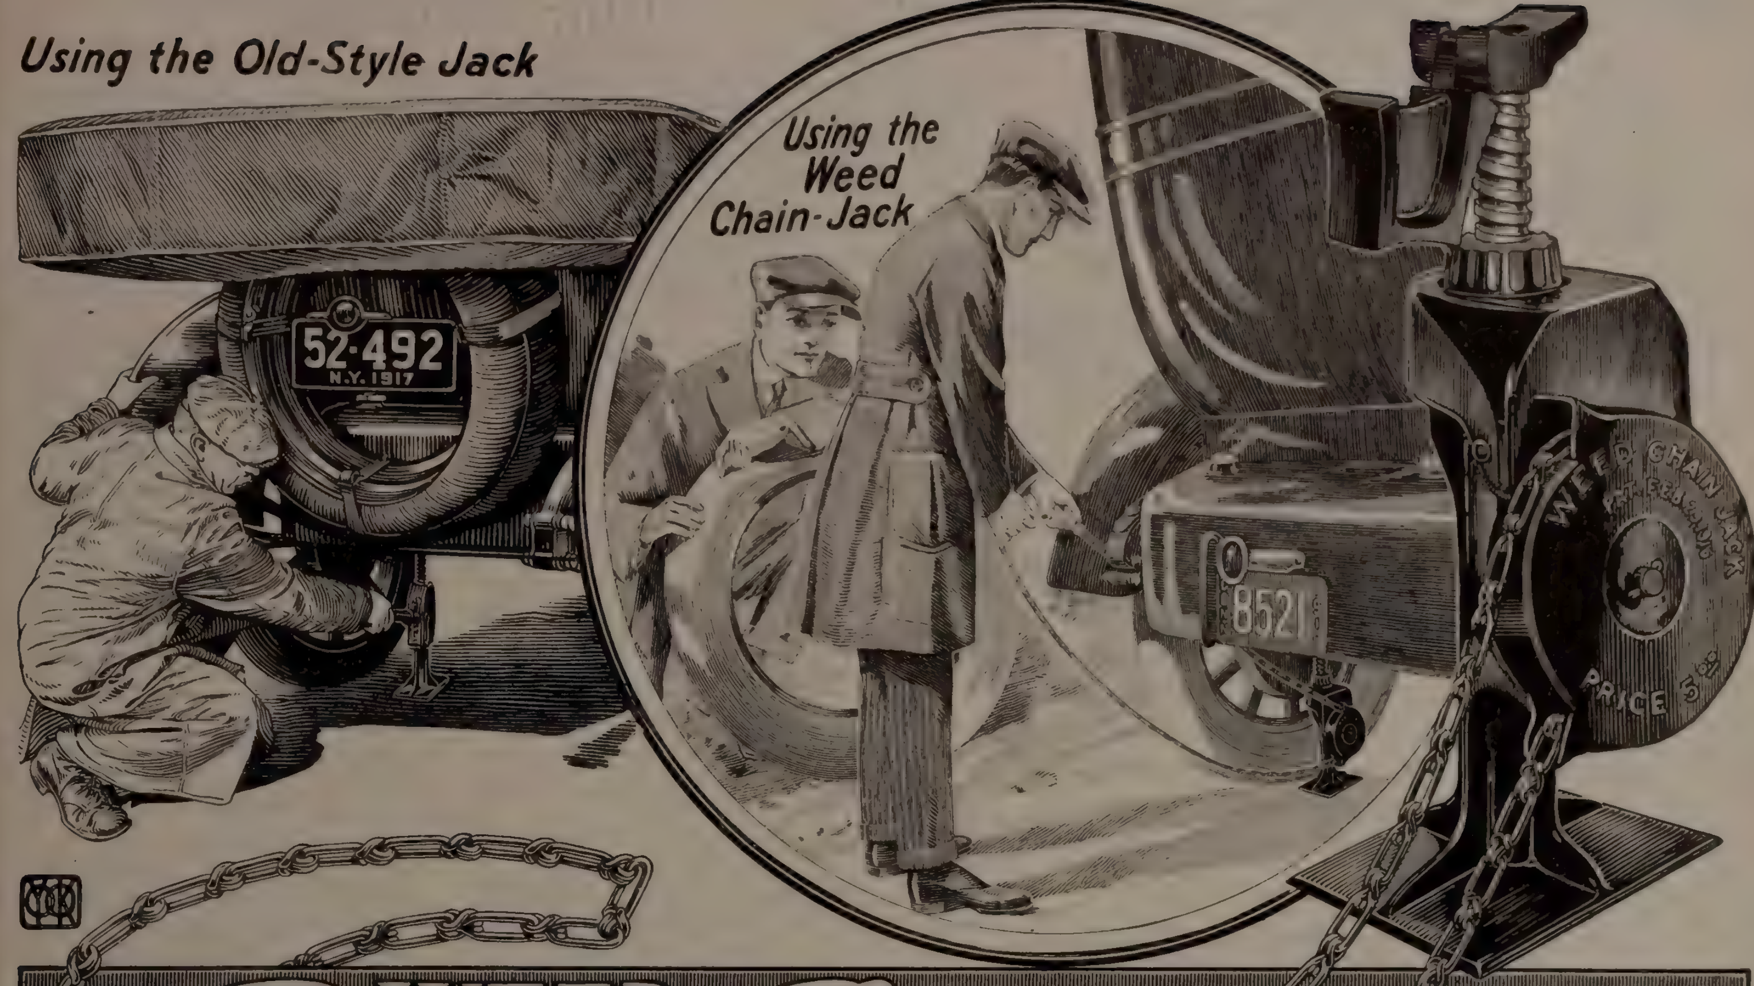
January	(four weeks)	333,000	83,000
February	(four weeks)	479,000	120,000
March	(five weeks)	600,000	120,000
April	(four weeks)	788,000	197,000
May	(four weeks)	549,000	137,000
June	(five weeks)	758,000	152,000
July	(four weeks)	463,000	116,000
August	(five weeks)	591,000	118,000
Total		4,561,000

Using the Old-Style Jack



WEED Chain-Jack

THE JACK THAT SAVES YOUR BACK

Simply a few pulls on its chain and the heaviest car is raised or lowered without danger and without exertion.

Every motorist has dreaded using the ordinary jack—an unpleasant operation, to say the least, and constantly fraught with danger and much tiresome work. Now all the unpleasant, disagreeable features have been entirely eliminated by the Weed Chain-Jack. With it, whether raising or lowering the car, you are always out of harm's way—No knocking of head, or soiling of clothes against springs or other projections—No skinning of knuckles or flying up of a "handle"—No chance of the car coming down, often resulting in serious bodily injury—Infinitely easier to operate than any jack on the market.

To operate a Weed Chain-Jack it is not necessary to get down in a cramped, strained position and grovel in mud, grease or dust under a car to work a "handle" that is apt to fly up, with unpleasant results. To lift a car with the Weed Chain-Jack, simply give a few pulls on its endless chain while you stand erect—clear from springs, tire carriers and other projections. To lower a car pull the chain in opposite direction. Up or down—there's no labor.

Once in place you never have to touch a Weed Chain-Jack. You do not have to crawl underneath to either raise or lower the car and after the car is lowered, you haul the jack out from under the car by the chain. Much superior in safety, economy, utility, simplicity and construction. You will never be satisfied with any other if once you use a

Weed Chain-Jack

Powerful—Safe—Easily Operated

Has a strong cap, providing the kind of support from which an axle will not slip, while a broad base prevents the jack from upsetting on uneven roads. Every Weed Chain-Jack is submitted to a lifting test and will support over twice the weight it is ever required to lift. Never gets out of order. Gears and chain wheels protected by a stamped-steel housing. Chain heavily plated to prevent rusting.

MADE IN FOUR SIZES

Size	Height When Lowered	Height When Raised	Height When Raised with Auxiliary Step Up
8 inch	8 inches	12½ inches	14½ inches
10 inch	10 inches	15⅝ inches	17⅝ inches
12 inch	12 inches	18½ inches	No Aux. Step
12 inch Truck	12 inches	19¼ inches	No Aux. Step

The 8 inch and 10 inch sizes are made with an auxiliary step as illustrated above. When in operative position this step adds two inches to the height of the Jack.

10 Days' Trial

If your dealer does not have them send $5.00 for any size for pleasure cars or $10.00 for the Truck size, and we will send you one, all charges prepaid. For delivery in Canada send $6.00 for any size for pleasure cars or $12.00 for the Truck size. Try it 10 days. If not satisfied, return it to us and we will refund your money. Use the coupon.

American Chain Company, Incorporated

Bridgeport A C C Connecticut

In Canada: Dominion Chain Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ontario

Largest Chain Manufacturers in the World

The Complete Chain Line—all types, all sizes, all finishes—from plumbers' safety chain to ships' anchor chain

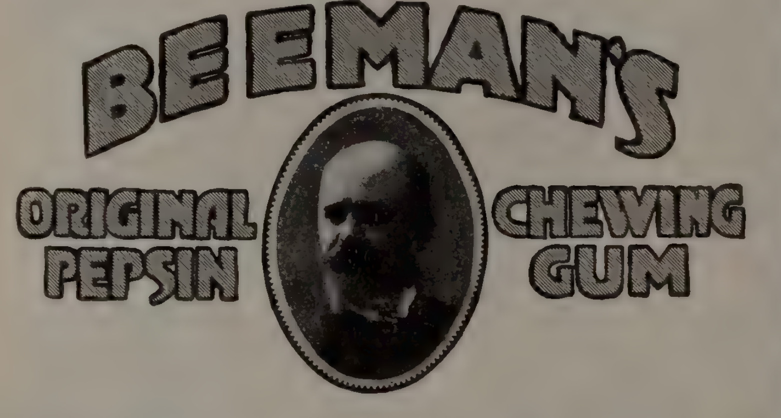
TRIAL COUPON

American Chain Co. Inc.
Dept. K
Bridgeport, Connecticut

Gentlemen: Enclosed find $$^{5.00}_{10.00}$. Send me a Weed Chain-Jack. (Size in.) It is understood I am to try it for 10 days and if not satisfied, I am to return it and you will refund the purchase price.

Name..

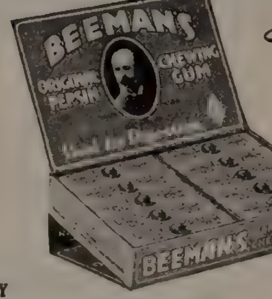
Address..



DOCTORS KNOW 40% OF ALL ILLS ARE STOMACH ILLS

Millions of dollars worth of gum is used annually in the United States. A substantial portion is Beeman's Pepsin Gum—a gum that I devised as a food chemist. Undoubtedly the great popularity of my gum is due to the relief this gum brings to so many who suffer from bad digestion.

Nearly every one occasionally eats too fast or too much and has a touch of indigestion. 40% of all sickness can be traced to indigestion. So it is good foresight to have Beeman's ready and chew it before the trouble sets in.



Dr E. E. Beeman

Doctor E. E. Beeman

CHICLE

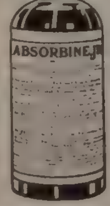
AMERICAN CHICLE COMPANY

Mother is the Home Doctor

Almost daily she is confronted with a little hospital work—cut fingers, bruises, burns and various preventive measures against children's ills. She must be prepared to take just the right remedial measure promptly and for that reason should always have Absorbine, Jr., at hand.

Absorbine, Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

is quite a complete first-aid cabinet in itself. It cleanses and heals cuts, bruises, sores and wounds. It kills germs and is a dependable spray or gargle for sore throat. It reduces swellings and inflammation promptly and gives quick relief from aches and pains.



ABSORBINE, Jr.

Absorbine, Jr., is a safe, clean, efficient household necessity for the busy mother—only a few drops are required at an application.

Many competent chemical laboratories have made exhaustive tests of Absorbine, Jr., and have approved it. Detailed reports mailed on request.

Absorbine, Jr., $1.00 a bottle at druggists or postpaid

A Liberal Trial Bottle will be sent to your address upon receipt of 10c in stamps.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

E. W., Garden City, L. I. None or very few of us realize that this war is God's fury poured out, as he said he would do when the cup of iniquity was full; and none or very few are publicly confessing our sins in this matter. I have heard that Mr. Gerard says: "It is a poor time to dance." But the dancing craze is still with us, and I think there is an undefined feeling that something different should be done from that which we are now doing; but as for public confession of sin and prayer for help, I have heard nothing. If President Wilson would only call upon the nation to humble itself before God and appoint days of humiliation and fasting, I believe we should come out triumphant. Instead, there seems to be a waiting. So far we wait in vain, and I believe we shall continue to wait in vain, until we realize our sins and call upon God to help us.

This is one of a number of similar letters that come to us from sincere Christians who believe that it is the duty of the nation at this particular time to hold a day or days for fasting, humiliation and prayer.

J. C. J., Laketon, Pa. The passage in Ps. 103 : 5 refers to the fact that the eagle casts feathers and becomes bald like the young ones, and then is covered with new feathers, giving all the appearance of renewed youth. It is true that other birds also moult, but the eagle is chosen as the special emblem of renewed vigor; and there is an old Greek proverb which says, "The eagle's old age is as good as the lark's youth." It is probable that this latter idea is the one meant to be set forth in the passage quoted. (See also Isa. 40 : 3.) Some Jewish interpreters have illustrated the passage of reference to some old fable or tradition about the eagle being able to renew his strength when very old, but modern commentators prefer to regard the passage as referring to the eagle after the moulting season. Besides, renewal of vigor does not apply to constant renewal, for death comes to all, man as well as beast.

C. A. G., Williamstown, Pa. 1. Richard Cecil was an eminent evangelical divine of the Church of England, born 1748. In early life he was a professional infidel, but was converted, entered college, took the theological course, and was ordained a minister. He is described by his biographers as broad-minded, of eminent talents, impassioned eloquence and conclusive logic, yet modest and unassuming. He wrote several books on pastoral life and work, which were long regarded as standards. 2. Robert Murray McCheyne was a Scottish preacher and evangelist, born 1813. He traveled much in Bible lands and was well known as an author of rare spiritual gifts.

J. B. Munger, 786 State St., Springfield, Mass., requests the address of E. D., Norwich, Conn., a paragraph from whom recently appeared in the Mail-Bag.

Inquirer, Lackawanna, N. J. The practice of praying in public and holding prayer meetings is not opposed to Christ's injunction to enter into thy closet to pray (Matt. 6 : 6). What he intended to discourage was the way the Pharisees had of obtruding their devotions. In their street-corner praying they used vain repetitions, thinking to be heard for their much speaking. Christ wants the prayer from the heart, the innermost part of us, but he also wants us to "assemble together" (Heb. 10: 25), and has promised to hear petitions brought by two or three in unison (Matt. 18 : 19). Hence public prayer meetings are not only proper but are also profitable of results.

J. G., Owens, Mich. Your questions relating to the truth of the story of Adam and Eve, the Virgin birth, the size of the ark, etc., are such as time and again occur to new believers and for a period tend to disturb them. Higher criticism and scoffers have done their best to discourage belief in Bible inspiration, but to date have not succeeded.

R. E. B., East Liverpool, Ohio. The conscientious objectors recognized by the United States government in the selective draft are members of the Shaker and Quaker religions.

Mrs. Laura A. Dumire, Route 2, Box 10, Farmville, Va., desires to get into communication with some minister who, no longer having any pastoral charge, may occupy her country home free of charge, and raise some crops on her land.

J. B. S., Harvard, Ill. The Pope claims to occupy a dual position, one as the head of a religion, the other as the head of a well-defined political power. He may not be an earthly potentate in fact today, but he certainly is in theory and partly in practice. He has at several of the world's courts today duly accredited and recognized ambassadors. Hence, when he attempts to make peace among the warring nations, he claims the same right as any other political power to do so.

W. S., Gilman, Ill. Please explain the parable of the leaven.

The parables of the mustard seed and of the leaven may be paired, both treating of the growth of Christianity from insignificant beginnings, the former an extensive power because of its natural capacity for development, the latter its intensive power, the more potent because unapparent. The historical application of the first, says a commentator, is to the rapid extension of Christianity in the early centuries; of the other, to its gradual and hidden effects on humanity, especially among barbarous nations in the dark ages. The individual application of the former is not prominent; it encourages by showing that the beginnings of grace in the heart are small and warms by asserting its rapid extension. The parable of the leaven points directly to the mystery of regeneration, transforming the soul. Leaven does not represent evil here. The parable, on the contrary, affirms a development of evil side by side with that of the leaven, but the Kingdom itself is like leaven. The parable indicates that the influence in question is internal and unapparent, not dependent on external organization or effort, but on personal, internal agency and example.

Miss. M. J. H., San Bernardino, Cal. Please compare Matt. 10 : 32 with Matt. 7 : 21, and explain.

In the latter passage, Christ gives warning against false teachers and false prophets. The really pious profess Christ, but not all who profess are pious. "By their works ye shall know them." Of all who profess, only those who do the work are acceptable. The contrast is not between hypocritical professors and holy non-professors, but between hypocrites and saints, all making the same outward profession. It is these saints, these true professors, these doers, that Christ promises to recognize at the last day.

E. T. D., Sitka, Alaska. Figures, based on the testimony of leading European statesmen and on official reports of our government, and compiled by the Wall Street Journal, show that approximately $90,000,000,000 represents the total financial cost of the war to all the belligerents from August, 1914, to August, 1917. To carry it on at the present stage, the warring nations are facing a daily expenditure of $117,000,000. The cost to the United States, from the time we entered the war until August 1, was $1,629,000,000, of which $1,337,500,000 has been advanced to our Allies. The Entente Allies have borne a total cost of $59,421,000,000 and a daily cost of $76,700,000. The cost to the Teutonic Alliance has been $30,300,000,000, or $40,000,000 daily.

J. S. C., Montgomery, Ala. 1. In Matt. 11 : 13, 14, the Elijah spoken of means the prophet who was to come immediately preceding the Lord. John was not Elijah reincarnate, for he so says of himself (John 1 : 21). The Jews expected that Elijah would rise from the dead. They did not understand the spiritual side and meaning of prophecy, namely, that even John, as the last of the pre-Messianic series, still belonged to the old dispensation that pointed to Christ, who was the fulfilment.

Mrs. E. H. R., Greenville, S. C. The Vigilantes are a voluntary association who are endeavoring to guard the country's liberty by discouraging seditious and unpatriotic talk and actions.

A. F., Los Angeles, Calif. In the New York campaign of Evangelist Sunday, the total number of trail-hitters is given at 98,948. The cards signed numbered 65,942, and were distributed as follows:

Presbyterians	7531
Episcopalians	6630
Methodists	5974
Baptists	3023
Reformed	1687
Missions	1316
Congregationalists	1022
Disciples of Christ	198
Moravians	108
Evangelistical	91
Undesignated Blanks	3971
Catholics	3690
Lutherans	3339
Miscellaneous	1391
Hebrews	803
Christian Scientists	497
Out of Town	24,671
	65,942

We have seen the statements you mention, but regard them as doubtful. At the same time, every convert has the right to choose his own church and Mr. Sunday recognizes that right.

Young People's Topics for September 23

Discouragement and Its Cure

Epworth League Topic. Luke 24 : 17-32; I Kings 19 : 9-16

THERE is only one way to avoid discouragement, and that is to have no ideals, to aim at nothing; to strive for no goal; but if we have ambitions, if we seek to accomplish things worth while, there will be times when indifference of others, our own weakness, the natural slowness of material processes, will make it seem that we are failing, and our horizon will darken with doubts and our sky will be clouded with fears and questionings. We will be discouraged, ready to quit. Sometimes these moments of discouragement come just before the moment of achievement, and sometimes there is a long, dark alley that must be traversed before we reach the ultimate goal. At such times we have an unfailing source of strength and of new courage. The disciples on the road to Emmaus were discouraged, yet their hearts burned within them as they walked with the unrecognized Saviour. Elijah, flushed over the triumph at Carmel, yet fleeing before the threats of Jezebel, found new courage and assurance in the "still small voice," and learned that there were still 7,000 in Israel who served Jehovah. Take the Saviour with you on your way, talk with him, tell him of the hopes not yet fulfilled, and get into your mountain, which may be any place where you can be alone with him, and listen for the still small voice in which lies the power of God and the assurance of victory in his strength.

State Missions

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Neh. 1 : 1-4; 2 : 1-5

NEHEMIAH'S heart was burdened for the suffering people of his home land. He had plenty. He was the favored servant of the king and wanted nothing; but he could not forget that the gates of Judah were broken down, and that the people were suffering affliction and reproach. And he prayed. Then he took advantage of the opportunity which was opened to him by the king's question, and made the request, which perhaps he alone among all the captives of Israel could have made successfully, and the result was the restoration of Jerusalem, the reestablishment of the Jews and the religion of Jehovah about the reconstructed temple. There are waste places in America. There are places where the walls of truth and virtue are broken down and where the people suffer affliction and reproach. There are places where God is forgotten, and there are people who long for the church and its Gospel. Leaders should secure definite information by addressing the Baptist Home Missionary Society, 23 E. 26th St., New York City, N. Y.

Home Mission Work Among Immigrants

Christian Endeavor Topic. Psalm 67 : 1-7

IT is hard for most Americans to realize that there are whole communities in our Eastern cities and in other parts of the country which are wholly foreign, in which English is not spoken, and in which the people read papers printed in European tongues and conduct the business of their daily lives as much according to their old home customs as is possible under American conditions. It is inevitable that these people should misunderstand, or at least fail to comprehend, American ideals. Many among us do not know that some of the races which have thus translated their civilization to our shores are more or less alienated from the church. Because of the practical elimination of new immigration by the war, these conditions are not now being multiplied. The temporary stopping of the stream of new arrivals gives the Protestant churches in America an unusual opportunity to meet this situation and to carry to these people—who are on the whole earnest workers, anxious to become citizens in spirit and in name—both the message of the Christ, and the instruction in English and the fundamentals of the American government which they need in order to understand the spirit of the nation and its ideals. This work is most vital just now because these people, unacquainted with our common language, are frequently victims of commercial injustice and readily fall a prey to agitators as long as they are untaught. Properly instructed, they will be a source of great strength to the nation in this time of trial. Leaders will be able to secure from the Home Mission Board of their church definite facts as to the work which is being undertaken by their own denomination.

◆

Palestine Facing a Famine

Continued from page 976

family, begging for bread. Some of these were ragged and poor. Many were respectably clothed. In some places there were groups of children, ranging from two to ten years of age, lying on the streets crying for bread. It was no uncommon sight to see a mother, apparently deranged, sitting on the street corner weeping over her crying babe who could not satisfy its hunger at her empty breast.

The need is going to be worse. Palestine is facing a famine. Although the former rains were copious, there has been almost no latter rains, and the harvests are a failure. We missionaries saw many fields of dried-up grain as we journeyed on our way north. Conditions in Syria are reported to be even worse; but this letter has been confined to the need in Palestine, for lack of space to tell more. I also wished to tell only what I personally know to be facts. As it is, I have barely touched on the conditions. They are beyond description. When I remember how I felt in Constantinople, where food was more plentiful than in Jerusalem—though there isn't much to boast of even there—it makes my heart ache for the needy. I know now it was an abnormal condition brought on by weariness; but with my stomach full, I felt as if I were starving. I had an insatiable hunger for food containing certain elements which has been unobtainable in Palestine, though I ate almost ravenously. Then I thought of the hundreds of people in Jerusalem who felt the same hunger, with an empty stomach, and almost nothing at hand to satisfy it, day in and day out.

In behalf of those whom the Christian Herald and its readers have relieved from time to time, I wish to thank you, first of all, and then I want to ask you to pray. Pray that those who have plenty will send some more relief to Jerusalem and other parts of Palestine and Syria. Pray that souls will hear the voice of him who said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Friends, I beg of you in the name of Christ to pray for them and to help them.

◆

An objectless life circles around itself like a chained dog around a post.

Conceit is a wet blanket that conceals a man's virtues and extinguishes the glow of his good deeds.

The ills that we scatter on the morning breezes multiply. Those that we lock in our own hearts frequently pass into oblivion.

The man who waits to see which way the other fellow is going will always be a laggard in life's race.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by
MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

RAISE BELGIAN HARES For U S
HUGE PROFITS easily and pleasantly made. We furnish stock and pay you $6.00 a pair and express charges for all you raise. Contract and book "Fortunes in Hares," 10c. Nothing free.
NATIONAL FOOD & FUR ASSOCIATION
Dept. 46. 557 12th St., MILWAUKEE, WISC

To Parents of Boys

Every boy is a boy's boy. And all boys—your boy too—love a real watch. Remember the first watch you ever had?

Buy your boy a real watch now—an Ingersoll Radiolite that's accurate and sturdy and stands the hard knocks your boy will give it. It's not a boy's watch, but the best watch for boys. Get your boy to school on time and home on time. Let it teach him to keep appointments. Buy him an Ingersoll Radiolite. Its Radiolite hands and figures tell time in the dark as clearly as in daylight. They contain real, light-giving Radium and they'll glow as long as he has the watch.

Any Ingersoll dealer has just the watch your boy needs. We have a wonderful boy story—"Your Boy"—that all parents will love to read and keep. It's one of those boy stories that takes you back to your own childhood and makes you feel for your own little boy. It's a story that tugs at the heart strings. Send for this booklet. It's free. At the same time we'll send a copy of John Brisben Walker's great book for boys—and men—"How to Use One's Minutes." Use the coupon at the bottom of this page.

In sending for these booklets, please address Department P at the nearest branch

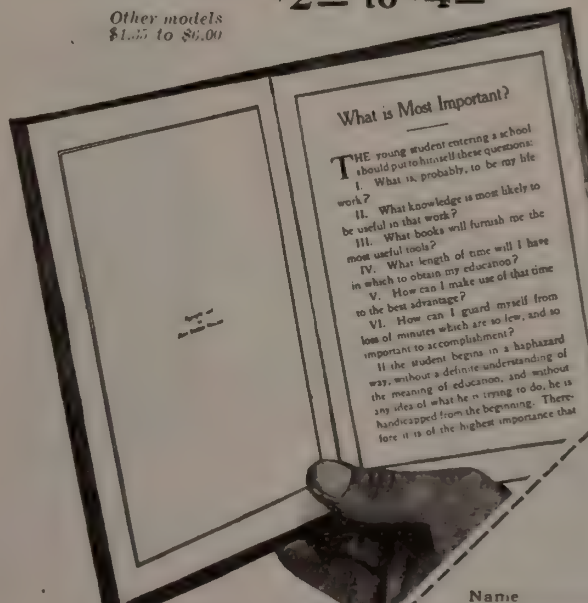
ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO.
New York Chicago San Francisco Montreal

Ingersoll

IN THE LIGHT

Radiolite Watches
$2.25 to $4.25

Other models $1.35 to $6.00



What is Most Important?

THE young student entering a school should put to himself these questions:
I. What is, probably, to be my life work?
II. What knowledge is most likely to be useful in that work?
III. What books will furnish me the most useful tools?
IV. What length of time will I have in which to obtain my education?
V. How can I make use of that time to the best advantage?
VI. How can I guard myself from loss of minutes which are so few, and so important to accomplishment?
If the student begins in a haphazard way, without a definite understanding of the meaning of education, and without any idea of what he is trying to do, he is handicapped from the beginning. Therefore it is of the highest importance that

You should read this FREE BOOK send for it.

Robt. H. Ingersoll & Bro.
Dept. P

I want those two free books. Please send them to me by return mail, with the definite understanding that there is no charge and no other obligation.

Name ____________

Address ____________

City ____________ State ____________

Just cut this Reminder off—then mail it before you forget

The Simplest Way to End a Corn

Decide now to master your corn forever. Let today's corn be the last. Blue-jay will free you from the most painful corn. Apply one of these soothing plasters tonight. Pain ends. In 48 hours the corn disappears. Only Blue-jay gives this insurance. Paring is temporary. Harsh liquids are dangerous.

Millions of corns are ended the Blue-jay way. Most corns require but one application. An occasional stubborn one, two or three. Try the gentle, simple Blue-jay way tonight. You will never be the victim of corns again.

BAUER & BLACK, Chicago and New York
Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

25c packages at druggists

Blue=jay
Stops Pain—Ends Corns

Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters

Live In Comfort At Lowest Cost This Winter

DON'T be forced to buy high-priced fuel. Get a Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace and be able to burn any kind of fuel—the kind that's easiest for you to get. Save money and heat your home better.

Write Today Get our new book on home heating showing how easily this powerful furnace fits the heating problem in any home. Easy to install—heats the entire home through one big register. Money saving wholesale price. Quick shipment, no waiting—we pay the freight and guarantee safe delivery. Cash or easy payments. Kalamazoo Pipe Furnace Outfits where desired. Heating plans free.

Ask for Catalog No. 927

KALAMAZOO STOVE COMPANY
Manufacturers Kalamazoo, Michigan

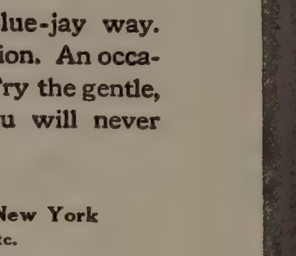
We manufacture Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered



STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 72 Stewart Blk., Cincinnati, O.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.

Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

CHRIST is the life of the Christian. The life of Christ permeates and ennobles the individual lives of all who yield their hearts wholly to him. Paul has said, "I live by the faith of the Son of God"; and in another place: "To me to live is Christ"; and in another place: "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord." It is also said, "In him we live and move and have our being"; and in Revelation: "I am he that liveth and was dead"; and it is promised that when the saints shall be gathered home we shall live eternally with Christ. Christianity is a religion of life. That is the one main difference between it and all other religions. It gives life meaning, makes it worth while, sets its task, and guides it from day to day, through achievement to victory.

In a recent letter a member of the Prayer League wrote that there was something strange about her life that she could not account for nor understand; that she seemed to have no desire to live, but that she was praying for wisdom to overcome the feeling. Her letter would seem to indicate that she had reached that age where life's work begins to seem to be done; where the cares of earlier years have ended with the setting sail of the last of her little flock upon the sea of life; where life needs a new adjustment. Just at this point people frequently begin to feel that they have done their work and might as well pass on to the heavenly home and get out of the way of the rushing young life that surges about them and that seems to reck little of their presence.

Sometimes the younger folks are a bit thoughtless. They forget to show their love to those who have prayed through sleepless nights that they might live; for those whose every care through long years have been for them. They take tasks out of the hands of the aged and leave them aloof from the current of young life, thinking that they will be happy with nothing to do. But lives that have borne responsibility cannot be happy on any of life's side-tracks. If life has seemed no longer worth living, the one necessity is a new interest, something new to look forward to. In these modern times there is a great burden of suffering to be relieved that would seem to give to any person, whose individual cares no longer press, abundant opportunity for a widened vision and for multiplied usefulness. The Red Cross, the White Cross, the various missions to prisoners, and the services of helpfulness to soldiers going to the war and coming home, open a multitude of avenues for usefulness to every person, young or old, whose heart is still capable of sympathy. We would suggest to this member of the Prayer League that she find among the multitude of causes a new interest worth living for, and then she will not only desire to live, but will want to live effectively and to some purpose.

Mrs. E. R. asks all Christians to join in a universal prayer, especially to pray that the war may soon close.

L. S., a widow, seventy years old, asks prayers for two sons, one of whom has been blind many years and the other, on whom she has been dependent, is now losing his sight.

Mrs. M. A. S., whose only son has been called to the war, prays for a better assurance of the presence of the Holy Spirit and that she may be resigned to God's will.

The aged blind mother of L. J. J. seems more cheerful since the Prayer League has been praying for her. God has not restored her sight, but his grace has poured sunshine into her soul. L. J. J. also asks the prayers of the League for a dear friend who is suffering with cancer, that her life may be spared to care for her aged mother.

Mrs. M. V. S. asks prayers for the boys of her Sunday school class, that they may be led to decide for Christ, and also prayer for herself that she may be led to win the boys for Him.

A Believer in Prayer asks for the return of a pastor and the spiritual awakening of a church.

Miss M. F. asks the prayers of the League in her affliction. She is suffering from a broken hip and great mental depression, and now, at the age of nearly seventy-eight years, feels the need of the Comforter whose presence the Saviour promised to his disciples.

Mrs. H. J. A. suggests a War Prayer, in which we are to pray for our enemies. This is a very appropriate suggestion. We can easily pray for our friends, but it requires much grace to pray for those who are warring against us.

C. S. writes from Barbados inclosing $1 for the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn; and asks the prayers of the League in her own afflictions. She is deaf and her sight is bad, but she asks not for bodily healing, but for spiritual blessing.

Mrs. C. J. B. praises God for the reformation of a son who was addicted to drink, and now asks prayer for the conversion of a daughter and four sons.

Mrs. T. A. G. thanks the League for their prayers for her brother, whose mind is now restored. She also asks prayer for the cure of eyes, and help in business matters.

Only a Witness relates instances of answered prayer for himself and others, and says: "In my business perplexities I have never called out for the Lord's help but he has come to my aid in some way."

Will the mother in Mississippi, who wrote in behalf of her boy asking help to procure him a cork leg, kindly send her name and address to the Prayer League, care of the Christian Herald?

The secretary of the Prayer League desires very much to communicate with the heartbroken mother in Galesburg, Ill., who wrote us asking for the recovery of her child. Will she please send us her name and address?

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Amboy, Ind.; Champion, Neb.; Talbert, Texas; Reader asks prayer that righteousness may prevail in Nashville, Tenn.; North Leverett, Mass., that the plans to build a dance hall in the village may be thwarted; Mrs. D. C., for a work of grace in Bethany Church, Tacoma, Wash.

A Subscriber, Vermillion, Kan., asks prayer that a good pastor may be sent to that place.

Mrs. L. R. W. asks prayer that mind may be strengthened; E. F. asks prayer that sister's mind may be restored.

Two parents ask prayer that sons' sight may be restored; Mrs. L. G. Y., that a young mother's eyes may be strengthened; Mrs. R. C. K., that a dear old lady may receive her sight; Mrs. M. P. D., that cataracts may be removed from the eyes of a friend, and that own eyesight may be strengthened; nine other friends ask prayer that sight may be strengthened and restored.

Five friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing for themselves or relatives.

Fourteen friends ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Twenty-two ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Five parents ask prayer that sons may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. G. A. S., that husband may be cured of the liquor habit; A. H., that a doctor may be cured of the liquor habit.

Forty-two friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including F. S. W., that daughters may be healed, one afflicted with serious brain trouble, and the other that a serious operation may be averted; E. E. G., that a friend may be cured of cancer.

Thirty-eight friends ask prayer for healing.

Seventeen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; ten wives, their husbands; twenty-five, for other relatives and friends.

Eighteen friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters.

Thirty-six friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including six, that we may have world-wide peace.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. J. M., Phœnix, Ariz.; A Friend, Great Falls, Mont.; E. G., Cato, N. Y.; N. W., Harford, Pa.; A. D., Lawrence, Mass.; Y. D. B., Jackson, Miss.; M. E. R., Covington, Va.; Mrs. A. J. G., Bathgate, N. D.; C. E. S., Berlin, Mass.; Mrs. A. L. H., White Plains, N. Y.; A Friend, Elizabeth, N. J.; Mrs. M. H., Galena, Ill.; M. L., Amboy, Ind.; Mrs. H. C. R., Wellsville, N. Y.; Miss J. P., Lynchburg, Va.

Hunger, Russia's New Czar

Continued from page 977

birth of 'Leninism' (pacifists) and of 'imperialism,' and also of the attempt at a counter-revolution, which is more serious in Manchuria than in Russia or Siberia. But we must not, as some do, confuse a counter-revolution with a restoration. One may be a Counter-Revolutionist and yet not be a Restorationist."

Here, Mr. Rutin referred to the attempts of several detached individuals to protest against the arrest and dismissal of officials, and the efforts to control speculation.

"Especially tense was the question of mobilization, which in the beginning was only undertaken by half-measure; and it was only at the second attempt that it was put into a definite resolve, which, however, up to the present has not been taken off paper and enforced.

"The Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates sent a telegram about two weeks ago to their Council at Petrograd, with a copy to Minister Kerensky, requesting that this mobilization in Manchuria matter be decided one way or the other. It is time to say, 'Bourgeoisie, to the trenches!' The soldiers have for a long time been spilling their blood there. Some have been trying to alarm by saying that here, in Manchuria, is a special international position, and that in case of mobilization all the trades and industries will fall into the hands of the Chinese and Japanese. This scare has delayed mobilization, and it has helped several of the old gendarmerie to remain here and even to receive promotions. For example, the former gendarme captain, Sammer, has been promoted to be the Chief of a Department, and Medem, still here, dares to give gendarmes leaves of absence. Von Arnold, who was twice arrested and twice released, is still here, parading in citizen's clothing. Sulghikoff, who almost tasted execution, has been replaced by Brashnikoff. In short, the strange character of the revolutionary movement here is clear to all, and also that there is a growth of poisonous plants and toadstools here which must be uprooted, and thus do away with the 'unsquare' [deceitful] attack made on the revolution. It is imperative for us to bind ourselves more closely, and to take as our watchword 'Courage, courage, and again courage!' "

One of the delegates proposed that a commission be sent immediately to all the stations in the Railway Zone to discover if any gendarmes were left, and to send them to the front. Also any who had not yet been to the front must be sent there.

Mr. Serokin said that after the Russo-Japanese War many traders had stayed here and amassed great amounts of money. No ceremony should be used with reference to them. They raised all prices here by speculation, and thereby gave a basis for the Chinese dealers also to raise their prices. The Council should recognize only the necessary population here, and all the rest should be sent to the trenches. If the Petrograd Council does not reply to our telegram then we must remind it again, and then decide for ourselves who is wanted here and who is not. Also the Chinese Eastern Railway should be investigated, with its Board of Directors where Vice President Wentzel has employed those who have been dismissed by us here.

Mr. Minsky referred to the general position of Manchuria and pointed out the force of the treaties made with foreign powers, and the necessity of taking into consideration the consuls and their functions as representatives of the foreign countries interested in Manchuria. As to mobilization, he said that it was impossible to mobilize every one, as then both front and rear would be left unguarded and the protection of the railway would be weakened.

Mr. Ivanoff expressed surprise that in these revolutionary times there was no revolution here, but a counter-revolution. "We should struggle against this with all our might," he said. "At the same time we should organize a democratic Duma, as has been done all over Russia."

Mr. Posen proposed that revolutionary authority be "taken away from the Executive Committee and placed in the hands of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, the representatives of the working classes, and not of the priests, doctors, railwaymen and others who now compose the Executive Committee. "Have you heard that the Japanese and Chinese are only waiting for the opportunity to bring their troops here?" [A voice: "We have heard."]

Mr. Rutin (the chairman) gave a résumé of the speeches: "The Executive Committee as the organ of the revolution, for the exercise of governmental authority, cannot exist. If it survives after reorganization, administrative authority must be in the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates. We permitted a mistake to pass before, now we will try to correct it. We must say that today the organ of the revolution is the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates."

The Committee of Delegates proposed the following resolution:

"The Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates feels in view of our great distance from the political centers, our special international position, etc., that the revolution did not bring into Manchuria the sweeping changes it produced in Russia, and that therefore the counter-revolution began earlier, is better organized and more dangerous The dearth of revolutionary reforms is expressed in the following:

"Many of the sheriffs are still at their posts.

"Many gendarme officers are still in Manchuria.

"The examining magistrates and judges not only do not act in accordance with the regulations of the revolutionary organizations, but they even struggle against them.

"Horwath and Gartung (counselor of the Railway)—representatives and lights of the old régime—are still at their posts, and one of them has even received a promotion."

Action on these questions was taken at a later meeting. Medem's arrest was ordered. All officers of the gendarme and police services, without exception, were ordered dismissed and sent to the front. Dismissal of Gartung, chief of the civil department of the Chinese Eastern railway, was demanded. On the question of dealing with Horwath the meeting divided and broke up in disorder.

Thus ended the attack on the one man upon whom depends the most vital problem of keeping the new front door of Russia open and traffic passing through it as rapidly as possible. And, due to his unimpeachable character, honest in his new work as an appointee of the Provisional Government in Petrograd, as he was under the Romanoffs, this attack has fallen through, largely through the sanity of some of the workingmen themselves.

Manchuria may furnish the food that Russia already needs, or it may only furnish passage to the new American rolling stock that will alleviate conditions nearer the eastern front.

But in any case we see here the good in the old régime withstanding the jealousy in the new. It is to be hoped that this Santa Claus of the railways may be enabled to deliver a "Merry Christmas" to the men in the trenches in the way of plenty of food, without which democracy in Russia may fail, both in its internal affairs and in the fight against the Central Powers.

◆

THE New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse is interesting the high school boys of the state in the planting of forest trees, the object being twofold: to restore the deforested areas and to interest the boys in the forests in a definite personal way. The trees are furnished the high schools by the thousand at a very low cost. Then the state forester sends a man to lay out and plan and supervise the planting, which is done by the boys on a day set apart for it. It is felt that no boy who has helped plant a thousand trees and watched them grow will go into the woods and leave a camp fire or throw down a burning match.

The Cause of Premature Physical Decay

By H. CRAMP

ARE you able to keep up with younger men and women? Or are you lacking in enthusiasm and energy, easily tired, stomach sour, liver sluggish, bowels constipated, nerves on edge?

There is no reason why you should suffer this premature decay. Nature has provided for repair as well as for the production of energy, and if you only give her a fair chance, will supply you strength to compete with the most energetic twenty-year-old you know.

The colon is the sewer of the human system. Its function is as important to the body as is the disposal of garbage, ashes, and sewage in a large city. We would not think of allowing this waste to remain rotting in our houses or even lying on vacant lots about our cities, yet many of us permit the more dangerous waste of the body to remain in the colon long after it should have been discharged.

Out of a total of 1,300,000 Americans annually examined for life insurance, 100,000 are rejected because of physical disability. One out of every three men drafted in New York City in August, 1917, was rejected for the same reason. The average American dies at forty-three.

"The American is trying," said Mr. E. E. Rittenhouse, of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, in a recent address, "with the aid of new knowledge and inventions, to crowd the experiences of two lifetimes into one. He is having some success, but the strain is telling on him."

A great many of us drag ourselves about feeling only half alive; most of us lack the "pep" that is necessary to any enjoyment of life and indeed to any business success. We know that we are not living right, that we should have exercise, that Nature is only rebelling against our unnatural manner of living, but there are only 24 hours in a day and most of us do not find time to exercise, either outdoors or in.

Our bodies endure the strain for a long time, but in the end rebel. The intestines fail to carry off the waste, poisons from the putrefying mass are absorbed into the blood, and a host of evils follow. Physicians claim that four out of every five persons are either chronic or occasional victims of this self-poisoning.

Nor is it only the constipated who suffer from this condition, for one may seem to be eliminating the waste and still impurities may lodge on the walls of the intestines, simply because the colon is sluggish and needs to be stimulated.

The question then is how to stimulate the action of the colon. "In the treatment of all forms of chronic disease," says one eminent authority, "great attention must be given to the colon, and massage is one of the most effective means of mechanically aiding the crippled large intestine. The aim should be to accomplish a thorough emptying of the colon daily."

Indeed, few physicians will question the value of massage, and the underlying principle speaks for itself. Each and every organ of the body is operated by its own set of muscles and these muscles may be strengthened by exercise, just as may the large muscles of the arms and legs. Massage, when scientifically employed, provides the same stimulating exercise for the muscles of an organ that gymnastics and athletics do for the muscles of the arms and legs. It is especially valuable as a means of stimulating the circulation and other forms of vital activity.

Naturally, self-massage, especially of the abdomen, is difficult. You simply cannot manage it. And the services of a trained masseur require time and money. But by the aid of a Kolon Motor you can very easily apply massage — expert, scientific massage — directly over the course of the large intestine.

All this the Kolon Motor accomplishes without the aid of cathartics or enemata, simply because it "helps Nature to help herself." It offers to you, no matter what your line of activity may be, the opportunity of increasing your vitality and your efficiency and consequently of increasing your success. It will give you new energy to translate into greater and greater achievement. Once rid your body of its poisons, and it will be easy by the occasional use of the motor to keep it so.

If in the beginning you give five minutes in the morning and five again in the evening to exercise with the machine, you will find after a few months that a single treatment every other day, or even at longer intervals, will be enough to secure regular thorough emptying of the colon.

There is really no reason why you cannot renew your youth Scientists have demonstrated that the lower intestine is the seat of putrefaction and disease, and that old age is due to the poisons absorbed from thence into the blood. It is for you to say whether or not those poisons shall be absorbed. They need not, when the process of eliminating them is so simple. Are you going to lag behind in the race, or have the fun of keeping pace with the youngest and swiftest?

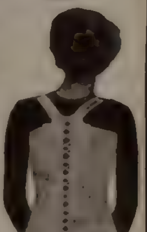
Be your own judge. See what the Kolon Motor will do for you. You may have one shipped to you on five days' free trial. Write now for particulars and a free copy of the valuable new book, "Colon Cleanliness"—one of the most interesting, instructive, and helpful books ever written on the subject of health. Fill out and mail the coupon today.—(Advertisement.)

Martin's Method, Incorporated
Dept. 159, 105 E. 30th St., New York, N.Y.

Please send me a copy of your free book, "Colon Cleanliness," and full information as to how to obtain a Kolon Motor for free trial. This involves no obligation on my part to purchase.

Name ....

Address ....

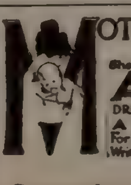


Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble you can be relieved—and probably wholly overcome your affliction—right in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of Spinal Curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. Eminent physicians are endorsing it. The Philo Burt Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertibræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed, and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. Each appliance is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction and let you use it 30 days. Write today for our new book. It gives full information and testimonials.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., U-207 Odd Fellows' Bldg., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

LE PAGE'S
CHINA
CEMENT
STANDS HOT AND COLD WATER 10¢



MOTHERS in EXPECTATION
Send To-Day for "Mater Modes"
Showing a Complete Line of Fashionable Apparel for MATERNITY
DRESSES SUITS BLOUSES SKIRTS CORSETS at MANUFACTURER'S PRICES
For Free Book Write Dept. JA Lane Bryant 5th Ave. at 38th St., N.Y

Wholesome Reading For a Soldier For a Whole Year For Only $2.00

FATHERS and sons have gone forth at their country's call—some to brave peril and death on land and sea—others to join the training camps. Many will find a last resting place on a foreign shore—on the battlefield, in the hospital, or to succumb to the inevitable hardships of camp life. Imagine the anguish that must be in the heart of every mother—as she thinks of her son—the boy she has watched over since childhood with the love that only a mother can give—now suddenly taken from home to a strange land—possibly never to return.

We can all help these anxious mothers by seeing that our soldiers and sailors promptly receive the Christian Herald every week. It is just the magazine the boys should have. There is so much in the Christian Herald that will appeal to them—good, clean, yet interesting stories, with an up-to-date record of the events of the world. And the very latest pictures, too.

Soldiers Need Good, Wholesome Reading Matter

A correspondent in Paris, France, in a recent dispatch tells us what General Pershing said about reading matter for our boys in France. It applies equally as well to the sailors at sea and to the army in training at home.

"The soldiers in France need all the good, wholesome reading matter the folks at home can send them," Major General Pershing declared.

The American boys at the permanent training camp near the French front have expressed their hunger for fresh newspapers and magazines from home. The question was put up to the American Commander in Chief and he approved plans to furnish the soldiers with good magazines and newspapers.

"I thoroughly approve of the plan of sending plenty of newspapers and magazines to the soldiers," Pershing said. "The idea is excellent. The boys here need any amount of good, wholesome reading matter from the folks at home.

"But one thing must be understood; the officers do not want and the men do not appreciate old papers—old printing. The literature sent to France must be current—that is, new magazines and leading newspapers despatched as soon as possible after publication."

Send Your Soldier Boy the Christian Herald

If you have a son, or a brother, or a sweetheart, or a friend who has been called for service, what better service could you render than to send him the Christian Herald every week? 52 issues for only $2.00. Or you can send it to him for 6 months (26 issues) for $1.00.

The Christian Herald will be Delivered Direct to the Camp

No matter where the soldier or sailor goes, the Christian Herald will follow him. The Post-office will take care of that.

A Gift Card for the Donor

A neat gift card, giving the name of the donor, will be sent to the soldier or sailor for whom you order the Christian Herald.

First Copies off Press will go to the Soldiers

Make certain that your soldier gets a clean new copy of the Christian Herald. We will send him one of the first copies off the press.

The Christian Herald,
Bible House, New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen: For the enclosed $.... send the Christian Herald for ....to Name of soldier or sailor ....
Present Address..............................
Regiment......Company....Branch of Service..........
Name of donor.............................
Address of donor...........................

Motor Trucks as a Rural Asset

Continued from page 979

to direct shipping-points, thereby saving several handlings and much delay. The fruit or produce arrives in market in a few hours instead of a few days, is fresher and in better condition and consequently commands higher prices.

There are many places in the country within fifty miles of great markets where farm produce is allowed to rot on the ground or is fed to live stock, because it does not pay the farmer to ship it. Yet consumers in the city have to pay high prices for the same kind of produce. Numerous official investigations have shown that the consumer pays anywhere from two to five times as much for the vegetables and fruit he eats as the producer receives for them. The difference goes to the railroads, commission merchants and retailers.

NO serious obstacle stands in the way of a farmer hauling his produce from the farm into the city and selling it direct to retailers or to hotels and restaurants and getting the highest prices for it because it would be fresher and more marketable than similar produce that had been on the rail and in the commission market for several days. Where one grower does not raise enough to make up a truck load every day, several could join forces in the purchase and use of a truck.

If the farmer does not quickly awaken to the possibilities of profit-making by seeking direct connection with the consumer, I am convinced that big capital will do so. Present and probable future high prices for all farm products are too attractive to be ignored when, in ordinary lines of manufacturing, earnings of five and six per cent. are considered good. Imagine what could be done by a big aggregation of capital, if it undertook farming on a gigantic scale, employing the most scientific methods of fertilizing and production, all the latest farm machinery, its own freight cars and motor trucks, and then developed its own distributing system.

The possibilities of farming are attracting a good many business men from the cities back to the soil; the agricultural colleges are turning out many young men versed in scientific farming, and the federal anti-trust laws and food-control act are particularly favorable to producers of foodstuffs. Everything indicates that an era of business management of farming and distribution is coming. The college graduate will know how to increase production per acre and the business man how to cooperate with others in shipping and in distributing to the ultimate consumer most economically.

All this is not without its patriotic side. Whatever helps to increase production—in the aggregate, per acre and per man—and to reduce the cost of distribution tends to cut down the cost of living and to help win the war. And transportation is the biggest item in distribution. The government is calling upon the country urgently to do everything possible to relieve the railroads and to economize in local delivery service. The motor truck offers the means for accomplishing both. The rural and small-town merchant can help as well as the farmer, the manufacturer and the great retail houses in the cities. With a motor truck or delivery wagon the merchant can make as many deliveries as with three or four wagons; he can extend his trade territory to ten or twenty miles from his store in every direction, instead of the eight or ten that can be covered by horse-drawn wagons. The country cannery, grist mill or lumber mill can, if need be, make deliveries by road at distances up to 100 miles or more, relieving the railroad of this short-haul work, serving customers more promptly and saving the cost of two handlings of the load.

There is no stretching of imagination in this. As a matter of fact, a regular business has been built up by a haulage company in motor-trucking between New York and Philadelphia, in direct competition with excellent railroad service. Factories in Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts frequently make shipments by truck to New York, and there is a rubber-tire factory in Akron, Ohio, that makes shipments of automobile tires over the road all the way to Boston and brings back truck-loads of cotton fabric.

Many small-town merchants, grocers, butchers and hardware dealers do not have trade enough to keep a motor wagon busy all the time, and, as it costs more to operate a motor wagon than a single horse and wagon, it might not be profitable for them to make a change of equipment, although a progressive retailer could quickly build up a greatly enlarged trade with a light truck by making quick deliveries to hamlets and farmers considerable distances outside of his own town, utilizing the telephone which is now in such general use throughout the rural districts and the rural free delivery postal service for receiving orders.

However, the cooperative delivery system offers an excellent means of reducing local delivery costs. A number of Middle West cities and villages have adopted this system. The retailers have pooled their equipment and organized a general delivery company which serves all the stores that enter into the arrangement. The wagons operate on regular schedules, calling at each of the stores at definite hours and covering regular delivery routes. Each store pays for just the amount of service it needs, either a stipulated sum per month or per package. There is a great economy in this, especially where motor trucks and wagons are used. One wagon can carry the groceries from half a dozen different stores to the customers of all just as well as six different wagons can do it. It can also carry meat from several butcher shops, drugs from the druggist and tinware from the hardware store. So, where fifteen or twenty wagons were formerly required, half a dozen motor wagons, operated by the general delivery company, can serve the customers fully as well and do the work more cheaply for each store.

BEFORE leaving this subject a few words about the road and fuel situations will not be out of place.

The director of the United States Bureau of Mines and the president of the Standard Oil Company have sounded a word of alarm over the danger of a gasoline shortage and urged the avoidance of waste through carelessness and unnecessary riding in automobiles for mere pleasure. No intimation has been made that the use of motor trucks or even of passenger automobiles for utilitarian purposes should be reduced. The government officials and other competent authorities assert that with careful use by all there will be sufficient gasoline and other petroleum products for all requirements of the government, motor vehicle owners and the industries.

Furthermore, it is entirely feasible to utilize alcohol in automobile engines, and alcohol can be produced cheaply from waste products. The big distilleries which have been compelled by the new food-control act to cease production of whisky from grain will probably be glad to devote their plants to the production of denatured alcohol in large quantities. Some are already doing so. Any farmer can distill alcohol also, but the process is so hedged about by federal regulations as to make this unprofitable. If these regulations were sufficiently moderated by Congress, farmers could produce their own fuel.

So far as roads are concerned, the farmer and rural merchant should be vitally interested in seeing that the roads in their localities are improved and kept in usable condition. To stop work on the roads at this time as a matter of economy is no economy at all. With larger quantities of farm produce and manufactured articles of all kinds to be moved and the railroad situation what it is, it is more imperative than ever that the main roads should be put in good condition and well maintained.

The farmer who wants to be able to reach market during the fall and spring months with full loads and the least strain upon his team or truck and the least waste of time will make his voice and vote count on the road question.

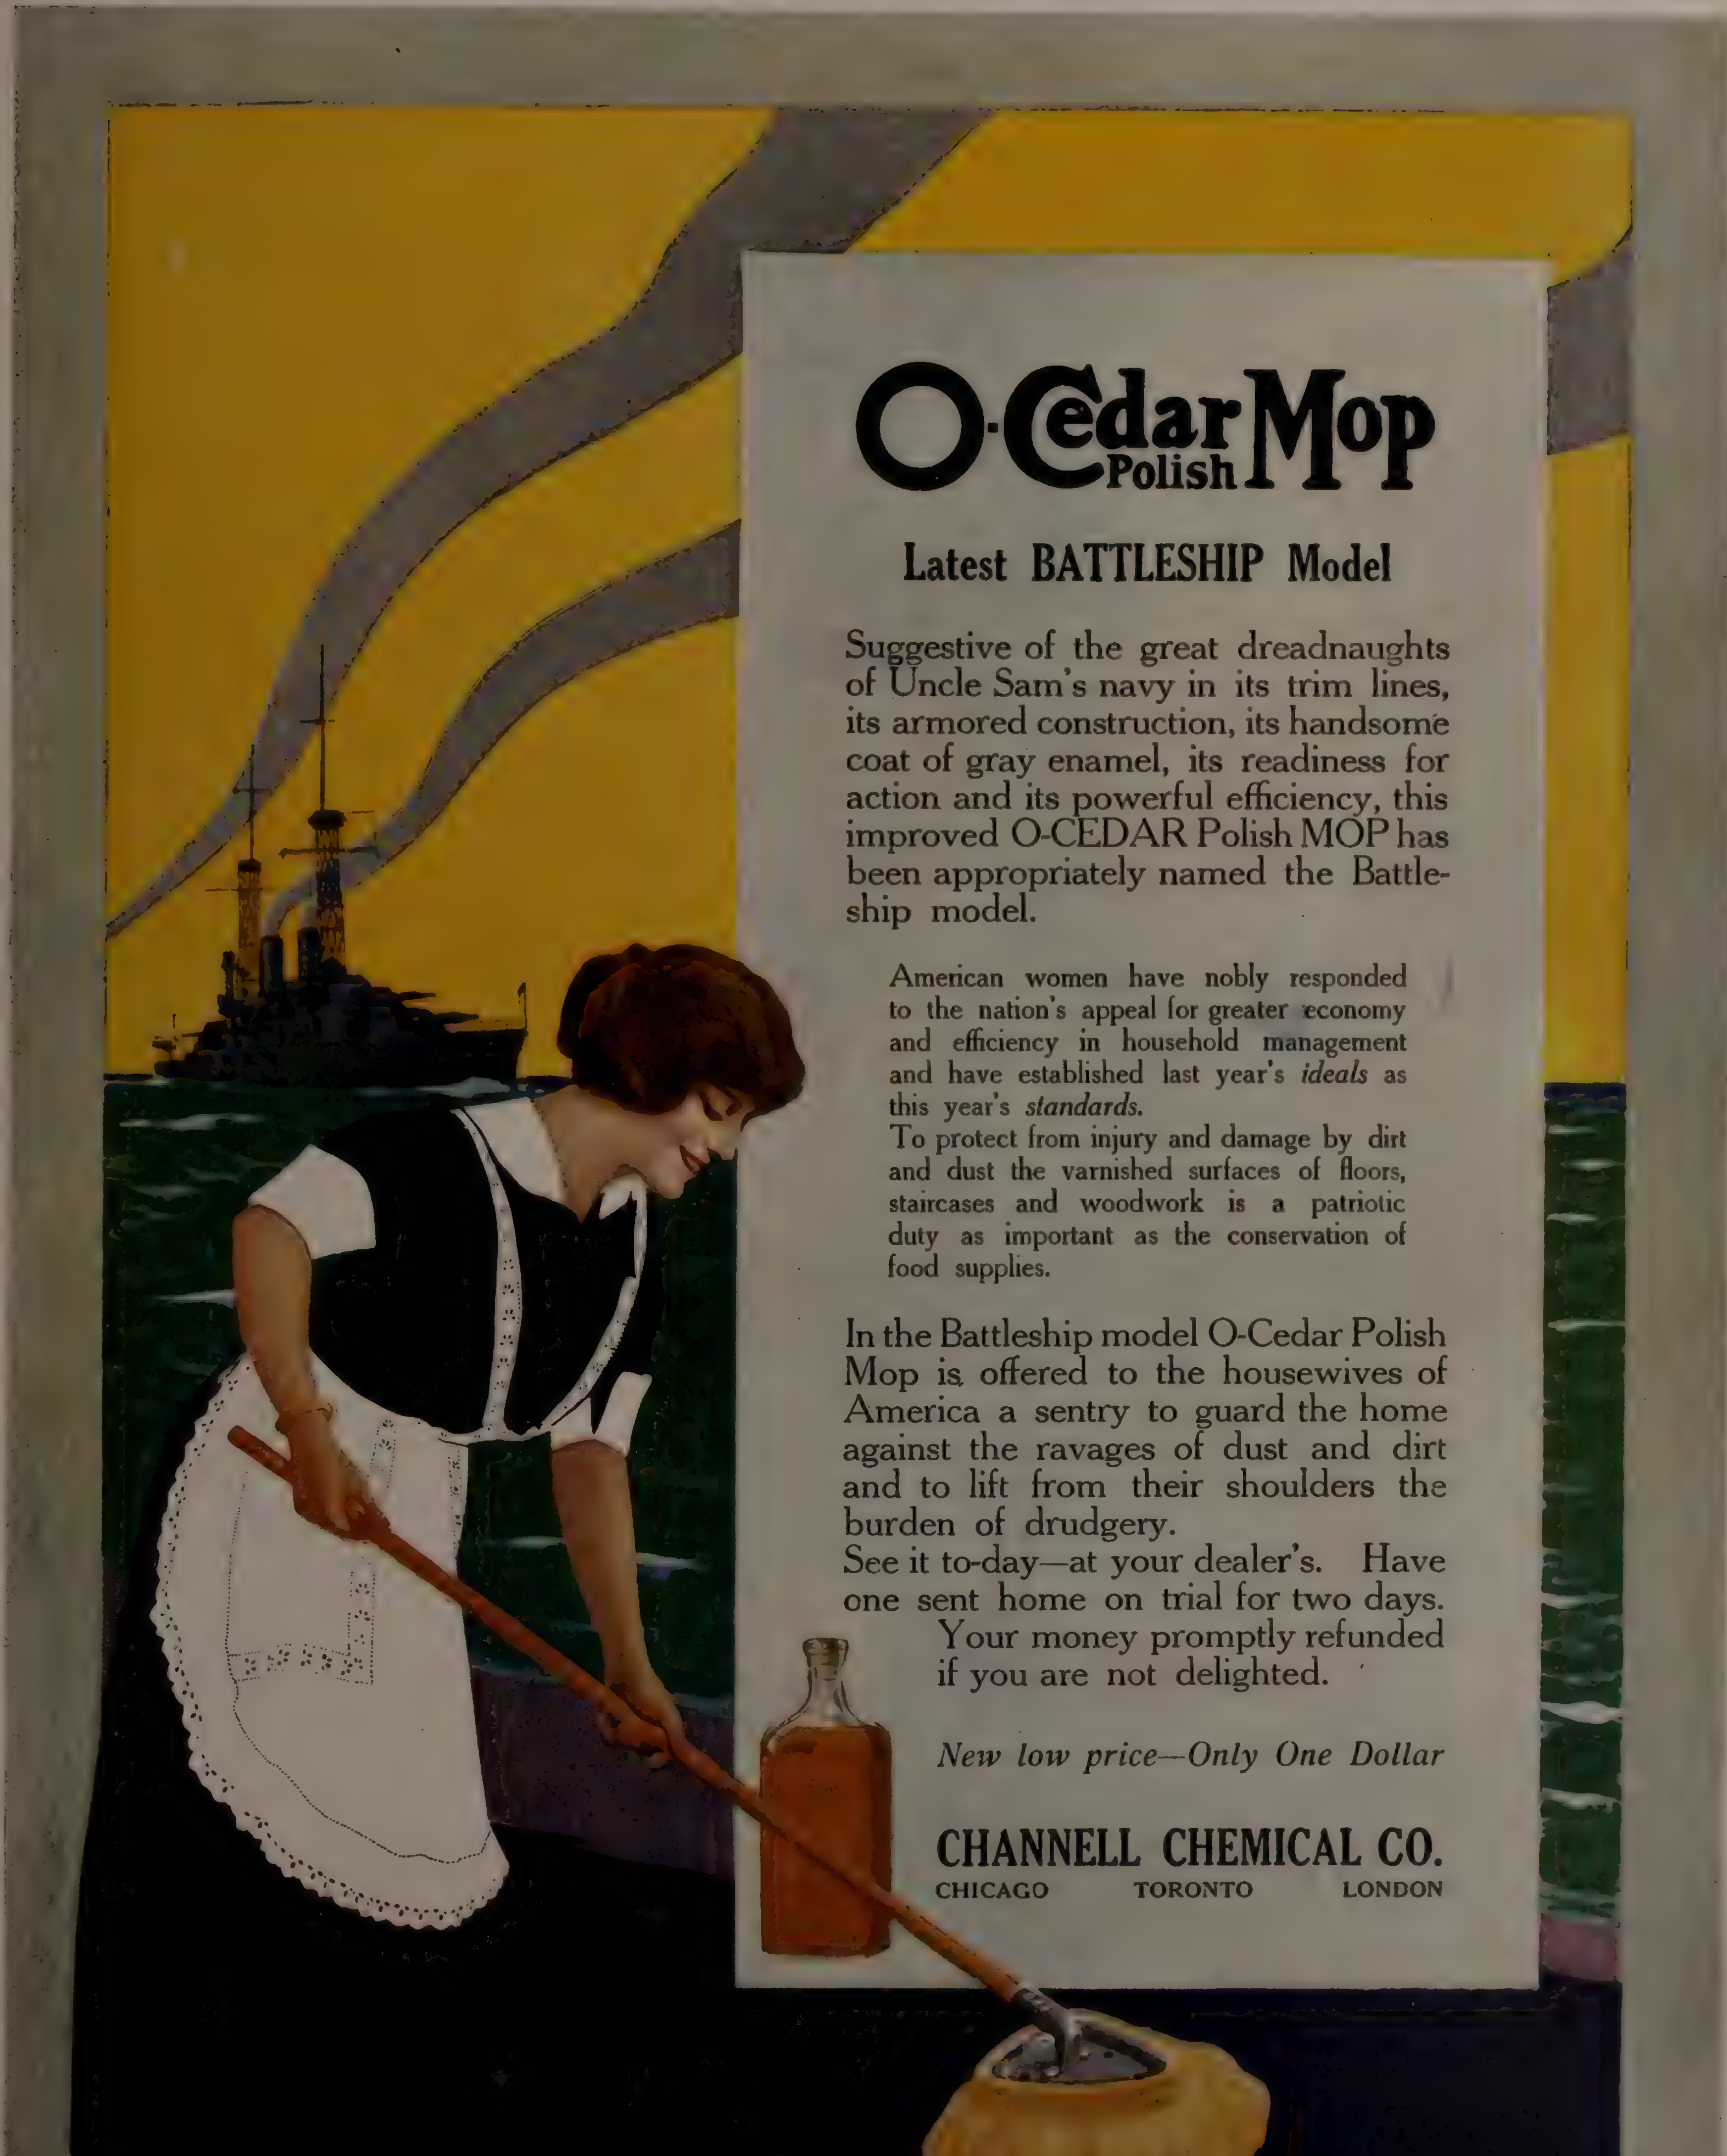
MAGAZINE BARGAINS

PRICES SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE

THE prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, except in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower prices. If the magazines wanted are not given below, ask us for special quotation. Canadian postage, 50c additional; foreign, $1.00.

Christian Herald... McCall's Magazine.	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife.	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's World....	$2.00 .50	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Christian Herald... People's Home Journal..........	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Mother's Magazine	$2.00 1.50	$2.10	Save $1.40
Christian Herald... Ladies' World......	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Every Week........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Boys' Magazine....	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife. McCall's Magazine.	$2.00 .75 .75	$2.25	Save $1.25
Christian Herald... Little Folks.........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Etude (Music).......	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald, 1 yr. Am. Poultry Ad., 2 yrs. Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen....	$2.00 1.00 .50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald.. Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.25	$2.60	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald.. McCall's Magazine. Woman's World... Plain and Fancy Needlework......	$2.00 .75 .50 .50	$2.60	Save $1.15
Christian Herald... Delineator.........	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review...	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald.. McCall's Magazine. People's Home Journal.......... Ladies' World......	$2.00 .75 .75 1.00	$3.00	Save $1.50
Christian Herald... McCall's Magazine. Youth's Companion	$2.00 .75 2.00	$3.75	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... *Woman's Home Companion..... *American.........	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.00	Save $1 0
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.25 1.50	$4.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.50	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... *Youth's Companion *Review of Reviews..	$2.00 2.00 3.00	$4.75	Save $2.25
(*Must go to same address)

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York, N. Y.



O-Cedar Polish Mop

Latest BATTLESHIP Model

Suggestive of the great dreadnaughts of Uncle Sam's navy in its trim lines, its armored construction, its handsome coat of gray enamel, its readiness for action and its powerful efficiency, this improved O-CEDAR Polish MOP has been appropriately named the Battleship model.

American women have nobly responded to the nation's appeal for greater economy and efficiency in household management and have established last year's ideals as this year's standards.

To protect from injury and damage by dirt and dust the varnished surfaces of floors, staircases and woodwork is a patriotic duty as important as the conservation of food supplies.

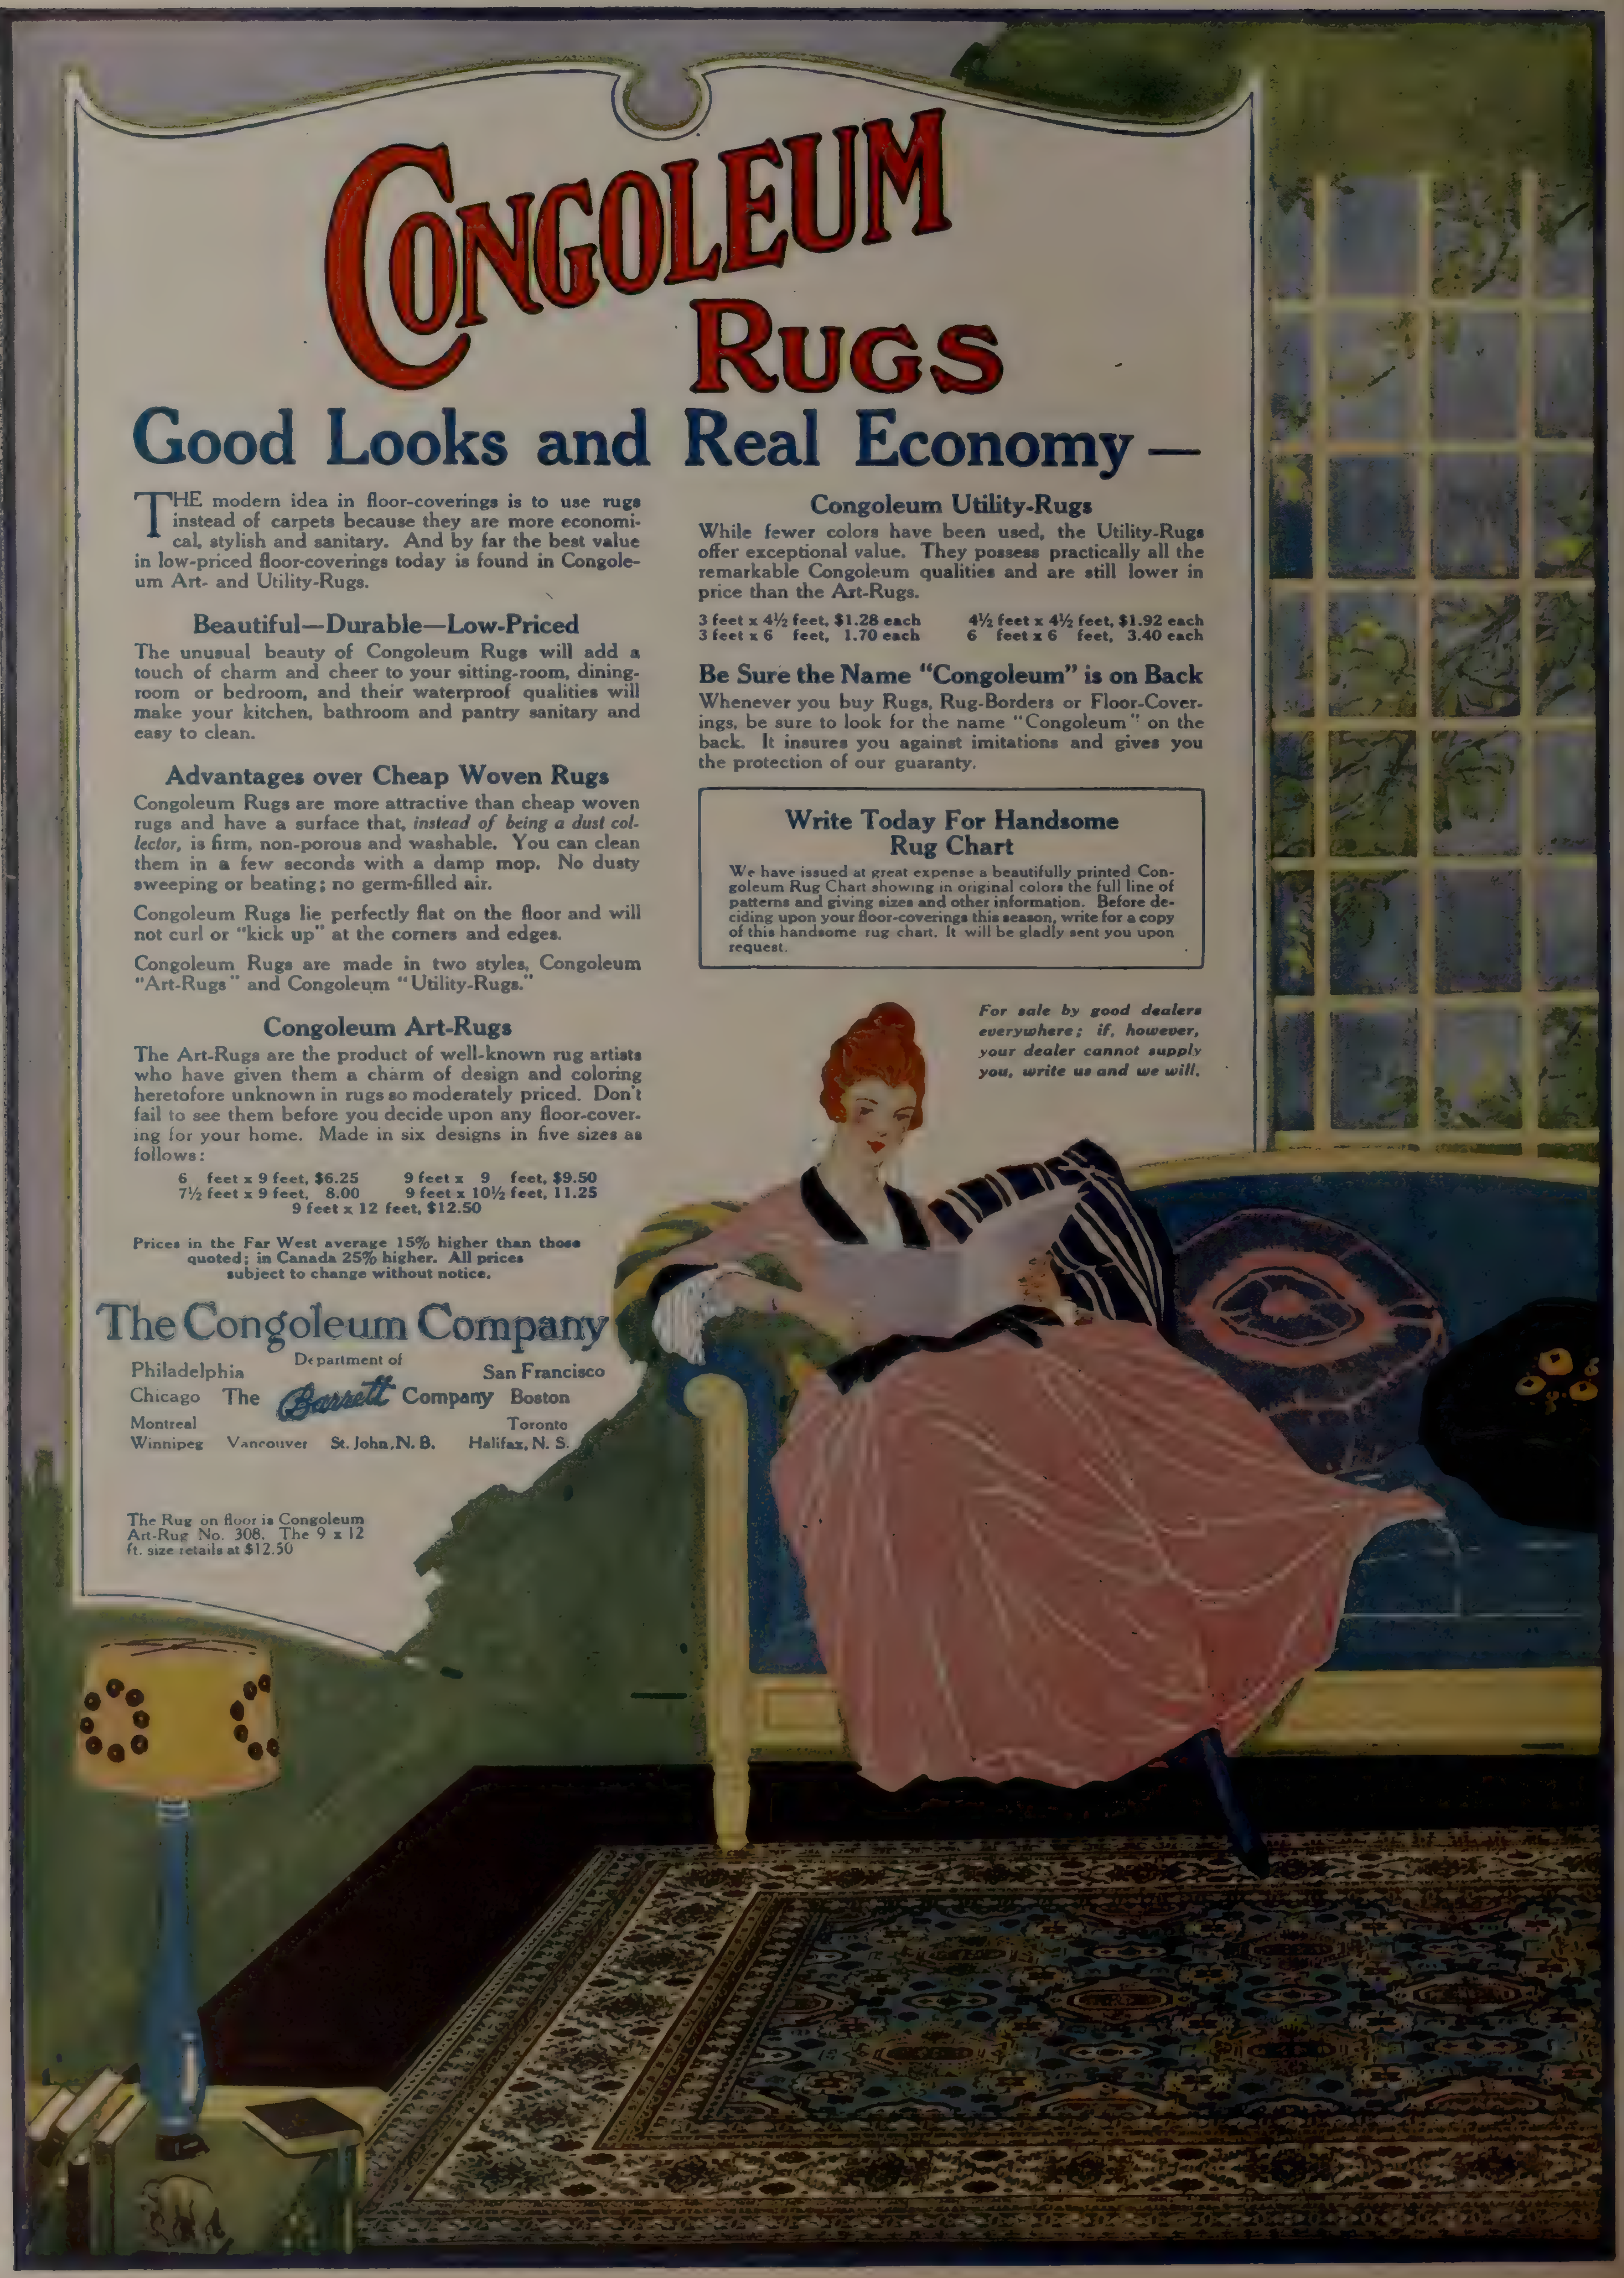
In the Battleship model O-Cedar Polish Mop is offered to the housewives of America a sentry to guard the home against the ravages of dust and dirt and to lift from their shoulders the burden of drudgery.

See it to-day—at your dealer's. Have one sent home on trial for two days. Your money promptly refunded if you are not delighted.

New low price—Only One Dollar

CHANNELL CHEMICAL CO.

CHICAGO TORONTO LONDON



CONGOLEUM RUGS

Good Looks and Real Economy—

THE modern idea in floor-coverings is to use rugs instead of carpets because they are more economical, stylish and sanitary. And by far the best value in low-priced floor-coverings today is found in Congoleum Art- and Utility-Rugs.

Beautiful—Durable—Low-Priced

The unusual beauty of Congoleum Rugs will add a touch of charm and cheer to your sitting-room, dining-room or bedroom, and their waterproof qualities will make your kitchen, bathroom and pantry sanitary and easy to clean.

Advantages over Cheap Woven Rugs

Congoleum Rugs are more attractive than cheap woven rugs and have a surface that, instead of being a dust collector, is firm, non-porous and washable. You can clean them in a few seconds with a damp mop. No dusty sweeping or beating; no germ-filled air.

Congoleum Rugs lie perfectly flat on the floor and will not curl or "kick up" at the corners and edges.

Congoleum Rugs are made in two styles, Congoleum "Art-Rugs" and Congoleum "Utility-Rugs."

Congoleum Art-Rugs

The Art-Rugs are the product of well-known rug artists who have given them a charm of design and coloring heretofore unknown in rugs so moderately priced. Don't fail to see them before you decide upon any floor-covering for your home. Made in six designs in five sizes as follows:

6 feet x 9 feet,	$6.25	9 feet x 9 feet,	$9.50
7½ feet x 9 feet,	8.00	9 feet x 10½ feet,	11.25
9 feet x 12 feet,	$12.50

Prices in the Far West average 15% higher than those quoted; in Canada 25% higher. All prices subject to change without notice.

Congoleum Utility-Rugs

While fewer colors have been used, the Utility-Rugs offer exceptional value. They possess practically all the remarkable Congoleum qualities and are still lower in price than the Art-Rugs.

3 feet x 4½ feet,	$1.28 each	4½ feet x 4½ feet,	$1.92 each
3 feet x 6 feet,	1.70 each	6 feet x 6 feet,	3.40 each

Be Sure the Name "Congoleum" is on Back

Whenever you buy Rugs, Rug-Borders or Floor-Coverings, be sure to look for the name "Congoleum" on the back. It insures you against imitations and gives you the protection of our guaranty.

Write Today For Handsome Rug Chart

We have issued at great expense a beautifully printed Congoleum Rug Chart showing in original colors the full line of patterns and giving sizes and other information. Before deciding upon your floor-coverings this season, write for a copy of this handsome rug chart. It will be gladly sent you upon request.

For sale by good dealers everywhere; if, however, your dealer cannot supply you, write us and we will.

The Congoleum Company

Department of
The Barrett Company

Philadelphia
Chicago
Montreal
Winnipeg
Vancouver
St. John, N. B.
Halifax, N. S.
Toronto
Boston
San Francisco

The Rug on floor is Congoleum Art-Rug No. 308. The 9 x 12 ft. size retails at $12.50

NOTICE TO READER: When you finish reading this magazine place a 1 cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employee and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. No wrapping—no address. A. S. Burleson, Postmaster-General.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 26, 1917

VOL. 40 NO. 39. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

J. M. R., Burkes, Pa. 1. "Hades" is the invisible world; "Sheol" the grave (the common receptacle of departed spirits, which, according to the ancients, was divided into two parts, one for the good and the other for the wicked); and "Hell," which originally corresponded in meaning with "Hades," is now in common usage applied to the place of lost souls. It has happened in certain parts of the Scriptures that the terms have been used sometimes interchangeably. Jesus descended into Hades, yet being sinless, he had nothing which needed forgiveness; his mission was fulfilled in his sacrifice on the cross, and his triumph over the last enemy was accomplished when he arose from the grave. The Apostles' Creed says, "He descended into Hades," and a number of theologians, Dean Alford among them, have held that the passages in I Peter 3 : 19–20 contended that Christ, in the interval between his death and resurrection, preached or announced his finished work "to the spirits in prison." This, however, does not imply a second day of grace. Those "spirits in prison" are held to have been antediluvians, who had lived under the law and served God, yet had never known of the Gospel or its fulfilment. These conclusions of the commentators are, of course, inferential, for beyond the mere reference in Peter's epistle, there is little to enlighten us. 2. According to the Jewish tradition, Satan was once an angel whom ambition tempted, and he rebelled against divine authority and fell from his high estate, suffering expulsion (See Luke 10 : 18). 3. The Bible, in stating the spiritual rules of life and warning against sin, is clear and unequivocal. Its language is at all times dignified and impressive because of its seriousness, yet it is so simple that "he that runs may read." 4. This question is controversial and discussion in the Mail-Bag would not decide it. 5. You can procure copies of both our books dealing with difficult Bible questions from the Christian Herald at $1 each. 6. The address of the principal officers of the Red Cross is in Washington, D. C. 7. The passage in Matt. 6 : 34 is not intended to discourage thrift or the making provision for those dependent upon us. It means simply that we are not to allow our minds to be burdened with worry needlessly, but to do our best and trust in God, laying all our cares upon him. In other words, we are not to borrow trouble. Worldly-mindedness, with which the chapter largely deals, is destructive to spirituality in Christian character. If we do our duty bravely and brightly, we can safely trust our Father for the outcome, and that he will add his blessing to our efforts.

Mrs. J. B., Paterson, N. J. Please explain Gen. 40 : 13, "Yet within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thine head and restore thee unto thy place."

Stackhouse says that the ancients, in keeping their reckonings of time, or their list of domestic officers or servants, made use of tablets with holes bored in them in which they put a sort of pegs or nails with broad heads, showing the particulars, either number or name, etc. These nails or pegs the Jews called "heads," and the sockets they called "bases." The meaning, therefore, of Pharaoh's lifting up the head is—according to this commentator—that Pharaoh would take out a peg which had the cupbearer's name on the top of it, to read it; that is, he would sit in judgment and make examination into his accounts, for it seems very probable that both he and the baker had been either suspected or accused of having cheated the king, as, when their accounts were examined and cast up, one was acquitted, while the other was found guilty. While Joseph uses the same expression in both cases, yet we may observe that, speaking to the baker, he adds that Pharaoh shall "lift up thy head from off thee," that is, shall order thy name to be struck out of the lists of his servants by taking the peg out of the socket. Other commentators, however, take the expression in a literal sense, as foreshadowing the execution of the offender by decapitation.

D. D., Texas. While we do not express any opinion as to the teachings of any particular sect or preacher, we do hold that any one who denies that the Scripture teaches that Christ is God and that he should be worshiped, is not a Christian, and hence can not be a member of the Church of God.

F. W. S., South Berwick, Me. The questions are controversial.

M. T. L., Whittier, Calif. 1. The apparent contradiction between Prov. 26 : 4 and 5 is removed if we have regard to the difference of times and circumstances, when to keep silence and when to speak. A fool is not to be answered foolishly, and if he be in a frame of mind incapable of receiving a wise answer, do not answer him at all. When, however, he needs to be convinced of his own folly, answer him so as to confute him. Jesus gave us an example in this respect. Compare his silence before Caiaphas, Pilate and Herod. 2. Your second question is controversial. 3. We will publish the answers to the Bible Picture Contest in the early fall. The exact date is not yet set.

J. C. G., Aldenson, W. Va. While the passages in Matt. 24 : 40, 41 and Luke 17 : 34, 35 and 36, are prophetic, they are prophetic as to the events to come at the end of the world, and have in our opinion no reference whatsoever to the means of initiating the selective army draft.

G. D., Des Moines, Iowa. Please explain the apparent contradiction in II Sam. 21 : 8 and II Sam. 6 : 23.

The passage in II Sam. 21 : 8 is regarded as an error in transcription or translation, the writer having substituted the name of Michal for Merab, Saul's eldest daughter, who, as appears in I Sam. 18 : 19, was married to Adriel. The statement in II Sam. 6 : 23 concerning the childlessness of Michal is accepted by the commentators as the correct version. There is an old Jewish tradition in the Targum which states that Michal was occupied in bringing up the sons of her sister Merab and the latter's husband, Adriel.

C. E. W., Sullivan. The proportion of Germans of Catholic faith is not easily determined. The Catholic element in the Reichstag represents about one-third of that body.

R. M. A., Brooklyn, N. Y. Since God's ways are past finding out (Rom. 11 : 33), and since it has been proven repeatedly that God not only hears prayer but answers it and gives assurances to that effect, you may feel assured that you are justified in putting implicit faith in God's promises, no matter how or when received. If we did not have this faith in God, how miserable we would be! But knowing of the Lord's goodness and kindness, we can confidently place everything in his care.

INTO THE LIGHT

By Margaret E. Sangster

I thought that I would never see again,
For I had lived through many hells of pain
And darkness.
I had lost my faith in God.
The morning freshness of the new-turned sod
Held no more charm for me.... Each old delight
Was shadowed by the dark of endless night.

In agony I brooded.... Then one came,
With tender hands, and eyes that were aflame
(Although I could not see them) with the glow
That only those who live for others know,
Her skill it was that made my pain grow less;
Her bravery that made me want to bless
All womankind.
Her healing sympathy
Brought visions of a sunlit world to me.

My pain grew less; my horror crept away;
An endless ebon chain day after day
Slipped through my fingers. Then one time she told
A wonder story that is never old;
She told me of the little scarlet cross
She wore upon her breast; the pain and loss
It stood for, and the triumph that at last
Had come when more than sight-when life-was past!

And now I walk, a smile upon my face,
Through many a rose-embowered garden place;
I grope a bit - but she is by my side,
A true disciple of the One who died!
And, though I know I cannot see today,
I dream that sight is not so far away-
And know that God was watching through the pain,
And that his hand may give me light again!

W. C. FISCHBIG

INFORMATION TO SUBSCRIBERS

THE subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year. Canada, $2.00 a year. Foreign, $3.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books. The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35. The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David. $2.50; "Limpy—the Boy Who Felt Neglected," $2.50; Luther in the Light of Recent Research, $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $4.50 with Genuine Morocco Binding. $5.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money order.

Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Dr. Jessie Wallace Hughan, Doylestown, Pa., writes: "In a recent article, Bishop Richard J. Cooke has some severe things to say about the 'conscientious objector.' The bishop takes an impregnable stand when he declares repeatedly, 'certainly no man has the right to disobey God. Certainly no government has the right to compel a man to do a wrong thing.' But he might also have added that the judge of the man's relations to God can be only the man himself. The state cannot be the judge. But the bishop shows how completely he misunderstands the conscientious objector when he makes the statement that the latter 'will not die for any of these principles, nor will he suffer one hour of agony, nor endure a pinprick.' More than four thousand of these men have been imprisoned in England, some for the third or fourth time, for refusal to aid in war. Thirty of them were taken to France and condemned to death, the sentence being afterward commuted, because of parliamentary protests, to ten years' penal servitude. Are there no hours of agony here? Bishop Cooke's chief point is his charge that the conscientious objector 'will not go to war, but is willing to enjoy the results of war.' Here he is quite wrong. The conscientious objectors have no desire to enjoy the results of war, for those results, in their opinion, are only and essentially evil. The bishop further recommends that they be punished neither by interning nor imprisonment, but by being 'deprived forever of all political and social and civil rights.' The fruits of war, according to the pacifist, are taxation, high prices, repression, the checking of civilization, the ill-will of our neighbors, and insecurity by land and sea. The conscientious objectors are sharing these with their fellow countrymen. As for political, social and civil rights, these we owe to no international conflict, but to the objectors of past generations."

On the very day on which this letter was received (August 13), the announcement was made from Washington that persons whose religious beliefs prohibit their making war would be forwarded to mobilization camps to make up part of the quota from their districts, and would be assigned to duty "in a capacity declared by the President to be non-combatant."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Counter-Revolution in Russia

THE dreaded counter-revolution in Russia, the threat of which hung over every minute of the Moscow Conference, broke out finally with tremendous force. General Korniloff, commander-in-chief of the army, suddenly appeared to the world in the position of rebel against the Provisional Government, demanding military dictatorship. Supported by large forces, he began on September 8 an advance on Petrograd from three points.

Premier Kerensky, backed by a majority of the Cabinet and the Council of Workmen and Soldiers, promptly applied vigorous measures of resistance. All available loyal troops were sent out to check the Korniloff advance. Government engineers practically destroyed the railroad tracks in every direction from which the rebels were advancing.

The Constitutional Democratic ministers relinquished their portfolios. The Socialist members also resigned, but remained at the head of their departments for the time being.

Aside from the defection of the Conservatives in the cabinet, various prominent politicians and generals went over to the Korniloff movement. Alexander J. Guchkoff, the Octobrist leader, who formerly held the positions of president of the Duma, chief of the Munitions Bureau and Minister of War and Navy ad interim, left Petrograd to join the general at field headquarters, but was arrested.

General Denikine, commander of the armies on the southwestern front, telegraphed to Premier Kerensky that he intended to support General Korniloff. He was arrested with his entire staff, as was also General Erdelli, former military governor of Petrograd, with several members of his staff.

General Vasilkovsky, military governor of Petrograd, resigned and was succeeded by General Savonkoff, who issued a proclamation urging the people to be calm, and declaring that every person caught acting against the revolution would be treated as a traitor.

Lieutenant General Dmitri Stcherbatecheff, commander of the Russian forces on the Rumanian front, was said to have ordered his armies and also the Odessa military district to take no part in the conflict, at the same time remaining true to the Provisional Government. General Valuyeff, western front commander, was reported in press despatches to have thrown his lot with Korniloff.

THE Don Cossacks were apparently aligned with General Korniloff. General Kaledin, head of this force, reported to Premier Kerensky that unless the government accepted Korniloff's ultimatum requiring surrender of governmental powers, Petrograd would find itself isolated from Moscow by cutting off all rail communications.

The Baltic fleet, with its officers, unanimously placed itself on the side of the Kerensky government. The Workmen's and Soldiers' Council reported that the Kronstadt garrison had formally placed itself entirely at the disposal of this body.

© Underwood & Underwood

General Korniloff, the Cossack leader who risked rebellion and demanded supreme power

General Korniloff stated his case in a proclamation, as follows:

"Russian Men: our great fatherland is perishing. The government, under pressure of the Bolsheviki majority of the councils, is acting in full accord with the plans of the German general staff. Overwhelming consciousness of the impending ruin of the fatherland compels me in this menacing moment to summon all Russian men to save perishing Russia. All in whose breasts beat Russian hearts, all who believe in God, let them flock to the temple and pray God to perform a great miracle—a miracle of saving the fatherland.

"I, General Korniloff, son of a peasant and Cossack, declare to all that I require nothing personally, nothing except the salvation of mighty Russia, and I swear to lead the nation by the road of victory over the foe to a constituent assembly, through which the nation will decide its own fate and chose the organization of its own political life. But I shall never betray Russia into the hands of its traditional foe—the German race—or make the Russian people the slaves of Germany. I prefer to die on the field of honor and battle rather than to witness the shame and infamy of Russian land.

"Russian people, in your own hands rests the fate of your country. KORNILOFF."

IN a second proclamation, General Korniloff declared that he was supported by all of the higher commanders on the front, denounced the government for incapable government, weakness and indecision, and declared that in order to veil its unfitness the government was creating the rumor of a counter-revolution.

The provisional government under the martial law regulations has prohibited the circulation of General Korniloff's manifestoes or the publication of unofficial news concerning military measures against the revolt.

Weeks ago, it is now reported, General Korniloff began under various pretexts to take tactical administrative measures to concentrate troops for action against Petrograd. Declaring that he desired to prevent military congestion, he withdrew from the capital and its environs troops devoted to the Provisional Government, but at the same time sent to Petrograd various units, particularly cavalry, which he considered certain to support himself. General Korniloff, however, had not had time to remove all the government troops, it appears from this account, and though there are believed to be pro-Korniloff troops in and around the city, and particularly on the railroad between Pskov and Dno, the superiority of the forces in Petrograd is believed to be on the side of the Provisional Government.

The government has issued a decree handing over to the courts of justice as rebels General Korniloff, former commander-in-chief of the Russian armies; General Denikine, commanding the armies on the southwestern front; General Lokomsky, chief of the General Staff; General Markoff, the chief of the Headquarters Staff on the southwestern front, and L. Kisliakoff, assistant to Minister of Roads and Communications.

THE post of commander-in-chief of the Russian army, in succession to General Korniloff, was first offered to General Alexieff, who declined. Former Minister of War Savinkoff also declined. General Klemovsky, commander of the Northern Army, was appointed, but went over to Korniloff's cause. Finally, Major-General Bonch-Bruyovitch, who formerly was attached to the staff of General Brusiloff, one-time commander-in-chief, and has from the first been devoted to the Provisional Government, was reported appointed. But almost immediately Premier Kerensky announced that "with the decision of the Provisional Government I am charged with the office of commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the country."

Kerensky sent instructions to all railroad organizations requiring the officials to refuse to obey any order from General Korniloff. Leaders of the Petrograd Council of Deputies declare that the Provisional Government's trump card was that the railroad employees were entirely on its side and that obduracy by General Korniloff would result in a general strike, depriving Korniloff of all supplies and of all means of imposing his will on the rest of Russia.

At Kerensky's request, a deputation of Petrograd Moslems proceeded on a locomotive to meet a "savage division" of Caucasus tribesmen and Turcomans, who are mostly their coreligionists, and implored them to abandon Korniloff, whom they look upon as the enemy of the revolution. The spokesman of the division answered that they would obey only General Korniloff's behests, and denied that they were against the revolution, adding that the real enemies of the revolution were the Petrograd Bolshevikis and the Council of Deputies, who must be suppressed.

Following, as far as is ascertainable appear to have been the early developments of the counter-revolution:

AN exchange of telegrams between Premier Kerensky and General Korniloff confirmed the demands made through the Duma Deputy Vladimir N. Lvoff, that the Provisional Government turn over all powers of government to General Korniloff. Supreme Commissary Filipanko reiterated categorically that the higher command of the army had determined to seize all power and that a sanguinary conflict would probably result. Another message came from the Chief of the General Staff at the front, General Lokomsky, declaring that if the government refused to accede to General Korniloff's demand the results would be serious.

The cabinet then discussed measures necessary for the security of Petrograd, deciding to declare martial law and to appoint a new commander of the Petrograd military district in place of General Vasilkovsky. Next the cabinet debated a series of measures necessary for the protection of the Petrograd government buildings and the defense of the city in case General Korniloff sent against it part of his army.

Besides arresting the envoy Lvoff the government took eighty other persons into custody.

Premier Kerensky was again in communication with the headquarters in the field, speaking with both Generals Korniloff and Lokomsky and reiterating his demands that Korniloff surrender his post as commander-in-chief to General Klembovsky. Korniloff

The Nevsky Prospect, Petrograd's best-known street, the boulevard which has seen the pomp of princes, which has been pressed by the feet of merry-makers, and which has felt the stirrings of rebellion gave an emphatic refusal. He declared in general that he would not accept orders from the premier.

Premier Kerensky then made to the cabinet a prolonged report on the situation, repeating his proposal to form a directory composed of a small number of persons. Here the premier met his first opposition from the Constitutional Democratic ministers, who declared they were unable to accept the dictatorship of the directory and would consent to remain in the cabinet only if all the material concerning the revolt and all the plans for the liquidation thereof was submitted to the cabinet in full.

A COUNCIL of all ambassadors, including those representing neutral countries, was held, at which the situation was discussed. Following the meeting the ambassadors from the Entente nations held a separate conference.

Chief anxiety among the public was in the food situation in Petrograd. The capital's stock of food was known to have been severely depleted recently. Even before the Korniloff revolt became known the Provisional Government was seeking to relieve the shortage by furnishing transportation to those who voluntarily wished to leave on account of the German drive from Riga.

It was felt in Washington that Russia for the moment needed a powerful dictator, one who by sheer force of personality and following could bring order out of the present chaos.

The complete ascendancy of either Korniloff or Kerensky would satisfy many interested observers here provided the ascendancy is not purchased at the price of an understanding with Germany.

A PETROGRAD correspondent, evidently endowed with the spirit of the new Russia, has described Korniloff—who rejoices in the classical name of Laurus—as a child of the people. But it seems that General Laurus Georgievitch Korniloff is the grandson of the famous Vice-Admiral Vladimir Alexandrovitch Korniloff, who is known as "the defender of Sebastopol," fighting then against two of Russia's present allies, England and France.

Laurus Korniloff was born in western Siberia—the "Wild West" of adventurous Russians two or three generations back, but now, like our own Wild West, developed into a rich wheat country. He passed successfully through the Siberian Cadet Corps, distinguishing himself especially in mathematics and languages. Lieutenant Korniloff was attached to the Siberian army and fought through the Russo-Japanese War. He did so well that he was rewarded with the Cross of St. George of the Fourth Degree and a golden sword.

He was gazetted to Peking as military attaché of the Russian embassy. There he followed his linguistic bent in studying the classic tongue of Confucius and Mencius, having already learned Persian in Turkestan. Korniloff, then a brigadier general, received command of a brigade of Siberian rifles. At the beginning of the present war he was made commander of an infantry division. In Brusiloff's Galician drive in April, 1915, General Korniloff was wounded in the arm, the bone being broken, and a part of his division, completely cut off from the main Russian army, was captured; but so gallantly had he fought that he was rewarded with the Cross of St. George of the Third Degree.

HE has tasted the bitter fruit of incompetence and worse than incompetence at Petrograd. So he shared the conviction, held by all the great Russian soldiers, that if Russia was to be saved from shame and defeat the traitorous Romanoff government at Petrograd must go. A week or so after the dethronement of the Czar, Korniloff was summoned to take command of the military garrison of free Petrograd.

The capital city's elements of license carried a resolution through the Committee of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates that all military orders must be submitted to the committee before being issued to the troops. General Korniloff saw the danger of this, and earnestly expostulated with members of the committee, but all in vain. Declaring that he would not take the responsibility of this impossible situation, he gave up his post as military governor of Petrograd and asked for a command at the front.

He received a command in the army group under General Brusiloff, where discipline was still largely unimpaired. In July he led the ill-starred drive toward Halicz.

General Korniloff, like Brusiloff himself, is under the average stature of his soldiers; there is in his dark face something of the Kalmuck or the Mongol in the marked cheek-bones, the narrowness of the eyes, the sparse, dark mustache and scanty beard; but he is full of the fire of genius; every inch of him is finely tempered steel. He is in his forty-seventh year.

ON September 13, the news came as a surprise that Korniloff's rebellion had utterly collapsed, and that the leader had surrendered and asked for terms. The announcement came like a thunder-bolt out of a clear sky from M. Skobeleff, Minister of Labor in Premier Kerensky's cabinet, in the form of an official statement. This was confirmed by General Palchinsky, second in military command in Petrograd, who added that Korniloff's revolt had proved a failure.

General Alexieff, Chief of Staff, who had previously declined to reassume military command at the summons of Kerensky, was now persuaded, in view of the very grave situation and the imminence of civil war, to accept the high military post at the urgent solicitation of the premier. This apparently gave renewed confidence to the capital. Alexieff's first act was to demand the immediate and unconditional surrender of the rebel leaders.

Kerensky himself is said to have left the capital at the head of an army, early in the day, September 13, in order to meet and give battle to Korniloff's forces before they could reach Petrograd. There was every expectation on all sides of a clash which would be the beginning of a sanguinary civil war, when the news came that Korniloff had surrendered. There had been a very serious defection among his troops, and many had gone over to the side of the government, declaring that they had been misled by Korniloff's professed aims. Korniloff's staff had surrendered at headquarters without a struggle, Korniloff offering to place himself conditionally in the hands of the authorities. Nothing else could be conceded, however, than that he must capitulate without terms.

IT is not yet made clear how the great change came about so suddenly which relieved the anxiety not only of the capital, but of all Russia. Doubtless the rebels had depended on finding little resistance to their plans, and were surprised at the strong opposition and inexorable attitude of the military power at Petrograd, where Kerensky, at his own request, had been confirmed by the cabinet as commander-in-chief for the prosecution of the war.

Late dispatches state that new military officials for the district and city of Petrograd have been appointed, and that extensive reforms are to be instituted in the army, which will make for unity and efficiency. It is also expected that the stiffening process will presently communicate itself to the Russian forces at the different points, and that all will now oppose the foreign foe with the same energy that the Russian troops are now showing in the region of Riga, where a vigorous resistance is being opposed to the German advance.

There are rumors that, before the surrender, an engagement actually occurred between Korniloff's troops and a government force near Luga, where the latter made a stand to intercept the march on the capital, and that Kerensky's troops were defeated. This news, which comes from Stockholm, adds that the government forces, in retiring, destroyed a bridge near Petrograd to check pursuit.

Petrograd advices, dated September 13, were to the effect that Korniloff was at Mohilev (his headquarters) where he was awaiting the arrival of General Alexieff, in order to surrender; and that he would probably yield unconditionally. What fate awaits him can not be even conjectured, although Minister of the Interior, Avskentieff stated, shortly after the rebel collapse, that "the severest penalty ought to be inflicted upon General Korniloff, and the government will do nothing to mitigate his fate." He added that "the task of the government now is to struggle against counter-revolutionary attempts, to safeguard National liberty and unite to defend the country against the foreign enemy."

In the Realm of King Cotton

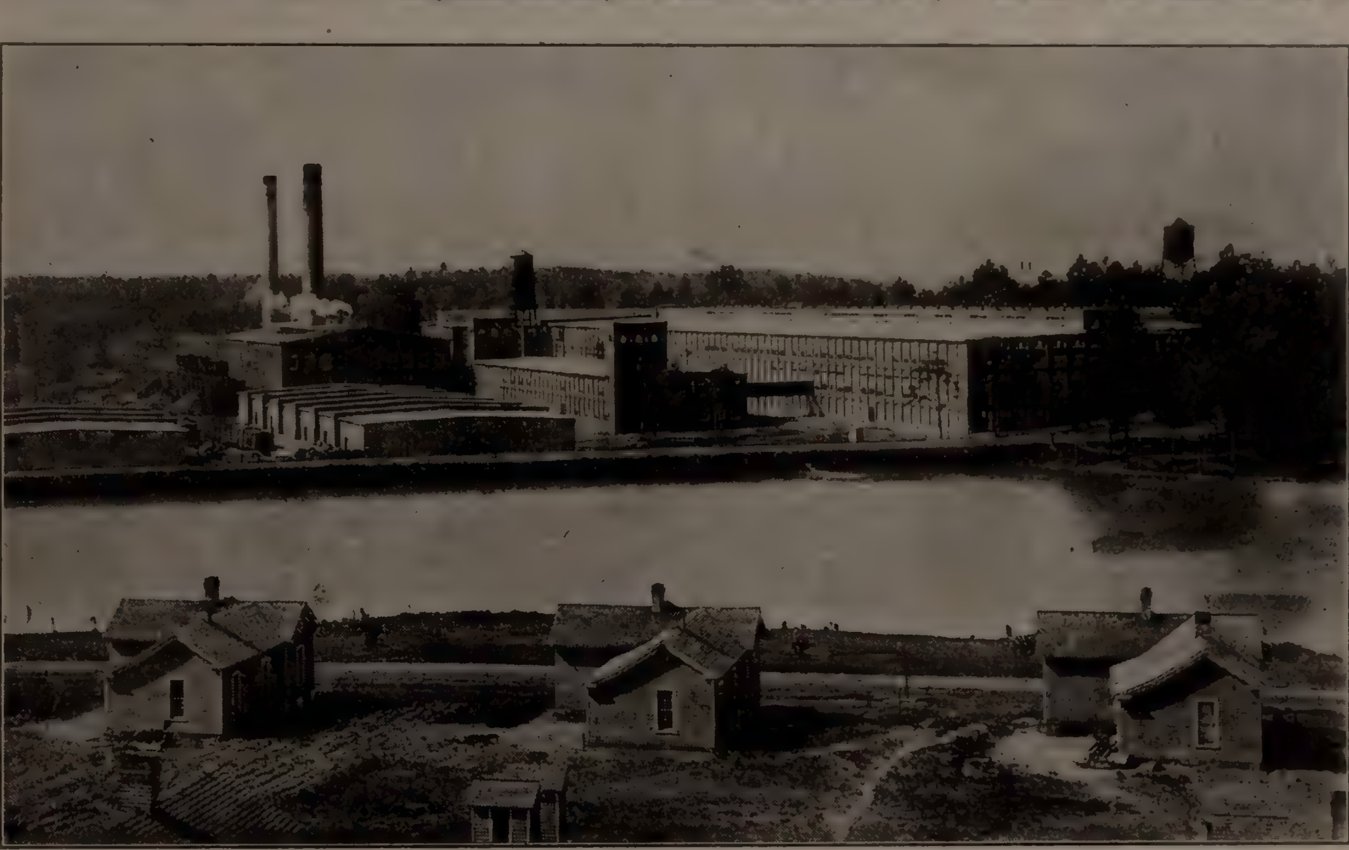
It Circles the Globe, but Its Mightiest Development Is Here—How a Vast Industry Has Grown—The War Energizes America's Cotton Production—By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

I WRITE today of King Cotton. For months I have been traveling over his realm, and now, in Atlanta, Ga., I am in one of the brightest spots of his "place in the sun." King Cotton is the richest, the most beneficent and just now the most terrible monarch on the face of the globe. His dominions encircle the world. His annual income is twice that of all the gold, silver and diamond mines upon earth. He clothes the most of mankind, and, now that we are at war, his wrath will sow death and destruction beyond computation. Gun cotton and other explosives are but the breath of this king. We used more than 100,000,000 pounds of his product in making munitions two years ago, and last year we increased that amount by 150 per cent. This is in addition to the cotton employed in making explosives in Europe, where it has its part in every great battle.

Cotton can be grown here and there in a strip round the globe wider than the distance between New York and Rio de Janeiro, but the total area where it can be profitably cultivated is only in a small part of that belt. As compared with the United States, the other cotton fields are petty colonies. We produce more than three-fourths of the world's crop. In fact, all of the best cotton lands upon earth belong to us and our allies. The cotton raised last year amounted all told to a little more than 17,000,000 bales. Of this about 12,600,000 bales were grown upon United States soil. Thirty-five hundred thousand bales were raised in British India and 910,000 bales came from Egypt and other British dependencies. Russia made about a million and a half bales, while Germany, Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary grew no cotton whatever.

King Cotton's dominions on the North American continent lie in the United States and cover almost one-third of the southern part of our country. Their area is more than 600,000 square miles. It is greater than Austria-Hungary, Turkey, Bulgaria and the whole German empire.



White Oak Mill, where eighteen acres of floor space is given over to the making of good stout stuff for overalls

IF you will draw a line from Norfolk, at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, westward through southern Virginia, on west along the northern boundary of Tennessee, then north to Cairo, Ill., and west again through southern Missouri and on across Oklahoma, you will have the northern boundary. All of the land south of that will produce more or less cotton. The staple is grown in eighteen different states. Of these states Texas leads. It makes about one-fourth of all the cotton grown in the Union. In 1912 it produced almost 5,000,000 bales, and the crop sold for enough to equal $400 for every family in the state. Georgia stands next to Texas as a cotton producer, and then come Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina. Oklahoma has now and then a crop of more than a million bales, and the same is true of Arkansas. The other states produce less. California made about 50,000 bales in 1914.

The cotton crop of the United States is so great that I despair of making you appreciate its size or its value. The product last year was small in comparison with the crops of the past. In 1914 we made over 16,000,000 bales; and, in the year before that, the crop brought in more than $1,000,000,000 of clean, cold, hard cash.

The crop that brought in $1,000,000,000 was less by one-eighth than the one I have estimated in giving the size. Last year cotton went sky high. It sold for as much as 20 cents a pound, or $100 per bale; so much that thousands of the small farmers are now riding about in their own automobiles. At $1,000,000,000 the crop was equal to $50 for every family in the United States, or $30 for every man, woman and child south of Mason and Dixon's line.

AS it is now, less than one-tenth of the lands of the cotton belt are in cotton. The total area of the plantations this year is somewhere between thirty-six and forty million acres, and the average yield will be from one-third to one-half bale per acre. If all the land were intensively cultivated, it could be made to yield twice or three times as much to the acre. In fact, this is just what has been done all over the south in fighting the boll weevil. The boll weevil is a bug not one-tenth the size of a man's finger nail, but it multiplies so rapidly that a single family will produce fifteen million grandchildren in the space of a year. This bug lays eggs in the cotton bolls. They hatch out as worms and they eat the golden profits of a great part of the crop. The only way to withstand them is by raising more cotton upon the same ground, so as to feed the weevils and leave some to spare.

The motto of Dr. Knapp, who led the fight against this terrible plague, was to double the crop by good farming, or to raise the same crop on half as much land. This has been done in nearly all the boll weevil districts, and notwithstanding the continued invasion and spread of the weevil, the crop has grown greater and greater since the bugs first came in from Mexico, more than two decades ago. We have been increasing the yield also by seed selection and by bringing in new seed from all parts of the world and growing that which is best for special localities. The sea island cotton has been crossed with the upland, and cotton has been brought in from Egypt and married to our native cottons with good results.

COTTON is of many different varieties. The plant is divided up into families and each has a long botanical name derived from the Latin or Greek, but in plain United States the chief types known in a commercial way are sea island cotton, upland cotton, tree cotton and Indian cotton. I have seen the sea island cotton, which is said to be the finest that has ever decorated the bosom of old Mother Earth. It grows on the islands off Georgia and South Carolina, and it is more like a tree than the plants about here, which are from one to three feet in height. The sea island plant is as big around as a broomstick where it comes from the ground, and it towers to a height of six feet and upward, shooting off at every few inches a branch which is loaded with cotton bolls. The bolls are as big as a black walnut with the hull on, and when they burst out the cotton hangs down all over the plant like so many balls of white pop-corn. It is as fine as silk and shines like satin. The fiber is from one and a half to three inches long and is much longer than any other cotton we raise. It makes the finest yarn and it is said a single pound of it can be spun into a thread 160 miles long.

The Egyptian cotton, which I have seen growing luxuriantly in the valley of the Nile, below Cairo, and also in the Sudan, not far from Khartum, ranks about next to our sea island cotton in staple. We import thousands of bales of it to use in manufactures where cotton is mixed with wool.

The East Indian cotton has a short staple and brings a low price in the market. Still, from it were made the muslins of Dacca, which were so fine that they were called "webs of woven wind." India will raise several million bales of cotton this year.

The most of our cotton is known as upland cotton. This also is of many different types, each of which has its own place in the market, and brings its own price.

I have talked with the big planters as to how cotton is raised. The ground is plowed and harrowed in March, and the furrows thrown up so as to make rows of hills about three or four feet apart. Along the middle of March or in April the cotton is planted. The seeds, which are small and black and a little larger than buckshot, are drilled in, and a few days later the green sprouts come through the soil. They grow rapidly under good cultivation. The crop is plowed much like corn, and the weeds are kept down. The plants are thinned or chopped out from time to time until they are one or two feet apart in the rows. They begin to blossom in June, when the fields look like great gardens of roses. The first day they come out they are white or cream color. On the second day they become darker and redder, and on the third or fourth they fall to the ground, leaving the tiny bolls which grow to the size and shape of a hen's egg. They soon crack open and the white cotton bursts out. It is now ready for picking. The crop does not ripen all at once, and the pickers go over the field a half dozen or more times during the harvesting season, which begins in the far South and Texas in July, and lasts until late in the fall. In Georgia and in North and South Carolina some of the cotton is still being gathered at Christmas. The prices of picking vary according to season. Fifty cents per 100 pounds of seed has been the price in many localities, but it often runs to $1 a hundred and upward, and it will probably be very high this fall. At 75 cents per hundred the cost of picking a pound of baled cotton is 2 1-5 cents, so that it is likely to be 3 or more cents per pound for the crop this year.

AFTER the picking the cotton must be ginned and pressed into bales. It is usually sold in the bale, being hauled back home from the gin or to the warehouse, where it is held until the market is right. The warehouse charges are from 10 to 50 cents a bale, depending upon the place and length of time it is kept in storage. The total cost for storing, selling and insurance varies from one to two dollars and upward per bale.

Ginning the cotton is necessary to get the seed out. The lint or raw cotton is wrapped around

Continued on page 1025

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

© Kadel & Herbert

An unofficial review in France. A poilu who has given a leg to France watches the "Sammies" march off for a practice hike

SWEDISH AIDS TO GERMANY. Secretary Lansing's disclosures regarding the activity of the Swedish Legation at Buenos Aires in aid of Germany raised a storm of criticism in the Swedish and German press, some of which was directed at Secretary Lansing himself for having made public the unneutral acts of Sweden's representative without first communicating with the Swedish government. Branting, a powerful Socialist leader—through whose efforts the Stockholm Peace Conference, now reported as given up, was promoted—declared in an interview that Baron Löwen had irretrievably compromised himself. The Swedish government announced that its minister would not be recalled, and declared that he had acted in good faith and did not know the contents of the messages. It implied that the messages were forwarded by the Swedish Foreign Office without knowledge of their contents. The Swedish government also called attention to the fact that it had acted at times for the United States, transmitting dispatches to Constantinople across Germany; but it is pointed out that this service was rendered when the United States was still neutral. On September 12 the Argentine government notified the German legation that Count Luxburg was no longer "persona grata." His passports were enclosed. On the same day the angry people of Buenos Aires joined in an anti-German demonstration which developed into a riot, during which several blocks of German business houses were destroyed by fire and the German Club and offices of a German daily newspaper were attacked, the German Club being set on fire. Soldiers restored order and guarded the person of Count Luxburg, who returned to Buenos Aires on the following day. It was reported that he attempted no explanation. Secretary Lansing added to the evidence of Swedish unneutrality by publishing on September 13 the translation of an intercepted letter from Von Eckhardt, the German minister to Mexico, to Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, in which the German minister recommended the conferring of a decoration upon the Swedish minister, Herr Cronholm, in return for his service in acting "as intermediary for official diplomatic intercourse between this legation and your Excellency." Secretary Lansing's disclosures, as it happened, were made on the eve of a general election in Sweden. On September 13 the returns indicated a defeat for the conservatives, who were considered the pro-German party.

THE LIBERTY MOTOR. This is the name of the greatest military airplane motor ever completed in America. Its perfection was announced by Secretary of War Baker on September 12 after exhaustive tests had proven its efficiency. The motor was produced by the cooperative work of two of the best engineers in the country, who worked together for five days in Washington in company with consulting engineers and expert draughtsmen furnished by various airplane manufacturers. The result was an engine which could be standardized and manufactured by thousands by machinery. It is said to be the equal of any motor in use on any of the war fronts abroad.

Right in the Midst of Things

MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS reached Petrograd August 6. You will read his first story on conditions as he found them in Russia in next week's Christian Herald.

Next week also Clayton Sedgwick Cooper will reveal some of the problems of modern Peru.

The Army chaplain holds an unusual position of responsibility and opportunity. Dr. Worth M. Tippy of the Federal Council of Churches tells us next week of the selection of chaplains for Uncle Sam's fast-growing army.

Next week, too, the regular monthly message from Dr. Jowett, "What I Would if I Could"; and Miss Sangster's greetings "From One Woman to Another."

TO DRAFT ALIENS. The Senate on September 12 adopted without a roll-call a concurrent resolution authorizing the President to draft for military service all friendly aliens in the country and also to enlist for non-combatant war work all resident nationals of Germany or its allies. There are approximately 1,275,000 men in America who owe their allegiance to the nations who are our allies in the war, while there are some 81,000 aliens who could be put to work under the resolution.

MUST TRANSLATE IT. The Senate on September 12, after two days of debating, passed without a record vote the Trading with the Enemy Bill regulating commercial intercourse in this country in which the subjects of Germany may be financially interested. The measure had already passed the House. Before its passage, the bill was amended, to require that all German language newspapers publish in a parallel column an English translation of any comments on the government of the United States, its Allies or its war policy.

RUSSIA A REPUBLIC. General Korniloff, leader of the rebellion against the Provisional Government, and General Lokomsky, commander of the northern front, were reported under arrest on September 15, and except for the Don Cossacks who while declaring their loyalty refused to surrender their hetman, General Kaledines, the Kerensky Government appeared to have definitely triumphed over the forces arrayed against it under Korniloff. On the 16th the Provisional Government issued a proclamation, dated the 14th, in part as follows:

"Holding it necessary to put an end to the external indefiniteness of the state's organization, remembering the unanimous and rapturous approval of the republican idea expressed at the Moscow State Conference, the Provisional Government declares that the constitutional organization according to which the Russian state is ruled is a republican organization, and it hereby proclaims the Russian Republic."

Power was centered in a Committee of five, to act until September 25, when a new cabinet was to be appointed.

TO INSURE FIGHTING MEN. The House on September 13 passed the Administration Soldiers' and Sailors' Insurance Bill by a vote of 319 to nothing. Under the bill a soldier may carry $10,000 insurance at a moderate cost. Widows of soldiers will receive from $35 a month to $67.50, depending upon the number of children. Orphaned motherless families will receive from $25 to $55, depending upon their number, and a widowed mother will receive $35. The maximum to be paid to any claimant will be $75 a month. Disabled men will receive $40 if unmarried and from $55 to $75 if married, the amount depending upon the size of the family. Prompt action was promised in the Senate.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. Although the farmers were reported as loyally accepting the government price of $2.20 for wheat, reports from the milling centers on September 13 indicated that they were in no hurry to market their grain at this price. Receipts of wheat at the mills were below the amount necessary to keep them running. . . . The Red Cross War Council announced on September 9 the appropriation of $12,339,681 for relief work of various sorts, for which it is either responsible or with which it is in association with other organizations. The Red Cross has undertaken, in addition to the care of soldiers, a campaign for the regulation and treatment of tuberculosis in France, which is said to number 500,000 persons among its present victims. Appropriations made for purposes outside of France are as follows: Russia, $322,780.87; Rumania, $247,000; Italy, $210,000; Serbia, $222,500; England, $8,800; Armenia, $600,000. The balance of the total appropriation was divided among the various services in

Continued on page 1024

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

American Baseball Game

AMERICA is fortunate in having a national game which everybody can enjoy. The whole nation follows the annual contest of the two big leagues and the world series that follows. Nothing is too good for the athletes, while every hamlet, town and city the country over is proud of "our team." The other day they played the record game of American baseball in Brooklyn, and the Brooklyn and Pittsburg teams battled twenty-two innings before either could claim the score. Brooklyn won. These happy young Americans at the Polo Grounds watched New York and Cincinnati, the latter captained by New York's former favorite, Christy Mathewson, dispute the honors on a brilliant summer day. God put the play instinct in man for a wise purpose. It is necessary to health, happiness and character. What was said of Jack, "all work and no play makes a dull boy," applies to grown people as well. American life is so swift and strenuous that too little recreation is taken. The summer vacation is not a matter of form, it is a necessity. Baseball is clean. Men of splendid character compose the nines. Drink is entirely cut out in the interest of efficiency. Baseball suggests some of the elements of spiritual success; keenness, swiftness, virility. They are included in this injunction: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." (I Cor. 16 : 13.)

Newspaper Files Perishable

PAPER made from wood pulp is so perishable that files of the papers in the libraries last only from five to ten years unless protected otherwise than by binding. Prior to 1868, when wood pulp came into use in the manufacture of paper, the files made of the old material were long-lived. Events of 50 or 100 years ago are in a good state of preservation in the files. Edwin H. Anderson, director of the great Public Library of New York, in speaking of the disintegration of paper and of his attempts to stop it, says: "We first tried dipping the newspapers in a solution, but that was found to be most impracticable because the solution became hardened when dried, and the papers were so brittle that they cracked. Failing in other experiments, we sent inquiries all over the United States and to many of the libraries and newspapers of Europe, asking whether any method had been found for prolonging the life of newspaper files. One of the first answers I remember came from Switzerland. It was something like this: 'We are looking for the same process. If you find it let us know.' In substance that was the sum of all the information we received from other places queried, so the investigation of newspaper preservatives was renewed once more in New York City. Recently we heard of the production by the Japanese of a very thin tissue, apparently made of some vegetable fiber which is finer than silk. The tissue is strong, and it is so transparent that when laid over a newspaper the print is very legible. Experiments with this tissue so far have indicated it may be used with success. It is simply pasted over both sides of a page and hardly doubles the thickness of the paper. It seems to protect the paper, not only by hermetically sealing it, but by holding the fabric together. We exposed a page of a newspaper so treated on the roof of the library for two months, in the course of which it was subjected to all kinds of weather conditions. The injuries caused to the paper so treated were very negligible, the principal change being its discoloration. The tissue is very expensive and we cannot afford to use it, but have arranged to do so when the papers in our files bear the expense of the tissue." The leaves on the trees from which the paper is made fade. The pulp of the tree in the newspaper fades. People themselves fade. No man lives to the age of the newspaper files made of the old-time material. In childhood, manhood and old age we fade as to the body, but, unlike the disintegrated newspaper files, only to appear brighter and more enduring in the other world. This fading of human life is typified by the fading in the vegetable world. "We all do fade as a leaf." (Isa. 64 : 6.)

Man Angel Rejected

THE report comes of a strange decision by the judge of a court in Detroit. It is that the statue at the gate of a local cemetery be taken down and changed according to the ideals of truth. The statue was the stone figure of an angel. The judge objected to it on two accounts. First, it was too fat, and the court ordered the artist to chip the surplus fat off. The second objection was that the artist had committed the blunder of making the angel a man instead of a woman. So the artist was instructed to work away on his figure and turn the man into a woman. The judge had not consulted his Bible; if he had done so he would have found that wherever there has been reference to angels where the sex has been indicated they have been men. This is true of angels of darkness as well as those of light. If the judge appeals to the judgment of sculptors and painters, who have been for centuries giving face and form to the Scriptural definition of angels, he will find at least that the male angel has not been taboo. There are artists, to be sure, who have found it more consonant with their notions of the angelic to picture angels as feminine, but no one has ever denied that there were masculine angels; and it is the best judgment of artists that the angel should be always masculine. It is said that the authorities of the Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York rejected the angels of the artist because they were feminine, and that the artist was so angry that, instead of trying to change them, he broke the statues in pieces with his hammer. Women are more like our notion of angels than men, but they are not angels. Men have angelic qualities, but they are not angels. It is better to be men and women than angels in the earthly estate. Angels as merchants, doctors, lawyers, mechanics, or even preachers, would have a hard time making a living. People sometimes say, "Well, our minister is human." Certainly he is, and that is why they like him so well. They would not give an angel $100 a year to become their pastor. Character is taken for granted but the human qualities are absolutely indispensable. God has made man in his image, so that with all his frailties and faults he is only a very little lower than the angels, according to these words: "For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor." (Ps. 8 : 5.)

Intoxicated Autoist Fined $500

A FINE of $500, the highest ever ordered in the East Orange, New Jersey, police court, was imposed on a citizen of West Orange for driving his automobile while intoxicated. Crazy with drink, he sailed down Central Avenue at a speed of forty miles an hour. He knocked down a lad of fourteen, who fortunately was not seriously injured. The court recognized that his recklessness might have killed a number as well as himself, and made an example. The judge was right. Society today has no place for the drunken man. Business will not tolerate him, and positions of responsibility, especially where life is at stake, are entirely barred against him. The words of the apostle with reference to spiritual wreckage can be used with reference to the damage wrought by the drunken autoist: "And bring upon themselves swift destruction." (II Peter 2 : 1.)

Killed by Mosquito Bite

A TALENTED young army surgeon of splendid ability and character met with a singular fatality the other day, when a mosquito bit him on the top of the head. He scratched the bite and in doing so caused blood poisoning, from which he died. All the medical skill employed was unable to save him. To be taken off in so simple and apparently trifling a manner seems sad enough, and yet it is one of the evidences of life's uncertainties. The thread of human life is so frail that a breath of wind may break it or the bite of the tiniest insect sever it. This earthly life is not the end but only the beginning of real existence. The dear young man so splendidly equipped for usefulness has gone into a larger, higher and more glorious realm. The apostle thus refers to the frailty of this earthly life: "Ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." (James 4 : 14.

Maine Rejects Suffrage

WOMAN suffrage was defeated in Maine by a majority of nearly two to one: about 19,000 for and about 36,000 against the measure. Mrs. Clarence Hale, leader of the antis, says the East is against woman suffrage. Massachusetts went against it two to one in 1915. Mrs. D. K. Livingston, head of the suffrage forces, said: "Woman suffrage has been deferred, not defeated. National and world suffrage for women is assured." Strange that prohibition Maine and the prohibition South should be against woman suffrage, when the liquor men themselves look upon women's votes as their enemy! In the movement for a pure democracy women will probably be allowed the right of franchise, having in mind such women as Deborah. "And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time." (Judges 4 : 4.)

Following Jesus

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT—Matt. 16:24. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

EVERY great movement, turning-point and crisis in humanity's long career has been the manifestation of God through an individual or group of individuals, called out, set aside, and commissioned for specific tasks and purposes. The history of Israel is a graphic delineation of God's providential way among his children, through the prophets. In the New Testament we have a record of God calling men through Jesus Christ. The choosing of twelve men and afterward other seventy to sit at his feet, to learn of him and absorb his teachings, and then to go out to tell a weary, sin-cursed and bewildered world how to get back to God, marked a revolutionary epoch in the world's progress. "Ye have heard that it was said to them of old time . . . but I say unto you." That which he said they found worth repeating. It set their hearts on fire. With hearts on fire they went here and there and everywhere and spoke with tongues aflame. Never before or since did man come with such speech as his. His speech, and the truth incarnated in his followers, is gradually changing the atmosphere of the world's thinking. Things can never be the same. A new note has been sounded.

All progress is tidal, a ground-swell. Jesus lived in the stream of the common life. Christ in that first group of men, Christ in the groups of men and women today, Christ in his church, and in all upward and forward movements, that is the symbol of the Kingdom of Heaven. The common people heard him gladly in the days of his flesh; they hear him gladly today. They followed him then; they will follow him now. Philip, who must be shown, and who is interested in showing others. John, the idealist. Nathanael, devout and alert to respond to an invitation to come and see, not without current prejudices, yet with an open mind. Peter, ardent, impulsive, an optimist. Thomas, the doubter and withal a pessimist. Judas, cold, calculating, and devoid of those rock qualities essential to a faithful adherent. Matthew the publican and tax-gatherer, and Simon the zealot, the tax-repudiator. If it takes all kinds of people to make a world, it takes all kinds of people to make an apostolic band.

GOD trusts the common man uncommonly. He honors him with the divine sanction. He has confidence in his seed-sowing ability. Peasants, shepherds, vine-dressers, fishermen, and tax-gatherers are arrayed in the livery of heaven. They are called from common tasks to do uncommon things. Mightier than an army with banners, these first graduates from the divinity school of Galilee went forth to grapple with the fundamental problem of sin.

There were many problems in those days, as there are now. Man was estranged from God. He was in a "far country." His heart was not right. To bring man back to God, to bring him home to the Father's house, to make his heart right—this was their doctrine. Do this and you will have solved that other long list of problems that are by-products of the fundamental problem of sin. They knew how to solve the perplexities that always try men's souls. They held no conventions, gathered in no assemblies, convened in no group conferences, consulted no efficiency experts. Theirs was no spasmodic burst of enthusiasm in a frenzied endeavor to meet the issue. The world was soul-sick and they knew all about the Great Physician. He healed them, therefore he would heal others. "He that made me whole"—there was no other name. "And his name shall be called Jesus." Why? "Because he shall save his people from their sins." Then it was all so simple. Now it is all so complex. The world needed the truth. Here was the truth; it was not men using the truth so much as it was the truth using men.

GOD is still calling men and women. The annals of missionary endeavor are a chronicle of those calls. The ranks of the ministry at home are its evidence. God calls men and women every day. One of the saddest things is that so few respond. Many are needed; too many fail to enlist. Many are called; few are chosen. So many names are written down, but after a while so many names are erased. Of old it was said, "Many followed no more after him." "Will ye also go away?" In this matter history repeats itself. If ever the word "efficiency" meant anything, it means something when applied to the energetics of the Kingdom.

The word meant something in those days. It means something in these days of our complex civilization. There were conditions to be met. There are conditions now. The first condition was self-denial. To eliminate self is the condition today. "If any man will follow me, let him deny himself." Let the man in the pulpit deny himself. Let the man in the pew deny himself. Let the church of God deny itself. Those were stirring words of Bishop McDowell's in his recent Yale lectures, when he illustrated his utterances from the life of that "Other Minister." "For their sakes he became poor; for their sakes he planted a cross in his life; for their sakes he was cast into the ground, that he might not abide alone; for their sakes he was lifted up that he might draw all men unto himself. This is the great unselfishness, this is the spirit of every true ministry, this the golden rule of the higher life, this the magnificent adventure. You can go either one of two ways in the world and in the ministry, but you can go only one way with Him. You can go the way of saving yourself, or you can go the way of saving humanity. The latter way leads through Nazareths, Capernaums, Gethsemanes."

THESE are the words of a called man to called men. To be a true disciple means that we have learned the fine art of giving up. To do this is character-building. Character has been defined as "God expressing himself through man"; in other words, it is letting God have his way with you. By discipline we are made strong. It hurts to surrender. The knife must sometimes be used before the patient can get well. The pruning function of the husbandman enables the vine to produce its fruit. If our discipleship costs nothing it is worth nothing.

There is no primrose path of self-indulgence leading to the goal of our ambitions and dreams. Would you be a disciple of Jesus Christ? Then you must walk the way of discipleship, made sacred and dignified by his footsteps. There is a great deal of useless luggage that we are to throw aside. Each individual knows best what is worth discarding and the value of that which is to be retained; what will hinder and what will help. Certainly this must be emphasized: the things we have been living for—wealth, power, fame, glory—must appear unimportant. The things we have passed over must now be the things that matter most. The glitter must make way for the gleam. The pure heart must be to us greater than the mailed fist. To conquer one's appetite and passion must be a greater accomplishment than to take a city. The forgiveness of enemies must be an evidence of strength and courage. A Divine Presence must walk and talk with us, and dwell with us at all times.

OUR churches need to do some heroic surgery. The true vine has become choked and clogged by a riotous growth of underbrush. The church North and South must forget what happened years ago and remember what is taking place today in all walks of life. Theological disputants must lay away their old musty and dusty shibboleths and bury the hatchet of verbal contention. The reign of exclusiveness must cease. The church edifice is not an upholstered parlor, lavender-scented, for the coddling of the saints, but a fort armed for the capture of sinners. It is not a hospital for convalescents but an ambulance of rescue. Denominationalism must begin to act in co-operation. The church up the street is no greater than the church down the street; the church in the slum no less than the church on the avenue. There is one Book, one message, one Mediator between God and man, and one way home.

As virtue went out of the church's Master, so must virtue flow from the church. The world's entreaty: "Show us the Father," and the world's demands for its needs, must take toll of its strength. Christ must be in the church. His spirit must prevail. His power must dominate, that in all things he may express himself through his church. And the church must get poorer if it would have the world richer. It must bleed before it can bless.

"Institutions are the lengthened shadows of men." We can only preach the Christ our lives reveal. Christianity is the life of One expressed in other lives. This is the incarnation: "The Word became flesh and dwelt among men." The Word became a Man. A group of men. These men are called. They have responded to the call by self-denial. You can save oil by turning down the wick, but the world is dark and gloomy, and our mission is to "brighten the corner where we are." We are to turn up the wick and let our light shine.

Once a famous missionary said, arriving on his field of labor, "Now let me burn out for God." That was the secret of Henry Martyn's success in Calcutta. The symbol on the tomb of Adam Clarke is not a laurel wreath, it is not a crown, it is a candle burned down to the socket. The church must emulate the men who made it strong and who are keeping its soul alive today. As individuals here and there are fanning the flame, so must the church as a whole keep the fires of its passion burning. It must keep alive its redemptive purpose. It must never lose the significance of its purpose, and veil the vision of its goal, which is the souls of men brought to the feet of Jesus Christ.

The world discusses the high cost of living. The New Testament discusses the high cost of living well. It costs something to live well. It is an investment of the whole life. Only by losing its life can the church find it. It can lose its life for many things and never be found; but when it loses its life for the Master it shall never die, but live until its God-given task is done.

The second condition embracing the divine call is expressed in the words: "Let him take up his cross." What is meant by the cross? Certainly, more than the symbol on our churches, and which is stamped on our books of devotion. There is a cross of gold and silver on which many are crucifying themselves. A great fortune is very often a great misfortune. We hear people saying: "I am bearing my cross," alluding to their great sorrows, their bleeding hearts, their prostrated hopes. If the world with its sin, the world with its grinding injustice and inhumanity, its social evil and liquor traffic, its Sabbath desecration and moral leprosy, is not resting upon us, then we are not responding to the call. Are we rallying around the cross, ready to bear it, or are we dallying around the cross eager to have others, if they will, carry it to their Gethsemane, and up the steeps to Calvary?

THE third condition of discipleship is: "Let him follow me." This is the sum and substance of our profession—the Alpha and Omega of our religion. We can do a great many things, all of them helpful, useful things, by following some one else; but above all things, the world needs Christians. We become Christians by following Christ. He is the Founder of our faith and also its Foundation. For the Christian life other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. We can not ask the world to follow Jesus until we have convinced the world that we ourselves are his followers. The world must have knowledge that we have been with Jesus. Some people only follow him to Jerusalem with the intellect. They admire the teacher and exemplar. They are fond of comparing Christianity with other systems. They speak to us about Christ and other masters. Some follow Him only with the emotions. They weep at the foot of the cross and speculate as to whether there could not have been some other way to redeem the soul. Some follow Him only with their indignation, and write learned essays in criticism of the commercial spirit that has entered the church and admire His protests against the money-changers in the place of prayer. Some follow Him only with their sorrow, and in the "night of death hope sees a star and listening love hears the rustle of an angel's wing." It is good when men follow Him, if only for a little way. Oh that the world would follow Him all the way! There is only one way to follow Him. It is with head, heart, hand and foot. It is with gift of song and speech. It is with pen, purse and brush. It is with gold and silver. It is with all of these and more. "It is with self. The gift without the giver is bare." "As much as in me is." The more we put in a thing, the more we get out. The Christian life never means very much to anyone until it is made the atmosphere he breathes. It is not alone notions, or emotions, but motions. Creed must be translated into life. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

HE who would follow Jesus, let him know what it means. Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all he hath, he cannot be my disciple." He who would follow Jesus, let him open his New Testament and read again what it means. One must be a hard and fast walker who would follow the Master. The trail is long and steep and rugged. There are no still waters and quiet pastures until the journey is done. The world is very much better; strange if it were not so. Via Dolorosa lies before you, made sacred by his footsteps, and the consecrated feet of countless multitudes. Best of all, God is with us. "Compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

---

* Pastor, M. E. Church, Hunter, N. Y.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Courage of Outlook

SUNDAY, September 30. I Cor. 16 : 9. "A great door is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." Many of us are willing to see what appears to be an open door, but not every one is ready to fix a steady gaze upon the adversaries. The open way may stretch across green pastures, and by still waters; but "the way of righteousness" is usually a climbing path over rugged and precipitous heights. It is an open and delightful experience to lodge in the house where Piety and Charity minister, and to rest in the chamber which looks toward the sunrise. But not far from their pleasant home the lions are crouching, and on the other side of the hill Apollyon straddles across the road. What can be more open and exhilarating than the prospect on the hill called Clear, where the gracious shepherds dwell! Yes, but the same highroad which goes by that bracing summit winds through all the perils and hostilities of Vanity Fair. And many of us are inclined to think only of the open stretches of the road, and we put the adversaries out of mind.

Now the apostle Paul was a man of courageous outlook. He would not make his judgment blind. He sent his eyes around the entire circle, and he searched out and named his antagonists. There is nothing more bracing in his letters than the chapters in which the adversaries are catalogued like the forces of an opposing army. He seems to exult in the recital. He piles up the enumerated forces, leaving nothing unnamed, in order that he may the more rapturously glory in the victorious power of the Lord. "What shall separate us from the love of God?" And then he marshals the black battalions of frowning, alienating powers, and he scatters them in the mighty presence of the Lord. He finds new jewels for the diadem of Christ in every failure of his adversaries.

There is always something bracing in a courageous vision. In Christ Jesus the soul seems to suck vigor from the quiet and resolute enumeration of its foes. It is a great thing for us to go into our souls, and lay hold of the enemies that may be lurking there, and drag them out into the light of life, and rank them in line and name them. It is the beginning of their destruction when we call our foes by their right names. Let us not shut our eyes to their presence. Let us not tolerate any foes in the guise of friends, or who are waiting in ambush at the doors of our souls. Let us haul the adversaries out and name them. And then our Christian warfare will not be a chance conflict but a direct and purposeful crusade.

"There are many adversaries. . . . I will tarry." That is the apostolic sequence. "There are many adversaries. I will seek a quieter and less troublesome road." That is often the cowardly sequence of the apostle's degenerate descendants. "There are many adversaries," says Paul; "there is much fighting required; I will tarry!" Let courage rise with danger, and strength to strength oppose. J. H. J.

The Test of Love

MONDAY, October 1. John 21 : 15. I Peter 1 : 8. "So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" "Whom, having not seen, ye love." Does love depend upon sight? Surely not. The strongest ties we know are those which bind us to absent friends. Our departed friends dwell forever in the "round tower of our hearts."

Love demands expression. Francis I in the battle of Maringnon cried, "He who loves me, follow me!" Jesus says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Peter affirmed he loved Jesus, and immediately came the challenge, "Feed my sheep." Little avails it to say, "Thou knowest that I love thee," if we translate not our love into conduct.

Our love for an institution is measured by our desire and our efforts for its improvement. Our love for a person is measured by our devotion to his interests, our endeavor to please him, our obedience to his reasonable requirements.

Our personal safety in time and eternity lies in the fact that God loves us. The earthly permanence of the kindgom of God lies in the fact that we love him. His love for us is like the river at Niagara Falls, which gathers its volume from a thousand sources, and plunges it over the precipice with majestic and immeasurable force. Our love for him is like the spray which rises at the base of the cataract. The spray is a feeble thing compared with the cataract, but it is as beautiful as the cataract itself. The sunlight falls upon the spray and weaves a hundred mystic rainbows. The moonlight falls upon it and the mist is transfigured like an incense rising heavenward from earthly altars. "Lovest thou me?" "Thou knowest that I love thee." "If ye love me—" C. C. A.

Balm in Gilead

TUESDAY, October 2. Jer. 8 : 20-22. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me. Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" The coming and going of the seasons, with the hopes that precede and the joys and disappointments that follow them, have their counterpart in the seasons of refreshing in the spiritual lives of men and nations. In this passage the wail of the prophet over the degradation of his people culminates: the prophet had prayed and hoped that the ravages which false faiths and idolatrous practices were working in the nation might be stayed. There had been seasons when a change for the better had seemed to set in, there had been a brief respite in the spiritual miseries surrounding him. But the disease was not thoroughly cured; there was no genuine reformation. The people again relapsed into their customary indifference toward the true religion, into heathenish abominations and vices. Instead of speaking comfort and encouragement to them, the prophet is compelled to address them more sternly than before and picture to them the avenging anger of God. He puts his address in the form of intense grief, yea, of despair: is the malady really incurable? Israel produces within its borders powerful balsams that conquer most virulent diseases: is there no medicine available for this disease? There are skilled physicians in the land: can no one be found to attack the existing evils?

In the same manner innumerable times since the days of Jeremiah men have stood complaining and despairing before great calamities, and have cried: Is there no helper? Is there no cure? Must we always go on at this poor dying rate? The trouble in such times is this: that men will not recognize "the Lord that healeth" them, Jesus, the divine physician, and that they spurn his pharmacy, his holy, righteous and consolatory Word. "Earth hath no sorrow which heaven cannot heal." W. H. T. D.

Little Opportunities

WEDNESDAY, October 3. Mark 5 : 19. "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee." This man, whom Jesus had delivered from an evil spirit, wished to remain with Christ as one of his disciples in active service. But the Master, who has a plan for every one, had a special plan for this man, who was commissioned to go and work first in his own home, among his near friends and neighbors. It is natural to love a more prominent place at the front, on the firing line, where conspicuous service is rendered and greater glory acquired. Is it not truly a noble ambition to be one of the leaders in our Captain's great army of the Cross? But it is equally honorable to be the common soldier, unnamed and unknown. Is not the obscure telegraph pole on the desert or in the forest as essential as the one in the great city, holding a multitude of wires? With God there is no great or small among his children. The woman at the well became the missionary to her townspeople; like the leaven in the meal, which touches first the particles next to it, till the whole is leavened. Is not the sacred hearth of the home the hope of mankind? Is it not the fountain of the river of church and national life which is to flow on till all know Him, from the least to the greatest? If the homes of civilized nations are purified, the whole world will become Christianized. Home Missions is the power that sustains the foreign workers; beginning at Jerusalem means going out into all the world to every creature. E. W. C.

Hearts God Has Touched

THURSDAY, October 4. I Sam. 10 : 26. "And there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched." A significant and comprehensive saying is this—that God touched the hearts of a little band of men. It means that the Divine Spirit had touched the key of all motive, the lever of all conduct. In touching their hearts, God touched their lips to speak, their minds to think, their wills to act. He touched their eyes, giving them power to see things in new relations, new correlations and a new unity. He touched their hands, and strengthened them to war a good warfare. He touched their feet, preparing them to walk strange hard highways of duty.

When God touches a human heart, he recreates the life, restores the soul. He may give us no new faculties, but he turns all the old faculties to new and nobler uses. We get new light, new hope, new views. Life's center shifts from self to Christ, and there is nothing we need so much as to cease to be self-centered. Association with Christ, identification with him, participation in his spiritually imparted impulses, can make new men and women of us all.

An unhappy woman said to her physician, "I am utterly miserable and dejected; all my friends are out of town." And he, a modern Luke, replied, "I have a Friend who never leaves me." He of whom the beloved physician spoke is he who touches our hearts, and says, "I am with you always." And he is with us unto the end of the last day of earthly labor and the last gleam of earthly light. And he will be with us eternally. C. C. A.

The Spirit at Work

FRIDAY, October 5. Eph. 3 : 20, 21. "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." The matters which the apostle has discussed in the preceding chapters call for the manifestation of the almighty power of God. His eternal counsel of mercy for the salvation of men, the breaking up of men's bondage under sin, the preservation of multitudes of Christians in the common faith that is proposed to them all—these things human wisdom, skill, and might could never hope to accomplish. God has taken these matters into his all-powerful hands.

We cannot foresee and determine in advance just when and how his transcendent ideas of mercy, love and righteousness will assume shape and form among men, but his power is at work in the world even now, and there are men who have come under its blessed influence. In the church that is in Christ Jesus the Lord, in the company of believers who form that mystical body of which the Lord is the head, there throbs a wonderful life. The spirit of Christ is working in them and is realizing in them and through them the thoughts which God has entertained regarding his children from the foundation of the world. The almighty power of God does not only hover over them, is not only thrown around them for their protection, but it has entered into their lives. Out of people who formerly resisted God they have been changed into willing workers with God. Their faith in God becomes a joyous, exuberant expression of the divine life with which they are filled. From the standpoint which they occupy as children of God they behold no difficulties and no disappointments, God's ability surpasses their boldest prayers and their loftiest thoughts. Disquietude and gloom can have no room in such hearts; they must sing their joy and gratitude from the fulness of their believing convictions.

W. H. T. D.

Giving

SATURDAY, October 6. Matt. 19 : 16. "What good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" After Jesus had related the parable of Dives and Lazarus, one of the members of his congregation, a rich young man, asked him what he should do to inherit eternal life? The youth claimed to have kept the commandments, but Jesus put him to a severe test, saying, "Go sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and come and follow me." He could not make so great a surrender, and he went away sorrowful, willing to take his chances of becoming a second Dives.

Two great changes would have occurred if he had yielded to Christ's command: his own moral personality would have been spiritualized and ennobled into a great world character, and his example of caring for the poor might have been followed by all succeeding generations. He had a great chance to make an investment in precious soul jewels instead of in the almighty dollar; a chance that never came again.

Hoffman's "Rich Young Man" is one of his best productions, reproduced in nearly every great gallery of the world. In Von Gebhardt's painting of this scene, Jesus is evidently saying to the young man, "How canst thou have kept the law and the prophets when so many of thy neighbors are poor and needy, like these multitudes all about us?"

The great problem of the rich and the poor is still unsolved. Earth will become a paradise when we reach the solution. When a man has nothing but himself and his gold, how poor and wretched he becomes! His sordid soul is only a receptacle for riches. "In God we trust" is written only on his coin. When death removes him from his treasure, nothing but the bare walls of his dismal prison remain. Virtues have been exchanged for vices; humility for pride; God for Mammon. What shall a man give to bring back his lost soul? Having made himself spiritually bankrupt, he has nothing to give. E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

A Campaign for Souls

THERE is no joy in human experience like that which fills the heart of one who realizes, for the first time, that he or she has been the means of leading a soul to Christ. This is the supreme mark of Christian faithfulness and efficiency. We may have passed years in the Christian life before this wonderful revelation suddenly comes to us. And when it does come, it places each act, word and thought at a new valuation. It discloses, in a way we could never know till then, the highest aim and purpose of our existence here, and exalts the power of a risen Saviour and of the cross which we have lifted up to some one, perhaps in a now forgotten moment, in a way that testified to our own faith and our love for Him.

There are many opportunities of winning souls, if we only look for them. And now, when the nation is passing through a furnace of trial, and when hundreds of thousands of its sons are leaving home and kindred to face an experience the end of which they cannot foresee, the Christian men and women of America are sending them forth with prayer that, come what may, they may be in God's keeping. These good friends, through the Christian Herald and other channels, are straining every nerve to put a New Testament into the kit of every departing soldier. We can imagine how these gifts will be treasured. They will be a solace and a strong helper. They will be read by the glow of innumerable campfires. Cromwell's invincible "Ironsides" had each his "Soldier's Bible." We trust that, in our army, the "Sword of the Spirit," the inspired Word, may be the mightiest weapon, and that it may not be carried in vain.

Many of the spiritual workers at the front write of the soldiers' views on religion. The men seem to have got a new idea of God and of things that are vital in Christianity. One chaplain, writing from "No Man's Land," within sound of the shells, tells us that the men, living as they are in hourly peril, when every moment is precious, give much thought to religion. They do not, however, take the slightest interest in church creeds, or church ordinances, or sectarian shibboleths, or the observance of holy days; nor do they waste time in discussing such topics as baptismal regeneration, apostolic succession, and similar matters, each of which in the past has been a bone of contention big enough to split churches into fragments. What they are interested in is prayer, personal salvation, human brotherhood, the communion, Christ as Friend and Saviour, personal righteousness, God as a Ruler over all, the life here and hereafter, eternity and the soul's destiny. The war has swept out of sight practically all the distinctive points that indicated denominational individuality. It is impossible to find anywhere more convincing evidence of the fact that, in extremity, the soul of man chooses to have the religion of Jesus Christ as He taught and lived it, and as it was exemplified in the simple creed and conduct of the early church, rather than to follow the confusing and distracting philosophies and dogmas of the modern church, which has wandered so far from the plain Gospel of the Nazarene.

OUR mail is filled with requests from readers who are eager to be personally represented in this soul-winning campaign in the army. They are heartily in accord with the plan to give each soldier a Testament. Many of them express a desire to get into sympathetic touch with the soldiers receiving their gifts, and this is being done by enclosing a postal in each Testament, so that the recipient, if so disposed, can acknowledge its receipt direct to the giver.

A lady in Pennsylvania, who provides a number of Testaments for the soldiers, writes: "I have been longing to put into a soldier's or sailor-boy's hand a copy of God's word, for if ever there was time or place where its comfort was needed, it is now and on the battlefield, when these dear ones are far from home and in constant danger. So I thank the Christian Herald for opening the way, and it rejoices my heart to know that for so small a sum I can send fifteen boys a portion of God's Word. I would like to have you send my name and address with the post card."

A reader in Massachusetts, sending her gift, writes: "These Testaments will be for our soldier and sailor boys to read when something really inspiring is so greatly needed to keep their spirits up. May God help the work, and may peace soon be restored fully and wholly to this stricken world."

A Maryland subscriber writes: "I am strongly in accord with your plan and am enclosing money to pay for three Testaments. I like the plan of your putting a postal in each book, so kindly send mine that way."

A reader in Ormsby, Pa., writes: "With one-half of this gift I wish to buy Testaments for the soldiers and sailors, and with the other to send copies of the Christian Herald to our boys at the front."

AS illustrating the need of the Gospel in the army, we have this from a pastor who writes from Fort Clark, Texas: "Religious conditions on the border are not encouraging. Today, on my way to Missouri for a series of meetings in country churches, I was met by a soldier and brought to Old Fort Clark. Here we have some 800 soldiers—no chaplain, no Y. M. C. A., no regular preaching services in the adjoining village. Some of the men from the ambulance corps who attended my services in Eagle Pass asked me to come. I had supper in the mess hall. I know something of the life of the soldiers on the border—nothing of that in the trenches—and while the hearts of many may be going away from God, the sergeant whose guest I was said, as he bade me good-by, 'I have been nearer the Lord here than I have ever been before.' God is on the border. and He is in the trenches!"

"I am glad to 'do my bit' for the spiritual welfare of our soldiers and sailors," writes a Glens Falls, N. Y., reader. "Please use half of this gift for the purchase of Testaments, and the remainder for placing the Christian Herald in the camps."

A Veteran of the Civil War, Co. F., 11 Miss. Reg., H. B. D., of Verona, Miss., writes: "When I enlisted for the Civil War in '61, our governor and his wife gave us each a fine Testament, and I have got mine yet, and think a great deal of it. I carried it in my shirt pocket when I came home in 1865. Thanks be to God for his great love in providing salvation for us!"

Many of the letters received are written in this same earnest, prayerful spirit, and they are an inspiration. A lady in Topeka, Kan., writes: "I pray that it (the New Testament marked at John 3 : 16) may be the means of some boy finding the 'peace that passeth all understanding.'" Another reader closes his letter: "This goes with my sincere prayers that it may cheer some mother's boy and lead him closer to Him who has promised to be our strength and refuge in time of trouble."

The Christian Herald is rejoiced to be the channel through which its readers and their friends can send the message of love, consolation and salvation to our soldier and sailor boys. It is a campaign for souls in which all may have a share. It is one which does not brook delay. The Word of God, sent with reinforcement of the prayers of God's people, is a power that none of the forces of sin can withstand.

Our Trade With Russia

RECENT events in Russia lend interest to a statement compiled by the National City Bank of New York, showing the trade of Russia with the United States, and with her nearer neighbors in Europe. The figures show that despite the rapid growth of our trade with Russia prior to the war we supplied less than ten per cent. of her imports, and took but about one per cent. of her exports.

The total exports from the United States to Russia have grown from $10,000,000 in the fiscal year 1900 to $18,000,000 in 1910, $23,000,000 in 1912, $26,000,000 in 1913 and $31,000,000 in the fiscal year 1914, all of which preceded the beginning of the war. In 1915 the exports to Russia jumped to $61,000,000, in 1916 $310,000,000, and in the fiscal year 1917, just ended, $558,584,000.

This increase since 1914, while largely war material, includes also railway supplies and material, automobiles, metal-working machinery, leather and manufactures thereof, copper, steel rails, railway cars, wire, and miscellaneous manufactures of iron and steel.

By recent arrangement through the Japanese commission now in this country, the equipment and provisioning of Russia is to be taken up by Japan, but directly financed by the United States.

Some Blessings of Grief

DON'T grieve—but since you must grieve, learn that there is good even in grieving. Alas for him who is too blind to see that there is something more than grief in grieving!

Perfect happiness is the great desire, yet we never could realize happiness but for its contrast with griefs, just as we never could realize sunshine but for shadow and periods of darkness. It is in the spring, when the gloomy winter has just gone, and in the autumn, when the winter is near again, that we enjoy sunshine most. In midsummer, when the sunshine is really most perfect, we enjoy it the least, because of the lack of contrast.

The mere human mind does not comprehend perfection except through imperfections. We could not know happiness but for griefs. Grief has a value all its own.

Pain in the body is the stricken nerve's appeal to the brain and the heart for help. Grief is the same sort of natural appeal to one's spiritual forces in time of distress. Heeded, these natural appeals lead to higher health and higher happiness. Disregarded, they are but signals of decay.

Unsung Heroes

ACHIEVEMENT is not always success, while reputed failure often is.

Many a poor cripple struggling under his handicap, doing his best to make himself useful, trying to reflect a little sunshine into the darkness about him and to make a home a little brighter, but never expecting special recognition here or hereafter, is writing his name on the record of real success in letters of unfading light.

The name of many a faithful underpaid servant appears on that record high above that of his rich, self-indulgent master.

Many an humble employee is in reality more successful than the proprietor of the establishment in which he works.

True human history is enriched by the story of the unknown boy who stayed on the farm and helped to pay the mortgage, in order that the favorite brother might be sent to college, and thus scored truer success than did the renowned one for whom the sacrifice was made.

The girl who smothers her longings for higher education, sacrifices prospects of marriage and a home of her own, in order to take care of her old father and mother, and is never known outside the small circle of a few friends, looms larger and brighter in the record of real human forces than the sister who went to college and became an author, musician, artist or actress.

Who can estimate what the world owes to those who, according to the ordinary standards of success, are failures?

Who can compute the debt of civilization to the obscure men and women who in their efforts to make the world a little brighter, a little better place to live in, have been too busy to make money or to achieve fame?

Too Fat or Too Thin

ONLY a year or so ago a certain celebrated actress was too fat. The other day she returned from the seashore with her figure made lissome by vigorous and persistent treatment of diet and exercise. She made no mystery of the change. "To die of too much fat—that was stupid," she said to the reporters. She had swum hours and hours and walked miles and miles, and being starved was her diversion. In three months by strenuous measures and incessant application she has reduced her weight twenty-five pounds.

Now she is in acute fear of death from heart disease. Doctors are telling her that the impairment of the heart probably came of her energetic measures to reduce her flesh.

Why cannot people be content to remain fat and hearty? This actress must not expect any very great flood of sympathy. When she was hearty and healthy she ought to have been happy. Fat people have advantages not to be despised. Over in Sweden a tax is levied upon fat people in order that they may not enjoy superior blessings without some compensation to the less fortunate portion of the community. In our own free country fat is not taxed, and people who have it are at liberty to keep it as long as they can. Health, good nature and sweet content usually go with it. Yet here is a woman who deliberately, eagerly, industriously traded off all these treasures for a case of heart disease!

It is strange how large a part of humanity are never satisfied with what they have, but must be eternally worrying and fretting and striving and starving to get something or other that somebody else is just as dissatisfied with.

Half the people in the world wish they had more fat; the other half wish they had less. Lots of people devote a lot of their time to stewing and fretting because they have not either more or less.

The efforts directed to getting fat and to getting thin would, if rightly directed, supply food for all the hungry people in the world and clothe all the naked.

The energies that are exhausted in shifting fat from one to another and back again are tremendous beyond computation.

But this is the way of the world.

Don't Break Your Back

by working over a kitchen sink set too low. Have installed a "Standard" one-piece sink, adjustable in height from 30 to 36 inches from floor.

"Standard" Kitchen Sink

"Standard" Kitchen Sinks

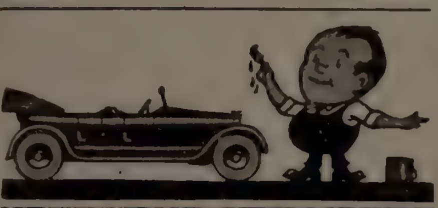
made in one piece—white enameled—equipped with air chambers that prevent "pounding"—with improved faucets that make the water run smoothly and quietly.

Write for free copy of special "Efficiency Kitchen Bulletin," also Sink Booklet.

Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co.
Dept 56 Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Standard" Showrooms

NEW YORK	35 W. 31ST
NEW YORK (EXPORT DEPT.)	50 BROAD
BOSTON	186 DEVONSHIRE
PHILADELPHIA	1215 WALNUT
WASHINGTON	SOUTHERN BLDG.
PITTSBURGH	106 SIXTH
CHICAGO	14-30 N. PEORIA
ST. LOUIS	100 N. FOURTH
CLEVELAND	4409 EUCLID
CINCINNATI	633 WALNUT
TOLEDO	311-321 ERIE
COLUMBUS	243-255 S. THIRD
CANTON	1106 SECOND ST. N. E.
YOUNGSTOWN	458 W. FEDERAL
WHEELING	3120-30 JACOBS
ERIE	128 W. TWELFTH
ALTOONA	918 11TH
MILWAUKEE	95 W. WATER ST.
SAN FRANCISCO	149-55 BLUXOME
LOS ANGELES	671 MESQUIT
LOUISVILLE	319 W. MAIN
NASHVILLE	315 TENTH AV. S.
NEW ORLEANS	846 BARONNE
HOUSTON	PRESTON & SMITH
DALLAS	1200-1206 JACKSON
SAN ANTONIO	212 LOSOYA
FORT WORTH	828-830 MONROE
KANSAS CITY	RIDGE ARCADE
TORONTO, CAN	59 E. RICHMOND
HAMILTON, CAN	20 W. JACKSON
DETROIT OFFICE	HAMMOND BLDG.
CHICAGO OFFICE	KARPEN BLDG.



KEEP YOUR CAR YOUNG
PAINT IT YOURSELF WITH

Effecto AUTO FINISHES

Not a wax or polish, but a durable, quick-drying, high-luster auto enamel. Made in seven colors. Sold by paint, hardware and auto accessory dealers. Send for Color Card. Pratt & Lambert-Inc., 143 Tonawanda St., Buffalo, N. Y. In Canada, 89 Courtwright St., Bridgeburg, Ontario.

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF PRATT & LAMBERT VARNISHES

CHURCH FURNITURE Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

The Witness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

STEPHEN MARSHALL, a young college freshman, being put through the process of hazing by the students, was carried to a theater where a very questionable play was on the stage. While the play was in progress, an alarm of fire was given, and Stephen saved several lives before he fell a victim to the flames. Paul Courtland, one of the students, was in the theater and witnessed the heroic death of Stephen. He himself joined in the work of rescue, and barely escaped with his life and lay for days in the hospital When the bandages were removed from his eyes and he could walk around the college, he saw in Stephen's room the Bible, the portrait of Stephen's mother, books and other signs of the fine Christian personality of the young man. Then for the first time he announced to his fellow students that he stood for Stephen Marshall's Christ. The students planned to neutralize this new spirit through the medium of Gila Dare, a worldly young lady, who was to invite Courtland to her house to tell him how she admired his heroic conduct at the fire. After Courtland's visit to Gila Dare, Abner Wittemore, a misfit who because of his slowness was called "Witless Abner," and who was specializing in sociology, having received a telegram telling him that his mother was dying, asked Courtland to carry a package of medicine to a poor old woman in whom he was interested. After praying with the old woman the first prayer of his life, Courtland started home, but he had not gone far when he saw a boy run over by a passing automobile. He helped the child into the house, called a doctor, and when the child died made arrangements for a simple funeral, incidentally becoming acquainted with the child's sister, Bonnie Brentwood. After returning to the dormitory Courtland was called up by Gila Dare.

CHAPTER VII

THE messenger had imitated Gila Dare's petulant childish accent to perfection. At another time the three young men would have shouted over it. Now they looked at one another in silence.

"Shan't I go and get a message for you, Court?" asked Tennelly. For Courtland's face was ashen gray, and the memory of it lying in the hospital was too recent for him not to feel anxious about his friend. He had only been permitted to return to college so quickly under strict orders not to overdo.

They listened anxiously to his tones as he conversed over the 'phone.

"Hello! . . . Yes! . . . Yes. . . . Oh! Good evening! . . . Yes. . . . Yes. . . . No-o-o—it won't be possible! . . . No, I've just come in and I'm pretty well all in. I have a lot of studying yet to do tonight. This is exam. week, you know. . . . No, I'm afraid not tomorrow night, either. . . . No, there wouldn't be a chance till the end of the week, anyway. . . . Why, yes, I think I could by that time, perhaps—Friday night? I'll let you know. . . . Thank you. Good-by!"

The listeners looked from one to the other knowingly. This was not the tone of one who had "fallen" very far for a girl. They knew the signs. He had actually been indifferent! Gila Dare had not conquered him so easily as Bill Ward had thought she would. And the strange thing about it was that there was something in the atmosphere that night that made them feel they weren't so very sorry. Somehow, Courtland seemed unusually close and dear to them just then. For the moment they seemed to have perceived something fine and high in his mood that held them in awe. They did not "kid" him when he came back to them, as they would ordinarily have done. They received him gravely, talking together about the examination on the morrow, as if they had scarcely noticed his going.

Bill Ward came back presently with his arms laden with bundles. He looked keenly at the tired face on the couch, but whistled a merry tune to let on he had not noticed anything amiss.

"Got a great spread this time," he declared, setting forth his spoils on two chairs alongside the couch. "Hot oyster stew! Sit by, fellows! Cocky wrapped it up in newspapers to keep it from getting cold. There's bowls and spoons in the basket. Nelly, get 'em out! Here, Pat, take that bundle out from under my arm. That's celery and crackers. Here's a pail of hot coffee with cream and sugar all mixed. Look, Pat! That's jelly-roll and chocolate éclairs! Don't mash it! Why didn't you come with me?"

It was pleasant to lie there in that warm, comfortable room with the familiar sights all around, the pennants, the pictures, and hear the fellows talking of homely things; to be fed with food that made him begin to feel like himself again; to have their kindly fellowship all about him like a protection.

It was all so familiar and beloved! So different from those last three hours amid suffering and sorrow! He hadn't yet got over that feeling of the Presence in the room with them, standing somewhere behind Pat and Tennelly. What would the fellows say if he should try to tell them about it? They would think he was crazy. He had a feeling that he would like to be the means of making them understand.

He told them gradually about Wittemore. They did not laugh. It was a revelation to them. When he returned they would be kinder to him.

Poor old Abner!" said Tennelly, thoughtfully. "Who would have thought it! Carrying medicine to an old bedridden crone! And was going to stick to his job even when his mother was dying! He's got some stuff in him, after all, if he hasn't much sense!"

Courtland went on talking about the old woman, picturing in a few words the room where she lay; utterly unaware that he had told how he had made the toast. They listened without comment as to one who had been set apart to a duty undesirable but greatly to be admired.

Afterward he spoke again about the child, telling briefly how he was killed. He barely mentioned the sister, and he told nothing whatever of his own part in it all. They looked at him curiously, as if they would read between the lines, for they saw he was deeply stirred, but they asked nothing. Presently they all fell to studying, Courtland with the rest, for the morrow's work was important.

THEY made him stay on the couch and swung the light around where he could see. They broke into song or jokes now and then as was their wont, but over it all was a hush and a quiet sympathy that each one felt, and none more deeply than Courtland. There had never been a time during his college life when he had felt so keenly and so finely bound to his companions as this night. When he went at last to his own room across the hall, he looked about on its comforts and luxuries with a kind of wonder that he had been selected for all this, while that poor woman down in the tenement had to live with bare walls and not even a whole candle! His pleasant room seemed so satisfying! And there was that girl alone in her tiny room with so little about her to make life easy, and her beautiful dead lying stricken before her eyes!

It was not until after the examinations the next afternoon that he realized that he was going to her again; had been going all the time, indeed!

She opened the door at his knock and he was startled by the look of her face, so drawn and white, with great dark circles under her eyes. She had not slept nor wept since he saw her, he felt sure. How long could human frame endure like that? The strain was terrible for one so young and frail. He found himself longing to take her away somewhere out of it all. Yet, of course, there was nothing he could do.

Continued on page 1018

ACME QUALITY
The Sign of Paint Success

The judicious use of

ACME QUALITY

PAINTS & FINISHES

means a more attractive home, inside or out, as well as a more durable, protecting finish to walls, woodwork, floors—everything! The "Acme Quality Painting Guide Book" and "Home Decorating" give helpful suggestions as to kinds, colors and quantities needed for any surface or purpose. Both books are free on request.

If your dealer cannot supply you, write us.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O Detroit, Michigan

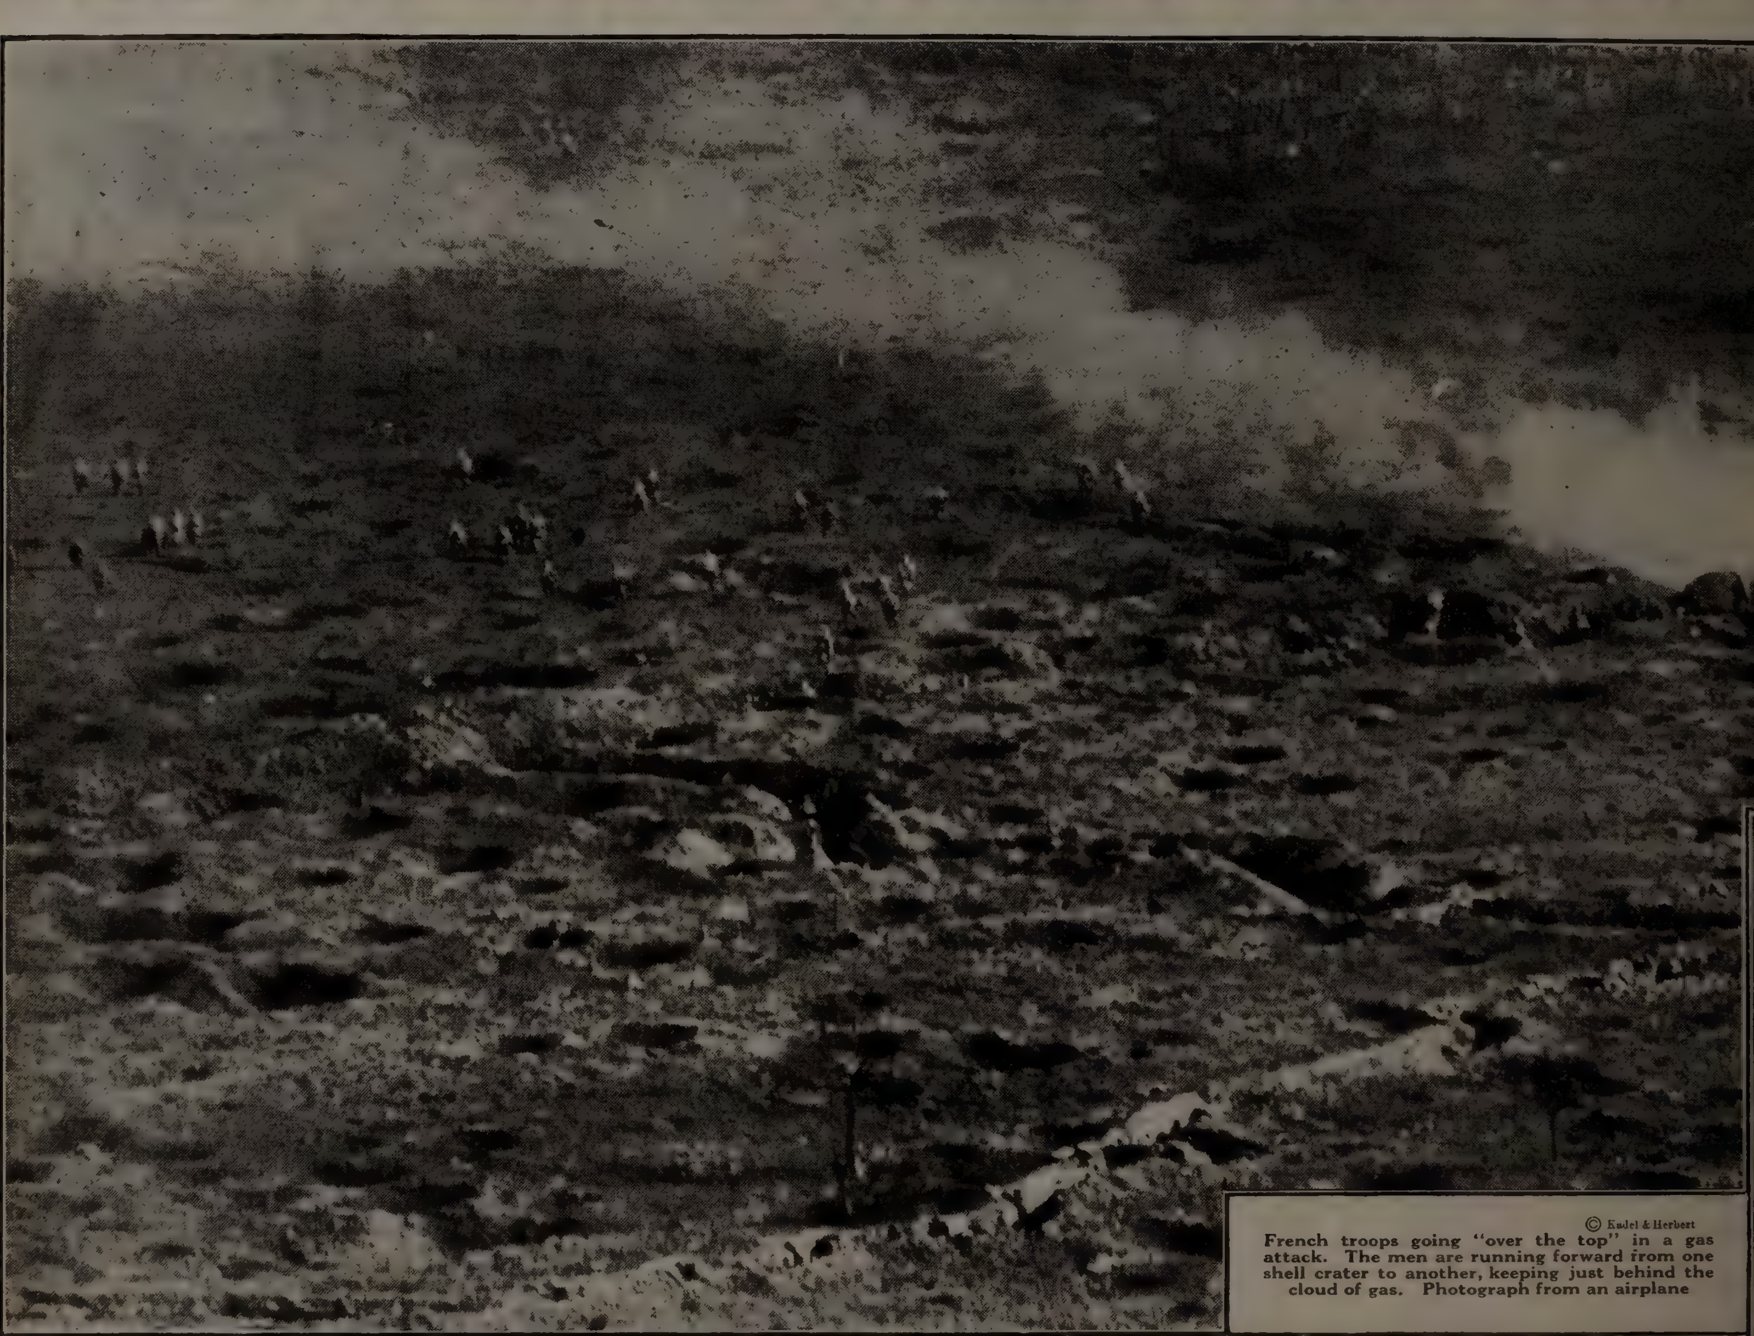
Boston
Chicago
Minneapolis
St. Louis
Pittsburgh
Cincinnati
Toledo
Nashville
Birmingham
Fort Worth
Dallas
Topeka
Lincoln
Salt Lake City
Spokane
Portland
San Francisco
Los Angeles

Have an Acme Quality Shelf

For the many "touching-up" jobs about the house, keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; a quart of Acme Quality Floor Paint of the right color.

VARNOTILE
ACME QUALITY
HAVE AN ACME QUALITY SHELF

INCIDENTS IN THE WORLD'S FIGHT FOR PEA



© Kadel & Herbert

French troops going "over the top" in a gas attack. The men are running forward from one shell crater to another, keeping just behind the cloud of gas. Photograph from an airplane

Preside
after a s

© International Film Service

Lafayette Day was celebrated both in France and in America. M. Jules Jusserand, the French ambassador, addressed the Philadelphia celebrants under the shadow of Independence Hall

© Underwood & Underwood

Above, Paul Painleve, Minister of War in the Ribot Cabinet, commissioned to form a new Cabinet

© International Film Service

Convict-labor drafted into service to build roads for the National Guard Army at Spartanburg, S. C.

E

© Underwood & Underwood

A street of barracks at Spartanburg

© International Film Service

From citizens to soldiers. Drafted men leaving New York for Camp Upton at Yaphank, L. I.

© International Film Service

ing aboard the Mayflower's launch

rom New York to Gloucester, Mass.

© International Film Service

Mounted troops, training for service in France, off for a practice hike

SANITAS
MODERN WALL COVERING

Wipe off the Dirt!

Styles for Every Room in the House

Because the Sanitas in your kitchen has a glazed finish don't think all Sanitas is glazed.

There are dull finished decorative styles resembling tapestry, leather, grass-cloth, fabrics and imported wall coverings—130 styles to choose from.

Why not have all your rooms decorated with Sanitas? It is sanitary; can't fade; can't tear or crack.

Sanitas is made on cloth and finished in durable oil colors. Can be cleaned with a damp cloth. Look for the trademark on the back of goods.

SANITAS STANDARD OTC COMPANY CLOTH WALL COVERING

Write for Booklet and Samples

Give name of your decorator or dealer and

Address the Manufacturers of

Sanitas Modern Wall Covering

320 Broadway New York
Dept. 3

WANTED

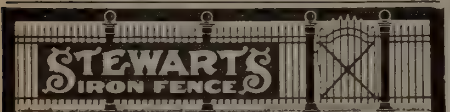
In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent The Christian Herald. This is

AN OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT

The Christian Herald BIBLE HOUSE New York



STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
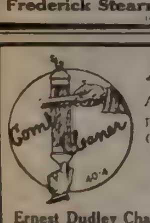
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 72 Stewart Blk., Cincinnati, O.

Clear Your Throat with Zymole Trokeys

Quick Relief for Husky, Hoarse, Tickling Throats
25c at all Drug Stores. Sample for two-cent stamp
Frederick Stearns & Company, Detroit, U. S. A.
In Business Over Sixty Years



A Practical Gift

A clever arrangement to clean combs; perfectly sanitary, easily washed. Cleaner and gift box, complete, 40c.

For Sale Everywhere or Direct

Send for Catalog 233

Ernest Dudley Chase, 251 Causeway St., Boston, Mass.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

The Witness

Continued from page 1015

She was full of quiet gratitude for what he had done. She said she knew that without his kind intercession she would have had to pay far more. She had been through it too recently before and understood that such things were expensive. He rejoiced that she judged only by the standards of a small country place, and knew not city prices, and therefore little suspected how very much he had done to smooth her way. He told her of the preacher he had secured that afternoon by telephone—a plain, kindly man who had been recommended by the undertaker. She thanked him again, apathetically, as if she had not the heart to feel anything keenly, but was as grateful to him as could be.

"Have you had anything to eat today?" he asked, suddenly.

She shook her head. "I could not eat! It would choke me!"

"But you must eat, you know," he said, gently, as if she were a little child. "You can not bear all this. You will break down."

"Oh, what does that matter now?" she asked, pitifully, with her hand fluttering to her heart again and a wave of anguish passing over her white face.

"But we must live, musn't we, until we are called to come away?"

He asked the question shyly. He did not understand where the thought or words came from. He was not conscious of evolving them from his own consciousness.

She looked at him in sad acquiescence. "I know," she said, like a submissive child; "and I'll try, pretty soon. But I can't just yet.

Even while they were talking a door in the front of the hall opened, and an untidy person with unkempt hair appeared and said, "Child, go out a few minutes and get something to eat. You'll not last the night through at this rate! Go, and I'll stay here until you come back."

COURTLAND persuaded her to come with him down to a little restaurant around the corner and have a cup of tea—just a cup of tea—and with a weary look, as if she thought it was the quickest way to get rid of their kindness, she yielded. He thought he never would forget the look she cast behind her at the little white, sheet-covered cot as she passed out the door.

It was an odd experience, taking this stranger to supper. He had met all sorts of girls during his young career and had many different experiences, but none like this. Yet he was so filled with sympathy and sorrow for her that it was not embarrassing. She did not seem like an ordinary girl. She was set apart by her sorrow. He ordered the daintiest and most attractive that the plain menu of the little restaurant afforded, but he only succeeded in getting her to eat a few mouthfuls and drink a cup of tea.

Before he left her he was moved to tell her how he had seen the little child coming out to greet her. He thought perhaps she had not heard those last joyous words of greeting and would want to know.

The light leaped up in her face in a vivid flame for the first time, her eyes shone with tears that sprang mercifully into them, and her lips trembled. She put out a little cold hand and touched his coat-sleeve.

"Oh, I thank you! That is precious," she said, and, turning aside her head, she wept. It was a relief to see the strained look break and the healing tears flow. He left her then, but he could not get away from the thought of her all night with her sorrow alone. It was as if he had to bear it with her, because there was no one else to do so.

When he left her he went and looked up the minister with whom he had made brief arrangements over the telephone the night before.

THE Rev. John Burns was small, sandy, homely, with kind, twinkling red-brown eyes, a wide mouth, an ugly nose, and freckles; but he had a smile that was cordiality itself, and a great big paw that gripped a real welcome.

Courtland explained that he had come about the funeral. He felt embarrassed because there really wasn't anything to say. He had given all necessary details over the phone, but the kind, attentive eyes were sympathetic, and he found himself telling the story of the tragedy. He liked the way the minister received it. It was the way a minister should be to people in their need.

"You are a relative?" asked Burns as Courtland got up to go.

"No." Then he hesitated. For some reason he could not bear to say he was an utter stranger to the lonely girl. "No, only a friend," he finished. "A—a—kind of neighbor!" he added, lamely, trying to explain the situation to himself.

"A sort of a Christ-friend, perhaps?" The kind, red-brown eyes seemed to search into his soul and understand. The homely, freckled face lit with a rare smile.

Courtland gave the man a keen, hungry look. He felt strangely drawn to him and a quick light of brotherhood darted into his eyes. His fingers answered the friendly grasp of the other as they parted, and he went out feeling that somehow there was a man that was different; a man he would like to know better and study carefully. That man must have had some experience! He must know Christ! Had he ever felt the Presence, he wondered? He would like to ask him, but then how would one go about it to talk of a thing like that?

He threw himself into his studies again when he got back to the university but in spite of himself his mind kept wandering back to strange questions. He sat down and wrote a letter to Wittemore, brief, sympathetic, inquiring, offering any help that might be required. When it was finished he felt better and studied half the night.

He knew the next morning as soon as he woke up that he would have to go to that funeral. He hated funerals, and this would be a terrible ordeal, he was sure. Such a pitiful little funeral, and he an utter stranger, too!

Fortunately his examination began at eight o'clock. If he worked fast he could get done in plenty of time, for the hour of the funeral had been set for eleven.

Tennelly and Pat gazed after him aghast when he declined their suggestion that they all go down to the river skating, for an hour before lunch.

"I can't! I'm going to that kid's funeral!" he said, and strode up the stairs with his arms full of books.

"Good night!" said Pat, in dismay.

"Morbid! ejaculated Tennelly. "He'll come home 'all in' again."

But when they found Bill Ward and went up to try and stop Courtland he had departed by the other door and was half-way down the campus.

CHAPTER VIII

IT was all very neat and beautiful in the little third-story back room. The gas-stove and other things had disappeared behind the calico curtain. Before it stood the small white coffin with the beautiful boy lying as if he were asleep, the roses strewn about him, and a mass of valley lilies at his feet. The girl, white and calm, sat beside him. Three or four women from the house had slipped in shyly, half in sympathy, half in curiosity.

The girl looked up when Courtland entered and thanked him for the flowers with her eyes. The women huddled in the back of the room watched him curiously. The doctor came stolidly in and sat down beside Courtland. The stillness and the strangeness in the bare room were awful. It was only bearable to look toward the peace in the small, white, dead face; for the calm on the face of the sister cut one to the heart.

The minister and the undertaker stepped into the room, and then it seemed to Courtland as if One other entered also.

Then the voice of the minister, clear, gentle, ringing, triumphant, stole through the room, and out into the hall,

This New Range Is A Wonder For Cooking

Although it is less than four feet long it can do every kind of cooking for any ordinary family by gas in warm weather, or by coal or wood when the kitchen needs heating.

There is absolutely no danger in this combination, as the gas section is as entirely separate from the coal section as if placed in another part of the kitchen.

Note the two gas ovens above—one for baking, glass paneled and one for broiling, with white enamel door.

Gold Medal Glenwood

The large oven below has the Indicator and is heated by coal or wood.

See the cooking surface when you want to rush things—five burners for gas and four covers for coal.

When in a hurry both coal and gas ovens can be operated at the same time, using one for meats and the other for pastry—It

"Makes Cooking Easy"

Write for handsome free booklet 133 that tells all about it.

Weir Stove Co., Taunton, Mass.

Makers of the Celebrated Glenwood Coal, Wood and Gas Ranges, Heating Stoves and Furnaces.

MOST VALUABLE PREMIUM EVER OFFERED

HISTORY is in the making. The boundaries of the nations are constantly changing. Stirring events are occurring daily in cities and countries formerly unknown. To keep posted on the world's news every one should have an up-to-date Atlas. After months of search the Christian Herald has obtained

Hammond's Up-to-Date ATLAS of the WORLD
Revised to MAY 1st, 1917

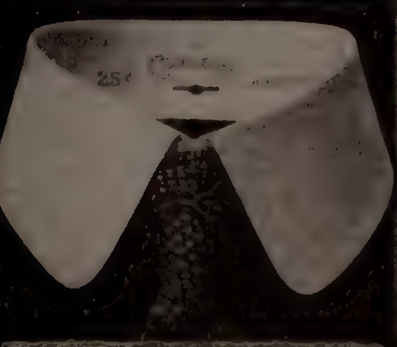
128 pages of maps in colors, including 12 special war maps indicating the fighting lines of the armies in Europe. The maps show every portion of the earth as it is today. The thorough manner in which the maps of this work are kept abreast of the times is shown by the following:

Virgin Islands, Belgium and Franco-German Frontier, Western Russia, Poland and the Russo-German Frontier, Balkan States, Dalmatia and Austro-Italian Frontier, Asia Minor.

176 pages in all, printed on high finish paper, strongly and handsomely bound in cloth, with attractive cover stamping, size 10¼ by 13⅝ inches.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS ATLAS:
Send us $2.00 with the name of a NEW subscriber you have influenced to take the Christian Herald for one year and we will send you the Atlas, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK, N. Y.



Challenge Cleanable Collars

Freshened in a jiffy—with a bit of soap and a damp cloth. Cleanable instantly. Challenge Collars laugh at collar smudging, dirt and perspiration. Of course, an exact "linen" collar appearance.

25c each—at your dealers or direct. Try them. State style and (half) size. Illustrative booklet on request.

E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co.
THE ARLINGTON WORKS
725 Broadway, New York
DU PONT

Presidents of Church Societies
Write for money-making plans and free sample.
Senwod Mfg. Co., 918 Garden Bldg., Boston, Mass.

Recipe for Peaches
Fill jars with pared peaches. Make a syrup of water and sugar—half a cup of water and a cup of sugar for each pint jar. Pour syrup over fruit until jar is full, place covers on loosely and set in a "Wear-Ever" Roaster—filling the lower half with water. Cover and let come to a boil. Steam until peaches are tender, remove jars one at a time, fill with boiling syrup and seal.

Home Canning Is Economical and Easy When You Use The

"Wear-Ever"

ALUMINUM ROASTER

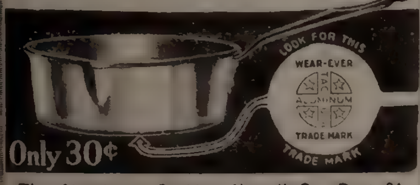
ENJOY delicious, seasonable fruits and vegetables throughout the entire year by canning them now.

Peaches, pears, plums, beans, peas—all kinds of fruits and vegetables—can be put up at home at a saving in time, labor and money, if you use the "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Roaster.

In this utensil of many uses, you can also prepare a whole meal, in oven or on top of stove, all at one time—a delicious roast, baked potatoes, macaroni, and even a dessert such as baked apples or rice pudding. And you can use it as a cake or bread box also.

"Wear-Ever" utensils are dense and smooth, hard and durable, because the metal is subjected to the enormous pressure of rolling mills and stamping machines. No joints or seams; cannot rust or scale; pure and safe economical!

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"



The Aluminum Cooking Utensil Co., Dept. 34, New Kensington, Pa., (or if you live in Canada) Northern Aluminum Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Send me, prepaid, a 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" Stewpan, for which I enclose 30c in stamps—to be refunded if I'm not satisfied. Offer good until October 20, 1917, only.

Name ....

Address ....

even down through the landings, where were huddled some of the neighbors come to listen:

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me: Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth . . . But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. . . ."

Courtland listened attentively. The words were utterly new to him. If he had heard them before they had never entered into his consciousness. They seemed almost uncannily to answer the desolating questions of his heart.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept!"

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death!"

Courtland heard the words with a shock of relief. Here had he been under the depression of death—death everywhere and always! threatening every life and every project of earth! And now this confident sentence looking toward a time when death should be no more! It was as if the Christ himself were having it read just for him to hear.

"But some will say, How are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come?"

COURTLAND looked up, startled. The very thought that was dawning in his mind! The child, presently to lie under the ground and return to dust! How could there be a resurrection of that little body after years, perhaps? How could there be hope for that wide-eyed sister with the sorrowful soul?

"Thou fool, that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain."

He listened through the wonderful nature-picture, dimly understanding the reasoning, on to the words:

"So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."

He looked at the child lying there among the lilies, those delicate blossoms so ethereal and perfect that they almost seem to have a soul. Was that the thought, then? The little child laid under the earth like the bulb of the lily, to see corruption and decay, would come forth even as the spirit of the lilies came up out of the darkness and mold and decay of their tomb underground, and burst into the glory of their beautiful blossoms, the perfection of what the ugly brown bulb was meant to be. All the possibilities come to perfection! no accident or stain of sin to mar the glorified character!

The wonder of the thought swelled within him, and sent a thrill through him with the minister's voice as he read:

"So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

To be continued

Some Seed Thoughts on Conservation

What to Eat.

By DR. W. H. VAIL

IN the former article, having considered the question of "How to Eat," and shown that we were wasting both health and efficiency by the careless methods of eating our food, let us today dwell upon another phase of our life, and keeping our slogan, "Health and Efficiency," always in mind, see how the cause of Conservation calls for the regulation of the food that we eat.

In the first place, we must learn to distinguish between the things we need and the things we want. This is essential in every walk of life. We are confronted at every turn in our pilgrimage with the cry of the high cost of living. It makes no difference what we want; the real, vital question is, what do we need? The high cost of living is becoming more and more a menace to this people and nation. We must come to a simpler mode of life.

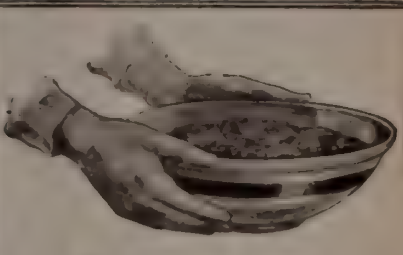
In relation to our diet, the question is not what we like to eat, not what our appetites crave, but what is necessary for the building up of the tissues and the maintenance of health and efficiency. And we might just as well state here as anywhere, that our appetites are no guide as to what we should eat. The appetite is no more a guide as to what we should eat than the unenlightened conscience is a guide as to what we should do.

WE hear a great deal, these days, in connection with the great work undertaken by Mr. Hoover, about "one meatless day in the week." We might reverse that, and put the proposition in this form: "One meat day in the week." Perhaps Mr. Hoover is working up to this point. Whether he has this idea in view or not, one thing is certain, and that is, that we would all be better in health and pocket if we limited meat. We know the very general idea that the workingman must have meat to enable him to do his work. Now, while admitting that there is a certain amount of nourishment in meat, it is the most expensive and least necessary article of food in our dietary.

It is very nice to think of eating the luscious beefsteak, or roast beef, and have it changed into the brain and brawn of your body; but that is not nature's way of doing things. Nature loves to take from one kingdom in her realm and to change it into another. We have three kingdoms in nature, the mineral, the vegetable and the animal kingdoms. If your garden fails to produce the proper amount of vegetables, you go to the mineral kingdom for the phosphate and lime salts to enrich the soil. The vegetable kingdom lives off the mineral kingdom. The animál kingdom should live off the vegetable kingdom, in the main, and when the animal dies, his remains return to the mineral kingdom. Thus you have the rotation of three, the mineral, the vegetable and the animal kingdoms. In the main man should live on the vegetable kingdom. By adding eggs and milk to your vegetable food you have the perfect diet. There is no reason why you should not eat white meats, fish, chickens, oysters, etc.; but remember that they are luxuries, especially in these times, and not indispensable for the nourishment of the body. In fact, there is very little food value in any of them.

Again, if meat is so necessary to strengthen us, why do the doctors so universally forbid the use of red meats for their patients, especially in the sanatoriums? Why do they always put you upon a vegetable diet, with milk and eggs?

NOW, when we come to consider the vegetable kingdom, to select our articles of food, the thing that amazes us is the way in which we change the products of nature from the form in which our Creator meant we should eat them. Take, for example, the wheat grain. Why do we not eat it as it comes from the harvest field? I do not mean to eat it raw; but we take the grain to the mill, have it ground, and then we have this meal "bolted," so that we may have the outer coatings, which we call the bran, disposed of for the cattle to eat, and we take the white flour home, to be baked into bread and the different forms of pastry. We forget that the bran contains the phosphates and lime salts, which are so essential for the building up of the nervous system, the bones and the muscles. These elements



Laxative

For Breakfast in a Bran-Flaked Dainty

Take what laxative you need in bran food, not in drugs. Every doctor urges that, you know.

Pettijohn's is a whole-wheat dainty flaked with bran. It is delicious, yet effective. It enables you to serve bran often, in a very welcome way.

One week's results will surprise and delight you. You will want every week like that.

Pettijohn's

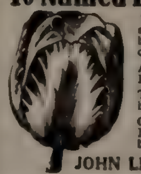
Rolled Wheat—25% Bran

A breakfast dainty whose flavory flakes hide 25 per cent unground bran.

Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent fine patent flour with 25 per cent bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe.

Both sold in packages only.

(1679)



10 Named Darwin Tulips for 25 cts.

To know Darwins try this test collection of 1 sorts. Their enormous size and superlative beauty will be a revelation. 10 large bulbs, different colors, mailed for 25 cents.

Also 10 best named German Irises for 50 cts. Both lots 20 fine New Bulbs for 65 cents.

Treatise on Bulb Culture for garden and house, and Catalog free with all orders.

Our CATALOGUE of Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, Lilies. Hardy and rare winter-blooming plants FREE TO ALL.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc., Floral Park, N. Y.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and hom
Many high class tools attractively priced in ou Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free o request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York Cit

Salt Mackere

CODFISH, FRESH LOBSTER

FOR THE CONSUMER NOT THE DEALER

FOR YOUR OWN TABLE

FAMILIES who are fond of FISH can be suppli d DIRECT from GLOUCESTER, MASS., by th FRANK E. DAVIS COMPANY, with newly caught KEEPABLE OCEAN FISH, choicer than any inlan dealer could possibly furnish.

We sell ONLY TO THE CONSUMER DIRECT sending by EXPRESS RIGHT TO YOUR HOME We PREPAY express on all orders east of Kansas. Ou fish are pure, appetizing and economical and we wan YOU to try some, payment subject to your approval

SALT MACKEREL, fat, meaty, juicy fish, ar delicious for breakfast. They are freshly packed i brine and will not spoil on your hands.

CODFISH, as we salt it, is white, boneless an ready for instant use. It makes a substantial meal a fine change from meat, at a much lower cost.

FRESH LOBSTER is the best thing known fo salads. Right fresh from the water, our lobster simply are boiled and packed in PARCHMENT-LINED CANS. They come to you as the pures and safest lobsters you can buy and the meat is as cris and natural as if you took it from the shell yourself

FRIED CLAMS is a relishable, hearty dish, that your whole family will enjoy. No other flavor i just like that of clam, whether fried or in a chowder

FRESH MACKEREL perfect for frying, SHRIMP to cream on toast, CRABMEAT for Newburg o deviled, SALMON ready to serve, SARDINES of a kinds, TUNNY for salad, SANDWICH FILLINGS and every good thing packed here or abroad you ca get direct from us and keep right on your pantr shelf for regular or emergency u e.

With every order we send BOOK OF RECIPES for preparing all our products. Write for it. Our list tells how each kind of fish is put up, with the delivered price, so you can choose just what you will enjoy most. Send the coupon for it now.

FRANK E. DAVIS CO.
209 Central Wharf
Gloucester Mass.

Frank E. Davis Co.
209 Central Whar
Gloucester, Mass.

Please send me your latest Fish Price List.

Name ....

Street ....

City .... State ....

BLUE STREAKS
Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

They Last Longer Because They Are Lighter

If your bicycle is now in garret or shed because of tire-trouble, take off its most troublesome tire and compare it with a Goodyear Blue Streak.

You'll find the Blue Streak lighter, and on that account use always shows it to be vastly stronger.

The toughest tire rubber is live and very light.

That's the kind of rubber out of which we make Blue Streaks.

We could make the tire much heavier by using only a small amount of light real rubber mixed with heavy chemicals.

But such a tire wouldn't last as Blue Streaks last.

And it wouldn't make pedaling as easy as Blue Streaks make it for you.

If you go to several dealers before you buy, you'll find the price everywhere is $3.25 for this non-skid tire with the good-looking blue streaks.

And you'll generally notice that they are the only tire for which the demand is so great that they are sold by more than one dealer in your locality.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

Books That Should Be Read by All Christian Herald Readers

"Limpy, the Boy Who Felt Neglected"

By WILLIAM JOHNSTON

What William Johnston has done in this story is to put on paper the soul of a boy of ten, who is just coming face to face with the truer values of life. No mean achievement is this, for it is a beautiful thing to look into the heart of a child and see what is hidden there.

This book has just been published and is making a big hit. A copy was sent to the Secretary of the Christian Herald and he became so interested in it that he sat up half the night reading it. If possible, it interested him more than Pollyanna. In his opinion, it is one of the most human stories that has been written in years.

IRVIN S. COBB says:
"Somebody might have written a truer, sweeter, more appealing, more convincing story of a boy than 'Limpy,' but nobody ever has."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX says:
" 'Limpy' is very beautiful and tender and ought to have a real success. It stirs the very best in its readers."

WE will send a copy of "Limpy," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year for $2.25

OR—We will send a copy of "Limpy," postpaid, as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald accompanied by $2.00

"The Wicked John Goode"

By HORACE W. SCANDLIN

Introduction by THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE. Epilogue by REV. J. G. HALLIMOND

A book full of thrills — a book with a message. The runaway lad — the reform school — the state prison — the drunkard's reward—the whole gamut of life's tragedies right through to Christ and redemption. Life at its worst and best.

WE will send a copy of "The Wicked John Goode," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year for $2.40

OR — We will send a copy of "The Wicked John Goode," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription accompanied by . . . $2.00 in the bran are just what the farmer wants, and needs, for the strength and growth of the cattle. We throw away (in this process) to the cattle the phosphates and lime salts, and then go to the drug store and buy the phosphates and hypophosphates in our tonics, to strengthen our nerves. Is it any wonder that we are nervous, that we have nervous prostration, neuritis, and all sorts of nervous ailments? We throw away the most necessary ingredients of the grain —the very elements that build up the nerves, bones, muscles and blood—and then wonder why we are such a nervous nation!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

Here is the second great cause of nervous diseases. You remember, we found the first cause in our earlier paper, and it was eating too fast and too much and not properly masticating our food. We do not care whether you take the wheat, rye, oats, barley, corn or rice; but whichever you use in connection with your diet, eat the whole grain.

I know that some think that the whole grain contains certain silicate elements that are too coarse and rough for our digestive organs to appropriate. There is just where we make a great mistake. This "roughage," as it is being called—is just what our bodies need to excite the natural processes of nature in connection with the secretion and excretion in and through the various organs. In the same way, when we come to the question of breakfast-cereals, the rule is very simple indeed. Use the whole grain, such as oatmeal, cracked wheat, or any form of wheat, in which the whole grain is used in the making of the cereal. Have your cereals as dry and hard as possible, so as to induce chewing, thus developing the salivary glands. Take more liquid with your meals, but take no liquid while the food is in your mouth. Take swallows of water or other liquid between the mouthfuls of food.

NOW, let us think for a moment about the fruits as food. All the fruits, such as oranges, lemons, apples, pears, prunes, grapes, plums, etc., are very good, but there is one fruit at which the line should be drawn. That is the grapefruit, and there's a reason. That reason is that grapefruit contains a permanent acid. The acids contained in the other fruits become alkaline during the processes of digestion, but the acid of grapefruit remains acid, thus rendering the blood too acid, and causing certain blood and skin diseases. The grapefruit contains a certain principle resembling quinine. Let the chemist extract that, and then the doctors may prescribe it as a medicine; but it is best not to eat the fruit, especially at the beginning of breakfast. If you must eat grapefruit, eat it at the end of the meal. Adding sugar sweetens the fruit, but does not counteract the acid nature of it.

Prunes, raisins and nuts are all right, only chew the nuts thoroughly.

These are some of the rules that should govern us in the selection of our food, and if one educates his appetite by limiting his diet to the simple articles, as indicated above, he will be surprised how readily nature will adapt itself to the simpler diet; and he will come to enjoy his simple meals just as much as the epicure does his six-course dinner.

It is not what we eat that makes us strong, but what we assimilate. Do not forget this fact.

Psalms of Deliverance

International Sunday School Lesson for October 7

Ps. 85, 86

Two Hymns of the Second Temple

By Rev. George D. Allison

OUR lesson this week is most unusual, consisting as it does of two of the later Psalms, undoubtedly composed in the restored temple of Zion. Every time of revival is a time of music and song, and the revival under Ezra and Nehemiah was not without its share of inspiration. These poems are typical of a great many, the best of which, in all probability, are preserved for us in the Book of Psalms.

We left the Jews in captive Babylon. It might seem more appropriate to study the return before we study the songs of deliverance. Yet the new quarter's work, which will cover the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, is really summed up, both in its joys and its anxieties, by the sentiments of these two sweet singers of Israel.

The meditation of devout men on the highest theme given to mortal mind—the dealings of God with the soul —has produced the very greatest spiritual literature of all time. We shall never outgrow the best of the Psalms. When we study the work as verse, we find that it does not make use of rhyme—without which most modern hymns would perish at once—nor does it conform to the close rules that beset English verse. Its greatest principle is parallelism—the repetition of the same thought in different words—e. g.:

> Why do the nations rage.
> And the peoples imagine a vain thing?
> The kings of the earth set themselves.
> And the rulers take counsel together.
> Against the Lord,
> And against his Anointed.

This poetry depends on its thought, and on the varied emphasis that can be given to each leading idea. In the Modern Reader's Bible, by Moulton, the text of the Revised Version is so printed as to give the fullest value to the stanzas as poetry.

A Psalm of the Return—Psalm 85

Our first selection is clearly most appropriate to the times of Nehemiah, when the joy of the return was tempered by the vision of a wasted land and a ruined temple to be reclaimed. It is a hymn of thanksgiving and of supplication also.

Here we have the great fact of the return stated and restated in solemn joy. The carrying away was because of sin, and therefore the restoration must be because of forgiveness. God was no longer angry with them. Therefore this song of pious rejoicing.

But the poor and struggling community under Ezra is far from the glory of the days of old. Surely God will not make a half-way restoration; he will help them to master the difficulties that remain. The mercies already granted are the basis for expecting greater yet to come.

The minor note in the second verse changes again to steady and full confidence. God's message in the present emergency will be listened for. It cannot fail. Meanwhile, a sober and repentant people must await his good pleasure. Godly hope is its keynote—believers must never depair. Finally, in the most beautiful of metaphors, the psalmist expresses his assurance that all is well.

The Four Radiant Angels of the Psalm.

Dr. Maclaren speaks of the "four radiant angels" that are mentioned here as dwelling in the land: Mercy, Truth, Righteousness and Peace. These are indeed God's choicest ministering spirits. Their grouping is suggestive. Mercy and Truth are not to be separated, and Righteousness must be the companion of Peace. Of them all, Righteousness is the most indispensable. She makes the way for God to come. She also follows after him to lead the hosts of men "in his steps."

A Psalm of Encouragement—Psalm 126

This psalm is almost a companion piece to Psalm 85, because exactly the same conditions are back of it: joy over the return, anxiety over the problems that confront the restored captives. Some have thought that it deals with a rather later period than

Continued on page 1022

The Franklin Car

Three Times As Many People Are Now Buying Franklin Cars

"AMERICANS," said a foreign critic, "know the price of everything and the value of nothing."

That was before our entry into the War. Today it is a different story.

The past few months have developed a remarkable understanding of the National duty to curb needless waste and extravagance.

A typical illustration is the change in standards of judging and buying a motor car.

Only a short time back a car had to be everything but practical to attract the average motorist.

He wasn't interested in upkeep because his eye was on ponderous mechanism.

Gasoline didn't worry him because he was comparing wheel-bases.

Tire economy was not in his mind because he was judging freezing-mixtures for an unnecessary water-cooling system.

And getting rid of his old car at a fire-sale price for a new model of another make he figured was part of the game.

▼

Today economy—both in gasoline and tires—is being forced on the attention of the motorist. By rising costs, by Government officials, by newspapers and magazines, the problem is before the motorist daily.

What is he to do?

He is looking for a way out—some way to cut his cost in half and maintain his mileage.

He must get down to fact and figures. Know what the car he intends buying will actually do on a gallon of gasoline and a set of tires. Take into consideration the depreciation each year. And turn his back on pleasing phrases and tempting "claims."

There's less mystery than one thinks about this economy problem. A car has thrift or it hasn't. Something "in between" is like the proverbial "something just as good."

▼

An unfailing gauge of the worth of any fine car today is the way it is selling today.

Now what are the sales facts about the Franklin?

The present and next building schedule of Franklin Cars will not catch up with orders on hand. Franklin Cars are being built at a rate of three times as many as a year ago and the public demand still continues to exceed production.

The Franklin Car was bound to become more popular each year, even in normal times. The War, forcing utility and economy before everything else, quickened this movement.

Today, as for fifteen years, the Franklin Car stands as the most practical, efficient and economical fine car in America.

▼

Just consider the significance of the National Efficiency Test of 179 Franklin Cars on July 13th, 1917. Over all sorts of roads, in weather partly fair and partly rainy, these cars recorded at 179 different points in the United States the remarkable average of 40.3 miles to the single gallon of gasoline.

This record shows what the Franklin does under standard efficiency test rules. The practical motorist might ask himself what any other make of car can do along the same lines. Such a comparative test offers a standard which owner operation can modify in the same respect against one car and another.

High gasoline mileage means economy all along the line. It takes no expert to know that if a car is overburdened with heavy weight and undergoing constant wear and tear, the gasoline tank will tell it by low mileage.

Take tires. For five years Franklin owners have been reporting their individual tire mileage. The average for this five year period is 10,203 miles.

Now compare the annual depreciation of the average fine car with the Franklin. Look over the daily used-car advertisements and visit the places selling used-cars. It's a rare case when you find the Franklin. If you do—why is it quoted so high?

There is something here for every motorist to think about—and these are days when a motorist has to think if he wants to ride.

Touring Car	2280 lbs.	$2050.00	Runabout	2160 lbs.	$2000.00	Four-pass. Roadster	2280 lbs.	$2050.00
Cabriolet	2485 lbs.	2850.00	Sedan	2610 lbs.	2950.00	Brougham	2575 lbs.	2900.00
Town Car	2610 lbs.	3200.00	Limousine	2620 lbs.	3200.00

All Prices F. O. B. Syracuse

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

SYRACUSE, N. Y., U. S. A.

LEARN MUSIC AT HOME

Piano, Organ, Violin, Cornet, Guitar, Banjo, Mandolin, Harp, Cello, Sight Singing

No longer need the ability to play music be shut out of your life! Now at last you can learn music at home from master musicians without coming to New York and without having a teacher at your elbow. By our wonderful home study method we have made it easy for you to play by note the Piano, Organ, Violin, Banjo, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Cello or learn Sight Singing. And just think! You learn by note, by our new, easy method in your own home, in a remarkably short time, without paying a cent for lessons. No tiresome, "dry" exercises, no inconvenience, no trick music, no "numbers," yet simple, wonderful, easy for even a child.

Easy Lessons Free

We want to have one pupil in each locality AT ONCE to help advertise our wonderful, easy system of teaching music. For a limited time we are therefore making a special advertising offer to teach you music in your own home FREE! The ONLY cost is for postage and sheet music, which averages 12½c. weekly. We can do this because our course makes friends—pupils recommend it to others and then we make our profit. We make this offer only on condition that you tell your friends how you learned to play and that you give them our name and address when they ask you.

Send No Money

If you came here to New York to study under the members of our faculty personally, you would have to pay $5 to $10 a lesson. Yet on our special offer, these same teachers will give you lessons in your own home through our wonderful Courses—FREE! And their home study lessons, instead of being a drudge, are so interesting, so truly fascinating that hundreds of people write: "I can hardly wait for the next lesson."

Enlist as a Musician

U. S. Army, Navy and Marine Corps need musicians. The pay is excellent, and musicians are the most popular men in the service. We have prepared a Special Concentrated Course — 3 lessons a week for only 3 months. Please state in coupon or on margin if you are interested in this Special Military Course.

Just Mail Coupon

Learning music successfully by our Home Study method is a positive, proven fact. Thousands who never knew one note from another before taking the lessons have developed into expert musicians. The average yearly enrollment for the past few years has been over 25,000 pupils. We grade you before you start and fit the instruction to your special needs. A beginner gets entirely different lessons than one who has had lessons.

Let us send you our new 24-page book, which describes the secret principles of our wonderful New System of Music Teaching from beginning to end, and contains scores of letters from pupils who have been expert players as a result of the Course. Write to-day. Mail coupon or postal.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
Dept. 7-K, 225 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

Please send me your free book, "Music Lessons by Mail," explaining how I can learn to play for 12½c. weekly. I would like to learn how to play the instrument checked: ☐ Piano ☐ Organ ☐ Violin ☐ Guitar ☐ Harp ☐ Banjo ☐ Cornet ☐ Sight Singing ☐ Mandolin ☐ Cello

Put an X in the square before the instrument you want to play.

Name...

Address...

City.................... State....................

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
Dept. 7-K,
225 Fifth
Avenue,
New York

What People Say:

WONDERFUL SYSTEM

"I just got home from my vacation, and the folks at home are delighted to hear me play the Organ so well. They say you have a wonderful system of teaching music."—M. F. Allard, Cataquet, N. Y.

LESSONS ARE FINE

"Since I've been taking your lessons I've made over $60.00 with my violin. Your lessons surely are fine."—Melvin Vreeland, Macopin, N. J.

PLAYS ANYTHING

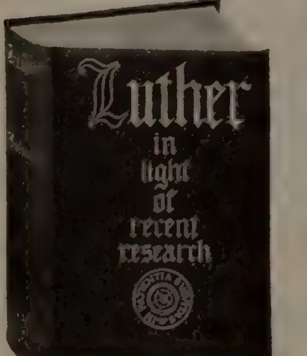
"I finished your course of lessons on Cornet. Some time ago I intended writing to let you know how I got along. When I started them I knew nothing about the Cornet or Music, but now I can play almost any piece of music."—Kasson Swan, Denmark, Col. Co., Nova Scotia.

HEARTIEST APPROVAL

"I want to extend the heartiest approval of your Piano Course. It has done more for me than years of other lessons. So complete in every way, I certainly can recommend it to others and will do so."—Mozie N. Lewis, 319 Jefferson, Neosha, Mo.

NOTE.—These are but a few of the thousands of enthusiastic letters sent in by pupils. Our free book contains many more. Send coupons or postal to-day.

Luther Anniversary Book



Luther in Light of Recent Research

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the approaching celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous Thesis on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation. The Christian Herald has had the good fortune to secure the exclusive American rights of this book and has had it translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago, who has succeeded in preserving the spirit and expression of the original in a remarkable degree.

The Foreword to Boehmer's work by Professor J. H. Robinson of Columbia University pays a high tribute both to biographer and to the translator who has made this book so readable to the average American.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.50, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N.Y.

Continued from page 1020

Psalm 85, a time when there were despairing counsels and disappointed leaders.

The poet is looking back pathetically at those days of glad exaltation. Then it had seemed easy to restore and rebuild. Then all had been united in zeal to serve. All was wonder and thankfulness. Since then there has been much disillusionment, and slow progress toward the ideals of freedom and religion.

So it always goes. We think each triumph of the right is going to usher in the millennium at once. When the steady grind comes, we turn back longingly to that first enthusiasm. Yet it was not in vain that they returned and rejoiced. It is good to remember that early zeal. The Lord had done great things, and therein lay the best assurance of greater things yet to be.

The Teachings of the Psalms

1. The Lessons of History. History is a text-book of moral lessons for the devout mind. The Hebrews knew this, and the Psalms are largely historical. It was the earnest hope of men like Ezra to make plain these lessons to the community of the present and of the future. The exile gave them the greatest single illustration of sin and penalty they knew. The warnings of the prophets, their prediction of penalty, were known. The sins were national and the whole nation paid the price. Restored, it stood forever in the shadow of that warning. Individuals as well as the nation should see that wrongdoing means exile and loss.

But with equal fervor Israel's teachers pointed out the goodness and the providence of God.

2. The Present as a Seedtime. There is no tendency to let things drift in Hebrew piety. To "act in the living present" is characteristic of their philosophy. If today is hard and dark, then it is a seedtime. We must be busy now, and later we shall reap our due reward.

This thought has cheered the pilgrim and the pioneer. This has been the stay of the missionary who sees no result from his years of toil. This is the comfort of the teacher whose patience is sorely tried. The Hebrew singer who brought his brief message to a few people long ago little knew he would send an impulse of good cheer down the ages.

3. The Future Safe with God. This seems to be the third key-thought in these psalms. The past is black with our failure and punishment. The present is dubious because we feel our own weakness. But God reigns, and slowly his purposes mature and triumph. "Goodness and mercy shall be with us all the days of our life." Trust God, see all, nor be afraid.

The Two Miracles

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

EVERY day my train, on its way to the city, crosses a long stretch of drab, uninteresting meadow. An unhealthy bit of land it is, abounding in marshy places, and small sluggish streams, and miles of brown, rank grass. Folk say that mosquitoes breed in the marshy spots, that dread malaria lurks in each sluggish stream.

Nobody, traveling on the train, seems to enjoy crossing the meadow. People who have been looking absorbedly out of the window at the passing scenery go back to their books or newspapers. Lovers of beauty sigh and turn aside. It's as disagreeable a sight as a portion of land, God-created, may be. And yet—

Half way across the meadow, in the most uninteresting, muddy, colorless part of it, there grows a little tree. It's a commonplace little tree with a slight trunk and very slender limbs. In a forest of other more rugged trees it might look stunted and pale and unhealthy. But rising as it does from the rank, brown grass, it seems tremendously refreshing and graceful—the only pure, green, growing thing in a wide waste space.

GOD dropped a seed in the ground one day,
A brown little seed in a far-off spot,
Where the mud was thick, and the sun so hot
That it blasted life with its scorching ray.
But the seed took hold on a sullen stone,
With roots as fine and as soft as lace;
And it struggled up toward the sky, alone,
Until it bloomed in that far-off place!

God sent a soul to the earth one night,
And set it deep in a crippled frame;
A golden soul in a body lame
And racked with pain; but the morning light
Found faith and hope in a pair of eyes
And a heart that was sweet with trust, and whole;
And, through the dark of the crippled frame,
A song sprang out of that buried soul!

And as folk, marveling, stand apart,
I whisper, "God," in my inmost heart.

Every day I look for the little tree. On the first morning of springtime I rejoice in its tender buds; on the last evening of autumn I sigh for the brown leaves that are rustling down from its branches. The little tree, in its small wilderness, has come to mean a great deal to me. . . .

I KNOW a girl who lives in the slums of a great town. The slums are not pleasant—they are, in fact, very like the meadow—colorless, and sordid, abounding in marshy spots and sluggish streams of human life that flow constantly through dingy alleyways and dingier streets. But the girl has never known anything better than the slums, for she was born there, a cripple, and she will doubtless live there until the Father who loves his children even though their backs are crooked—calls her home.

The girl lives in one room—a tiny room with a narrow window. There she eats and sews and prays and dreams through the long days and the longer nights. Her narrow window looks out, across a vista of clotheslines and roofs and cluttered fire-escapes, to a tiny strip of sky that is usually clouded blackly with the smoke of a myriad factories. But—

"Ain't I lucky," exclaims the girl with a smile of real pleasure on her wan little face, "to have this winder? I can see so much of th' city. Ain't I got a grand view?" And she points, proudly, to the bit of sky that is barely visible.

The people of the slums have come to know and love the girl though she never leaves her tenement room. They call her "The Good Sick Lady," and they smile when their children, who visit her, sing the songs that she teaches them, and repeat the stories that they have learned from her, and—at bedtime—mumble the small petitions to God that they have heard her say. Many tired mothers find time to travel up the rickety stairs for the blessing of a talk with her; many broken lives are mended by her word of cheer and hope and comfort. Many a schoolboy runs to her, tearfully, with a torn jacket to be patched, for she takes as much interest in small deeds of kindness as she does in great deeds.

Perhaps in a sweeter, better neighborhood the girl would scarcely be noticed. Perhaps, if she were surrounded by normal folk who lived normal lives, she might be just a neutral bit of scenery. Perhaps, if the dingy alleyways were broad country lanes, folk might call her "a nice, brave girl," and let it go at that.

But, because God still gives us miracles, the girl is a product of the slums, just as the green little tree is a part of the swampy meadow land. Because God wants to give proof of his love he has placed a glowing light in a crippled body, just as he planted a seed in an unhealthy bit of earth. And we wonder how the girl finds the courage to rise above circumstance, and how the tree, growing bravely, can find life in a barren land.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

JUST now, when Sunday schools and Young People's Societies and other organizations within the church are holding Rally Days and are drawing together again for another year's work the scattered forces of the Kingdom, is a good time to plan ahead for power to do things for which we rally. Since 1846 the Protestant churches of the world have been uniting in a week of prayer early in each new year. For 1918 the week will begin Sunday, January 6, and close Saturday, January 12. To some extent in the past this week has been observed a bit perfunctorily. It has, unfortunately, partaken of the spirit of half-aliveness that has for so long deadened the motor nerve of the church and discouraged hundreds who sought to lead it into that militancy for God which is its birthright. Perfunctory observance has often been the result of too little preparation. The church gains power on its knees. Now is the time to begin to prepare for a Prayer Week that will shake the battlements of heaven and transform the world. We think it well, therefore, to print at this time the following appeal and program just received from the World's Evangelical Alliance.

To All Who Follow Christ in Every Land

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST: In the year now behind us the whole civilized world has been solemnly called to learn in the school of God. The disciplines of life have been heavy upon us, but the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ has been upon the page as we scanned it. By that light we have learned much that may help us to face all that lies ahead.

We have been forced to distrust our feeble measures of the power, the wisdom, and the love of God. We have been driven to question both the adequacy and the finality of our interpretation to the world of our Lord Jesus Christ. Non-Christian writers in the East have boldly challenged Christianity. The Holy Spirit is leading us through our failures, not only to a deeper search, but also to an earnest expectation of what other nations, more lately come under the influence of the Gospel, may realize in the risen, exalted and omnipotent Son of God.

The things that are shaken are crumbling, and with them is being removed the veil that hides "the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." In this way the realities of life have proved the realities of faith: God and sin in eternal opposition: redemption and renewal the only way to peace: the Spirit of God upon the chaos our assurance that God is indeed "within the shadow."

We are called anew to exercise the unspeakable privilege of Prayer. The magnitudes of the time are so great that nothing can compass them. God has pressed back into our trembling hands the supreme instrument of approach to himself.

TOPICS SUGGESTED FOR UNIVERSAL AND UNITED PRAYER.

Sunday, January 6, to Saturday, January 12, 1918.

Sunday, January 6, 1918. Topic for Sermons and Addresses. "The Eternal Things." Dan. 4 : 3; II Cor. 4 : 18; Heb. 11 : 10; 12 : 27.

Monday, January 7, 1918. Thanksgiving and Confession. Acts 17 : 24–28; Matt. 11 : 28–30; I Peter 2 : 21–25; I John 2 : 3–6; I Thes. 5 : 22.

Tuesday, January 8, 1918. The Church Universal. The "One Body" of which Christ is the Head. Eph. 2 : 13–22; Heb. 11 : 32–12 : 2; Eph. 4 : 10–16; Mal. 3 : 10; Prov. 23 : 22–26; II Thes. 2: 13–15; Matt. 28 : 18–20.

Wednesday, January 9, 1918. Nations and their Rulers. Prov. 14 : 34, 21 : 1; I Peter 4 : 19; II Peter 3 : 9; John 12 : 20–32; Isa. 2 : 2–4; I Cor. 4 : 1–5.

Thursday, January 10, 1918. Missions Among Moslems and Heathen. Dan. 2 : 34–35, 45, 4 : 1–3; Isa. 40 : 1–8; Matt. 2 : 1–11; Eph. 4 : 4–6.

Friday, January 11, 1918. Families, Schools, Colleges, and the Young. Ps. 127; II Cor. 1 : 4; I Cor. 15 : 54–57; Matt. 18 : 1–6; Prov. 1 : 7, 9 : 10–12.

Saturday, January 12, 1918. Home Missions and the Jews. Matt. 22 : 1–10; Prov. 22 : 1–2; James 2 : 1–9; Mal. 2 : 10; II Cor. 3 : 12–18.

E. A. R. relates an incident of a young man who, attacked with lockjaw, on being told by his physician that unless he opened his mouth he would die, and having tried in vain, at last throwing himself on the Lord's mercy in silent prayer, found to his joy that the rigid jaws had become loose and the danger point had passed.

R. C. praises God for the conversion of a dear brother, for whom prayer had been offered for years.

L. K. E. gratefully acknowledges answered prayer in a mighty revival at Koenigsberg, Saskatchewan, in which seventy were converted and forty-six united with the church.

Mrs. J. D. J., a young mother of four children here and two in heaven, herself bedridden and her husband ill, asks prayer for divine guidance.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Nicholasville, Ky.; Huntington Creek, N. C.; West Berne, N. Y.; Vestal Center, N. Y.; Pittsburg, N. H.; Mrs. A. M., Concrete, N. D. (for a revival of religion everywhere); Los Angeles, Calif. (for the success of Billy Sunday's campaign); Macon, Ga. (that many may be saved in our church this year); Lexington, Ohio (pastor requests prayer for a spiritual awakening in his church and the salvation of souls); Greensboro, Vt. (that church troubles may be removed and souls saved); Norfolk, Va. (that many máy be saved during revival); Rev. E. W. H. G., Brooklyn, N. Y., asks prayer for the success of evangelistic meetings held at the noon hour along South Brooklyn water front.

Rev. E. W. H. G. asks prayer that the evangelistic field may open to him for the winter.

A mother asks prayer that son's mind may be restored; E. N. M., that mother's mind may be restored; A Widowed Mother, that daughter's mind may be restored; J. C., that sister's mind may be restored; M. E. M., that brother-in-law's mind may be restored; two friends, that their own minds may be strengthened.

C. M. R. asks prayer that an invalid's sight may be restored; F. J., that wife's sight may be restored; M. E. D., that sight may be restored; M. H., that a friend's sight may be restored.

Four friends ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Fifteen friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Three wives ask prayer that their husbands may be cured of the liquor habit.

C. M. R. asks prayer that husband may be cured of the morphine habit.

Twenty-nine friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. E. N., that daughter's throat may be healed; thirty-five friends, for the healing of self, including Mrs. E. C. M., that health may be restored without an operation.

Nine parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; nine wives, their husbands; twenty-two, other relatives and friends.

Six friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters.

Seventeen friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including two friends, that we may have world-wide peace.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. J. G. McC., Booneville, Miss.; J. M., Vandalia, Mich.; A Friend, N. C.; M. H. J., Franklin, Va.; Mrs. J. C. L., Lodi, Calif.; Mrs. A. M., Concrete, N. D.; A Reader, Logansport, Ind.; E. M. L., Pasadena, Calif.; D. C. N., Rochester, N. Y.

Champion Toledo

Dependable Spark Plugs

CHAMPION
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Champion Heavy Stone
Price $1.25

The Guarantee Under the Hood!

The engine is the most important part of your car.

Everything else depends upon its efficiency.

No matter who built it, nor how many cylinders it has, it is just as efficient as its spark plugs permit it to be.

Why risk inferior plugs in your car?

Get the plugs you know are dependable.

Because Champion Spark Plugs are dependable four out of every five cars leave their factories equipped with them—come to you, when new, with this guarantee under their hoods.

Follow the experience of these expert engineers—use Champions.

Avoid substitutes by looking for the name Champion on the porcelain.

There is a Champion Spark Plug especially designed for every type of engine and sold everywhere.

Champion Spark Plug Co.,
Toledo, Ohio

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI
MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
SKINNER MFG. CO.
MACARONI

Tried and True
BUCKSKIN TIRES

Buckskin Tires are made by skilled workmen of the same quality Para rubber and Sea Island fabric as those used in the highest-priced tires in the country. Guaranteed for 5000 miles. Privilege of examination at no expense to you. In making adjustments we pay express both ways. Remarkable offer to car owners detailed in free illustrated book. Send for it today—also price list.

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO.
East St., Carrollton, O. 16
West. Dist. Office, 1436 S. Mich. Ave., Chicago

Get the Genuine and Avoid Waste

MORGAN'S
SAPOLIO

MONDAY TUESDAY WEDNESDAY THURSDAY FRIDAY SATURDAY SUNDAY

SAPOLIO

Used every week-day—Brings rest on Sunday

The General All-Around Cleaner

What Is an Internal Bath?

By R. W. BEAL

MUCH has been said and volumes have been written describing at length the many kinds of baths civilized man has indulged in from time to time. Every possible resource of the human mind had been brought into play to fashion new methods of bathing, but strange as it may seem, the most important, as well as the most beneficial of all baths, the "Internal Bath," has been given little thought. The reason for this is probably due to the fact that few people seem to realize the tremendous part that internal bathing plays in the acquiring and maintaining of health.

If you were to ask a dozen people to define an internal bath, you would have as many different definitions and the probability is that not one of them would be correct. To avoid any misconception as to what constitutes an internal bath, let it be said that a hot water enema is no more an internal bath than a bill of fare is a dinner.

If it were possible and agreeable to take the great mass of thinking people to witness an average post mortem, the sights they would see and the things they would learn would prove of such lasting benefit and impress them so profoundly that further argument in favor of internal bathing would be unnecessary to convince them. Unfortunately, however, it is not possible to do this, profitable as such an experience would doubtless prove to be. There is, then, only one other way to get this information into their hands and that is by acquainting them with such knowledge as will enable them to appreciate the value of this long-sought-for health-producing necessity.

Few people realize what a very little thing is necessary sometimes to improve their physical condition. Also, they have almost no conception of how a little carelessness, indifference or neglect can be the fundamental cause of the most virulent disease. For instance, that universal disorder from which almost all humanity is suffering known as "constipation," "auto-intoxication," "auto-infection," and a multitude of other terms, is not only curable but preventable through the consistent practice of internal bathing.

How many people realize that normal functioning of the bowels and a clean intestinal tract make it impossible to become sick? "Man of to-day is only fifty per cent. efficient." Reduced to simple English this means that most men are trying to do a man's portion of work on half a man's power. This applies equally to women.

Nature never intended the delicate human organism to be operated on a hundred per cent. overload. A machine could not stand this and not break down and the body certainly cannot do more than a machine. There is entirely too much unnecessary and avoidable sickness in the world.

How many people can you name, including yourself, who are physically vigorous, healthy and strong? The number is appallingly small. It is not a complex matter to keep in condition, but it takes a little time, and in these strenuous days people have time to do everything else necessary for the attainment of happiness but the most essential thing of all, that of giving their bodies their proper care.

Would you believe that five to ten minutes of time devoted to systematic internal bathing can make you healthy and maintain your physical efficiency indefinitely? Internal bathing will do this, and it will do it for people of all ages and in all conditions of health and disease.

People don't seem to realize, strange to say, how important it is to keep the body free from accumulated body-waste poisons. Their doing so would prevent the absorption into the blood of the poisonous excretions of the body and health would be the inevitable result.

If you would keep your blood pure, your heart normal, your eyes clear, your complexion clean, your mind keen, your blood pressure normal, your nerves relaxed and be able to enjoy the vigor of youth in your declining years, practice internal bathing and begin to-day.

You will probably want to know WHAT an Internal Bath is, WHY people should take them, and the WAY to take them. These and countless other questions are all answered in a booklet entitled "THE WHAT, THE WHY and THE WAY OF INTERNAL BATHING," written by Doctor Chas. A. Tyrrell, the inventor of the "J. B. L. Cascade," whose lifelong study and research along this line make him the preeminent authority on this subject. Not only has internal bathing saved and prolonged Dr. Tyrrell's own life, but the lives of a multitude of hopeless individuals have been equally spared and prolonged. No book has ever been written containing such a vast amount of practical information to the business man, the worker, and the housewife; all that is necessary to secure this book is to write to Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell at Number 134 West 65th Street, New York City, and mention having read this article in CHRISTIAN HERALD, and same will be immediately mailed to you free of all cost or obligation.

Perhaps you realize now, more than ever, the truth of these statements, and if the reading of this article will result in a proper appreciation on your part of the value of internal bathing, it will have served its purpose. What you will want to do now is to avail yourself of the opportunity for learning more about the subject, and your writing for this book will give you that information. Do not put off doing this, but send for the book now while the matter is fresh in your mind.—(Advertisement.)

Wholesome Reading for a Soldier for a Whole Year for Only $2.00

A CORRESPONDENT in Paris, France, in a recent dispatch tells us what General Pershing said about reading matter for our boys in France. It applies equally as well to the sailors at sea and to the army in training at home.

"The soldiers in France need all the good, wholesome reading matter the folks at home can send them," Major General Pershing declared.

The American boys at the permanent training camp near the French front have expressed their hunger for fresh newspapers and magazines from home. The question was put up to the American Commander in Chief and he approved plans to furnish the soldiers with good magazines and newspapers.

"I thoroughly approve of the plan of sending plenty of newspapers and magazines to the soldiers," Pershing said. "The idea is excellent. The boys here need any amount of good, wholesome reading matter from the folks at home.

"But one thing must be understood; the officers do not want and the men do not appreciate old papers—old printing. The literature sent to France must be current—that is, new magazines and leading newspapers despatched as soon as possible after publication."

Send Your Soldier Boy the Christian Herald

If you have a son, or a brother, or a sweetheart, or a friend who has been called for service, what better service could you render than to send him the Christian Herald every week? 52 issues for only $2.00. Or you can send it to him for 6 months (26 issues) for $1.00.

The Christian Herald Will Be Delivered Direct to the Camp

No matter where the soldier or sailor goes, the Christian Herald will follow him. The Post-office will take care of that.

A Gift Card for the Donor

A neat gift card, giving the name of the donor, will be sent to the soldier or sailor for whom you order the Christian Herald.

First Copies Off Press Will Go to the Soldiers

Make certain that your soldier gets a clean new copy of the Christian Herald —as we will send him one of the first copies off the press.

Address SOLDIERS AND SAILORS FUND
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 1010

France. . . . Fifteen hundred members of the New York Master Bakers' Association pledged themselves on September 11 to sell bread at cost. . . . Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, addressing a luncheon in London on September 12, declared that "without the United States' financial assistance the Allies would have been in disastrous straits today." He paid tribute to the German military genius, but declared that they had repeatedly made mistakes in dealing with questions of human nature, and that these mistakes had been of great assistance to the Entente Allies, and he labeled the forcing of the United States into the conflict as Germany's greatest mistake. . . . The packing interests of the country will be controlled by the Food Administration under a Licensing System. . . . Queen Eleanore of Bulgaria died on September 12. . . . September 14, the anniversary of the date upon which "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written, was recognized in every cantonment in the American Army by an official salute to the flag. . . . Serious strikes in the shipyards on the Pacific Coast threatened on September 16 to close the yards, the ironworkers demanding higher wages. Federal agents were working to prevent the strike. . . . On September 10 the representatives of the Entente Allies at Peking notified the Chinese Foreign Office that their governments would waive the Boxer indemnity payments for five years. Russia, however, waived only one-third of its part of the indemnity. The United States did not waive its share, since by special arrangement with the Chinese nation the money is being spent for the education of Chinese young men in America. The Entente countries have also agreed to an increase in the Chinese tariff. . . . The Senate passed the $11,000,000,000 War Bond Bill on September 15.

Progress of the War

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE cabinet crisis in France continues. M. Painlevé, who had a cabinet practically formed, found all his plans upset at the last moment by the refusal of the Socialists to whom he had offered portfolios to sit in any cabinet whereof M. Ribot, the late prime minister, was a member.

Portugal has been put under martial law as a result of the recent agitations against the government. The troubles in Spain seem to be over.

On the Russian fronts there has been no notable activity during the past week. It does not seem to be generally known that, in capturing Riga and its district, the Germans become masters of the world's main source of supply of flax, 2,500,000 acres approximately in this region being devoted to this staple, a larger area devoted to flax culture than in all the rest of the world put together.

The Rumanian front was very calm during the week, only a few unimportant skirmishes taking place thereon. The Caucasian, Mesopotamian and South Palestine fronts were lifeless. On the Macedonian front, there was some little activity near Lake Orchida, where the Teutons retreated slightly before the French, and in the region of Monastir the rival artilleries were more than usually active. This front may be expected in the near future to be the scene of vigorous fighting.

DURING the early part of the week, the capture by the Italians of Monte Gabriele, an important position to the northeast of Gorizia, was announced. Austrian counter attacks regained the peak and battles perhaps the most sanguinary of the war, continued until September 14 when the Italians finally won and consolidated the positions on the crest. This victory enables the Italians to dominate the Austrian positions on Mt. San Daniel, the last remaining bulwark of Austrian defense north of Trieste.

On the southern portion of this front, on the Carso plateau, the Austrians counter-attacked the Italians and drove them back east of Selo a considerable distance in the early part of the week.

THE western front was rather featureless all the week. On the British front there was only routine trench fighting, varied with artillery duels and occasional skirmishes of small significance. Toward the last of the week a much more vigorous artillery duel broke out on the Flanders portion of the front, which was thought to be a prelude to an infantry attack, but none followed.

According to reports received in Ottawa, the casualties to the Canadians in the fighting around Lens will, it is estimated, aggregate about 23,000. This is about 25 per cent. of the Canadian strength on the firing line.

On the French portion of the front the week was as quiet as on the British, only one infantry attack taking place on the Somme.

All the indications are that the troops on this western front will winter in much the same positions as they now are, if the war continues. In spite of the fact that we are hearing little about the subject, behind the scenes in Europe there are earnest and continuous efforts being made to bring about peace.

The sinkings of merchant vessels by the submarines, reported by the British admiralty, show a considerable decrease —eight in the number of vessels over 1,600 tons sent to the bottom—the record this week being 12, as against 20 last week.

"Do you value perfect health ?

"Do you want a good figure ?

"You should and can have BOTH."

You should have the health that brings the joy of STRENGTH, VIGOR, ENERGY, and ENTHUSIASM into your life. And you CAN have it simply by following my instructions.

As a child I was sickly, puny and ill formed and spent much of my early life in the effort to overcome these handicaps.

I WAS SUCCESSFUL. I am a living example of what can be accomplished by intelligently following my system.

Millions have seen in my photoplays, "Neptune's Daughter" and "A Daughter of the Gods," the evidence of the success of my method.

Having demonstrated the practicability of my system, I broadened and adapted it to meet the needs of others. The results which I have accomplished for myself I have helped others to attain for themselves. Many thousands of the most intelligent women in the world have taken my course of instructions. Their success has made them my friends—a large number of my pupils have come to me through the recommendations of others

I won't tell you what I can do. I will tell you what I have done.

I have spent much time in the preparation of my new book, "The Body Beautiful." It is fully illustrated with photographs of myself, explaining my system, and can be had for the asking.

Surely it's worth your while to find out more about what I can do for you!

Send two-cent stamp for "The Body Beautiful" to-day.

ANNETTE KELLERMANN
Suite 807W. 12 W. 31st St., N. Y.

MENDETS — WONDER MONEY MAKERS mend leaks instantly in all utensils, hot water bags, etc. Insert and tighten. 10c and 25c a package postpaid. AGENTS WANTED. Collette Mfg. Co. Box 444-A, Amsterdam, N.Y.

In the Realm of King Cotton

Continued from page 1009

the seed so tightly that it would take days to separate by hand what machinery will now do in a very few minutes. After it is ginned and baled, the cotton is ready for the market. This is done at the warehouse or elsewhere, through an agent, who may charge one dollar or more for each bale. Many of the farmers make their own sales, the buyers bidding against each other for the product. Not a few of those who raise the crop on credit have to market it through the bankers or storekeepers, who advance the money in the way of cash or goods at high rates of interest. As a result the poor planter gets a comparatively small amount for his crop. The creditor does the figuring, and the results are so disappointing that the colored cotton growers have a song the chorus of which is:

Naught's a naught, figger's a figger.
All for the white man and none for the nigger.

In fact, the negro has a large part in making the crop. More than one-third of the cotton farms are cultivated by him, either as owner or tenant.

AT Greensboro, N. C., I visited the biggest overall mill of the world. I mean the biggest cotton mill that makes cloth for overalls. The technical name of the cloth is blue denim. It is sold everywhere in the stores, and almost every workingman wears it. The mill I visited makes nothing else. It is now engaged on rush orders for the United States Government, turning out 150,000 yards daily. It takes three and a half yards of the stuff to make a suit of overalls for a man. The daily output is enough to make suits for more than 40,000 men, and the yearly output would furnish suits for 13,000,000 and leave some to spare. The factory can make 47,000,000 yards in one year.

This White Oak mill I take as a sample of the great cotton manufacturing industry of the South. The cotton can be brought from the fields almost to the mill. The motive power of the mill is electricity generated in some of the largest turbines ever erected in the United States. The labor is white, mostly women and girls from the country about and the mountains nearby. The employees work 60 hours a week and strikes are almost unknown. The company has a mill village of 500 houses of from three to six rooms each. The rent is $4 a month, and this includes electric lights and running water. Wages are about the same as those of the cotton mills of New England.

A generation ago New England was making almost all of our cotton goods. Now, as far as the amount of cotton consumed is concerned, the factories of the South are manufacturing more than all the other states of the Union combined. In 1916 they ate up almost one-third of our whole cotton crop of about 12,000,000 bales, of which something like 5,000,000 bales were exported. Of the balance the cotton-growing states used 4,000,000 bales, while New England and the other states consumed the remainder. The South has now almost 800 cotton mills, with 900,000 spindles. The capital invested is a quarter of a billion dollars.

THE size of a cotton mill is measured by the number of spindles. There are hundreds and thousands of them in a great modern mill. In all the world there are now, in round numbers, 139,000,000 spindles. Of these spindles the United States has easily more than one-fifth of the whole. More than half the cotton mills are to be found in Great Britain, which is by far the biggest cotton manufacturer of the world. It has 57,000,000 spindles. It makes more than twice as much cloth as we do, and it gets the most of its raw cotton from us. The profit is hundreds of millions of dollars.

Japan has now almost 3,000,000 spindles and its business is growing enormously on account of the war. It expects to gobble the big market of China, and it has flooded the German province of Shantung with Japanese goods.

LANCASHIRE County in England is the center of the spinning industry and the place where more than half of all the raw cotton we sell is turned into cloth. I have stood in the town of Oldham and counted six hundred factory chimneys without turning round. I found them still making cotton at Blackburn, where the first spinning jenny was set up, and also at Bolton, where Compton invented the spinning mule.

It was at Omdurman, near Khartum, almost 2,000 miles up the Nile, that I saw cotton ginned, spun and woven much as it was manufactured before Whitney gave us his gin. Omdurman was a town of several hundred thousand natives. The cotton market was in the midst of several thousand acres of mud huts, which stretched out on all sides of it. The sheds and the streets were filled with cotton, which was brought in straw bags and sold as it was when picked from the plants.

Prior to the war all of the great powers had started movements to create a cotton supply of their own. England was pushing the industry in East India, and was making experiments in her semi-tropical colonies. I found the Germans experimenting with raising cotton opposite Zanzibar in German East Africa. The attempt to gobble Mesopotamia and a large part of the Turkish empire is to some extent founded upon the value of the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris as a future cotton supply.

IT is due largely to climate and water supply that we find so many of our cotton factories in New England. One-third of them are in Massachusetts. There is one county there which contains more than one-fifth of all the spindles now working on American soil. It has three times as many cotton mills as Georgia, which is the third cotton manufacturing state in the South, and about three million more spindles than either North or South Carolina, the two states which lead in the making of such goods among the states of the cotton belt. This is Bristol County, in which are Fall River, New Bedford and Taunton. Next to that county is Providence, R. I., and after it is Middlesex County, Mass., which has more than a million spindles, equaling Alabama, and surpassing all other Southern states with the exception of Georgia and North and South Carolina. The reasons are to a large extent geographical. The cotton centers are close to the sea, and they have the right climatic conditions.

It is largely due to geographical reasons that the most of the cotton mills of the Southern states are located in the Piedmont, or foothills of the Appalachian Mountains. They are to be found on the edge of the highlands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, where the climate is right, the rainfall plentiful, the labor supply from the small farms and the mountains abundant, and where electric power has been generated from the mountain streams.

There are now cotton factories all the way from Lynchburg, Va., to Atlanta, Ga., and I might say all the way to New Orleans. From the borders of Virginia to those of Georgia, along the Southern Railroad, the country is one almost continuous mill village, and many new factories are being erected.

THE character of goods manufactured in the South is rapidly changing. Not many years ago only the cheaper and coarser kinds of cottons were made and a large part of the industry was devoted to yarns. Today the mills are making cottons of every description. They range from coarse sheetings to the finest of muslins.

There are a large number of knitting mills. Those along the Southern Railroad have more than 23,000 knitting machines and 61,000 spindles. Many of these knitting mills are now making goods for the army, and the same is true of a large number of the cotton factories. The business of all the mills has been much greater since war was declared.

Bible Students and Christian Workers

Do you know your Bible? Do you feel the need of a more thorough, practical working knowledge of the Word of God? Are you awake to the means of securing it economically while engaged in your usual occupation? This means is by correspondence.

Correspondence Bible Study

For all unable to attend a Bible Institute, correspondence Bible study is a practical, efficient and economical method of securing a deeper, clearer knowledge of the Bible. A Tennessee student writes: — "What marvelous light I have received through these lessons! Long, long years I pondered over things in the precious Book that I now understand." You will become just as enthusiastic as soon as you start your first course. We cannot urge too strongly all who wish a more thorough knowledge of God's Word to take up the work with us now.

The Moody Bible Institute

offers eight strong courses for systematic Bible study by correspondence. It has a fully equipped department, exclusively devoted to teaching by correspondence. You will be instructed by competent, practical Christian teachers. Over 5000 students in all parts of the world last year studied one or more of our courses. Thousands of Christian people will this year begin correspondence study for the first time. Will you be one of them?

Mail The Coupon

Fill in the coupon, mail to us, and we will send you our prospectus giving information about all our courses. Now is the time to act. We have a course for everyone, young or old, beginner, student or instructor. Our courses will satisfy your need.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Timothy 2:15

The Moody Bible Institute
153 Institute Pl., Dept. F-8 Chicago, Ill.

Send This Coupon for Prospectus

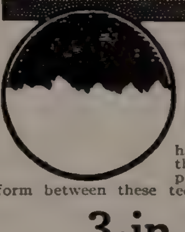
THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE, Dept. F-8
153 Institute Pl., Chicago, Illinois

Send me your prospectus giving complete information regarding your eight courses in correspondence Bible study.

Name..

City..

State..



The Edge of Every Razor

has tiny saw-like teeth invisible to the naked eye. The unavoidable presence of moisture causes rust to form between these teeth. That's why razors "pull."

3-in-One Oil

is a positive preventive of razor-rust. Moisten thumb and forefinger with a drop of 3-in-One and draw the blade gently between them. Do this before and after shaving and rust will never form on the cutting edge, because oil and water do not mix.

3-in-One rubbed into strops makes the blade adhere to the leather.

Sold at all good stores in 50c, 25c and 15c bottles; also in 25c Handy Oil Cans.

FREE Liberal sample of 3-in-One Oil and "Razor Saver" Circular.

3-in-One Oil Co., 165CR Bdwy., N.Y.

REGISTERED 3 IN 1 TRADE MARK

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.

Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

Rugs at Low Prices

SAVE MONEY by sending now for the latest Olson Rug Book, illustrating in actual colors the newest Wilton, Brussels, Velvet and Axminster Rugs—an unusually large collection—in rich, deep colors, blendings and shades to match any decorative scheme. The Olson Selling Plan saves you $5.00 to $15.00, and with each rug you get an ironclad guarantee of satisfaction or money back. Forty-three years of square dealing have made the Olson Rug Co. the largest exclusive mail-order rug house in America. Better write for this wonderful FREE Rug Book today.

Olson Rug Co., Dept. A30, 40 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

You can be quickly cured, if you

STAMMER

Send 10 cents coin or stamps for 70 page book on Stammering and Stuttering. "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I cured myself after stammering and stuttering 20 years.
BENJAMIN N. BOGUE, 1100 N. Illinois St., Indianapolis, Ind.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1988 Ry. Exch., Chicago

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

MAGAZINE CLUBS AT SPECIAL PRICES

(PRICES SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE)

Subscriptions are all for one year. Magazines can go to different addresses except in the few cases noted otherwise

Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
McCall's	.75
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Today's Housewife (pattern).	.75
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Woman's World	.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
People's Home Journal	.75
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.25	Save $1.25
Today's Housewife (pattern)	.75
McCall's	.75
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Every Week	1.00
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Ladies' World	1.00
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Boys' Magazine	1.00
Christian Herald (1 yr.)	$2.00	$2.50	Save $1.00
Am. Poultry Ad. (2 yrs.)	1.00
Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen	.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.10	Save $1.40
Mother's Magazine	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.50	Save $1.00
Etude (Music Lovers)	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.60	Save 65 cts.
Modern Priscilla	1.25
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.60	Save $1.15
McCall's	.75
Woman's World	.50
Plain & Fancy Needlework	.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Delineator (or Everybody's)	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.00	Save $1.50
McCall's	.75
Ladies' World	1.00
People's Home Journal	.75

Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
American Magazine	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Woman's Home Companion	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Pictorial Review	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.10	Save $1.15
Etude (Music Lovers)	1.50
McCall's	.75
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.50	Save $1.50
*Delineator	1.50
*Everybody's	1.50
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.50	Save 50 cts.
Youth's Companion	2.00
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.50	Save $1.50
Review of Reviews	3.00
Christian Herald	$2.00	$3.75	Save $1.00
McCall's	.75
Youth's Companion (new sub)	2.00
Christian Herald	$2.00	$4.00	Save $1.00
*Woman's Home Companion	1.50
*American	1.50
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald	$2.00	$4.10	Save 65 cts.
Modern Priscilla	1.25
Woman's Home Companion	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$4.15	Save 85 cts.
Woman's Home Companion	1.50
American Boy	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$4.50	Save 50 cts.
Pictorial Review	1.50
Woman's Home Companion	1.50
Christian Herald	$2.00	$4.75	Save $2.25
*YouthsCompanion(new sub)	2.00
*Review of Reviews	3.00
(*Must go to same address)

EASY CLUBBING PLAN

To Find the Price of Any Club

EXAMPLE

Christian Herald	Class 30
Pictorial Review	Class 30
McCall's	Class 12
Total class numbers	72
Multiply by	5
Price of club	$3.60

You can make up your own combination of magazines from the list below.

Add the Class Numbers of the Magazines selected, multiply the sum by five and the result will be the cost. No club must be less than $2.10, nor can the price of any club be less than the regular subscription price of any one of the magazines in the club.

WITH CHRISTIAN HERALD

Class No.		Reg. Price	Spec'l Price
—	Adventure(twice-a-month)	$5.00	$4.50
23	American Boy	3.50	2.65
17	American Cookery	3.00	2.25
30	American Magazine	3.50	3.00
17	Boys' Life (Boy Scouts)	3.00	2.25
17	Boys' Magazine	3.00	2.25
70	Century	6.00	5.00
30	CHRISTIAN HERALD	2.00	——
50	Collier's Weekly	4.50	4.00
—	Cosmopolitan	3.50	3.50
—	Country Gentleman	3.00	3.00
80	Country Life in America	7.00	5.50
55	Current Opinion	5.00	4.25
25	Delineator	3.50	2.75
17	Designer	3.00	2.35
27	Etude	3.50	2.50
15	Every Week	3.00	2.25
25	Everybody's	3.50	2.75
35	Garden Magazine	4.00	3.25
—	Good Health	5.00	4.50
—	Good Housekeeping	3.50	3.50
70	Harper's Magazine	6.00	5.00
17	Health Culture	3.00	2.35
—	Housewives Magazine	4.00	3.50
25	Illustrated World	3.50	2.75
80	Independent	6.00	5 50
55	John Martin's Book	5.00	4.25
—	Ladies' Home Journal	3.50	3.50
15	Ladies' World	3.00	2.25
—	Literary Digest	5.00	4.50
20	Little Folks	3.00	2.25
10	McCall's	2.50	2.10
25	McClure's	3.50	2.75
30	Metropolitan	3.50	3.00
22	Modern Priscilla	3.25	2.60
23	Mother's Magazine	3.50	2.10
—	Needlecraft	2.35	2.35

WITH CHRISTIAN HERALD

Class No.		Reg. Price	Spec'l Price
50	Outing	5.00	4.00
80	Outlook	6.00	5.50
20	Pathfinder	3.00	2.50
25	Pearson's	3.50	2.75
12	People's Home Journal	2.75	2.10
6	People's Popular Monthly	2.50	2.10
23	Physical Culture	3.50	2.65
30	Pictorial Review	3.50	3.00
30	Popular Science Monthly	3.50	3.00
—	RedBook	4.00	3.50
40	Review of Reviews	5.00	3.50
—	Saturday Evening Post	3.50	3.50
50	St. Nicholas	5.00	4.00
70	Scientific American	6.00	5.00
50	Scribner's	5.00	4.00
12	Today's Housewife (after Oct. 1 1917)	2.75	2.10
35	Travel	5.00	4.25
30	Woman's Home Comp.	3.50	3.00
12	Woman's Magazine	2.75	2.10
7	Woman's World	2.50	2.10
50	World's Work	5.00	4.00
40	Youth's Companion	4.00	3.50

SPECIAL PRICES FOR 2 YEARS

(Does NOT include Christian Herald, which can be added for 1 year at extra cost of $1.50)

50	American Magazine	$3.00	$2.50
40	Delineator	3.00	2.00
40	Everybody's	3.00	2.00
30	Every Week	2.00	1.50
50	Metropolitan	3.00	2.50
40	Modern Priscilla	2.50	2.00
50	Pictorial Review	3.00	2.50
50	Woman's Home Comp.	3.00	2.50

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for October 7

Christ's Yoke—What It Is and How to Wear It

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topics. Matt. 11 : 25–30
(Consecration Meeting)

THE yoke, the symbol of bondage and of burden-bearing, Jesus makes the symbol of union with him. Every tribe conquered by the Romans passed under the yoke. Every ox in the Orient bore marks of the wooden frame. And Jesus calls us to take upon us his yoke. He promises that it will be easy and that by wearing it we shall find rest to our souls. May we not understand that we are asked to take upon us but half of a double yoke, the other end of which is borne by the Saviour? Thus we become yoke-fellows with him, and the yoke that binds us is not a heavy beam of oak; only the powerful bond of love. It was for the love of us that he took upon himself the form of our humanity, ministered for three years and made the supreme sacrifice on Calvary. Can we, appreciating the full measure of his love, withhold our complete devotion? The yoke of Christ is therefore his love, training us to do his will and work. How shall we wear it? Proudly, as those commissioned for a great cause, and humbly, as those who feel their utter impotence in the presence of his power. The ox wears the yoke successfully only as he obeys the orders of his driver, and we wear Christ's yoke well only when his Spirit is working out in us his will.

Korea, a Nation Born in a Day

Epworth League Topic. Isa. 66 : 8; Zech. 8 : 20–22; Isa. 60 : 1–3

THE Christian history of Korea is a history of marvelous development through the grace of God and the power of his Spirit. The first Christian missionaries found the Koreans buried in the deepest of superstitions, convinced of the worthlessness of the faiths they knew and looking forward in dread toward a tomorrow whose evils they could only guess. In 1884 the first Methodist missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. Robert S. Maclay, reached Seoul and received from the king permission to begin their activities, teaching, healing and evangelizing. Other missionaries sailed in 1885. The force was gradually increased as the work developed. The Presbyterian Church also established strong missions in Korea. For the first time in the history of the nation, there was a school for girls, and in many other ways the missionaries opened the gates of progress for the Korean people. The first baptism in the Methodist Mission was administered in 1887. Three years may seem a long time to wait for the first results, yet missionaries in other fields frequently labored for a generation before their seed bore fruit. In 1889 the first Methodist Church was established in the empire. Korea seemed to open to the Gospel as a flower opens to the sun, and the people pressed into the missions, into the schools, into meetings for evangelism, until the growth of the work overwhelmed the missionary agencies. The church was not, however, without opposition. A few governors opposed the new movement, and as with other peoples, Korea has her honored saints who have languished in prison and have felt the lash of authority. Today the Methodist Mission, in union with the Presbyterian Church, maintains an academy and college at Pyeng Yang with twenty instructors and over five hundred students. At other centers similar work is maintained, and evangelistic missions cover the once Hermit Kingdom, their meetings thronged by people earnestly seeking the message of salvation. Koreans make enthusiastic Christians. As with the early church in apostolic times, the finding of the Christ is only preliminary to the telling of the story, the Korean Christians, as they live day by day, witnessing for their Saviour. The present missionary force in Korea comprises 259 foreign missionaries, assisted by 1,926 Korean pastors. There are 1,493 native churches, and churches are being opened at the rate of one a day. Korea's Pentecost came in 1907, in a revival which swept the country and brought 50,000 sinners to salvation through Christ. Readers may secure material for this topic by addressing Ralph E. Diffendorfer, Department of Missionary Education, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or by addressing the Central Office of the Epworth League, 740 North Rush Street, Chicago, Ill.

◆

THE TROUBLE. "Now, if I haven't left my purse under the pillow!" "Oh, well, your servant is honest, isn't she?" "That's just it. She'll take it to my wife."

UNREGENERATE BIRDS. An old lady in the country gives the proceeds of the eggs her hens lay on Sunday to the church. Fortunately for the church, nearly all her hens are Sabbath-breakers.—Exchange.

DU PONT AMERICAN INDUSTRIES

IS THE ENEMY ON YOUR FARM?

This is a war of endurance. Men and money are important but—food counts most. Soldiers who fight must eat. So must their dependents at home. The world must be fed.

Every idle acre of reclaimable land on your farm aids the enemy. Every acre of untilled soil deprives many needy mouths of food.

The sinking of each food ship is a disaster, but the idle acres of America could grow more food per year than all of the enemy's submarines can destroy.

Fight the enemy now, with

DU PONT

RED CROSS FARM POWDER

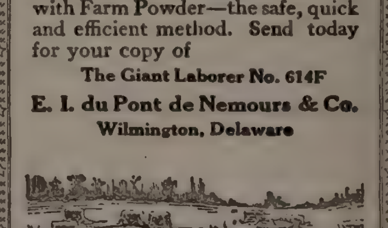
It is the most efficient reclaimer of cut over, boulder strewn or swamp land. It helps to solve the labor problem, enables one man to do the work of many and does it better and quicker.

Get our big book free

Learn the facts on farming with Farm Powder—the safe, quick and efficient method. Send today for your copy of

The Giant Laborer No. 614F

E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.
Wilmington, Delaware



How to Relieve DEAFNESS

Science has at last devised a remarkable instrument for the treatment of Deafness. Just a few minutes' application in your own home each day is required. Users testify to wonderful restoration of hearing. If you have head noises—if you are only slightly hard of hearing or almost totally deaf, don't delay—the Aurosage may be the means of bringing back your hearing.

Wonderful New Method

The Aurosage calls into play the dormant organs of the ear, strengthens them by exercise and breaks down the catarrh congestion which causes 95% of all deafness. Try the Aurosage ten days free in your own home without a penny in advance we gladly send it to you by prepaid parcel post no cost to you if it fails to help your hearing. Write today for valuable booklet and our great FREE offer of the new 96 Tone Mears Ear Phone. Address

MEARS EAR PHONE CO.
45 W. 34th St. Dept. 89 New York City

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Miss Clara Girard	$5.00
Alice R Tunnicliff	5.00
Morris Sisters	5.00
Mrs J H Armstrong	5.00
Mrs Franklin Paul	5.00
Eva Thompson	5.00
G W Parker	5.00
Coral V Norman	5.00
Mrs Wm Mason	5.00
Mr and Mrs H L Millis	5.00
Mrs Geo Miller	5.00
N N, Iowa	5.00
Mr H C Boss	5.00
Mrs E P Skelton	5.00
J E N, Columbus, N Mex	5.00
H S Hubbard	5.00
G W Perry	5.00
"In His Name," Hondo, Tex	5.00
Mrs Minnie Castle	5.00
Martha Hall	5.00
Friend, Franklin, Nebr	5.00
Mrs J Humphrey	5.00
M E Cronk Buffington	5.00
Mrs Sarah English	5.00
Mrs Joe English	5.00
Mrs M J Brown	5.00
Billy Ocair	5.00
J M Hunt	5.00
Nellie H Dow	5.00
Mrs W H Butbe	5.00
S E L, Armington, Mont	5.00
Mary E Peebles	5.00
Miss Anna Cole	5.00
W O Porter	5.00
—, Oswego, N Y	5.00
Carrie A Walker	5.00
A F Richmond	5.00
Mrs S H Bratton	5.00
Bible School, First Bapt Ch, Steubenville, Ohio	5.00
R Primmer	5.00
Miss Edith Binns	5.00
Mrs Josh Farster	5.00
M E S S Box Elder, Nebr	5.00
Clarence Johnson	5.00
"In His Name," Maynard, Mass	5.00
Mrs Perry Sickles	5.00
Q Q Q Washington, D C	5.00
Mrs J T Meeks	5.00
Miss M Gardner	5.00
Lillian A Evans	5.00
Mrs C H Niermeyer	5.00
Wm Chisholm	5.00
"In His Name," Wisconsin	5.00
Friend, Capron, Ill	5.00
Mrs G F Easton	5.00
M Ethel Bennett	5.00
——, Racine, Wis	5.00
Eva Corbett	5.00
Mr Fred Ziegler	5.00
Eunice E Moore	5.00
"J," Fairfield	5.00
S B McBride, D D	5.00
Mr Addison E Dunbar	5.00
"In memory of Mrs A L Lewis"	5.00
C T Joseph	5.00
Mrs W H Dyche	3.00
John Klompenhower	3.00
Henry A Barker	3.00
Misses K & H Knight and J White	3.00
Katie McPhee	3.00
Katie Flory	3.00
Marie E Fisher	3.00
Mrs Wm Hutton	3.00
Mrs I J Lewellen	3.00
S S Assn, Manchester, Ohio	3.00
Mrs A L Woodard	3.00
Emma H Kingsley	3.00
In memory of Sister	3.00
Friend, Olathe, Colo	3.00
Mrs Jennie M Barnes	3.00
J B Welch	3.00
James W Dugan	3.00
Nora C Shipley	3.00
Mr and Mrs L H Brisbine	3.00
E C R	3.00
Woman's Miss'y Circle, First Baptist Ch, Waterford, Conn	3.00
Mrs R A Shoemaker	3.00
——, Chicopee Falls, Mass	3.00
Mrs W A Orr	3.00
Mrs O L Stamm	3.00
"C, Montana"	3.00
Idella Patterson	3.00
W I Humphreys	3.00
Miss Kate Blaich	3.00
Mrs M A Keeler	3.00
Mrs Alice Allison	3.00
Mrs J C Brandt	3.00
Mr and Mrs Wm Lockyer	3.00
Mr and Mrs E F Snyder	2.50
Mrs J B Marshall	2.50

A D Frierson	$2.50
E G Carlson	2.50
Mrs Ed Hoffman and family	2.50
W A Wright	2.50
Amelia W Young	2.50
Sarah F Graves	2.50
Thos C Beauchamp	2.50
Mrs Hattie E Holmes	2.00
F O X	2.00
Glaydes Witherstay	2.00
——, Chicago, Ill	2.00

J R S	$2.00
Mrs R H Mitchell	2.00
Amalia Blemkerl	2.00
——, Elmira, N Y	2.00
Robert B O'Neill	2.00
C H Hill	2.00
Friend, Calumet, Mich	2.00
Mrs J L McDonald	2.00
W A Orr, Jr	2.00
Deborah Chidester	2.00
Geo A Huntington	2.00

L E Bennett	$1.00
Mrs Hattie Dresser	1.00
Mrs A D New	1.00
Madge Ross	1.00
Mrs M I Kirkpatrick	1.00
Friend, Gainesville, Tex	1.00
Friend, Dunns Sta, Pa	1.00
B L Boyce	1.00
"For the Master's Sake," M G	1.00
Mrs F H Avery	1.00

John D Draper	$1.00
L McConnell	1.00
S A Maloney	1.00
Mrs Julia A Leonard	1.00
Mrs C A Lester	1.00
Cornelius Waples	1.00
Mrs Beulah D Welch	1.00
Mrs E Baker Evans	1.00
A Friend of the Suffering	1.00
Mrs A A Correll	1.00
Mrs John Waterman	1.00

Mrs Addie Long	$ .50
Nial Moddy	.50
E A Reynolds	.50
Mrs I E S	.50
May Nortenbee	.50
Mrs Husbay	.50
Mr R Heradin	.50
Mrs N Benn	.50
Mrs Mae Doffee	.50
Rev S L Livingston	.50
Miss Edith R Riddle	.50
M B Archer	.25
W D Merry	.25
Ed Merry	.25

Mrs C L Hogle	$2.50
Leonard Nutter	1.50
Mrs E E Lumley	1.00
— Spokane, Wash	1.00
Subscriber, Lincoln University Pa	1.00
— Factoryville, Pa	1.00
L M Brown	1.00
Mary Zaleswki	1.00
Mrs M R Jackson	1.00
M E Ferguson	1.00
I M	1.00

Serbian irregular troops marching into captivity as prisoners of war

R S Williams	2.00
F D Fowler	2.00
Mrs H D Smith	2.00
Jr C E Soc, Gordon, Pa	2.00
——, Newark, Ohio	2.00
Mrs Gillis M Doty	2.00
Mr and Mrs C G Marquis	2.00
Trail Hitter Phila Pa	2.00
Lulu Pearce	2.00
Mrs J M Bechtel	2.00
Salina Zook	2.00
D R McDowell	2.00
L C P Manchester, Ohio	2.00
E P Frisbee	2.00
E H Kimberley	2.00
Mrs C E, Parkesburg, Pa	2.00
—, Meadville, Pa	2.00
Geo L Kimmel	2.00
Mrs P E Hoffman	2.00
Mrs S L Block	2.00
Fannie McBratney	2.00
Mary S Dickson	2.00
Mrs L A Shaw	2.00
F R C, Akron, Colo	2.00
Mrs Ethel Keep	2.00
Subscriber, Dandridge, Tenn	2.00
Sarah H Bruce	2.00
Ira Clynick	2.00
Addie James	2.00
"In memory of a Dear One"	2.00
Wm C Cowperwaite	2.00
Mr and Mrs B Nikkel	2.00
W A Bradley	2.00
James Huddleson	2.00
Mrs H D Oldfield	2.00
Mr and Mrs Thomas Hunter	2.00
Frederick C Frese	2.00
"In memory of my deceased husband"	2.00
Mrs S McCoy	2.00
Mrs Martha J McKinney	2.00

J H Temple	2.00
Mrs A Franklin	2.00
Sympathizer, Lenoir City, Tenn	2.00
J M Payne	2.00
Mrs E S Overland	2.00
Mrs Mary G Drake	2.00
Miss Elsie Hueni	2.00
Catherine Ricketts	1.50
'In His Name," Charlotte, Mich	1.50
Dr H M Griffith	1.50
Harriette A Sherrill	1.50
R W Libby	1.50
Mr and Mrs Henry C Peake	1.50
Mrs Minnie Woodard	1.50
Friend, Hurdsfield, N Dak	1.00
E J Savage	1.00
Mrs A Beardsley	1.00
Mrs Elizabeth Hinkle	1.00
Friend, Passaic, N J	1.00
Subscriber, Vermont	1.00
"So Side	1.00
H S Keuning	1.00
Annie L Brubaker	1.00
Reader, Providence, R I	1.00
Mrs S C Lummis	1.00
Mary Owen	1.00
Amy Baird	1.00
Reader, Glenndale, Md	1.00
Geo S Gass	1.00
J A McRae	1.00
——, St. Petersburg, Fla	1.00
Mrs L H Watts	1.00
S H Ayers	1.00
Mrs W P Gregory	1.00
Y X Z	1.00
Wm A Lummis	1.00
Mrs S Groenfelelt	1.00
Mrs M P Rindlaub	1.00
B I	1.00
Mrs N J Wallace	1.00

M C Rauchenstein	1.00
Mrs M I Fowler	1.00
Mrs Joseph Comstock	1.00
A K Creamery	1.00
Miss Kate Hatcher	1.00
"In His Name," Boonville, N Y	1.00
Helen Knappenberger	1.00
Chas H Park	1.00
Mary C McNown	1.00
——, Burton, Wash	1.00
W J Sturges	1.00
Miss Minnie Baker	1.00
Mrs F Ward	1.00
Sarah P Courtney	1.00
——, Silver Hlil, W Va	1.00
J Magunson	1.00
Mrs H F, Weston, Mo	1.00
Miss Theckla Horstedt	1.00
Primary Class, Presby S S Elkland, Pa	1.00
Mrs J E Massee	1.00
Rev John F Saarinen	1.00
Mrs M L Shoemaker	1.00
Mrs Julia A Blackwood	1.00
Wm McNeely	1.00
Mrs A L Smith	1.00
S S Class, Mt Zion, Presby Ch, Wisachy, S Car	1.00
Mrs H Doyle	1.00
Mrs Anna P Unger	1.00
John L Hoffman	1.00
Mrs P B Beck	1.00
Mrs E S English	1.00
Anonymous, Magdalena, N Mex	1.00
Mrs C C Busch	1.00
Mrs George Voter	1.00
L B H, Pawtucket, R I	1.00
Luther Ward	1.00

Mrs H D Long	1.00
Mary C Van Dyke	1.00
Miss Ella Hunter	1.00
Miss Mary E Shepherd	1.00
Mrs M G Day	1.00
Mrs Elizabeth Lemon	1.00
H A Dewees	1.00
Kate A Rankin	1.00
M M Chapman	1.00
Mrs F L Tuttle	1.00
——, Kyserike, N Y	1.00
Mrs B F Ford	1.00
E M Nottingham	1.00
Mrs A W Giddens	1.00
Mary J Bewley	1.00
Mrs Frank Putman	1.00
Rev. Giles B Cooke	1.00
Sarah Gore	1.00
Sympathizer, Bradley, Calif.	1.00
Mrs Ruth C Switzer	1.00
Interested, Bloomville, N Y	1.00
Friend, Ontario, Va	1.00
Mr J W Rankin	1.00
"In His Name," Boonville, N Y	1.00
Mrs P M Rider	1.00
Mrs J Burt	1.00
Mr G Burt	1.00
Mrs C Alexander	1.00
E B, Martins Ferry, Ohio	1.00
Hattie E Toland	1.00
Miss R F Kinsman	1.00
Mrs D J Ingle	1.00
Mrs J J Jones	1.00
A Friend, Thiensville, Wisc	1.00
G Curtis	1.00
Mrs Effie Harvey	1.00
Joseph Springer	1.00
Mrs M A Francis	1.00
Mrs G J Flint	1.00
Blanche L Mac Donald	1.00
——, Stewartville, Minn	1.00
Mrs W H Sedan	.50

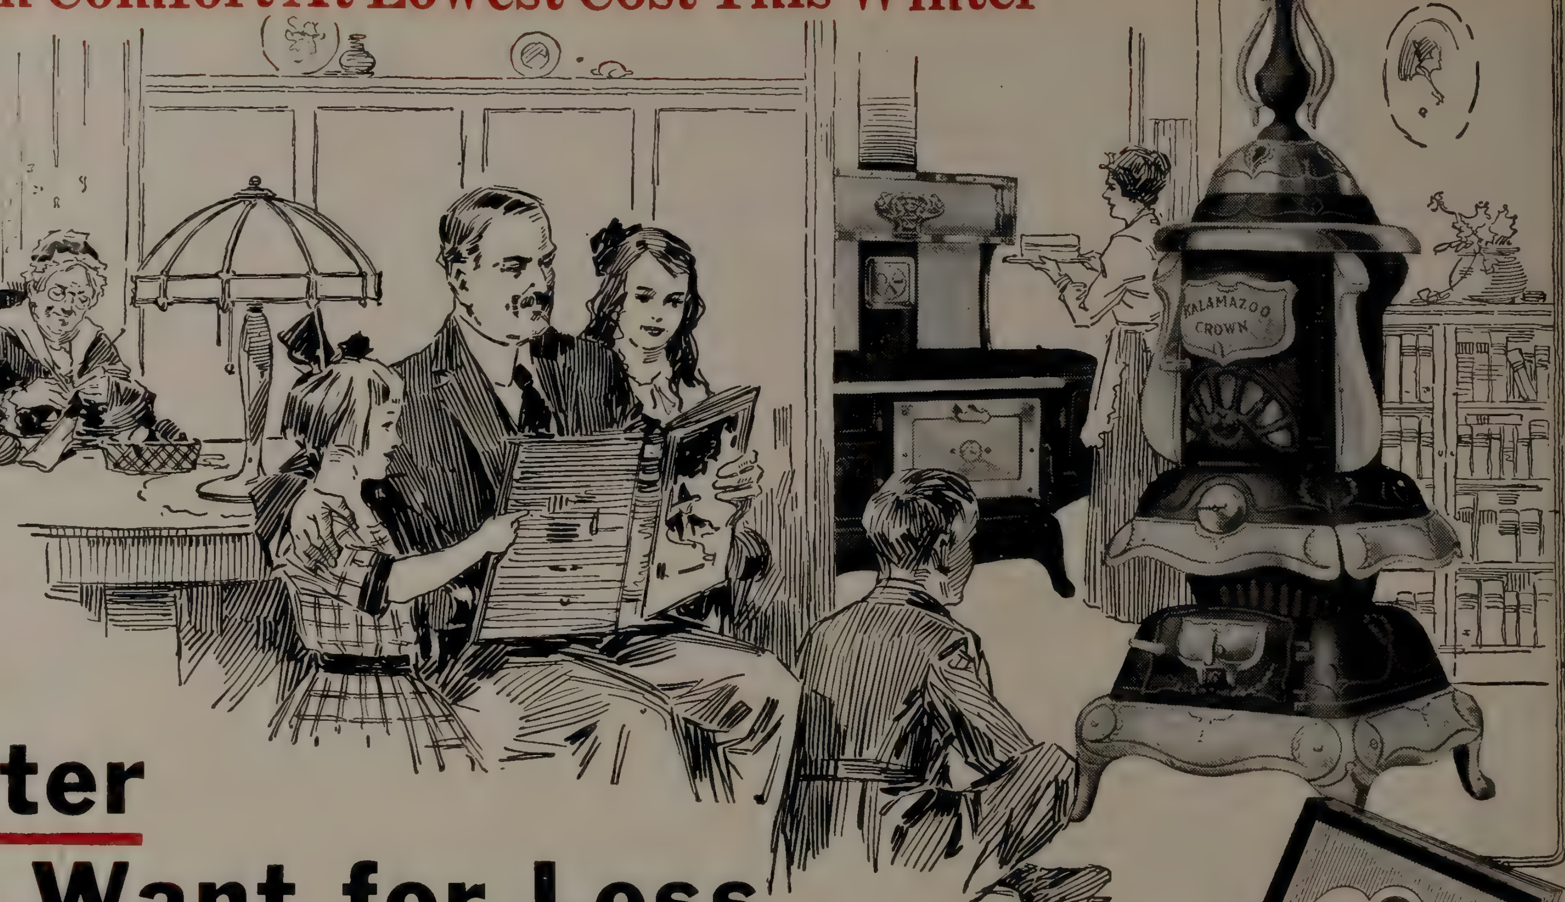
Aret Shafer	.25
Thurman Hazzard	.25
T R Miley	.25
Johnnie Shepherd	.25
Mrs S W Price	.25
Mrs Willie Brooks	.25
L W English	.25
M R K, Winterset, Iowa	.25
Mona Burt	.25
Mrs A F Parry	.25
Hertha Yaeger	2.00
Edith Landwehr	2.00
'In His Name," Walworth, NY	2.00
C E K, San Diego, Calif	2.00
C H & S E Rubencame	2.00
Mrs J D F	2.00
Jane A Wagner	2.00
S F Young	2.00
Mr & Mrs Baxter Huston	2.00
Agnes G Hurd	2.00
"L & A," Statesville, N Car	2.00
— Keene, N H	2.00
Miss Mable Swanson	2.00
I H N, Vosburg, Pa	2.00
Mrs Maggie Kyler & Mrs Hannah Puderburgh	2.00
Ella M Butler	2.00
Mrs J M Horne	2.50
Miss Vinnie Shue	2.50
Robt Stone	2.50
Union S S, McAllen, Tex	2.50
Arthur Cunningham	2.50
Miss Linnie J Long	2.50
Mr & Mrs Cecil McQuain	2.50
Mr & Mrs C Shackelford	2.50
Little Boy, Stanton, Mich	2.50
Mrs Mina West	2.50
Graded School, Sullivan, Wis	1.50
Friend, Canonsburg, Pa	1.50
— Alton, Ill	1.00

D E Houghtaling	1.00
— Tomahawk, Wis	1.00
Mrs Anna L Thomas	1.00
— Rochester, N Y	1.00
Margaret S Mathews	1.00
Friend, Summit Hill, Pa	1.00
Miss Lillie Summers	1.00
Friend, Hackensack, N J	1.00
Friend, Ozark, Ark	1.00
G A Beidler	1.00
Friend, Phila, Pa	1.00
H Miller	1.00
H Oudesluys	1.00
Mrs R V Tompkins	1.00
Miss Arletta M Ely	1.00
Clay Co., Ind	1.00
S R Stanton	1.00
— Adrian, Mich	1.00
Mrs Cowley's S S Class, Berea College, Berea Ky	1.00
Mrs T Mendenhall	1.00
Friend, Hudson, Mass	1.00
Friend, Williamstown, N J	1.00
Mrs J A James	1.00
Mrs Butchel	1.00
Cradle Roll Mite Battle Run S S. Williamsport, Pa	1.00
Mrs M B W	1.00
Friend, Dublin, N H	1.00
Mrs J M Clogh	1.00
Mr D H Fairbanks	1.00
Mrs D H Fairbanks	1.00
Mrs Rose B Teass	1.00
Mrs C E Thomson	1.00
M W Taylor	1.00
Mrs Winnie Cope	1.00

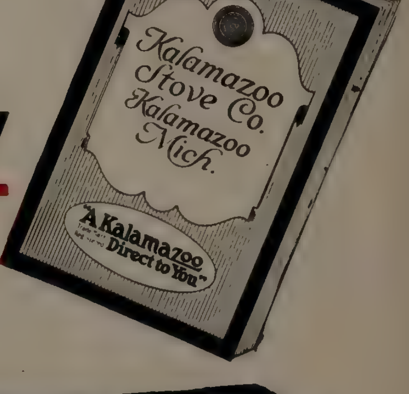
Mrs Geo F Major	$1.00
E G W	1.00
Reader, W Petersboro, N H	1.00
Mrs Susie Shumaker	1.00
H Carroll	1.00
M E B	1.00
Albert M Howland	1.00
Fannie McBratney	1.00
W W Davis	1.00
Friend, Greenwich, Conn	1.00
Mrs G W Hassler	1.00
Mrs Emma Holcombe	1.00
Mrs E Golds	1.00
L W Carnahan	1.00
Two Friends, Greenville, S Car	1.00
Friend, Dickinson, N Dak	1.00
Miss Margaret Hoffman	1.00
Mrs Mildred L Norton	1.00
D A Pipher	1.00
Geraldine O Moak	1.00
Mrs Bodenhamer	1.00
Mrs M H Osborn	1.00
Class No 12, U P S S, Garnett, Kans	1.00
Gertrude Frisbie	1.00
C D Wolfe	1.00
Friend, Independence, Pa	1.00
Mrs S C Shipp	1.00
John Atha	1.00
Miss Mattie E Pierce	1.00
T G Ellis	1.00
Mrs D H Laverty	1.00
Mr & Mrs Alfred Rush	1.00
Mrs L J Nichols	1.00
Walter E Warren	1.00
Earl Lutz	1.00
— Wabasso, Minn	1.00
Mary M Osgood	1.00
Joshua M Crouse	1.00
Myra J Weeks	1.00
Frank C Rideout	1.00
Carrie Martin	1.00
Michael J Hartmann	1.00
Mrs T Leadman	1.00
John Sieh	1.00
Mrs I R D	1.00
Mrs F Schleich	1.00
Mrs D L F	1.00
Mrs Peter Belzer	1.00
Mr & Mrs Samuel Palmer	1.00
Mrs W H Scanland	1.00
A D Scanland	1.00
Mrs J A Deming	1.00
Elsie E Ross	1.00
Cora M Moyer	1.00
J Y Moyer	1.00
Mrs L C Spindle	1.00
Miss Myrtle Hathaway	1.00
L J W	1.00
E Barrar	1.00
Mrs N, Zion City, Ill	1.00
Grants, The lake, Oreg	1.00
Rev Giles B Cooke	1.00
J W Deitz	1.00
Boys & girls of Boardman, Pa	4.00
Martin Wilson	35.00
H., Glidden, Iowa	4.50
Summerset U P Cong., Carlisle, Iowa	41.50
Florence M. Wolstrum	7.50
Mrs Lucy K Neff	1.05
— Luverne, Iowa	60.00
James Allen	12.00
— Canonsburg, Pa	1.75
A. M H	4.00
— Elizabethown, Pa	12.00
Mr & Mrs W H Stiver	4.00
S K Diehl & Family	12.00
Jr C E Soc, Zion Luth Ch, Indiana, Pa	3.50
M E S S, Hortons, Pa	9.25
Rev S Meade	3.50
Edward D Coon	4.00
— Mendota, Va	4.47
Bertha M Moses	6.00
— Washington, N. Car	75.00
Ladies of Mt Olivet Ch, Taylor, Mo	6.00
— S Brewer, Me	4.00
—La Clede, Ill.	.20
Mrs S E Barrows	.10
Follower of Christ	4.00
Wesleyan Meth S S, W Asheville, N Car	4.00
B Y P U, Vancouver Wash.	12.00
Union S S, Murtaugh, Idaho	5.26
Jerusalem Luth S S, Schwenkville, Pa	1.25
C H Olsen	6.00

Make all remittances to the Christian Herald War Relief Fund, Room 93, Bible House, New York City

Live In Comfort At Lowest Cost This Winter



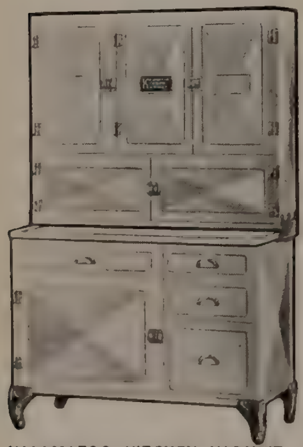
Get the Heater You Want for Less Than You Expected to Pay



Kalamazoo Stove Co. Kalamazoo Mich.
"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

MAKE every dollar do extra duty this fall. Never before did the slogan "A Kalamazoo Direct to You" mean so much as it does right now. Prices everywhere have been going up, up, up. Here is your chance to save money and still get unbeatable quality. Kalamazoo Stoves are known and used from coast to coast and have built up the largest manufacturing plant of its kind in the world.

You can figure your saving for yourself. No one can quote lower prices than the people who make the goods. And in dealing with us you deal direct with manufacturers. You do your own wholesale buying. You know what happens to the products you sell. You know what the final buyer pays. Then think of what you save when you can go direct to the makers of your new stove, range or furnace and get the article you want for the lowest price that anyone can quote.



KALAMAZOO KITCHEN KABINET

All metal, white enamel. The kitchen kabinet that's different. Never cracks; never warps. Always easy to keep clean and sanitary.

Write Today Get Our New Book on Home Heating

Get your new Kalamazoo at once and let it save you a big share of its cost in your saving in fuel bills this winter. Now is the time. A new stove burns less fuel than an old stove. Kalamazoo stoves burn less fuel than other stoves.

Send us your name and let us send you a copy of our new book free. This is the greatest book that we ever published on home heating. It shows the full line of Kalamazoo Stoves, Heaters, Furnaces and Kitchen Ranges. Shows a stove for every home—the style and size you want and at price you want to pay. Shows how Kalamazoos are made and why we can give you so much for your money—shows photographs of our big warerooms where thousands of Kalamazoos are packed and crated waiting for shipment—shows photographs of homes of our customers and their letters telling exactly what you want to know in getting the right answer to YOUR heating problem.

QUICK SHIPMENT—NO WAITING

Every Kalamazoo product shown in our book is stocked in our big warehouse, ready for immediate shipment.

"Your promptness was a revelation to people here," writes one of our Virginia customers. Another customer in Jamestown, North Dakota, writes, "My stove arrived earlier than I had dared plan." We have satisfied customers in nearly every county in the United States.

If you prefer a warm air heating plant, learn about the Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace. Here is the single register home heater that is properly built according to the latest and most practical ideas of heating engineers. Warm air comes up through one big register and circulates throughout the home.

Kalamazoo Pipe Furnaces where desired. Heating plans free. Write your name and address on the coupon or on a postal, and get our new book.

Ask for Catalog No. 103

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Manufacturers
KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

We manufacture Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.

Kalamazoo
Stove Company
Kalamazoo, Michigan

Please send me your complete catalog No. 103 of Kalamazoo Products.

Name ____________________

____

Address ____________________

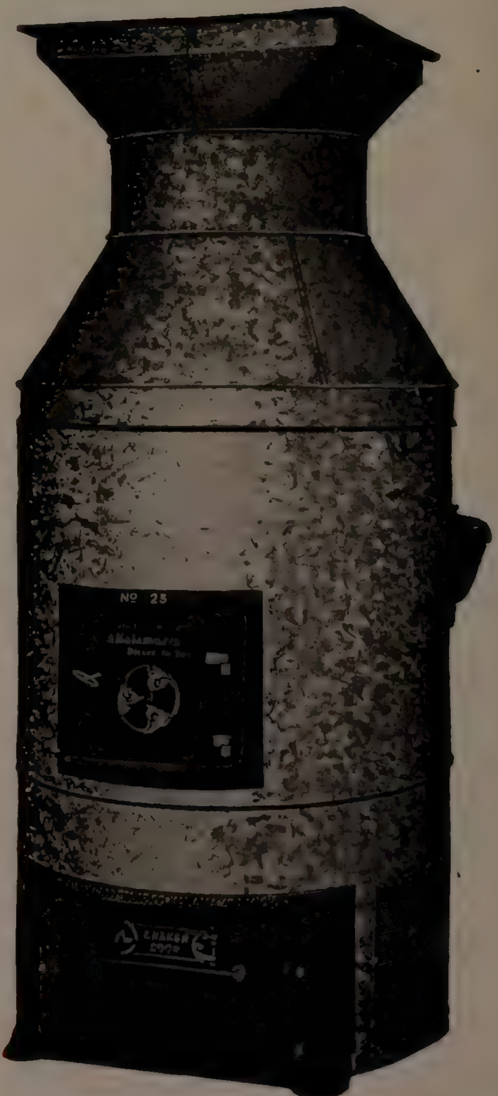
____

Please check articles you are interested in

☐ STOVES ☐ RANGES ☐ FURNACES
☐ GAS RANGES ☐ KITCHEN KABINETS and TABLES

WE PAY THE FREIGHT and Guarantee Delivery in Good Condition at your nearest Railroad Station

"A Kalamazoo
Trade Mark Direct to You"

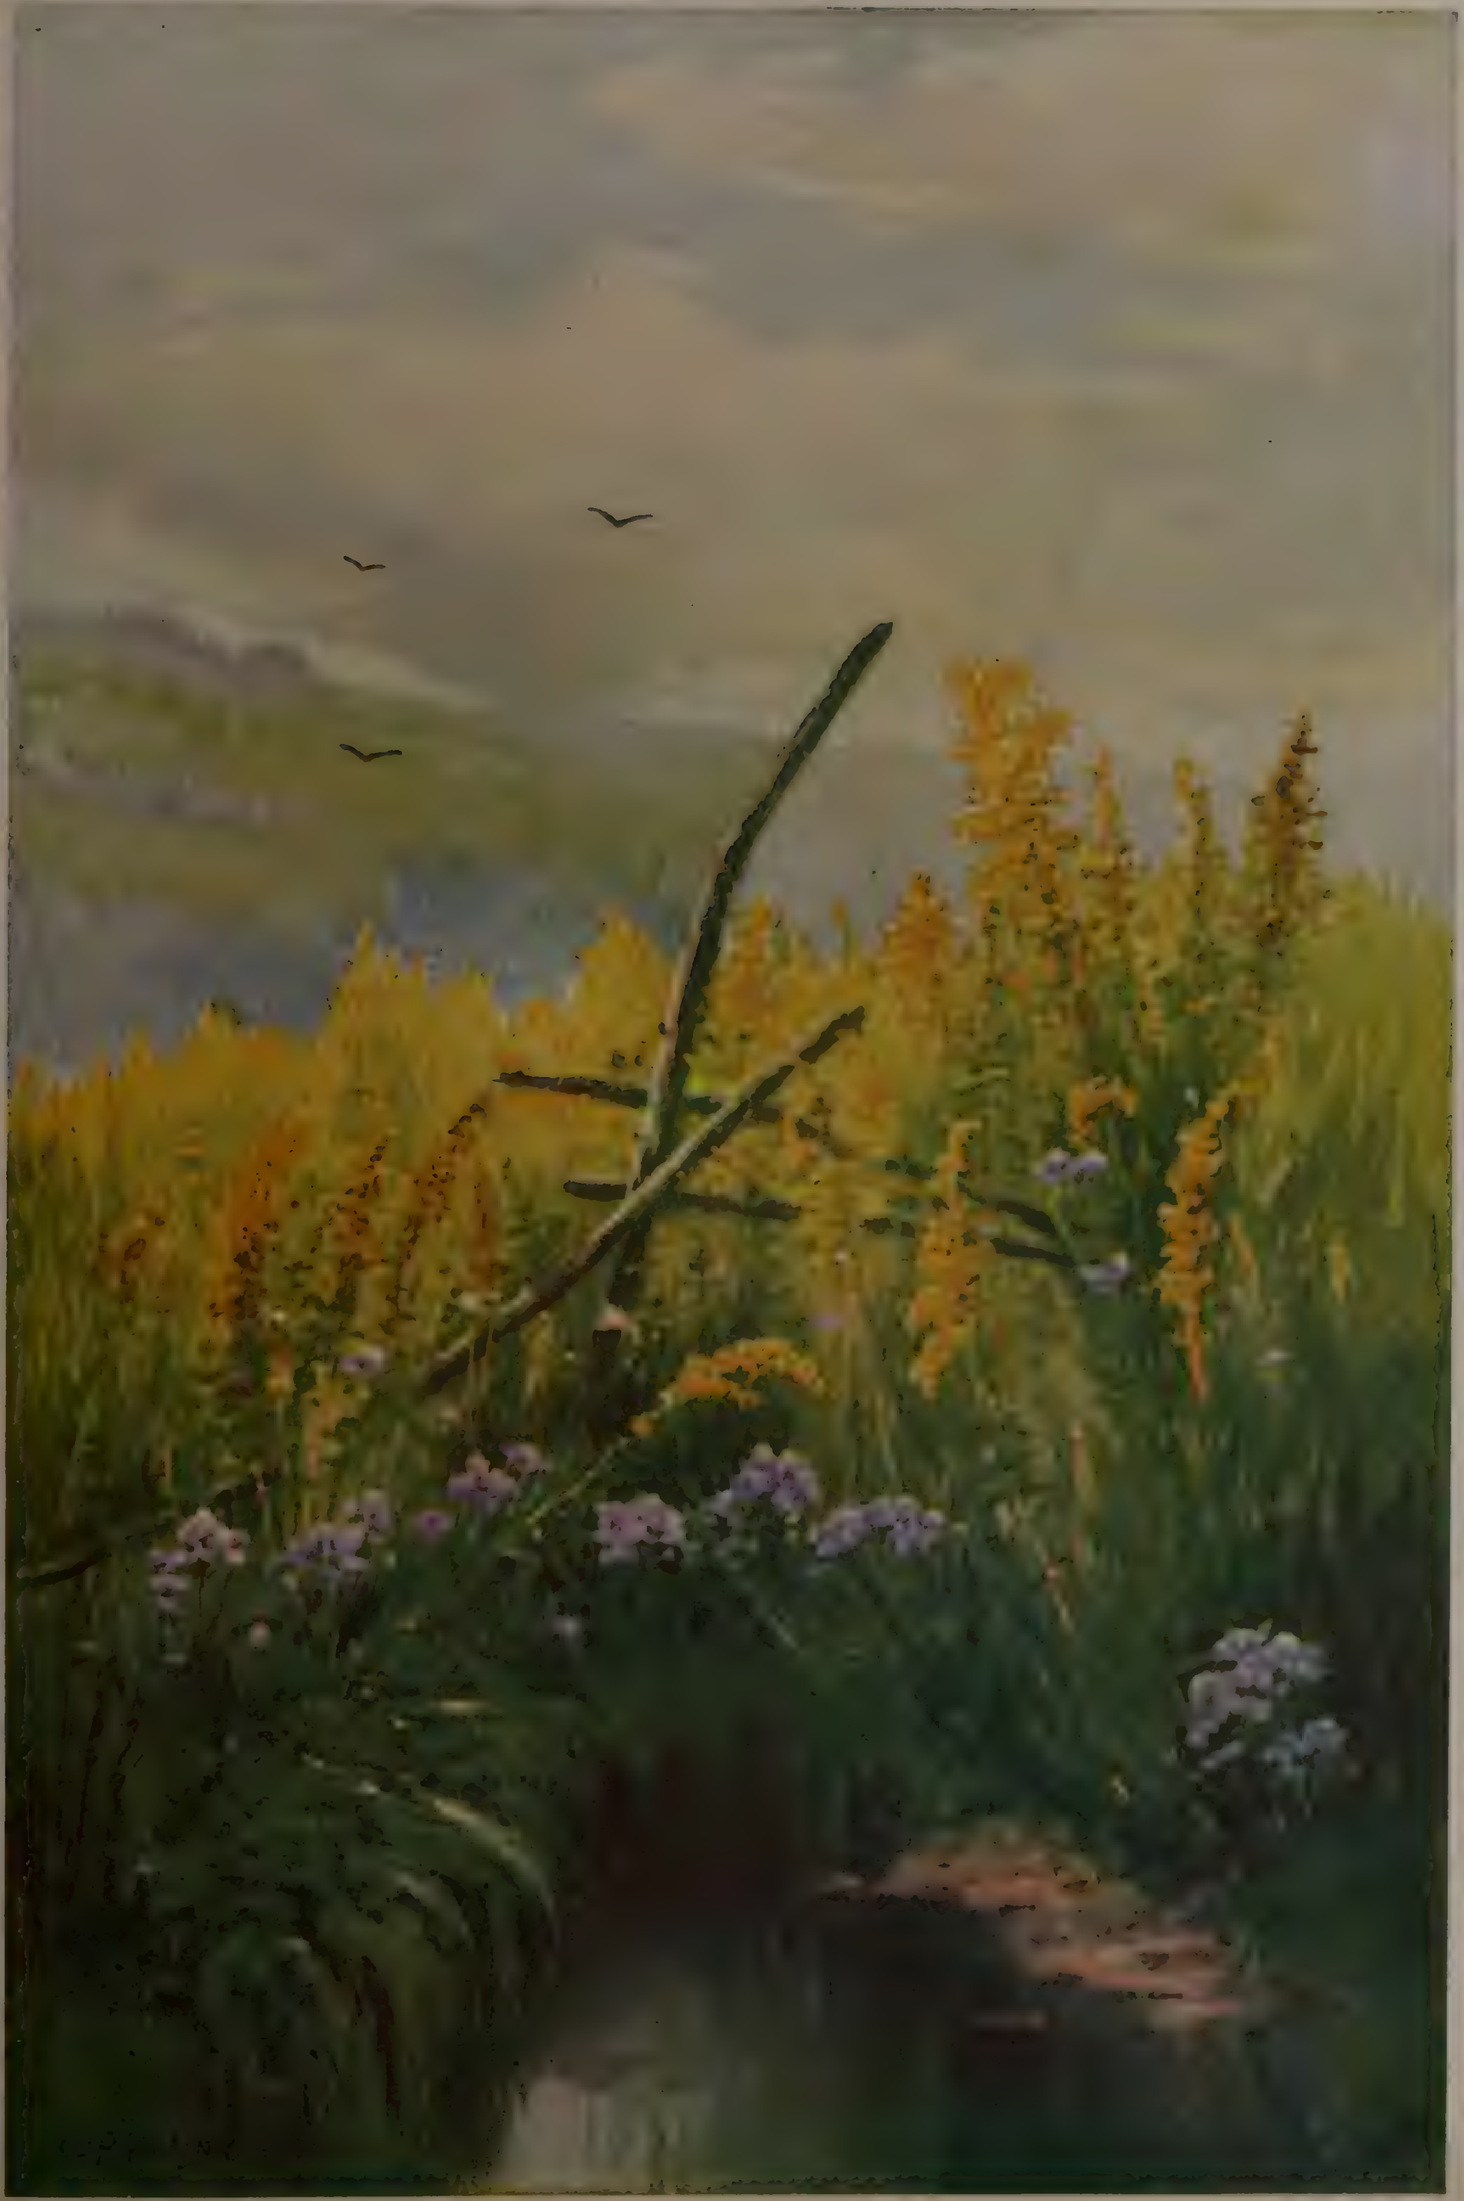


Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace

Heats the entire house through one register. Easy to install. Burns any fuel.

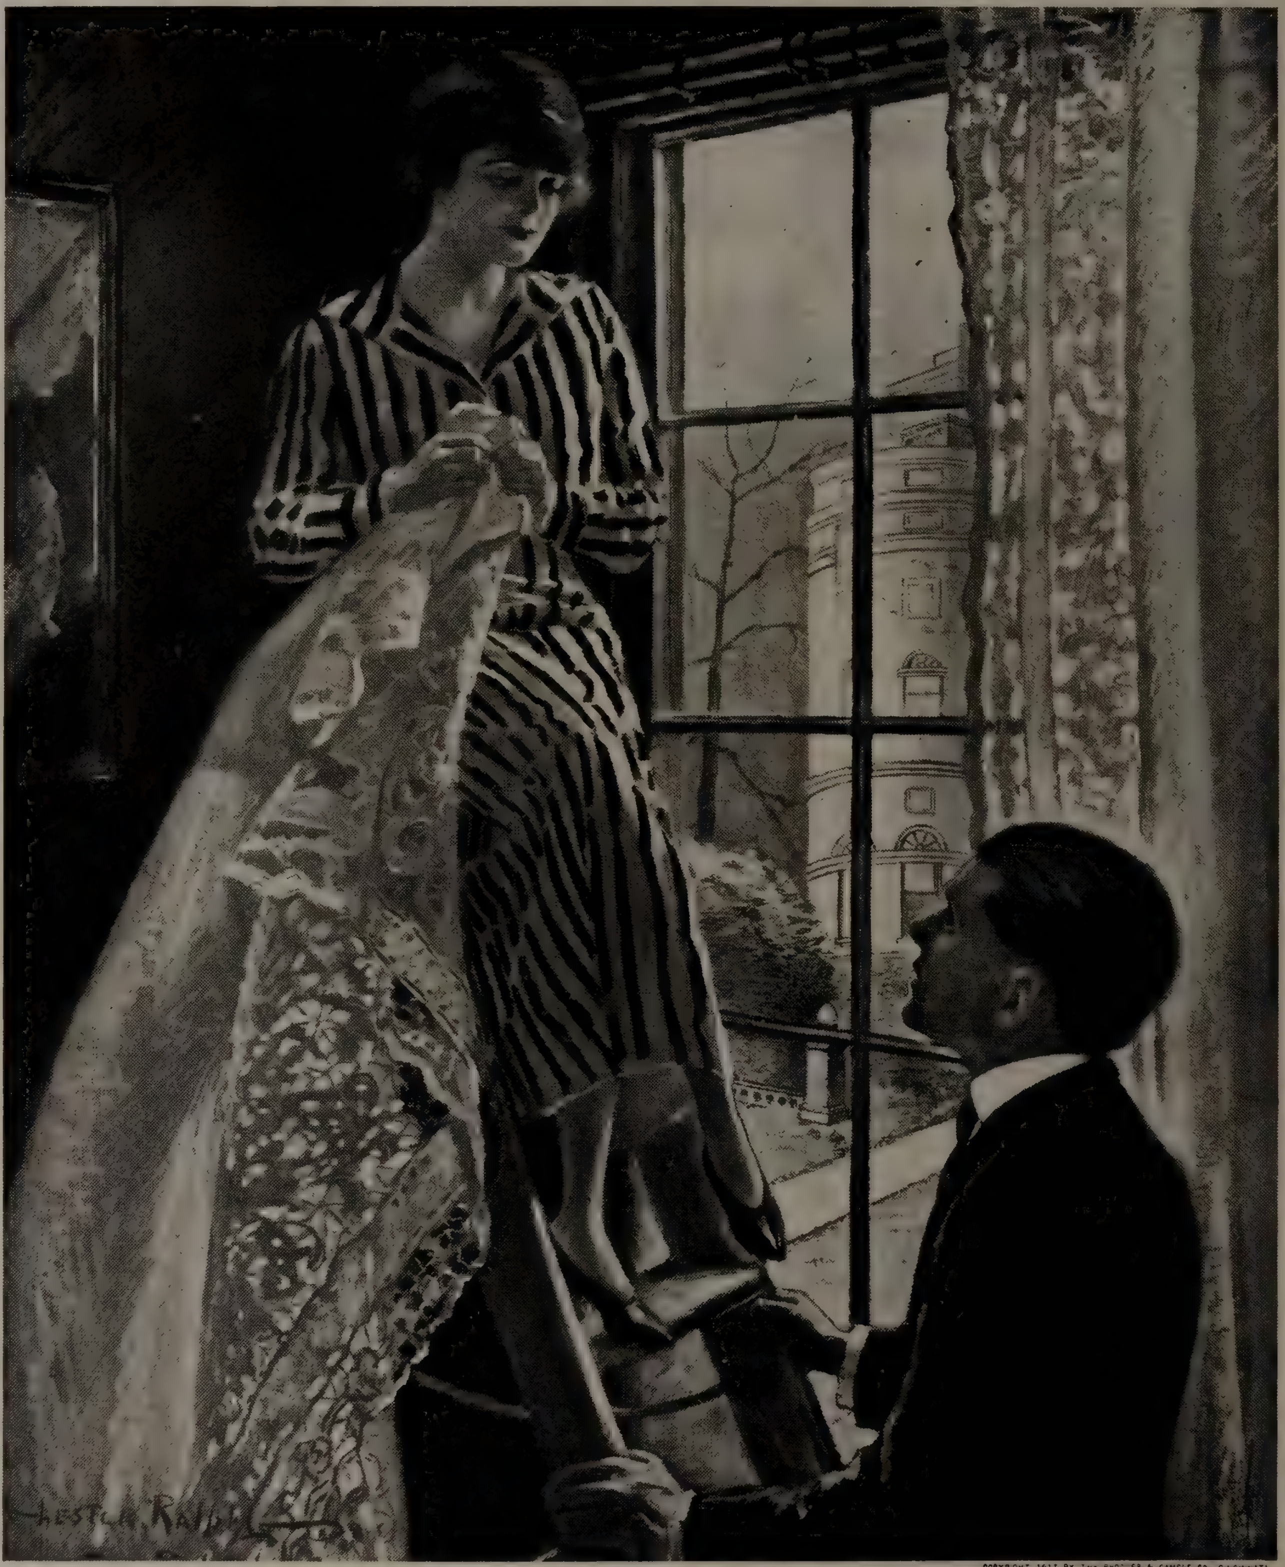
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR
NEW YORK, OCTOBER 3, 1917
VOL. 40—NO. 40. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by C. P. Rising

A glowing bit of sunrise cloud slipped down one autumn morn,
And mistily it touched the earth, and goldenrod was born!



COPYRIGHT 1917 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

FOR lace curtains to look fresh and unworn in spite of repeated washings, something more is required than careful handling in the laundry and on the drying frame. The really important factor is the soap. If ordinary soap is used, they soon will show signs of wear. The delicate threads simply cannot withstand the destructive action of the free alkali and other harsh ingredients.

On the other hand, if they are washed with Ivory Soap, only common sense handling is needed to eliminate all risk of injury. Ivory Soap being free from uncombined alkali and all harmful materials, does not affect the strength and life of the finest threads. It does nothing but cleanse, and in the gentlest way imaginable.

To Wash Lace Curtains

SHAKE and brush to remove the dust and soak in soapy water over night. Work the curtains gently up and down in the water and squeeze them between the hands to get the dirt out. Put them into clean warm suds and keep changing the water until the curtains are clean. Never wring curtains by hand; lay them on a strip of cloth and put carefully through the wringer. Rinse well in several waters, and put through hot, moderately thick starch. If the curtains are white, the starch should be blued; if cream color, strong coffee should be added to it. Pin each point carefully to the drying frame and set in the air to dry. Two or three curtains may be dried at the same time on one frame. If you have no frame, lay clean sheets over the floor of an unused room, stretch the curtains into shape, square and true, and pin each point so that it will not slip. If points are out of shape when dry, they may be dampened with a cloth and ironed.

IVORY SOAP. . . . .  . . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}$% PURE

IT FLOATS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

The Llama, a beast of burden

On the crest of the Andes where the railroad pierces the range

The Indian, his companion

Commerce and Faith in Inca Land

An Interview With President Pardo of Peru

By CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

THE president of Peru is a member of one of the oldest and most influential of Peruvian families, a man of wealth and wide culture, having spent much time abroad. His father was also president of Peru, and, while a senator later in his political career, was assassinated during a revolution. The present president is the owner of one of the largest sugar plantations in the country, and his character as a first-class business man is revealed in his practical administration of the government.

During my visit in Peru I heard many things about the methods of doing business by the Peruvians that could not be called altogether complimentary, and politics comes in for no small censure, especially by certain foreigners; yet one seldom hears any one speak of the president of the country, save in terms of respect. His government is being praised justly for having established the finances of the state on a firm gold basis in a remarkably short time, following a decided financial depreciation. The placing of export duties on such commodities as seemed capable of bearing them by reason of large business due to the war, is also spoken of with favor by many business men; while the new law enacted in Peru the latter part of last year, giving freedom of religious worship to all classes, has marked the Pardo administration as a distinctively progressive one.

My interview with His Excellency, Señor Don José Pardo, was arranged through the courtesy of the American minister, Hon. Benton McMillin, and occurred in the palace fronting the famous Plaza de Armas, across which the assassins of Pizarro rushed on the fateful Sunday and met the founder of Spanish Peru on the historic palace steps. As one passes up the broad stairways on his way to the audience room, there will be pointed out to him a cross in the marble flagstones where it is said Pizarro fell after a brave resistance.

I FOUND President Pardo, like all the Peruvian members of the gentlemen class, the soul of courtesy and amiability. Indeed, it is commonly confessed that of the South Americans generally, the Peruvians are hardly outdone by any in the matter of manners and the kind of affability that gives even business associations the cultured atmosphere of the drawing-room.

The president entered the beautiful Spanish reception room in a business suit and with the air of a man accustomed to take interviews seriously. But for a courtliness of manner that recalls the grace of the old-time gentlemen of Spain whose portraits adorned the famous "red room" in which we sat, the Peruvian executive might have been taken for one of our prosperous, well-dressed business men in the United States. Although he is said to understand English, he seems averse to attempting to speak it in an interview, preferring to speak through his official "introducer"; but I observed that he caught the drift of my questions before they were repeated to him by the interpreter.

First I asked regarding the stability of the Peruvian government.

"Business men in the United States," I said, "are always wishing to be sure that the governments of the South American republics are capable of protecting American capital invested in these countries. They are not always aware of the exact conditions in these states, and the revolutions that have occurred in the past have undoubtedly deterred Americans from thinking seriously of making large investments here. Do you consider such fears well founded?" I asked, even at the risk of seeming a bit impertinent.

President Pardo smiled as one who seemed to understand the reasonableness of my question, and he countered by saying that if he was rightly informed the States had certain labor troubles, strikes and party politics which did not entirely reassure business men of the security of investments in North America. He then replied more seriously, saying: "The vast output of copper and sugar from Peru under the direction of American capital through a period of years, hardly affected in the least by changes in government, would form an illustrated answer to your question. We believe that capital invested in Peru today is as safe as anywhere in the world. Peru has a desire today to unify and develop her country, and she welcomes American capital, feeling perfectly sure that she can protect its interests as she has cared for European and American interests in the past."

PRESIDENT PARDO then described the rich resources of the country for agricultural and mineral development, speaking of that vast territory on the other side of the first range of the Andes, larger than the area of France, as yet virtually untouched and waiting only capital wisely spent on irrigation and transportation enterprises to make it accessible and rich for enormous business. Humboldt once said: "Peru sits on a hill of gold." There may be differing views about the people and the government, but there is a consensus of opinion about this ancient land of the Incas and Pizarro—its wealth of inherent resources has never yet been told.

Being asked whether he thought the United States would retain the present greatly increased trade of the South American republics after the close of the war, he replied: "I would suggest that American business men study carefully the European methods which have been successful in many years in Peru along commercial lines The English, of course, have had in South America a longer and larger trade régime than either Germany or France, but in recent years Germany has greatly increased her business by reason of her ability to make whatever the South Americans want, and to adapt herself to the custom here of long credits and packing arrangements suiting the needs of the differing modes of transportation in Peru. The lack of proper wharves, for example, makes it quite impossible to import manufactured products packed in the form in which they are sent to many other countries. The English have made the mistake—which Americans also have done at times—of being too conservative in relation to this matter of trade adjustment, and have tried to superimpose their products in accordance with their own national customs upon the South American market."

Señor Pardo also emphasized the need, which one hears discussed on all sides in these republics at present, of carrying ships. The dearth of boats was illustrated in a conversation which I held with a manager of the United States Steel Products Company in Lima, who told me that virtually every foot of space in the ships of their company had been taken in advance, far beyond the beginning of the next year. Another foreigner who was fortunate enough to secure an old boat and repair it for use between Peru and San Francisco, has more than paid for the boat and the repairs in two round trips to the latter port.

In fact, you will be told that it is possible for American agents to sell virtually anything in stock at present in Peru, providing they can deliver it. One man has just sold $15,000 worth of cement to a Peruvian firm, because he has fortunately secured shipping facilities for this product, in a Japanese boat running from the Pacific coast.. He said that if he could have arranged for delivery he could easily have sold $30,000 worth of cement to the same firm.

THERE are strong Spanish tendencies and old-world customs in the ancient, aristocratic families of Lima, the former home of the viceroys and one of the few cities of South America which have been practically free from immigration, the families being proud to trace their lineage in direct lines back to Pizarro. Among these families the Pardos have always held a chief place. We were interested in asking the president whether in his opinion this old Spanish régime, with its antique methods and its medieval and feudal positions, would continue in the future, or whether a reformed system of laws and institutions would not tend gradually to take its place.

In reply, President Pardo referred to the reform of the civil code in the past few years, and also to the liberty of worship bill, passed by Congress last December.

"However, it must be remembered," said this loyal Spanish-American, "that the models of Spain are more dominant in Peru than in perhaps any other South American republic, and the people are proud of their inheritance in this line. Other states, like Argentina, have opened wide their doors to a large influx of immigration from Italy and other parts of Europe; but Peru is at present, as it has been for hundreds of years, a Catholic country, and in its institutions and sentiment modeled largely upon the life of Spain in the middle ages."

"What," we asked, "do you expect will be the result of the new bill regarding religious worship? Will it make any radical change in the religious loyalty of the people? In other words, is it the opening wedge for the separation of church and state in your country?"

It was evident from the reply of the president that the bill was not considered by him as seriously affecting the religious situation, but rather as giving formal expression to a condition which had already existed as an unwritten law for some time.

"The law," he said, "was a political measure making a necessary concession to the Liberals, who had been demanding this measure for some time."

HIS position in this matter was made more clear to me afterward when I learned the circumstances under which the bill was passed. As a matter of fact, the president did not sign this freedom of worship measure after it was passed by Congress and sent to him for signature. The influence of his family, especially that of his mother—who, since her husband's death, has devoted her energies and wealth almost exclusively to the church—was the strong force in his decision in this matter. According to Peruvian law, however, bills passed by Congress become laws after the lapse of ten days, even if the president does not sign them.

There have probably been no more interesting events in recent years in Lima than those attending the fight relative to this bill. The priests exerted their utmost power to block the measure and were able to ally the women of the country, as a mass, on their side. Utterly contrary to the secluded habits of the Peruvian women, they marched the streets in processions, in protest against this measure, giving to Peruvian men one of the most unique spectacles in the history of the country, where a suffragette has hardly been heard of up to the present time. When the bill was finally read in the Senate, the galleries were packed with women, and while the speaker was reading it, a fanatical priest leaped over the railing, seized the bill from the hand of the reader and tore it into shreds, stamping it on the floor. This was the sign for a wild burst of applause on the part of the women, who proceeded to throw bunches of hay from the galleries down upon the heads of the deputies, signifying that these dignified Peruvian officials were donkeys.

In spite of these unusual protests the bill was carried, and the perennial clause in the old law, stating that no religion other than that of the Catholic Church shall be permitted in the country, was legislated away, and Peru took a long step forward in the matter of modern progress and enlightenment. This measure furnished an opportunity to see the real sentiment of the men of Peru in relation to religion. I spoke with many of the citizens of Lima regarding this matter, and the answer almost universally was: "We men do not give much attention to the church. It is a matter for our women and children largely. The church is not really a vital concern to us."

In my investigation in the schools and colleges of Peru, I found religious conditions among students similar in some degree to those existing among the students of Egypt and Japan, where agnosticism has taken the place quite largely of the former devotion to the national faiths. At the University of San Marcos, for example, which is the oldest university on the South American continent, I found practically no attention given to religion. There were not even exercises corresponding to chapel in the institutions of the United States, and the only formal religious services of the year consisted of a mass when the university was opened, and another one at the close of the annual session.

In closing my interview with President Pardo, the subject which is frequently emphasized by the Peruvians, namely, the natural sympathetic sentiment of these people for the United States, was broached.

"The people of Peru," said the president, "look upon the United States as their friend. They are sentimentally attached to Americans and covet closer relationships in business and international affairs. Some of the largest undertakings in our country at present are being carried on under the leadership of Americans. Any message which you may carry to your people relative to this universal sympathetic attitude of Peruvians to Americans will not only please us, but will also reflect the strong, true feeling of my people."

THERE is no doubt about the favorable sentiment of Peruvians for the United States, but even after the opening of the Panama Canal Peru is still isolated, and the distance from Europe and North America does not increase the growth of mutual understanding. The Spanish-Americans of Peru are a proud and sensitive race, handicapped by their traditions at times, and not primarily inclined to industry. There are approximately four million people in Peru, divided as follows: 1,260,000 mestizos, a mixed race, formed from intermarriages of the Spaniards with the Indians; 600,000 whites; 100,000 negroes; 40,000 Orientals; and 2,000,000 Indians. The great problem is the Indian, who is numerically as well as economically the vital factor in the country. It is the common saying that "Peru lives off the Indian." He is the cultivator of the soil in the vast table-lands; he is also the mainstay in many a mining section; yet in education he is almost utterly neglected, save for a few inadequate Catholic schools and one or two Protestant colonies in the Andes.

When Pizarro came to Peru, there were nearly eight millions of these inhabitants, mostly of the old Inca stock, and they were industrious and law-abiding, practicing unique agricultural arts of their own invention, and possessing a fine system of irrigation. They were the builders of some of the best highways to be found in all of South America. In the vicinity of Cuzco, especially, the traveler of today sees some of the most interesting remains of fortresses, temples and agricultural devices to be found anywhere on earth.

The Spaniards came not to colonize but to conquer. The Indians were driven from their cities, their lands laid waste, and the people converted into slaves of the white man. They were exterminated more or less ruthlessly when they resisted the inroads of the foreigner, and the result today is a sullen, suspicious race, who have forgotten many of the virtues enforced by their ancient Inca rulers, and who have degenerated by reason of the slavery and vices that have come to them in the trail of Spanish civilization.

HERE is a field of exceptional need for missionary work, industrial training and education. I met in Cuzco a missionary who was working with the Indians of that region on a big farm; but he was almost alone in his endeavors. The results of his activities were so encouraging that he was endeavoring to enlarge his work. He was teaching the Indians agriculture along modern lines, giving them instruction in the Bible and rudimentary school training. He was finding the readiest response among these simple and almost benighted races.

As one watches the llama trains leaving the ancient city of Cuzco for the fastnesses of the Andean Cordilleras and the wide agricultural pampas, he is impressed by seeing these Indian folk, at the turn of the road above the Inca capital, dropping on their knees and saluting in prayer this "City of the Sun," where their old temples are now in decay. When Peru recognizes the debt she owes to these simple and hard-working Andean Indians, who are the backbone of the country's economic life; when she discovers some Colonel Rondon who will work among them, as that great Brazilian is doing among the Indians of the sister republic, backed by government aid and sympathy, there will be in the making a new Peru.

The American traveler in these parts wonders why American missions have for so long practically neglected these vast populations.

The New Army and Navy Chaplains

By REV. WORTH M. TIPPY, Executive Secretary of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains

PREVIOUS to America's entry into the great war, the churches knew little about the chaplains. They were aware that there were chaplains in both army and navy, and that they were clergymen, but the position was not attractive to most ministers, and churches were loath to give up effective men.

Certain great names had come down from the days of the Civil War—names of men like Chaplain McCabe of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Chaplain Lozier, lecturer, singer and songwriter, chaplain of the famous Thirty-seventh Indiana Regiment, who gave luster and romance to the service. But as a whole the chaplains had few contacts with their ecclesiastical bodies, no organization among themselves, no intimate relations with the Christian people of the country.

Then almost overnight the situation changed. The great war broke; 2,000 ministers volunteered for army chaplaincies, hundreds for the navy, and suddenly the churches awoke to the importance of the chaplaincy and to a new interest in their work and welfare.

French Official War Picture from Pictorial Press

With a captain as chorister, a volunteer choir of enlisted men and a folding organ, the chaplain can make a service in the field, even one like this in France, almost like home

The personnel of the navy was increased to 150,000 men, including 30,000 marines. This at once raised the number of chaplains authorized for the navy from 41 to 120.

There will also be 144 regular army chaplains, 128 in the National Army and between 100 and 150 in the National Guard units, a total of approximately 400 men for the first million and a quarter troops. The second batch of the National Army will require 128 more about January 1, 1918. Each chaplain is given at least one enlisted man as a whole-time assistant. Chaplain Jeffers of the old Seventh has three assistants, and Chaplain Pruden ten or twelve. So that there will here be a religious force of between 800 and 1,000 men for the new army; as large a staff as the Y. M. C. A. secretaries, and wholly financed by the government, except that the churches will equip the chaplains. These, with the Y. M. C. A., will constitute a powerful and united force for the religious welfare of the soldiers.

At the beginning of the war the established ratio between Catholics and Protestants was 25 per cent. and 75 per cent. The Catholics considered this unfair, and their percentage was raised by the War Department to 33⅓ per cent., and then a week later to 38 per cent. and finally settled at 36 per cent., but without consultation with the Protestant representatives. This is approximately on the basis of official denominational statistics. Between the various Protestant communions both the War and Navy Departments require that the number of chaplains shall be apportioned according to church membership. There is no discrimination.

The chaplains enter the army with the rank and pay of a lieutenant. In the army chaplains may reach the grade of major; in the navy that of captain, corresponding to lieutenant colonel in the army, with corresponding rank and pay. The law requires also that in the army

Continued on page 1047

How Petrograd Views the War

By
MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

OUR correspondent's hurried journey across China and over the border to the Russian capital was full of adventure. His experiences in both republics will be related in further letters. He finds Petrograd expectant of important changes, some of which have taken place since this letter was mailed

HERE in Petrograd we expect anything from capture by the Germans to food famine on account of the presence of hordes of journalists. Whatever happens, it will be an old story before this article is safely on American soil, if it ever is! One man's guess is as good as another's, and they are all different.

For this reason I shall start my narrative with Siberia, which I had pictured for years as a bleak succession of desert and forest, and which I shall now remember as one of the fairest lands upon which my eye has ever rested. Rolling hills and endless plains, forest-clad slopes and great fields of grain ready to harvest. Lovely rivers winding away to the forest-fire-tints of the lingering sun, which in Siberia and Russia is very much of a night-owl in summer. Siberia seems to have everything lovely and worth while, except people. Every one seemed to be at the station, but behind that humanity seemed to become invisible. After the Chengtu plain, Siberia seems as uninhabited as a haunted house.

(Kerensky) © Underwood & Underwood

Petrograd turned out en masse to render honor to the bodies of Cossacks who died in its defense. Premier Kerensky stood in the streets with the people whose burdens he carries and whom he seeks to lead to a real and permanent freedom

But Siberia is more than an inexhaustible storehouse for food and fuel. It has been, of late, the greatest university in the world. It is the laboratory of the Prussian pacifist, who is one of the most interesting of personalities in that he lives as he preaches.

It is estimated that there are two million Austrian and German soldiers in Russia and Siberia. Hundreds of thousands of these are not living in camps at all, but are spread across the country, in the homes of the simple country folk, where they naturally assume the position of professor in political economy, politics, and international brotherhood among people to whom thought along these lines is not only brand-new, but doubly interesting in the face of the internal and external affairs of Russia in the last three years.

When the prisons were opened, thousands of political and other prisoners scurried from their confinement and were lost to the authorities. Records were burned, and thousands of men who knew things were removed from positions in which they could keep any track of even the worst criminals. You may borrow a match of a man in Russia today, who will borrow your watch or cut your throat tonight. So far, no great danger from these men has been reported. There is still time. For more than two years, however, Russia has been transforming Siberia the dungeon into Siberia the college. And prisoners from the Central Powers have been the professors, living with their students and proving by their actions that Austrians, Hungarians and Germans are not beasts, but peaceful fellows, glad to shun the dangers of war and live the life of farmers and laborers in fruitful Siberia.

TO say that the few Germans among this great number of professors have been propagandists is to be guilty of intellectual redundancy. Among the Austrians, many are excellent musicians and artists. Scores of lesser Fritz Kreislers are furnishing music for Siberia today—such instrumental music as Russia, away from a few metropolitans, has never heard. When you question these calm-eyed men, they admit that they are content to be where they are; but some say that they hope this war will soon cease so that they can fight against Prussianism. Poor old Prussianism! Like an empty football, it imagines itself the center of interest, when it is really only an object for kicks and thumps. It will leave the present game muddy and scratched, but the question is whether it will be used in a bigger game later on, or handed over to the scrub eleven for punting or signal practice.

The other interesting people in Russia's present crisis are the anarchist brigades from America, which are rapidly becoming the gravest danger to true democracy in Russia. That there are honest men among them, none can deny. That there are scores of most anarchistic scatter-brains among their number, becomes increasingly evident. Men of truly dangerous character, hailing from the great American republic and having a certain prestige, are attempting to do for their native land, to which they are returning in droves, what the returned student has been doing for China. But Russia today has a surplus of two commodities—soldiers and advice—both largely idle, but both potentially dangerous.

Nothing in the Russian revolution was bigger and finer than its order and bloodlessness. Men who have lived all their lives under the rule of an autocrat have little need to learn discipline. But distribute among them such undisciplined fellows as many of the recent arrivals from America are, and you may look for anything. It takes some time for a man to realize that he has thrown off a burden, but he may suddenly turn handsprings at the thought of it.

THE Russian people are peaceful, but they are in possession of new power and they don't just know how to use it. And under these circumstances the anarchistic free men from America can work untold harm to the freed anarchists of Russia. "Comrade" is a big, fine word—the most widely used word in Russia today. But it is becoming anathema in many circles, because the man who uses it has no idea of the restraints a true comrade must impose upon himself, if the word is to have its true meaning. Freedom without restraint is license, and that is the kind of freedom that many of the returned political drummers seek to introduce in a new territory. Having found too little freedom of their own brand in America, they have come to Russia to introduce a a stronger blend here. So the little brother republic is learning much deviltry from the former residents of America.

My first insight into the Russian revolution came four years ago, in Beirut, Syria. One of the young teachers, newly arrived from America, said, in the home of Professor Crawford, canniest of men: "The more these fellows learn and the more freedom you give them, the more haughty and independent they become. The newest students respect their teacher most."

"That may partly be the teacher's fault," replied the man whose Moslem friends are legion, "but it all comes back to the question whether you are training serfs or freemen, whether you are really educating or simply teaching. We shall have to expect that, if we do our duty and teach self-respect to our students, they will cringe before us less and look us straight in the eye oftener. We are not training servants, but trying to develop leaders."

On the Trans-Siberian express there was a fine young Englishman, who has worked for his government in many parts of the world. At one of the stations a crowd of soldiers tried to force their way on to the train. They were en route to the front. Repulsed by the guards, they used some rather direct language in reply.

"That's what comes of making equals of these boors," he said. "They forget their place, and think that freedom means that they can do as they please."

In other words, they were forgetting class distinctions in their desire to get to the front, to fight for Humanity, including my English friend and me. That is what Russia is coming to. That is what a Russian comes to when he comes to America. That is what the American colonies came to when they drafted the Declaration of Independence. That is what sturdy yeomen fought for at Runnymede. That is what two-thirds of the human beings on this earth are some day going to demand from the minority who now rule them. And all this is very unattractive to those who now hold the power.

RUSSIA is today floundering. She may sink or swim, survive or perish, but she has taken the plunge in order to win liberty. Meanwhile, committees chosen from the working classes and soldiers are trying to wage a mighty war, and are shooting deserters for their infamy. The voice of the common people has so far been the sanest voice amid a babel of sounds. When the Czar abdicated, the world applauded the Russian man. More lately, the world has become pessimistic over the change, but the first impression was possibly the right one. Liberty in Russia may be born of suffering and danger, but her mighty people are full of new possibilities and aims. We must bear with them in their hour of trial.

Having thrown off one autocrat, what Russia needs is another, just as powerful, but chosen by the people and empowered by them, holding his dictatorship through their support and confidence. Russia needs a Wilson, or a Lloyd George. In Kerensky, she has just such a man. All parties unite in support of Kerensky, but each party has its own conditions. And these conditions conflict. Kerensky is the White Hope of Red Russia. From the front line trenches to Vladivostok, his picture is as common as was that of Mona Lisa in the summer of 1911. Day before yesterday Russia was without a government. Today, August 6, the report is that Kerensky has consented to form a cabinet, if his supporters will frame his desk in "hands off" signs.

In the army the same move has taken place. Korniloff has supplanted Brusiloff, whose fault was that he was too easygoing. The new general is known by all to be an autocrat. Yet his assumption of office has been the subject for popular rejoicing. In spite of those two million peace propagandists from the Central Powers, who are doing revolutionary work in Siberia, the Russian people seem determined, even in the face of unprecedented retreats, to carry on the war with renewed vigor, and to bow to the will of an autocrat to accomplish their end.

Continued on page 1046

WHAT I WOULD IF I COULD

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—John 7 : 44. "Some would have taken him, but—"

IF the opportunity had been favorable, they would have taken Him. They were in the mood for it. Their inclinations were formed. Their purpose was set. In spirit everything was ready, but the opportunity did not serve.

What was the difference between these men and those who eventually perfected their desire and carried it out? Is there any difference in temperament, in purpose, in moral color and constitution? Is there any difference in soul? No, the difference is only in the opportunity. There is no difference between the Guy Fawkes who lays his powder barrels and fires them, and the Guy Fawkes who lays his powder barrels but is prevented from firing. Guy Fawkes does not become virtuous because his program was not accomplished. He remains the same. He would have been no worse if his designs had been attained. Spiritually, he did the deed. It was only an unexpected antagonism which prevented the visible achievement.

"Some would have taken Him, but . . ." If they had had the opportunity, they would have done it. See, then, opportunity does not create character, but only reveals it. Opportunity makes patent what has hitherto been latent. The taking of the Master would not have rendered these men vicious or malicious; it would only have declared their device.

Out of this there arises a very clear and all-important principle. What we would be if opportunity presented, that we are. Our "would-be's" are the truest index of our character. A murderous hand may be stricken aside; that makes the man no less a murderer. Everything relating to murder was present, except the opportunity. What would the stuff within me make, if opportunity presented to me the circumstances of a Cain? Are my dispositions such that I should repeat his act?

What I would be in certain conditions, that I am. The absence of fulfilment affords no proof of the presence of virtue or vice. That the chained dog cannot get at me, does not prove him virtuous. He would if he could. The biting would not create his vice; he is vicious; the venom is in him. My safety is only consequent upon his inability. I am not obligated to his temper; I am in debt to his chain. The inclination is there; the fulfilment is prevented. The character of the dog is to be found in the nature of his inclination.

What we would do, that, in the sight of God, we have done. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

LET us take the light of this principle and carry it round about common life. Let us give another application to our text. "Some of them would have sold the margarine for butter, but . . ." Then, in the sight of God, they have done it. Sin that is uncommitted for fear of discovery is in reality done. A man who would label his margarine "butter," but who refrains for fear of the inspector, is essentially bad at the heart. Badness of this kind will find an outlet somewhere. Sewer gas continually seeks for an exit. Supposing one man has labeled his margarine "butter," and another man has desisted for fear of discovery, and supposing they were both brought into the presence of Him whose eyes are as flame, wherein would be the difference? Both would stand condemned.

"Some would have absented themselves from worship, but . . ." But what? "But for the look of the thing." Then a man who would have absented himself was never present. People who attend God's house for the look of the thing, never come at all. They would be absent if they dared. Then, what they would do, they do. "These people draw nigh to me, but their hearts are far from me."

"Some would have withdrawn their subscriptions, but . . ." But what? "But for the published lists." Then they have withdrawn them. On this plane, the man who would do, has done. He whose liberality is determined by his publicity has never given unto the Lord. "By Him actions are weighed." He does not count the amount of the offertory. He notes the disposition of the giver. "Bring no more vain oblations." The vain oblation is the gift without the giver, and with God such giving is not received.

Here then is the principle I am seeking to expound. We are no better than our inclinations. Our wishes denote far more than our deeds. A man's desires register his attainments.

NOW, let us turn the whole matter round. If we are measured by our "would-be's," the principle would have application not only to vice, but to virtue. We are not judged by our fulfilments, but by our aspirations. "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart." The desire to build the temple was interpreted by the Lord as a temple already built. What we would do if we had the opportunity, we shall be credited with having done.

"Some would have gone to serve in the foreign field, but . . ." But what? "The door was never opened." Then, in the sight of God, such men and women have gone. To God they are foreign missionaries, and the glory of the mission field is theirs. They would have gone, but there was an old mother to care for at home, or an invalid sister to watch, or an imbecile brother to tend. They toiled on here in the homeland, but their heart was ever away in the lands of bondage and night.

God will take the will for the deed. These men and women will wear the missionary's crown. Their "would-be" will be regarded as a "well-done."

"Some would have given much to the cause of the King, but . . ." But what? "Their means were straitened, and they had great difficulty in keeping the wolf from the door." They gave their little mite to the Lord's work, with a great desire that it might have been more. They gave a mite plus a "would-do." Such giving is never to be estimated by the monetary quantity of the gift. "This poor woman hath given more than all." "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted with God."

"SOME would have given themselves to active Christian service, but . . ." But what? "They are bedridden." They are chronic invalids. They lie in the bondage of continual pain. How will they be regarded in the day of the great reckoning? They will be judged by their "would-be's." Their life will be estimated not by its attainments, but by its inclinations.

But is there not some little peril in thus distinguishing between inclinations and attainments, as though inclination in itself were not a great attainment?

Oh, the mystic energy of many a "would-be"! The "would-be" is a prayer, and the fragrance of heaven is made of the perfume of prayer. "Golden vessels full of odors, which are the prayers of saints." We cannot measure the influence of the "would-be's" that lie like fervent flames in the hearts of many of the saints of God. They are creating an atmosphere, and in this atmosphere much of the best work of the Kingdom is accomplished. Our "would-be" will constitute our crown.

---

* Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

The Gospel in the Armies

THE National Association of Evangelists is facing its greatest responsibility in caring for the spiritual and moral welfare of the million of American soldiers who will soon be under arms, besides the million more who will probably be added before the war is over. Wherever soldiers are fighting, there you will find the Y. M. C. A. Red Triangle. It has 429 centers in France, 47 centers in Mesopotamia, 45 in India, 35 in Salonica or Malta, 58 in Egypt or Palestine, 1,000 in England, and centers at all important naval bases. Fifty secretaries are at work on the site of the Garden of Eden, and many others on the various spots hallowed in the pages of the Bible.

A Y. M. C. A. "hut" is a building 40x120 feet, in charge of five secretaries, to accommodate 500 men. One of these "huts" is provided for every 5,000 soldiers. Work has been begun at 150 points in these "huts" or in temporary tents at each of the 32 great camps; 41 are already in use, and 63 are being built, besides 37 given by the government or rented.

Thirty secretaries are in France with Sherwood Eddy, where the work parallels that for the British troops.

Dr. John Kelman, the great Scotch preacher, speaking of the needs of the soldier, says: "He is moved from the training camps to the base camps in France. These are the places where the fight is really sorest for the soul. Temptation there is terrifically strong, and the Y. M. C. A. 'hut' is the battle-ground between God and the devil. The next stage begins when the regiment is moved 'up to the line.' Here the temptations that beset him at the base are absent and he finds himself face to face with death."

Canada has sent John McNeil, Bishop and others. England has sent Gipsy Smith, Dr. Kelman, and a group of notable divines and evangelists. America has sent Sherwood Eddy, Dr. Rice, Dr. Jenkins, E. O. Sellars, and others to the front. Their meetings are crowded and meet with great response.

After all the service that has been rendered in providing equipment, after the work that has been done by the churches and the Y. M. C. A., the National Association of Evangelists considers that all is ready for the coming of the preacher with his message. There is need for a vastly greater number of men to do the work that Moody and his associates did in the Civil War.

The great need at the present time was well expressed by a young soldier in France, who, after listening to a scientific lecture, mounted the platform and said, "That is all very well, but what I want to know is, is there any power that can save me from my temptation?"

The National Association's committee recommends a definite program and a committee of the strongest men authorized to carry it out. They will cooperate with the Y. M. C. A., furnish workers, raise funds, and plan in every way to safeguard the boys in khaki from intemperance and impurity.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Slow Walking

SUNDAY, October 7. Isa. 40 : 31. "To walk and not faint." That is the severe testing season when our going slackens down to a slow walk. There is an exhilaration in movement when life speeds along, and its interests are vivid, and we have congenial and kindling companionship. When the sleigh-horses are galloping, and we are just flying through the air, how the sleigh-bells ring out their merry peal! Bees hum when they are on the wing! And so it is in human life. It is easy to sing when we can mount up with wings as eagles. We come to the supreme test when the swift movement is over, when the merry pace is ended, when the stimulating fellowship is withdrawn, when we come to the slow walk, and something very vital seems to have been lost. It is a happy attainment to mount up with wings as eagles; it is a noble victory to walk and not faint.

Sometimes, even when we pass out of the brilliant hours, our busy pace is the soul's defense. Here is a woman nursing her loved one. She is going from morning to night. And then there comes a day when her loving service is no longer required. The sick one has slept away, and has recovered immortal health in the healing Presence of the Lord. The swift, absorbing pace of the loving nurse is changed into an awfully slow walk when there seems to be nothing to do. We say one to another, "There will be a reaction!" Or we whisper, "There will be a collapse!" It is evidently a great testing time when the saving pace is almost halted, and the ministering servant comes to the hour of folded hands. Can she walk and not faint?

Here is a man who has been wakened to the knowledge of his Saviour. He wakens amid the excitement of a great revival. There is the exhilaration of a multitude. There is the stimulus of music whose volume is as the sound of many waters. He goes night after night, and the unusual and glorious pace of everything keeps his spirit on the run. Then the day comes when the phenomenal season is over. The extraordinary stimulants are withdrawn. "The tumult and the shouting dies; the captains and the kings depart." The surroundings become quite normal, and he settles down to the slow walk on the ordinary road. That is the testing time. Can we walk and not faint?

That man is not strong who needs the fierce pace, nor is he strong who only reveals his strength in fits of convulsion. He is the strong man who can walk slowly, and under a heavy weight, without staggering. And this triumph is the promised victory of grace, and the grace is surely given to those who "wait upon the Lord." Grace offers strength for the trudge on the long, gray road. Nay, grace offers more than strength; it offers companionship. It is not satisfied with the gift of power; its gift is a Friend, and he brings his own cordials and balms to our sorrows, and his own bread to our hungry needs. "They that wait upon the Lord shall walk and not faint."

J. H. J.

Endurance

MONDAY, October 8. Matt. 24 : 13. "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." The primary sense of the English word endure is to harden, but the sense in which Jesus spoke carries the idea of continuance. To endure is to persist in a course in spite of obstacles. The church has a name for this virtue of continuance. It is called "the perseverance of the saints." There is a good but rare old Scotch word for it, seldom heard this side of the sea. It is staith. Faith is good, but to keep the faith through storms and darkness requires staith.

It may not be helpful to count over the forces which would defeat our endurance, but it is encouraging to enumerate and, if possible, to visualize the influences which help us endure. What are they? First there is the remembrance that character, life's choicest output, is achieved only by conquest of the things that oppose us. The old Stoic philosophy said, "These are the things you have to endure; bear them and be silent." This is "dumb resignation." The Christian hushes all complaint, having the will to cooperate with God, and cultivating a glad acceptance of the ways of Providence. Then there is the reflection that there are virtues which we have no earthly chance to cultivate but by contact with hostile forces. Patience—is there any other way to get it but by having to contend with conditions which call for patience? Another thought to help us endure is that there is a way to endure "as seeing the invisible," which, while it does not make hard work easy or heavy burdens light, nevertheless puts new power into the soul that endures. We who endure for faith's sake, for conscience and loyalty's sake, for love's sake, do not endure alone. The Great God is also the Great Companion. He it is who speaks through Jesus' lips, "I am with you alway."

C. C. A.

Despair Not

TUESDAY, October 9. Nahum 1 : 15. "Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows: for the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off." Nahum's vision is intended to rouse the despondent Israelites out of the torpor into which they were sinking while beholding the terrible catastrophes of their times. God visited the nations of the earth in his anger in those days, and backsliding Israel too was punished for its sins. "I will make thy grave; for thou art vile," the prophet had said (verse 14). But "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations." Even while he bares his mighty arm to execute justice upon earth against evildoers, his eyes are upon the righteous, and his cheering call goes out to them: Despair not; for your salvation draweth nigh. For hundreds of years after the prophet had delivered this message of the peace-bearer, the world was still filled with wars and confusion. The eyes of the faithful in those times were riveted upon the Prince of Peace, and he came in the fulness of time.

So it was in the days of the Reformation: a spiritual darkness that could be felt had settled on the earth. But God was burnishing the old lamps of truth and mercy, and caused the Light of the world again to shine into the darkness. There is no darkness to him who is near God. Let us keep our eyes on the messages which Christ sends in his word. Aye, and let us keep our solemn feasts and perform our vows unto the Lord. W. H. T. D.

Pilate's Decision

WEDNESDAY, October 10. Matt. 27 : 26. "He delivered Christ to be crucified." It is said that about one hundred and fifty leading artists of the world have portrayed the scenes during the night of the trial and crucifixion of Christ. Munkacsy's "Christ before Pilate" is considered the most celebrated. Pilate, Caiaphas, the mob, a company of the Sanhedrin and a row of judges make up the picture in the Roman judgment hall. Christ stands in the center, showing weariness from his sleepless night of suffering. His glance at his enemies is searching and fearless, so much so that Pilate trembles as if on trial himself.

The actors in this great trial, rather than Jesus, have been pronounced guilty by all succeeding centuries. Pilate, standing between the Jew and the Roman government, tried to release Jesus, whom he believed to be innocent. But at last, yielding to the clamor, "he delivered Christ to be crucified."

Since that hour the songs of the poets, the tongues of the learned and the brush of the artist have vied with each other to portray the sufferings of the Saviour and the enormity of sin. In the words "He died for me" are reposed the faith and hopes of myriads of human beings.

"Behold the God Man" is the cry of the Bible, of every Christian pulpit and of all true followers of the Christ. Every individual has Jesus on his hands for decision, saying, with Pilate, "What shall I do with Jesus who is called the Christ?" Pilate, warned by his wife, by his conscience, by his judgment and by his God, at last sentenced him to death. Will you do the same? Will you be a vacillating, time-serving trimmer, trying to avoid a decision? You should know that "he who is not for me, is against me."

E. W. C.

At the Threshold of the Kingdom

THURSDAY, October 11. Mark 12 : 34. "And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." A traveler in a Western state was overtaken by a blizzard and perished in sight of home. The scribe of this chapter was within sight of the kingdom, but whether he ever crossed the threshold and entered into the experience of submission to the will of God and the peace which follows that submission, is not on record. It would seem that many of us stop only a little short of the great surrender, the fateful decision, the step which means so much, if taken. There is a reference in the New Testament to some who are "forever learning" yet never come to a knowledge of the truth. The mental process involved in such a condition reminds one of a chemical mixture in which a specific substance is held in solution but not allowed to precipitate. Truth is not be to held in permanent solution in our minds; it is to precipitate. Christian logic leads to conclusions. Those conclusions involve efforts of the will, acts of choice. Those who are fond of theological speculation but who never arrive at a firm decision are like people who spend much time in haggling over prices but never close a bargain. C. C. A.

Church Unity

FRIDAY, October 12. Eph. 4 : 4–6. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." In view of the many divisions to which the Christian Church has been subject in its external aspect, it is a real comfort to reflect on the unity of all true believers which the apostle asserts in this text. They are one body.

Despite their variety and distinctions (Gal. 3 : 28; Col. 3 : 11) they are a compact society, because one Spirit animates them. External uniformity may be wanting and still internal unity may exist in the church. They have a common Redeemer, who died for all; a common interest in the Redeemer's work, which they assert by faith; a common badge of discipleship, their baptism; a common Sovereign and Parent, who governs them, employs them in his service, attests his presence to them and cheers them. Finally, they are striving for a common goal of glory.

This unity is established in the moment of their call. The call of grace removes them spiritually from the congregation of the wicked and joins them to the general assembly and church of the first-born in Christ. By the same act by which the Holy Ghost calls a person from death to life, he gathers him into the company of the believers. The conversion of a sinner is contemporaneous with his admission to membership in the holy Christian Church.

W. H. T. D.

Timothy

SATURDAY, October 13. I Tim. 1 : 2. "Unto Timothy, my true child in the faith. From a child hast thou known the Holy Scriptures." The apostle Paul might not have been able to lead Timothy to Christ's ministry if he had not been taught the Scriptures by his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois. It is as natural as breathing for a child to come into the church who has been reared in a holy home. Paul had tested Timothy in many ways so that he could now call him "my true child." He had found him faithful everywhere. In the ministry he preached the Word, not his doubts about the Word, not old wives' fables, nor about vain, foolish questions. His sermons were about the glorious Gospel of Christ. Timothy had fled youthful lusts, holding faith in a good conscience, studying to show himself approved of God, enduring hardness as a good soldier. How proud Paul must have been of this young convert!

Timothy may not have been beautiful in countenance or brilliant in mind, entertaining socially, or rich in wealth, but he was more than all that, faithful and true in heart and life. Timothy built on the sure foundation, so that on his monument could well be written, "Faithful and true." When parents are priests of their households, having a church in the home, where children begin to worship and where their moral qualities are molded, they become the noblest characters of the race, the faithful subjects of governments, and the worthy children of the family of e Highest. E. W. C.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

Christian Citizenship

IN a call just issued for the Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference, to be held in Pittsburg, Pa., July 4, 1918, the appeal is made to all the churches of America to be represented.

It is urged that the period immediately following the war is "the providential hour for Christian people of every name and race to assemble for the prayerful consideration of the nations' relation to God." Why this action should be taken after the war, instead of now, as we are entering the conflict, is a question which will arise in many minds at this particular time. To the great body of Christians, it would seem that the fitting moment for considering our relations to the Ruler of the Universe is before, instead of after, the event.

Apart from this single point, which seems to us of the first importance, we heartily agree with the general program of the proposed conference, and trust that it may result in such united action by all the denominations as is suited to the great need and the high occasion.

In the call itself there is a straightforward statement of the spiritual situation: "The world's greatest need is Christ. He is the only panacea for the world's sickness; and Christianity is needed, not for the individual only, but for nations as great moral organisms, which have failed to keep his law. Nations must get right with God, in order to find true prosperity and to end and prevent war. Civil government must be Christian, in order to secure internal and external peace. Human wisdom and human plans are insufficient. Economic, legislative and military arrangements all fall short. Treaties and alliances fail. Arbitration is not enough. Peace movements alone cannot bring peace. The world needs Christ. The only road to lasting peace is the highway of the principles of the Prince of Peace."

All discussion concerning peace and the hopes that have been raised of the reopening of peace parleys before the winter sets in are based on little more than mere conjecture. While it is doubtless true that in all the lands now involved there is a strong desire for peace, the terms assigned by report to each are altogether unofficial, and most of them are denied almost as soon as printed. They may represent the trend of public opinion in the countries to which they refer; but the peace terms which rumor assigns to each of the different governments are in the main so widely apart as to seem to be irreconcilable. While peace may come suddenly and when least expected, it is quite within the probabilities that the war may last another year at least.

We note that the Conference's call, in recognizing the causes of the war, is in full accord with what has been repeatedly stated in the Christian Herald: "It must be recognized that the distinct and fundamental reason for the present world catastrophe is sin; and not sin in a merely general sense, or the sin of the individual, but also the disobedience of nations and governments. Nations have broken the law of God. Rulers have failed in honoring him and in applying his law in the civil sphere. The present war never could have taken place, had all the nations endeavored to follow the divine principles of righteousness and unselfishness."

This being so, and duly admitted, why should there be any delay in presenting ourselves, contrite and suppliant, before God and asking for his forgiveness and his guidance in all that may come in the future? We appreciate the fact that the conference of the Christian forces of a single nation and a world-conference are two different affairs, and that the latter could not be practicable at the present time, while the former would certainly be so.

We trust that the Conference, when it takes place, may be a success, and that all the Christian influences of America may combine with those of other lands to help it achieve its great purpose—the application of the principles of Christian faith to the affairs of social and civil, as well as national and international, life.

The Reward of the Farmer

NONE can begrudge the farmers of this country their good fortune in the bountiful crops and high prices of this year. They richly deserve all the reward that comes to them.

However much of the profits of many other lines of production may be due to unfair manipulation, the farmer creates new values through his toil, and in creating them enriches all.

The prosperous middle-aged farmer of today, facing his declining years in comfort and plenty, may be envied by the wage-workers of the cities. But let us not forget that the now prosperous farmer has bought his present condition at cost of ceaseless toil and tireless energy, of almost inconceivable self-denial and sacrifice, of disappointments and discouragements that only the fittest could survive.

If any life in this country has been harder than that of the farmer it is that of his wife. The lives of these men and women have been the most extraordinary and most fruitful in all history. From the Alleghanies westward to the Pacific they have, almost within the span of existing lives, turned an unknown wilderness into the mightiest political and industrial empire under the sun.

While their horizon was still bounded by the clearing his ax had made, the prophetic pioneer farmer and his wife boldly dreamed of continental conquest. Their vision saw beyond the dank swamp, the bleak desert and dark forest to the lofty buildings and the jostling multitudes of mighty cities; beyond the rank, grass-clad prairies to the seas of golden grain; beyond the harsh life of the log hut and the sod house to the cozy homes of their children, where should be comfort and the higher things of life, though they might not be for him and her.

Richly have they earned all the good that comes to them. For they have enriched not themselves alone, but the nation.

Agriculture ever has been and ever will be the backbone of business in this country.

Another Step Forward

THESE last three years of increasing drain upon the trades and professions and every kind of skill and labor, due to the war, have opened many new doors to women. In the announcement that the medical schools of Columbia and Harvard have decided to accept women students we recognize a significant indication of the great change that is in progress. It would not be surprising to find other colleges following this example and wholly abolishing the ancient barrier which has shut out the sex till now. Those professions—and they are steadily diminishing in number—that still retain the barrier must feel their conservative notions sadly shaken as they look about and see the women successfully invading territory that was tightly walled up against them only a few years ago. Today we have women bankers, brokers, accountants, railway managers, public officials, and even a mayor and a representative in Congress. In sociological work, in chemistry and biology, in architecture and sculpture, in dramatic authorship and music, the women have fairly won their spurs. They have even invaded the pulpit, and long ago they proved their efficiency in missionary work and in various forms of service requiring brains, executive ability and initiative. Now that the world upheaval with its changed conditions has brought them new opportunities, they will doubtless make these stepping stones to still further advancement. Everywhere throughout the world the watchword of modern womanhood is "Forward," and none will be so ungallant and churlish as to deny them what they have fairly and bravely won.

The Reformation Celebration

PROTESTANTISM approaches the day which marks the four hundredth anniversary of its birth—October 31. Extensive preparations have been made for a constructive observance, and for almost a year those churches whose origin lies especially in the time and countries of the great sixteenth century religious movement have conducted a quiet but earnest and effective celebration. Summer schools and conferences have recognized the anniversary, some with extended programs. Out-of-door gatherings, where speaking, music and processionals were the features, have been attended by as many as sixteen thousand. Jubilee funds have been raised for the establishment of permanent useful memorials of the historic event.

The date on which the observance will be most general is October 28. Practically every Sunday school in America will give a program on that day, for which suitable material has been prepared. These programs can be procured from the Reformation Celebration Committee at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, and in the Hornor Building, 925 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Great meetings are scheduled for the same date and for October 31 and November 4. While the war has naturally modified the celebration, there has been no serious thought of abandoning or postponing it.

This is a religious celebration of the beginning of a movement primarily religious, and the emphasis is placed not on personality and nationality, but on principles. The anniversary affords opportunity not only for reviewing the great historical and religious events of the sixteenth century, but of all subsequent progress in which the cardinal principles of the Reformation have been the leavening factors. These principles are defined as: "Justification by faith, the privilege and responsibility of the individual soul before God, the supreme authority of the Scriptures, the right of private judgment, and such consequent benefits as popular education and religious and civil liberty, which have, by reason of this great movement, become the cornerstones of the American nation."

Protestant America owes much to Luther—so much that, even amid existing trials and distractions, it should strive by enthusiastic, united effort to make the coming celebration so markedly successful that it will be long remembered.

Next Week's Number

FRANK CARPENTER has in the past few months revealed to us many interesting but little-known facts about the industries and resources of our common country. Probably no industry has grown as rapidly or carried so much of romance in its history as the industry centered in Akron, Ohio, which turns gum into elastic goods, from rubber bands to military balloons. Scarcely as old as our grandfathers, the industry has made its greatest strides within the memory of most of us. Frank Carpenter has been at Akron. His next story will be full of rubber.

Milk as a food! For babies and calves you, say? Read what Dr. Vail thinks about it in next week's Christian Herald.

A great many organizations are exerting themselves to place the Scriptures in the hands of every soldier. "The Bible at the Front" is the subject of the message of Dr. David J. Burrell in next week's Herald.

An Example of Efficiency

ALTHOUGH the name of the first man who undertook to build a city has been lost to posterity—for archeologists assure us that there were cities even before the time of Cain—there is little danger that the plucky American who accepted the formidable job of building sixteen cantonments simultaneously, each of them equal to a pretty fair-sized city, will be forgotten. When Architect W. A. Starrett was appointed chief of the Committee on Emergency Construction, with the rank of major, he began to plan on a scale such as no other American builder has ever attempted. In different sections of the country, some of them hundreds of miles apart, he set a great army of skilled artisans at work. First he summoned over a thousand big contractors, and by elimination reduced the number to something like a hundred. Then he organized his labor under practical chiefs or overseers. Millions of feet of lumber began to arrive. Foundations were quickly laid. Each of the cantonments was planned large enough to accommodate 40,000 troops. Modern lighting, steam heat and sewers were provided for every one of the six or seven hundred buildings in each cantonment. All had to be built complete in three months. Like magic the houses rose, row after row, with regular streets between the lines. Each house was arranged to accommodate sixty men. The sounds of saw and hammer were heard everywhere. These magic cities, created as training-homes for our great national army, were filled as soon as finished, each with an average of 40,000 population. And now the big task is about done and the nation is struck with wonder at this new illustration of American efficiency. All are temporary buildings, of course, although substantial enough for the purpose. When the great war is over, while here and there a cantonment may prove the nucleus of a permanent city of the future, the majority of them will probably disappear as quickly as they arose.

Advantage in Adversity

WHERE there are no griefs there is no inspiration and little activity'

"You don't know how this privation rouses me," said a great painter.

"What privation do you mean? '

"I mean this going with only one meal a day because I have no money to buy more."

There, maybe, lies the secret of the fact that the men who have produced most of the world's great art trained themselves in garrets.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

A Cripple Newsboy

A MINISTER stopped at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street, New York, and asked a newsman for an Evening Journal. The newsman said, "All out of Journals. I have the Sun, World, Mail, Globe, Telegram, and the rest." The minister said he wanted to see an editorial in the Journal against whisky. The newsman, who is a cripple, said, "Stay here a minute and I will get you a copy." He hobbled across that terribly crowded thoroughfare, and had to go the rounds before he could find one, having been gone at least four minutes, the minister meanwhile selling papers for him. The customer said, "You are the most obliging newsboy I ever saw," and gave him a quarter and would not take back the change. Then he asked, "How long have you been in this business?" "Twenty-five years on this corner." "You have no stand; only this little bench against the pavement and up against the building." The newsy replied, "My father was one of the prominent contractors of this city. He speculated and lost his money and died, and I, the only child, was driven out on the street to sell papers to support my widowed mother. About this time I received a stroke of paralysis and stood on this corner a cripple, nine years of age, with papers in my arms. The owner of this building saw me and told me to get a little box six inches wide and three feet long and put it close up against the wall and that would be my newsstand, and I have sold papers here ever since. I have supported a wife and children, have a son in college fifteen years of age, and take care of my dear old mother, who is eighty-five years old." In answer to the minister's question as to whether he was a Christian, he said: "Oh, yes, I am; I attend church services, try to live an honest and unselfish life, and have determined that while I look after my customers and my family, I would not neglect my own soul's salvation." The rich and famed, as they ride past him in their cars, may take off their hats to this crippled newsboy, who has been "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." (Rom. 12 : 11).

Brothers Give $1,650,344

DR, Will J. Mayo and Dr. Charles H. Mayo, the celebrated surgeons, on September 13 turned over their entire savings to the University of Minnesota. At a meeting of the regents of the University Dr. Will J. Mayo, who is a member of the board, said: "We turn over as an outright gift to the regents the bulk of our savings of a generation. The money came from the people, and we feel it should be returned to the people. It is our wish that the fund shall serve the State for generations in the furtherance of medical investigation and research. All humanity, we hope, will be benefited by the work which we expect the fund to enable scientists to carry on." The regents accepted the gift unanimously with thanks. The total amount turned over by the two celebrated physicians is $1,650,344. The acceptance by the University of the fund means the taking over by the institution of the Mayo Foundation at Rochester, Minnesota. Expenses at the foundation will be paid by the Doctors Mayo until a fund of $2,000,000 has accumulated; thereafter the income from the fund will maintain it. What an inspiring example of public spirit these two men show us! First they went to the front of the medical profession; second, they rendered invaluable service to their fellows in curing disease and in saving life; and third, they gave back in gratitude to the people a large sum, and an infinitely more valuable treasure in the benevolent institution they bequeathed, which will send down their beneficent influence to the generations to come. There is the Christly spirit in this magnificent gift of merciful service. He came as the Saviour of men's souls, but his divinity was also manifested in his cure of the diseases of the body! "And he healed all that were sick." (Matt. 8 : 16.)

New York Schools Open

ON Monday, September 10, the school bells rang out the vacation and rang in the new year of study, and about 850,000 children, little tots, large boys and girls and high-school students of the metropolis came from all parts to their respective rooms for study and recitation. The children were very happy to meet each other again and to put themselves under the care of competent and faithful teachers. Only about 15,000 new scholars were added to the rolls, as the immigration has been so greatly reduced. Last year there were in the elementary schools 75,203; high schools, 72,611; trade and training schools, 1,945; vocational schools, 2,103. Twelve schools in the Bronx are now run on the Gary plan; last year twelve were opened in Brooklyn. The new physical training law went into effect on the opening day. One of the most important features of the present school year will be the attempt to teach all foreigners the English language, and $78,000 additional was appropriated to increase and improve the night schools for this purpose. Amid the pride and rejoicing over the army marching up to the school doors there is the humiliating fact that there are not enough schoolhouses to accommodate the children, and that many thousands of them are allowed half time in attendance. This is a shame. There is no apology for it. Plenty of money for bridges, streets, subways and other material conveniences, but not enough for the proper education of the children, the hope of the home, the state and the church. This is a poor example for the richest city of America and the second city of the world to set to the nation. The teachers in our common schools are ideal men and women, the moral atmosphere of the boards of education is refreshing and health-giving. They are necessary to the success, to the existence of democracy. The school education, important as it is, must be associated with the moral and spiritual instruction of the home and church. The Jews made much of this spiritual instruction, in obedience to the command. "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." (Deut. 6 : 7.)

Suffrage Favorably Reported

THE crushing defeat of Woman Suffrage in Maine did not seem to affect Congress, for on September 13 the Susan B. Anthony resolution for nationwide woman suffrage was favorably reported by the United States Senate Suffrage Committee, and will take its place on the calendar for a vote at the regular session beginning in December. A two-thirds majority will be required in the Senate and afterward in the House, and then it will go down to the States, requiring the ratification of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. Without debate or objection the Senate passed Senator Shafroth's bill authorizing the Hawaiian legislature to give women who have property and other qualifications the right to vote in territorial elections. It also authorizes the legislature to submit to the territory the question of giving women unrestricted suffrage. Advocates of female suffrage some times point to a Bible character who they think would have been better qualified to cast a ballot than her husband. "She was a woman of good understanding and of a beautiful countenance; but the man was churlish and evil in his doings." (I Sam. 25 : 3).

East St. Louis Mayor Indicted

MAYOR Fred Mollman of East St. Louis was indicted the other day in connection with the Grand Jury inquiry into the recent race riots in that city. Indictments were also returned against the mayor's private secretary and thirty-seven other citizens, bringing the total number of indictments up to 144. The Grand Jury submitted a report criticizing the mayor for his alleged dilatoriness in taking means to curb the rioters who took part in the slaying of negroes on July 2 and recommended that he be removed from office. "Mayor Mollman," says the report, "must be judged by his actions as proved by the evidence. If his failure to give directions to the militia and his failure to call upon the sheriff and to deputize citizens who offered their services were the result of a lack of ability or of fright, the office should be taken from him and given to an efficient person." The lives sacrificed by official imbecility, cowardice, or sympathy with the rioters cannot be restored, but an impeachment of the one responsible for the government might prevent a recurrence of the tragedy. Senator Sherman of Illinois in the United States Senate, at the time of the riots, said that the saloons had caused all the trouble; that East St. Louis was one of the worst rum-cursed cities in America, and that a wide-open town was responsible for the murders. The mayor's allowing the lawless saloons to dominate the city would be a just cause in itself for his removal from office. The penalty of bad rulership is thus referred to: "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn." (Prov. 29 : 2).

Arrested for Fake Diplomas

A GROUP of fakers, representing themselves as professors of "Collegiate Institute" scattered over the land, have been selling fake diplomas to lawyers, doctors, dentists and others, and these men, paying the price, joined in the band and practiced their professions in different places. The head of one of these "institutes" on Staten Island, New York, was arrested the other day on the charge of charging a man $1,600 for a diploma and license to practice medicine and taking $2,000 from a man for the authority to practice dentistry. The charge is grand larceny, and if the testimony shall justify the charge the head and all the members of the gang of thieves through the country should be hunted down and put behind the bars. The penalty on the thief and liar in the prophet's vision is more severe even than our laws against larceny. He says of the flying roll: "This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth for every one that stealeth shall be cut off." (Zech. 5 : 3).

FROM ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER

Conducted by MARGARET E. SANGSTER

October Hints

AS I walked down the street today I noticed that freshly laundered white curtains hung in many house-windows, that heavy draperies had made their reappearance, and that bits of furniture, seen dimly through panes of heavy glass, had marvelously shed their summer coverings of linen. I noticed that window boxes and awnings had been taken in and that substantial door-mats had been laid out. From sundry back yards I heard the sound of sweeping and of carpet-beating. And, because of these signs, I didn't need to look at the yellowing trees or the cloud-flecked blue sky—I didn't even have to glance at the calendar—to know that it was October.

I rather like October—quite aside from its wonderful color and charm. I rather like October because it is customary, during that month, to prepare and brighten one's home for the winter. . . .

© Underwood & Underwood

The Seventh Regiment Leaves the City

I SAW them marching down the street. (my pulses throbbed with pain), a company in olive-drab who might not come again. And most of them were only boys with youth's proud faith unfurled—with eyes that saw the joy of life shine through an aching world.

I saw them marching down the street, and then I turned and saw the women folk who lined the way and, oh, the picture tore my very heart, for sorrow glanced reflected from each face, and well I knew that every soul held one torn aching place.

I saw them marching down the street to bugle and to drum—and then I heard a muffled sob and saw the teardrops come into a gray-haired mother's eyes, I saw her, groping, take one last, despairing, hungry glance and then I saw her shake her shoulders that were bent with care. I saw her raise her head and try to smile as if she hoped to conquer fear and dread.

I saw them marching down the street—how evenly they marched! And something clutched my faith and trust—my throat seemed dry and parched; for at my side a slender girl was standing, burning-eyed; and with her arm across her face another frankly cried; and one who had a handkerchief was tearing it to bits. . . . And all because the God of War with dripping sword-blade sits and dares us to ignore his call—to let his gauntlet lie. . . . Ah, many broken hopes and dreams went marching sadly by with that proud line of gallant men—and most of them were boys who scarce had known the taste of life—who scarce had known its joys!

I saw them marching down the street—so strong and brave and true beneath our starry banner's shine—the red and white and blue! And in my heart of hearts I spoke and, "Au revoir!" I breathed. And I could dream them marching back with victors' garlands wreathed. And I could hear a woman laugh where once a woman sobbed, and "Till we meet again!" was what the valiant drum-beats throbbed!

"Until we meet again!" This line should be on every soul—and with it there should be the prayer, "God keep them safe and whole." Ah, we, the women of our land, must never say "Good-by," and we must learn to lift our heads, to smile instead of cry! For "Good-by" means the end of things, when hope itself is cold, and "Au revoir" means coming back, and faith as bright as gold.

I saw them marching down the street—the avenue was gay with vivid flags, but women folk stood, pale, along the way. And many kerchiefs fluttered white along that wistful line, and many eyes looked soft with tears, seen through the mist of mine. Yet, watching them, I felt the pride America must feel as youth starts out with flag unfurled to fight for an ideal!

A FRIEND of mine, who likes a bit of dainty color in her window draperies and feels that she cannot afford the expensive silks, has made some very beautiful curtains of softly tinted cotton voile. She has stitched the hems in with a deeper shade of embroidery floss, and the effect is very worth while.

If your fairly heavy curtains need cleaning, pin a sheet to the floor and scatter dry cornmeal and borax (mixed in the proportion of one teaspoonful of powdered borax to one cup of meal) over it. Over the sheet pin a curtain, and over the curtain scatter more of the mixture; then another curtain and more mixture, until all the curtains are pinned down and strewn with meal and borax. Now pull out the pins, and roll compactly so that the sheet shall cover it all. Let this roll season for a week or so, and, when the curtains are unrolled these will be found ready for use.

If, when laundering lace curtains, a creamy shade is desired, add clear strong coffee to the starch.

To clean upholstered furniture, cover the material with a towel and whip with a rattan.

When cleaning finished walnut, cherry or oak wood, wash it in tepid soapsuds, dry very quickly, and rub hard with a flannel and a few drops of kerosene. Mahogany merely needs to be wiped with a damp cloth and rubbed very hard with a clean flannel. Gilt woodwork may be cleaned with cold water mixed with half its quantity of vinegar. This should be applied with a soft brush and dried off quickly with a clean cloth.

Glowing brassware adds a cosy touch to the winter decorations of a room. It may be kept spotless by a mixture of whiting wet with aqua ammoniæ, or with salt and vinegar. A light coat of white shellac applied when the metal is perfectly dry and clean will prevent tarnishing and keep the metal bright.

To remove stains from colored silk draperies wet the spots thoroughly with alcohol, rub lightly and let dry. Turpentine and clear ammonia are equally effective in removing such spots.

Carpets may be thoroughly cleaned while on the floor only by a suction cleaner, but if they are sprinkled with tea leaves or scraps of wet newspaper before they are swept, they will be materially brightened and cleaner than if swept dry. Carpets should only be beaten when laid face down on the grass, and then only with a flexible beater. Shaking ruins rugs.

To clean marble take two parts of soda, one part of pumice stone, and one part of finely powdered chalk. Sift through a fine sieve and mix to a paste with water. Apply all over the marble until the stains disappear, and then wash with soap and water.

Clothes Questions and Answers

"I AM going to be married," writes M. W., "this month. My wedding will be a very simple afternoon affair. Is it necessary that I wear a veil—and a satin frock?"

It is not necessary for a bride to wear a veil at an afternoon wedding. Neither is it necessary for her to wear a satin frock. Her gown may range all the way from a semi-dress affair in white crêpe de Chine, messaline, or some soft cotton fabric, to a dark silk dress or a traveling suit. If she wears a traveling suit it is correct to wear a hat and gloves, but if she wears a dress, the head covering may be dispensed with.

"I live in the country and have no opportunity to see the shops," H. E. T. tells us, "and as I am anxious to have my new blue serge dress trimmed in the most fashionable way I am going to ask you what sort of trimmings are being used, this fall, in New York."

Blue serge dresses, this fall, are trimmed rather simply with soutache braid or embroidery. The embroidery is often done in bright colors with either heavy rope silk or worsted. Some of the more elaborate serge dresses are beaded with varicolored beads.

Hems and seams this fall are often bound with silk binding or braid, and white collars—usually made of wash satin—are used.

"My only girl," says "A Mother," "is going away to boarding-school. I want her outfit to be as pretty as anybody's, but it must—for many reasons—be simple. What will she absolutely need to take with her?"

The girl at boarding-school will need four, at least, of every article of underwear—a bath-robe and slippers, two pairs of shoes (one heavy pair and one for best) and two hats—a boyish little felt and a nice one.

She will need a serge frock for school, a plain silk or cloth for more dress-up occasions, and a net or crêpe de Chine gown for little informal parties. A heavy dark coat will do nicely for out-of-doors, and a woolen sweater will, perhaps, be needed for sports wear.

Of course a suit, with several pretty waists, would help to fill in a gap. And a skirt with middie blouses would be a change for school wear. But these last are not "absolutely necessary."

"I have," writes L. E. N., "red hair. No, it isn't auburn, it's plain red. And my eyes are brown, and I have freckles on my nose. What colors should I wear?"

Never wear red or pink or a trying shade of vivid blue or green (which many auburn-haired girls do wear). Make brown—rich seal brown—the keynote of your wardrobe; wear black and navy blue, and, if you have good color, gray.

For dress-up wear white, and pale blues, greens, and lavenders. Avoid too vivid combinations of color.

"I must have a new afternoon dress," K. J. tells me, "one that will do, also, for informal evening parties. I have to wear my clothes for a long while, and so I want something that will be fairly inexpensive, and that will not get too tiresome. . . . My hair is light brown and my eyes are blue. What shall I get?"

Navy blue silk (taffeta or a light satin), combined perhaps with navy blue Georgette crêpe, is perhaps the least tiresome thing you can buy. Navy blue is unobtrusive enough to always look fresh and new when one adds a crisp lawn collar or an embroidered voile one.

"I haven't enough money to buy winter furs," laments E. F. S. "But I would like a muff and a neckpiece. What substitute could I purchase with as little as five dollars?"

I have seen very beautiful sets made of plush, velvet, or tapestry. The neckpiece may be made in the fashionable collar shape, which when laid out would be a straight piece of goods eighteen by thirty-six inches. The muff can be made over a muff bed which need not cost more than a dollar. The linings may be made of any bright silks that you have in the house.

A Sheaf of Ideas

I HAVE learned this week, through my mail basket, that:

A woman doctor, giving up her comfortable and profitable practice, has joined a hospital unit and sailed for Europe. She will there bring comfort to the comfortless, peace to the suffering ones and hope to those who are hopeless.

And I have learned that:

A little lady in the West, well past middle age, would like to adopt a child. "I have enough," she writes, "to be comfortable, and I think to make some homeless little one comfortable. I am getting older every day, and I want to do something—good."

And I have learned that:

A girl who is deaf has struggled against her misfortune and pain until she has, almost miraculously, become an expert pianist and an efficient piano-tuner.

And I have learned that:

A woman, whose letter comes unsigned, is teaching a class of girls who live in an illiterate, isolated district, the arts of dress-making and cooking and homemaking. "Already," she says, "I notice a new brightness in the sordid little houses—a new glow of pride in eyes that did not know the value of beauty and health and cleanliness."

All these things I have read, this week, in my mail basket.

But—

What have you done?

A Week in the World's News

CENTRAL EMPIRES REPLY. The text of the Austrian reply to the Pope's Peace Note of August 1 was made public on September 22 and the text of the German reply on the following day. The two notes greatly resemble each other in contents and structure. The German note states: "His Majesty has been following for a considerable time with high respect and sincere gratitude his Holiness's efforts to hasten . . . the end of hostilities . . . and cherishes a lively desire that for the benefit of the entire world the papal appeal may meet with success." The note then outlines the efforts of the Kaiser since his accession to the throne to preserve the peace of the world—quotes his promise to the German army that it should only be used to safeguard peace, and declares that "in the crisis which led to the present world conflagration, his Majesty's efforts were up to the last moment directed toward settling the conflict by peaceful means." The same paragraph, after calling attention to the fact that the Kaiser was the first to declare his readiness to enter into peace negotiations, states that "the German people support his Majesty in his keen desire for peace." The note declares that Germany sought only opportunity for free development within her frontiers and equal rights and equal esteem without, and that "the free play of forces of the world in peaceable wrestling would lead to the highest perfecting of the noblest human possessions. A disastrous concatenation of events in the year 1914 absolutely broke off all hopeful course of development and transformed Europe into a bloody battle arena." The note states that the message of the Pope has been given "earnest and scrupulous examination," that it has been discussed "in closest contact with representatives of the German people." The Imperial Government adheres specifically to the declaration of the Pope that "in the future the material power of arms must be superseded by the moral power of right," and subscribes also to the suggestion for "the simultaneous diminution of the armed forces of all states and the institution of obligatory arbitration for international disputes," declaring: "We share his Holiness's view that definite rules and a certain safeguard for the simultaneous and reciprocal limitation of armaments on land, on sea and in the air, as well as for the true freedom of the community and high seas are the things in treating which the new spirit that in the future should prevail in the international relations should find first hopeful expression. The task would then of itself arise to decide international differences of opinion, not by the use, of armed forces, but by peaceful methods, especially by arbitation, whose high peace-producing effect we . . . fully recognize. The Imperial Government will in this respect support every proposal compatible with the vital interest of the German Empire and people." The German note also calls attention to the necessity for Germany, because of her geographical situation, relying on peaceful intercourse with her neighbors, and suggests that the nations recognize the more important things that unite them in their relations. In closing, the note declares the conviction of the Imperial German Government that a lasting peace can only be founded upon such a working out of the conditions of existence as would be satisfactory to all nations. The note concludes: "This serious and sincere conviction encourages our confidence that our enemies also may see a suitable basis in the ideas submitted by his Holiness for approaching nearer to the preparation of future peace under conditions corresponding to a spirit of reasonableness and to the situation in Europe." The reply of Austria, after outlining the efforts of the present emperor of the dual monarchy "to prepare an end to bloodshed," adhered specifically to the following principles: The limitations of armed forces, the moral force of right and the rule of international justice and legality; the reduction of armaments on land and sea and in the air sumultaneously, reciprocally and gradually to a fixed limit, freeing the high seas "from domination of paramountcy"; compulsory arbitration of international disputes and "a satisfactory solution of the other questions which still remain to be settled between the belligerents in a spirit of justice and of a reasonable consideration of the conditions for existence of both parties." The note closed thus: "Guided by a spirit of moderation and conciliation, we see in the proposals of your Holiness a suitable basis for initiating negotiations with a view to preparing a peace, just to all and lasting, and we earnestly hope our present enemies may be animated by the same ideas. In this spirit we beg that the Almighty may bless the work of peace begun by your Holiness."

ONLY SIMPLE JUSTICE. Among all of the war bills there is none more necessary for the honor of the government than the bill introduced by Senator Chamberlain on September 18, known officially as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Rights Bill. It is equally as important as the bill providing soldiers' insurance, and when both bills become law the men who offer their lives upon the altar of their country's need will march into battle with the knowledge that their dependents will be fully protected. The Civil Rights Bill is known more familiarly as the soldier's moratorium. It is expected that it will be opposed by property interests, which never seem to learn that sacrifice must be shared. Some of the more important provisions of the bill are as follows: It will prevent the obtaining of judgments against the fighting men absent from home, and will act as a stay against the statute of limitations, permitting a soldier or sailor to sue for a just debt, no matter how long he remains in the service of his country. It will also prevent the selling of soldiers' property to satisfy judgments of record when he entered the service. It will prevent the foreclosure of mortgages on the home, business or stock in trade of soldiers. It will also prevent landlords from dispossessing the families of the fighting man unable to pay the rent during his absence. Under the bill mine and irrigation claims held by men in uniform will be protected against claim jumping, and insurance companies will be prevented from canceling policies upon which premiums have not been paid.¶ The bill will provide necessary safeguards for owners of property and for insurance companies, without sacrificing protection for the soldiers.

BILLIONS FOR WAR. The House on September 18 passed the war appropriation bill carrying total appropriations of about $7,000,000,000, of which $2,314,000,000 was appropriated for naval construction and artillery, $515,000,000 for the purchase of shipping plants, material, and ships, and $1,234,000,000 for the construction of ships.

BERLIN REGRETS. The Imperial Government on September 17 notified the Argentine minister at Berlin that Germany disapproved absolutely of the expressions used by Count von Luxburg in his dispatches, and Count von Luxburg was notified through the Argentine minister that the government wished him to return to Germany immediately to explain the entire matter personally. Germany also expressed her regrets to Sweden for the misuse of Swedish diplomatic courtesies. Sweden, however, refused to act longer as messenger for Germany. The Argentine Senate on September 19 voted, 23 to 1, for the breaking of relations with Germany and Argentina was reported on September 22 to be preparing for War with Germany. On September 21, Secretary Lansing made public a cablegram sent by Count von Bernstorff, when German Ambassador at Washington, which revealed him in the rôle of plotting to "influence" the American Congress through an unnamed organiza-

Continued on page 1048

The Witness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

Author of "The Voice in the Wilderness"

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

STEPHEN MARSHALL, a young college freshman, being put through the process of hazing by the students, was carried to a theater where a very questionable play was on the stage. While the play was in progress, an alarm of fire was given, and Stephen saved several lives before he fell a victim to the flames. Paul Courtland, one of the students, was in the theater and witnessed the heroic death of Stephen. He himself joined in the work of rescue, and barely escaped with his life and lay for days in the hospital. When he could walk around the college he announced to his fellow students that he stood for Stephen Marshall's Christ. The students planned to neutralize this new spirit through the medium of Gila Dare, a worldly young lady, who was to invite Courtland to her house to tell him how she admired his heroic conduct at the fire. Abner Wittemore, who because of his slowness was called "Witless Abner," having received a telegram that his mother was dying, asked Courtland to carry a package of medicine to a poor old woman in whom he was interested. After praying with the old woman the first prayer of his life, Courtland started home, but had not gone far when he saw a boy run over by an automobile. He helped the child into the house, called a doctor, and when the child died made arrangements for a simple funeral, incidentlly becoming acquainted with the child's sister, Bonnie Brentwood. After returning to the dormitory Courtland was called up by Gila Dare, who invited him to call on her again; but the indifferent tone in which he replied over the phone, postponing the visit, showed the conspirators that he had not fallen into their trap. The next day he engaged the Rev. John Burns to conduct the funeral in the girl's poor tenement.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

IF Courtland had been asked before he came there whether he believed in a resurrection he might have given a doubtful answer. During the four years of his college life he had passed through various stages of unbelief along with a good many of his fellow students. With them he had made out a sort of philosophy of life which he supposed he believed. It was founded partly upon what he wanted to believe, and partly upon what he could not believe, because he had never been able to reason it out. Up to this time even his experience with the Presence had not touched this philosophy of his which he had constructed like a fancy scaffolding inside of which he expected to fashion his life. The Presence and his partial surrender to its influence had been a matter of the heart, and until now it had not occurred to him that his allegiance to the Christ was incompatible with his former philosophy. The doctrine of the resurrection suddenly stood before him as something that must be accepted along with the Christ, or the Christ was not the Christ! Christ was the resurrection if he was at all! Christ had to be that, had to have conquered death, or he would not have been the Christ; he would not have been God humanized for the understanding of men unless he could do God-like things. He was not God if he could not conquer death. He would not be a man's Christ if he could not come to man in his darkest hour and conquer his greatest enemy; put himself up against death and come out victorious!

A great fact had been revealed to Courtland. There was a resurrection of the dead, and Christ was the hope of that resurrection! It was as if he had just met Christ face to face and heard him say so; had it all explained to him fully and satisfactorily. He doubted if he could tell the professor in the Biblical Literature class how, because perhaps he hadn't seen the Christ that way; but others understood! That white, strained face of the girl was not hopeless. There was the light of a great hope in her eyes; they could see afar off over the loneliness of the years that were to be, up to the time when she should meet the little brother again, glorified, perfected, stainless!

IT suddenly came to Courtland to think how Stephen Marshall would look with that glorified body. The last glimpse he had had of him standing above the burning pit of the theater with the halo of flames about his head had given him a vision. Some day he would surely see Stephen Marshall again, grasp his hand, make him know how he repented his own negative part in the persecution that had led him to his death; make him understand how in dying he had left a path of glory behind and given life to Paul Courtland.

They took the casket out to a quiet place beyond the city.

As they stood upon that bleak hillside, dotted over with white tombstones, the looming city in the distance off at the right, Courtland recognized the group of spreading buildings that belonged to his university. He marveled at the closeness of life and death in this world. Out there the busy city, everybody tired and hustling to get, to learn, to enjoy; out here everybody lying quiet, like the corn of wheat in the ground, waiting for the resurrection time, the call of God to come forth in beauty! What a difference it would make in the working, and getting, and hustling, and learning, and enjoying if everybody remembered how near the lying-quiet time might be! How unready some might be to lie down and feel that it was all over! How much difference it must make what one had done with the time over there in the city, when the stopping time came!

The minister had a very urgent call in another direction. He must take a trolley that passed the gate of the cemetery and go off as soon as the service was over. It fell to Courtland to look after the girl, for the doctor had not been able to leave his practice to take the long ride to the cemetery. She, it seemed, did not hear what they said, nor care who went with her.

COURTLAND led her to the carriage and put her in. "I suppose you will want to go directly back to the house?" he said.

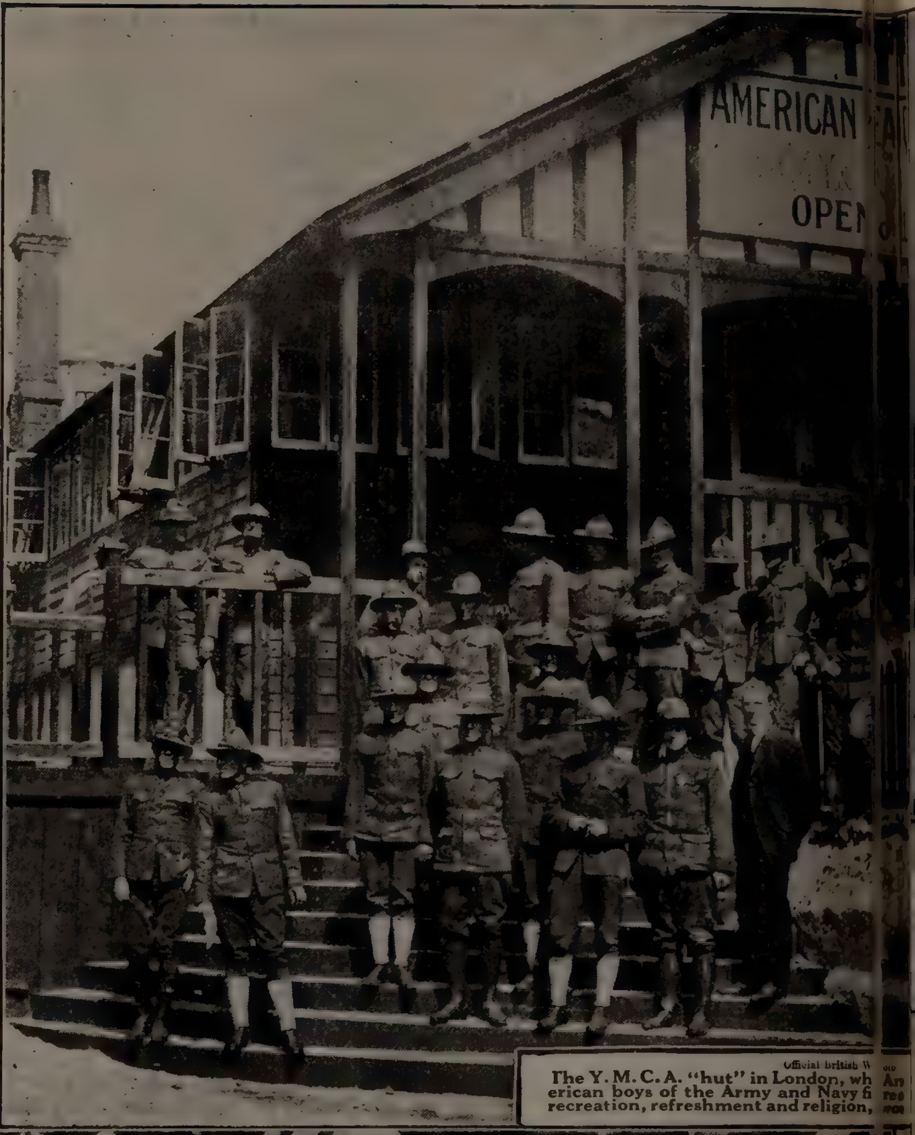
She turned to him as if she were coming out of a trance. She caught her breath and gave him one wild, beseeching look, crying out with something like a sob: "Oh, how can I ever go back to that room now!" And then her breath seemed suddenly to leave her and she fell back against the seat as if she were lifeless.

He sprang in beside her, took her in his arms, resting her head against his shoulder, loosened her coat about her throat, and chafed her cold hands, drawing the robes closely about her slender shoulders, but she lay there white and without a sign of life. He thought he never had seen anything so ghastly white as her face.

She came to herself just for an instant, looked about her, realized her sorrow once more, and dropped off into oblivion again.

Continued on page 1042

In School, in Camp, in Prison, and in Service



Official British W

The Y. M. C. A. "hut" in London, wh erican boys of the Army and Navy fi recreation, refreshment and religion,

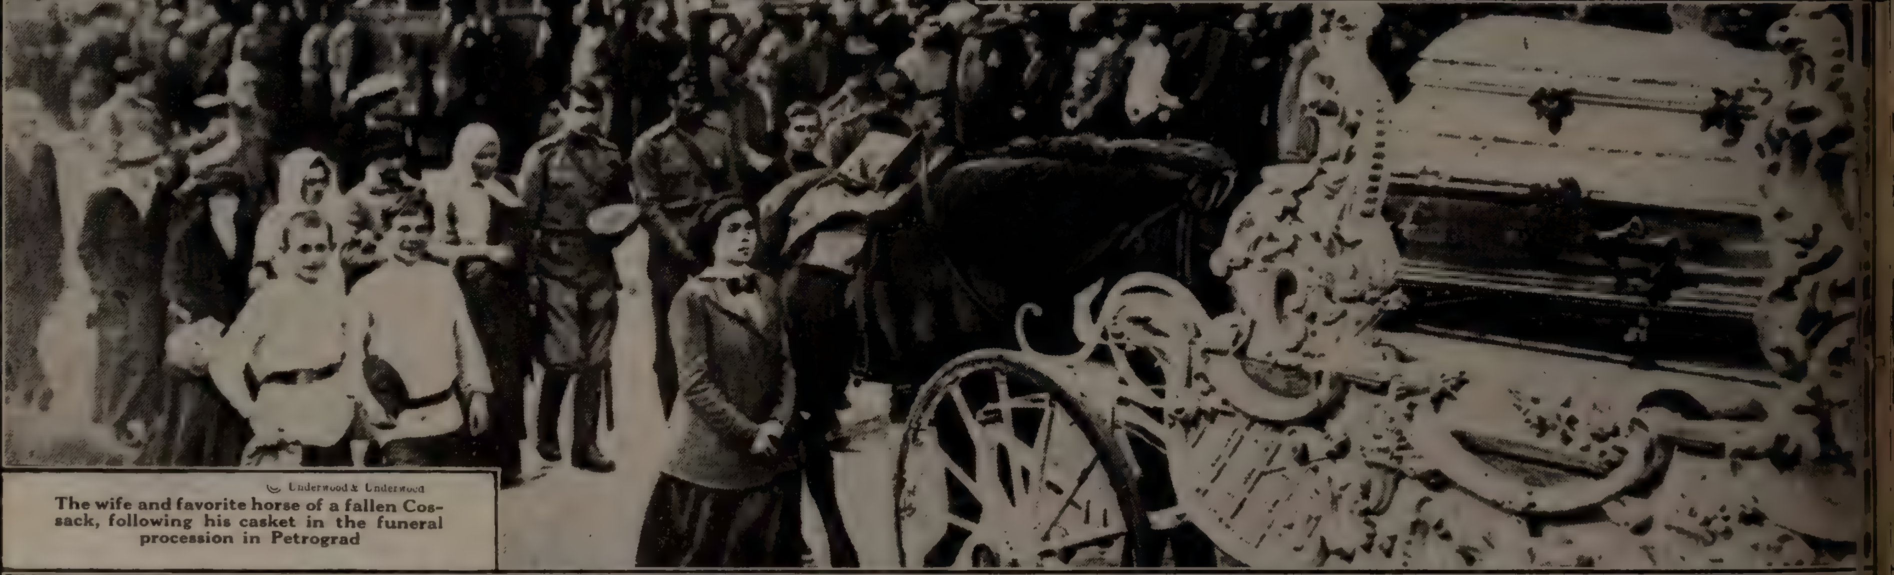
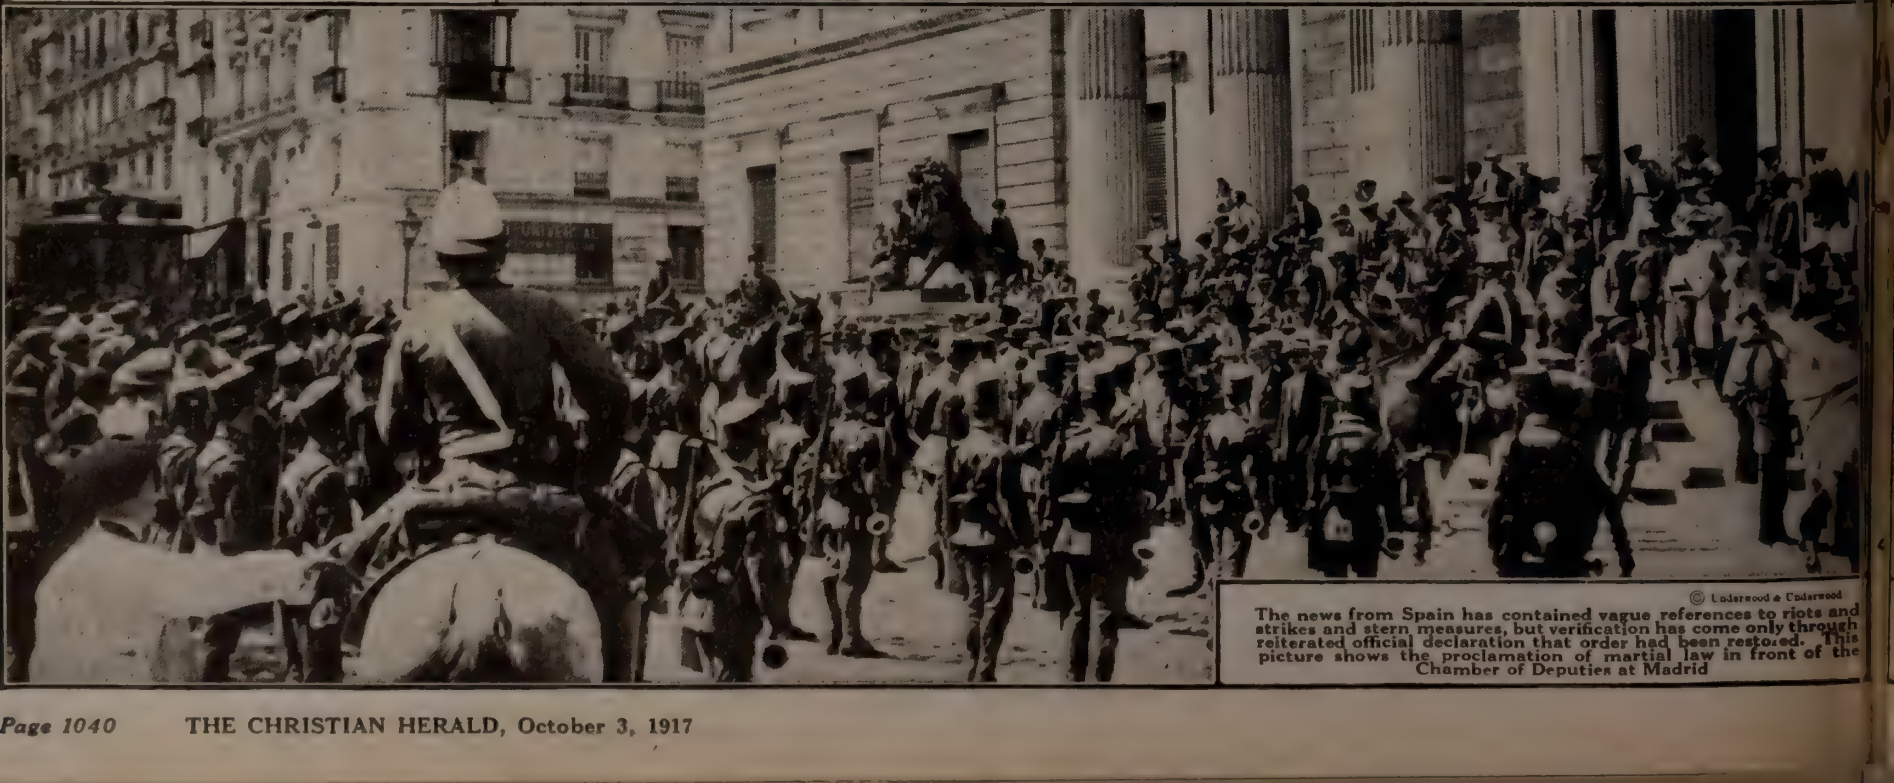
Part of a detention camp back of the lines in France, where are encamped 30,000 Germans, recent prisoners of the French and British



© Underwood & Underwood

The wife and favorite horse of a fallen Cossack, following his casket in the funeral procession in Petrograd



© Underwood & Underwood

The news from Spain has contained vague references to riots and strikes and stern measures, but verification has come only through reiterated official declaration that order had been restored. This picture shows the proclamation of martial law in front of the Chamber of Deputies at Madrid

Dr. John H. Quayle, who plans camps to fit men for service

Italian Official Photographs

Education and the framed pictures of the King and Queen follow the flag of Italy into "Italia Redenta" behind the ever advancing fighting lines. Where guns have roared the schoolmaster now holds sway

All ready for camp inspection at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

© International Film Service

Djemal Pasha, Governor of Palestine, deposed by Turkish Government

Some of the Russian thousands taken prisoners in the recent German thrusts on the Eastern front

Lowe Brothers
ARCHITECTURAL DURABLE FLOOR
VARNISH
The Lowe Brothers Company

From an original oil painting
Made especially for
The Lowe Brothers Company
by C. H. Taffs, of New York.

LOWE BROTHERS
VARNISHES AND ENAMELS

Distinguished for beauty of finish, enduring wear and resistance to hard usage.

Ask our Architectural Service Department for suggestions about your house finishing problem.
"The House, Outside and Inside," with color plates and a booklet on Varnish sent on request.

The Lowe Brothers Company
470 East Third Street, Dayton, Ohio.
Boston · New York · Jersey City
Chicago · Kansas City Minneapolis
Lowe Brothers, Ltd., Toronto, Canada

PAINT VARNISH

PATENTS That Protect and Pay Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 63 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

"Now I Save Half on All My Clothes"

"How do I manage? I make them all myself. You know the patriotic slogan among women this year is 'Make Your Own Clothes!' I took up dressmaking with the Woman's Institute, and I'm glad I did, for now my clothes are prettier, more stylish and more becoming and I have more dresses than ever at half the cost."

Make Your Own Clothes

This year thousands of women will help themselves as well as the nation by making their own and their children's clothes. The Woman's Institute is teaching 7,000 women right now by mail in their spare time and in their own homes, how to make dresses, waists, skirts, suits, coats, lingerie, children's clothes and hats. New and fascinating methods make it easy for you. You can easily save the cost of the course on your first few garments. With the knowledge these courses give you, you can secure, if you wish, a good position or open a shop of your own.

What Students Say

"I have earned enough making dresses for relatives and friends to pay for my entire course."
Miss Dorothy Harmeling, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I am so proud of the dresses I have made. My clothes bills are less than one-half what they were before."
Mrs. James Walton, Idaho.

Send this coupon, or a letter or postcard for handsome, illustrated book, telling all about our courses. State which subject interests you most.

Woman's Institute of Domestic Arts and Sciences, Inc.
Dept.37-X, 425 Fifth Ave., New York City

Woman's Institute, Dept.37-X, 425 Fifth Ave., New York

Please send me full information about your Home-Study Course in the subject I have marked below.

☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Millinery
☐ Professional Dressmaking

Name____________________
(Specify whether Miss or Mrs.)

Address____________________

The Witness

Continued from page 1039

"She's in a bad way!" murmured the driver, looking worried. "I guess we'd better get her somewheres. I don't want to have no responsibility. I reckon we'd better go on and stop at some hospital if she don't come to pretty soon."

The driver vanished and the carriage started at a rapid pace. Courtland sat supporting his silent charge in growing alarm. He was relieved when at last the carriage stopped again and he recognized the stone buildings of one of the city's great hospitals.

CHAPTER IX

WHEN Courtland got back to the university the afternoon examination had been in progress almost half an hour. With a brief explanation to the professor, he settled to his belated work regardless of Bill Ward's anxious glances from the back of the room, and Pat's lifted eyebrows from the other side. He knew he had yet to meet those three beloved antagonists. He seemed to have progressed through eons of experience since he talked with them last night. The intricate questions of the examination on political science over which he was trying faithfully to work seemed paltry beside the great facts of life and death.

He had remained at the hospital until the girl came out of her long swoon and the doctor said she was better. It had filled him with awe to think that he, a stranger, was her only friend in that great city, and she might be dying! Somehow he could not cast her off as a common stranger.

He arranged that she should be placed in a small private room at a moderate cost, and paid for a week in advance. The cost was a mere trifle to Courtland. The new overcoat he had meant to buy this week would more than cover the cost. But the strange thing about all this was that, having paid to put the girl where she would be perfectly comfortable and be well taken care of, he could not cast her off and forget her. His responsibility seemed to be doubled with everything he did for her.

He lay on the couch in Tennelly's room that night after supper and tried to think it out, while the other three clattered away about their marks and held an indignation meeting over the way Pat was getting black-listed by all the professors just when he was trying so hard. He didn't know the fellows were keeping it up to get his mind away from the funeral. He was thinking about that girl.

The doctor had told him that she was very much run down. It looked as if the process had been going on for some time. Her heart action was not all it should be, and there were symptoms of lack of nutrition. What she needed was rest.

But how could there be rest for a person who had no home, no friends, no money, and no time to lie idle?

IT was after ten o'clock when Courtland sauntered down the hall and stood in Stephen Marshall's room for a few minutes.

As he stood looking about the plain walls, his eyes fell upon that picture of Stephen Marshall's mother. A mother! Ah! if there were a mother somewhere to whom that girl could go! Some one who would understand her; be gentle and tender with her; love her, as he should think a real mother would do—what a difference that would make!

He began to think over all the women he knew—all the mothers. There were not so many of them. Some of the professors' wives who had sons and daughters of their own? Well, they might be all well enough for their own sons and daughters, but there wasn't one who seemed likely to want to behave in a very motherly way to a stranger like his waif of a girl. They were nice to the students, polite and kind to the extent of one tea or reception apiece a year, but that was about the limit.

Well, there was Tennelly's mother! Dignified, white-haired, beautiful, dominant in her home and clubs, charming to her guests; but—he could just fancy how she would raise her lorgnette and look "Bonnie" Brentwood over. There would be no room in that grand house for a girl like Bonnie! Bonnie! How the name suited her! He had a strange protective feeling about that girl, not as if she were like the other girls he knew; perhaps it was a sort of a "Christ-brother" feeling, as the minister had suggested. Gila's mother! Pah! That painted, purple image of a mother! Her own daughter needed to find a real mother somewhere. She couldn't mother a stranger! Mothers! Why weren't there enough real ones to go around? If he only had a mother himself, she would have understood!

HE looked into the pictured eyes on the wall and an idea came to him. It was like an answer to prayer. Stephen Marshall's mother! Why hadn't he thought of her before? She was that kind of a mother of course, or Stephen Marshall would not have been the man he was! If the Bonnie girl could only get to her for a little while! But would she take her? Would she understand?

He would put it to the test whether there was a mother in the world or not. Following a sudden impulse, he went back to his room and wrote her a letter:

Dear Mother of Stephen Marshall: I know you are a real mother because Stephen was what he was. And now I am going to let you prove it by coming to you with something that needs a mother's help.

There is a little girl—I should think she must be about nineteen or twenty years old—lying in the hospital, worn out with hard work and sorrow. She has recently lost her father and mother, and had brought her little five-year-old brother to the city a couple of weeks ago. They were living in a very small room, boarding themselves, she working all day somewhere down-town. Two days ago, as she was coming home in the trolley, her little brother, crossing the street to meet her, was knocked down and killed by a passing automobile. We buried him today, and the girl fainted dead away on the way back from the cemetery, and only recovered consciousness when we got her to the hospital. The doctor says she has exhausted her vitality and needs to sleep for a week and be fed up; and then she ought to go to some cheerful place where she can just rest for a while and have fresh air and sunshine and good, plain, nourishing food.

Now she hasn't a friend in the city. I know from the few little things she has told me that there isn't any one in the world she will feel free to turn to. She isn't the kind of girl who will accept charity. She's refined, reserved, independent, and all that, you know. There's another thing, too—she prays to your Stephen's Christ—that's why I dared write to you about it.

You see, I'm an entire stranger to her. I just happened along when the kid was killed and had to stick around and help; that's how I came to know. Of course she hasn't any idea of all this, and I haven't any real business with it, but I can't see leaving her in a hole this way; and there's no one else to do anything.

You wonder why I didn't find a mother nearer by, but I haven't any living of my own, except a stepmother, who wouldn't understand, and all the other mothers I know wouldn't qualify for the job any better. I've been looking at your picture and I think you would.

What I thought of is this (if it doesn't strike you that way maybe you can think of some other way): I'm pretty well fixed for money, and I've got a lump that I've been intending to use for a new automobile; but my old car is plenty good enough for another year, and I'd like to pay that girl's board a while till she gets rested and strong and sort of cheered up. I thought perhaps you'd see your way clear to write a letter and say you'd like her to visit you—you're lonesome or something. I don't know how a real mother would fix that up, but I guess you do.

Of course the girl mustn't know I have a thing to do with it except that I told you about her. She'd be up in the air in a minute. She wouldn't stand for me doing anything for her. She's that kind.

I'm sending a check of two hundred dollars right now because I thought, in case you see a way to take up with my suggestion, you might send her money enough for the journey. I don't believe she's got any. We can fix it up about the board any way you say. Don't hesitate to tell me just how much it is worth. I don't need the money for anything. But whatever's done has got to be done mighty quick or she'll go back to work again, and she won't last three days if she does. She looks as if a breath would blow her away. I'm sending this special delivery to hurry things. Her address is Miss R. B. Brentwood, Good Samaritan Hospital. The kid called her "Bonnie." I don't know what her whole name is.

So now you have the whole story, and it's up to you to decide. Maybe you think I've got a lot of crust to propose this, and maybe you don't see it this way, but I've had the nerve because Stephen Marshall's life and Stephen Marshall's death have made me believe in Stephen Marshall's Christ and Stephen Marshall's mother.

I am very respectfully,
PAUL COURTLAND.

He mailed the letter that night and then studied hard till three o'clock in the morning.

The next morning's mail brought him a dainty little note from Gila's mother, inviting him to a quiet family dinner with them on Friday evening.

CHAPTER X

MOTHER MARSHALL stood by the kitchen window, with her cheek against a boy's old soft felt hat, looking out into the gathering dusk for Father. The hat was so old and worn that its original shape and color were scarcely distinguishable, and there was one spot where Mother Marshall's tears had washed some of the grime away into deeper stains about it. It was only on days when Father was off to town on errands that she allowed herself the momentary weakness of tears.

So she had stood in former years looking out into the dusk for her son to come whistling home from school. So she had stood the day the awful news of his fiery death had come, while Father sat in his rush-bottomed chair and groaned. She had laid her cheek against that old felt hat and comforted herself with the thought of her boy, her splendid boy, who had lived his short life so intensely and wonderfully. When she felt that old scratchy felt against her cheek it somehow brought back the memory of his strong young shoulder, where she used to lay her head sometimes when she felt tired and he would fold her in his arms and brush her forehead with his lips and pat her shoulder. The neighbors sometimes wondered why she kept that old felt hat hanging there, just as when Stephen was alive among them, but Mother Marshall never said anything about it; she just kept it there, and it comforted her to feel it; one of those little homely tangible things that our poor souls have to tether to sometimes when we lose the vision and get faint-hearted. Mother Marshall wasn't morbid one bit. She always looked on the bright side of everything; and she had had much joy in her son as he was growing up. She had seen him strong of body, strong of soul, keen of mind. He had won the scholarship of the whole Northwest to the big Eastern university. It had been hard to pack him up and have him go away so far, where she couldn't hope to see him soon, where she couldn't listen for his whistle coming home at night, where he couldn't even come back for Sunday and sit in the old pew in church with them. But those things had to come. It was the only way he could grow and fulfil his part of God's plan. And so she put away her tears till he was gone, and kept them for the old felt hat when Father was out about the farm. And then when the news came that Stephen had graduated so soon, gone up higher to God's eternal university to live and work among the great, even then her soul had been big enough to see the glory of it behind the sorrow, and say with trembling, conquering lips: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord!"

That was the kind of nerve that blessed little Mother Marshall was built with, and it was only in such times as these, when Father had gone to town and stayed a little later than usual, that the tears in her heart got the better of her and she laid her face against the old felt hat.

DOWN the road in the gloom moved a dark speck. It couldn't be Father, for he had gone in the machine—the nice, comfortable little car that Stephen had made them get before he went away to college, because he said that Father needed to have things easier now. Father would be in the machine, and by this time the lights would be lit. Father was very careful always about lighting up when it grew dusk. He had a great horror of accidents to other people. Not that he was afraid for himself. No indeed. Father was a man! The kind of a man to be the father of a Stephen!

The speck grew larger. It made a chugging noise, and became a motorcycle. It came on like a comet and turned thundering in at the big gate. A sudden alarm filled Mother Marshall's soul. Had something happened to Father? That was the only terrible thing left in life to happen now.

"Sp'c'l d'liv'ry!" fizzed the boy, handing her a fat envelope, a book, and the stub of a pencil. "Si'n'eer!" indicating a line on the book.

She was so absorbed in the letter that she failed for the first time since they got the car to hear its pleasant purr as it came down the road, and the big headlights sent their rays out cheerfully without any one at the kitchen window to see. Father was getting worried that the kitchen door didn't fly open as he drew in beside the big flagstone, when Mother suddenly came flying out with her face all smiles and eagerness. He hadn't seen her look that way since Stephen went away.

She had left a trail of letter all the way from her big chair to the door.

"Hurry in," she said, eagerly. "Supper's all ready and I've got a letter to read to you."

After she had passed the hot johnnycake, seen to it that Father had the biggest pork chop and the mealiest potato, and given him his cup of coffee creamed and sugared just right, Mother got out the letter with the university crest and began to read. She had no fears that Father would not agree with her about it. She read eagerly, sure of his sympathy in her pleasure; sure he would think it was nice of Stephen's friend to write to her and pick her out as a real mother, saying all those pleasant things about her; sure he would be proud that she, with all the women they had in the East, should have so brought up a boy that a stranger knew she was a real mother. And, true to her conviction, Father's eyes lighted with tenderness as she read, watched her proudly and nodded in strong affirmation at the phrases touching her ability as a mother.

"That's right, Mother, you'll qualify for a job as mother better'n any woman I ever saw!" said Father, heartily, as he reached for another helping of butter.

To be continued

Among the Workers

MR. JAMES M. DAVIS, president of the Gideons, Camp No. 3, Springfield, Mo., has served seven years in that capacity. His occasional communications on the Gideons' work have been widely appreciated by readers of the Christian Herald.

A MINISTER, who desires to settle in a pastorless community where the residents want the preaching of the pure Gospel, would be glad to hear from any reader who knows of such an opening. Address Minister, care of the Christian Herald.

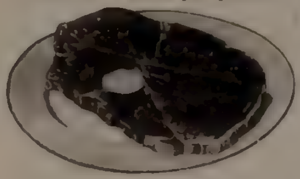
RANDOLPH L. HOWARD, a missionary in Burma, in an address before the students of the Burmese Theological Seminary, attributed the comparative success of missionary work in Burma to the absence of caste, which forms such a formidable obstacle to the efforts of the white worker in India. In Burma, the Christian missionary has free access to the native homes, where women are not secluded, but enjoy if anything more liberty than their sisters in Europe. Notwithstanding the handicap of caste, or perhaps on account of it, the Christian "mass" movement in India is progressing by leaps and bounds.

THERE are now more than 30,000 Greeks in Chicago, and the officers of the Chicago Tract Society, which established a mission for Greeks many years ago, are inviting all the Protestant churches of Chicago to help in giving these people a place in the Protestant Christian life of the city, and a Sabbath home.

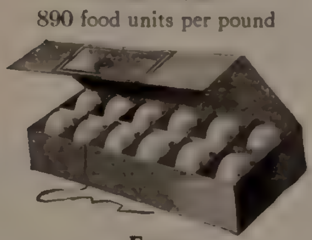
REV. EDMOND F. COOK, D.D., has accepted a call from the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to become director of its Missionary Course. He has been foreign missionary secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for seven years, during which time he has visited the various mission lands. Dr. Cook has always been especially interested in interdenominational missions.

Pound for Pound

1810 food units per pound



Round Steak
890 food units per pound



Eggs
672 food units per pound

Chicken
765 food units per pound

Milk
314 food units per pound

Mark How Oats Excel

Save 75%

Note how the oat—as a nutrient—looms above costlier foods.

Measured by cost it looms very much higher.

Bacon and Eggs cost five times as much.

Steak and Potatoes cost five times as much.

Average Mixed Diet costs four times as much.

For the same nutrition, Quaker Oats cost 75 per cent less than the average of your foods. Each dollar spent for it saves an average of $3.

In food value the oat holds the pinnacle place. In cost it stands at the bottom.

Other staple foods have in late months advanced, some five times as much as oats.

So these are times to use more oats. Not in porridge only, but in bread and muffins, in cookies and pancakes—in place of flour. Use them to thicken soups. They yield a wondrous flavor.

Quaker Oats

Flaked from Queen Grains Only

And these are times to insist on Quaker Oats. We use in the making just the rich, plump oats, and we get but ten pounds from a bushel.

The result is a flavor which has made this brand a world-wide favorite. Yet it costs in America no extra price.

Make your oat foods twice as welcome by using these luxury flakes.

12c and 30c per package in United States and Canada, except in Far West and South where high freights may prohibit

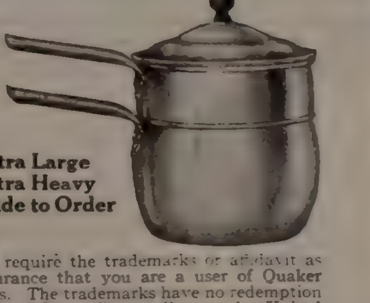
An Aluminum Cooker for $1.00

This aluminum double cooker is made to our order to cook Quaker Oats in an ideal way. No flavor is lost, no aroma. The oat flakes are perfectly cooked.

It is large and heavy, made to last a lifetime. Cereal capacity, 2¼ quarts.

Over 1,000,000 homes are now cooking Quaker Oats in this way. Now we want every home to have one. We supply only one cooker to a family.

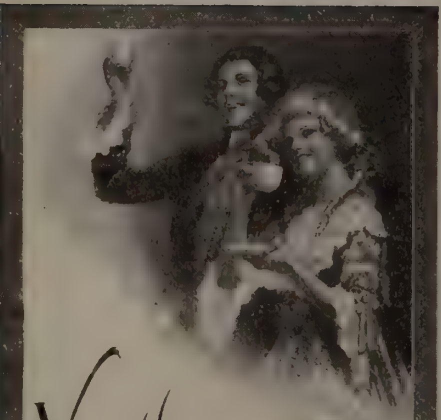
Send us our trademarks—the picture of the Quaker—cut from the fronts of five Quaker Oats packages, or an affidavit showing the purchase of five packages of Quaker Oats. Send $1.00 with the trademarks or affidavit, and this ideal cooker will be sent to you by parcel post, prepaid.



Extra Large
Extra Heavy
Made to Order

We require the trademarks or affidavit as assurance that you are a user of Quaker Oats. The trademarks have no redemption value. This offer applies to the United States and Canada. Address

The Quaker Oats Company
1708 Railway Exchange, Chicago
(1671)



Youth Health and Happiness
all acclaim the good qualities of
BAKER'S COCOA
It's purity, delicious flavor, wholesomeness and food value combine to make it a perfect food drink.

Booklet of Choice Recipes Sent Free.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD
ESTABLISHED 1780.
DORCHESTER MASS.

$1.25
30¢
50¢
$1.00

Solid Gold
Wonderful Values..

These beautiful pieces of genuine jewelry are guaranteed solid gold. The ring is set with a beautiful pearl. the Breast Pin is set with a genuine ruby doublet, and the chain pendant is set with a genuine ruby doublet and a real Baroque Pearl drop. The band ring is solid gold. Such remarkable values have seldom if ever been offered — sent postpaid to any address in the U. S. on receipt of the prices named above. Send piece of paper cut to fit your finger for size of ring wanted.

Send for our valuable handsomely illustrated catalog of jewelry and novelties.

LYNN & CO., 48 Bond Street, New York

What Is She Doing?

Cleaning her teeth the new way with Carmi Lustro Tooth Napkins. Cleans off film—makes smooth and sparkling.

In packages to carry anywhere; home, traveling, shopping or toilet room. In 35c and 50c packages.

Send 10c for 10 day trial package.

CARMI LUSTRO COMPANY
297 Lake Street Milwaukee, Wis.

SUPREME LIVING
is a booklet I want to send free to you if you wish to develop your health, personality and efficiency.
Virgil A. Davis, M.D., 216 Minor Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Returning from Captivity

International Sunday School Lesson for October 14. Ezra 1

King Cyrus and the Exiled Jews

By Rev. George D. Allison

TODAY we are students of history, as all careful Bible readers must perforce become, and once more we see clearly that God moves in the rise and fall of nations. The Books of the Return are Ezra and Nehemiah, and both of these are really a continuation of Chronicles, composed by the same compilers of ancient records, and in very much the same spirit. But they are well named in our English Versions because of the two splendid figures whose memoirs form a basic part of the story.

However, note that the events of this first chapter occurred at least fifty years before the advent of Ezra. So we must postpone all consideration of that fine leader, and we must not make the mistake of attributing the Return to his work.

Cyrus the Great

The man who conquered Babylonia and became known to the Jews as their liberator is one of the great figures of all time. In a Sunday school class, be sure to have a report about him. His character was as fine as his abilities. All ancient history pays tribute to him as a just and wise ruler. Herodotus, the Father of History, says that the Persians called him "father" and "shepherd."

This liberal ruler reversed the Babylonian plan of deporting the peoples of subject lands. In his own record on a clay cylinder now to be seen in London he says: "I assembled all those nations, and I caused them to go back to their native countries." Professor Adeney thinks his chief political motive was to relieve the empire of dissatisfied bodies of foreigners with a grievance. Others have attributed it to a desire to build outlying bulwarks of defense, such as Jerusalem would furnish against the menace of Egypt.

Our chronicler says it was the Lord "stirring up" his spirit to carry on the divine will. This is just our own belief in divine providence using the motives and the policies of men for spiritual ends. It may well be that, all unwittingly, the good king Cyrus fulfilled the glad cry with which the exiles hailed his advent: "Cyrus is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying of Jerusalem, She shall be built."

So Isaiah 45 interprets the course of events:

For Jacob my servant's sake and Israel my chosen,
 I have called thee by thy name:
I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.
I will gird thee, though thou hast not known me.

The Leading Spirits of the Return

Certain men rose up at the royal decree as though they had only been on watch waiting for it! Others were well content to stay in Babylon, where they were now comfortable and secure. The leaders were patriots and enthusiasts who went out with the same spirit that animated Abraham of old. They were not deterred by their knowledge of the utter ruin of the city. They feared not to undertake hard tasks in the name of God and country. All honor to such!

We find here the beginning of the prominence of the priests and Levites in the new Israel. After the exile they became the dominant forces. However, in Ezra 1 : 5 they are mentioned after the "heads of father's houses," that is the wealthy and prominent nobility, who had evidently kept up some kind of national spirit. Cyrus appointed Zerubbabel, a prince of the house of David, as governor. With this first band was Jeshua, who became high priest when the Temple was restored.

The edict of Cyrus seems to have been a grant of permission and aid to rebuild the ruined temple of Jerusalem. This accords with the tolerant spirit displayed by the Persians toward people of various faiths. So, too, the chief motive of the leaders of the return was religious. It has been well said of the Israel of the Exile: "They went out a nation, they came back a church." Only for brief periods after this did they ever achieve a strong government, but they have always constituted a distinct body of earnest believers.

A Turning Point in the History of Religion

Up to this time the great prophets and teachers had been individual voices raised up in protest against the idolatry and polytheism of the masses of the people. But the purified and sifted Jews who rebuilt the temple were ready to accept loyally the high truths of Judaism and to hold them fast. Never again did the Jews, as a people, fall into idolatry. Ever afterward they have been characterized by a "fierce monotheism" that no amount of temptation or persecution could change. In this respect the Israel of the Exile had learned its awful lesson well.

This spirit accounts for the Psalms of Deliverance, specimens of which we studied last week. In the literature of the nation, the time of the Return came to be regarded as an epoch of joyful renewal of allegiance to Jehovah, the God of the fathers, and as the high-water mark of national consecration.

The Temple Vessels Restored

All ancient peoples set great store by the sacred vessels of their temples, and it was a mark of real generosity for Cyrus to grant the return of the immensely valuable treasures, after sixty years in a heathen shrine. One may well wonder whether some strict Jews would not have considered these vessels defiled because of their experiences in Babylon. But evidently they held that Cyrus was giving back to Jehovah that which was always his, no matter to what unholy uses it had been put.

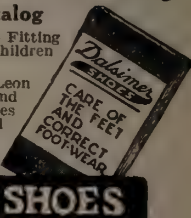
"The silver and the gold are mine." When we give to God, we are but offering what is his own. No amount of ill-usage can alienate his proprietorship. His claim holds, and when we devote what we hold to his righteous purposes, we can be certain of his acknowledgment and his blessing.

Not only the returning emigrants gave generously for the house of God, but those who did not return, for whatever reason, were especially given the opportunity of contributing. They seem to have done well, all things considered. What would they have thought of a Christian reducing his church subscription to ten cents a week, "because I've got to have a new automobile"? There is an air of genuine sacrificial giving about the Bible accounts of freewill offerings to the temple of God. Modern Christians ought to do as well as ancient Jews.

A Singular Home Mission Enterprise

"Whosoever remaineth" was to raise funds, even among his heathen neighbors, for the cause of Jehovah. What a singular inversion of our present missionary enterprise is presented here: Some go back to conduct home missions in Judah, while others remain in the foreign land and actually solicit the contributions of the heathen for the work of the one true God.

This book presents to us a picture of enfeebled Judah helped by refreshing streams of men and money from far-off Babylon. At this time, Babylon, rather than Jerusalem, was the capital of Judaism. Indeed, the Talmud says that those who returned were to those who stayed in Babylon as the chaff to the wheat! We who see the results they accomplished do not agree. Rather are we inclined to believe that they were a specially selected seed from whom the religion of the world was to be grown. The descendants of the stiffnecked and rebellious people who had mocked Jeremiah showed themselves to be a "people humble and teachable."



Dalsimer Shoes
Care of the Feet and Correct Footwear

Dalsimer's NURSES DeLyte

Seamless Shoe is especially designed for women with tender feet. Made of soft, pliable Duree Kid, flexible soles, rubber heels, no seams to hurt. Lace or button, high or low, sizes 1½ to 10, widths AA to F. Button shoes 50c extra. $4.00 Postage Prepaid

Free
Write For This Helpful Book
Care of the Feet
and Illustrated Catalog
showing our full line of Perfect Fitting Shoes for Women, Men and Children in all sizes and widths.

The "Care of the Feet" by Dr. Leon S. Dalsimer, tells how to avoid and correct the tortures of foot troubles and has been found most helpful by thousands of foot sufferers.

DALSIMER SHOES
Comfort with Style

Most foot troubles come from poor fitting. For 39 years Dalsimer Shoes have been recognized for their Comfortable Fit, Unexcelled Quality and Good Style. The wide range of sizes carried by us, running from 1½ to 11 and AA to F, enables us to fit you perfectly.

The Dalsimer money-back guarantee protects you absolutely. If you are not perfectly satisfied your money will be promptly refunded. Write today for New Catalog and "The Care of the Feet," free.

S. DALSIMER & SONS, 1207 Market St., Phila., Pa.

Four Weeks' Trial

Choice of 38 Styles of the Superb
Wing

Yes, we will ship you on four weeks' absolutely free trial, all charges prepaid, direct from our own factory, any highest-grade Wing Piano, or Player Piano.

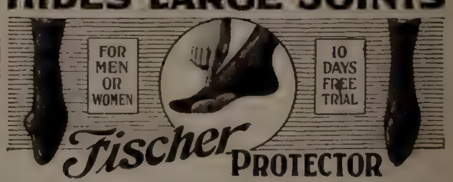
One of 38 Styles

No Money Down Nothing on arrival; no freight either way; no deposit.

Use it and enjoy it four full weeks; then, if you wish, ship it back at our expense. You alone are the judge. You will be amazed at our rock-bottom direct price on the Wing. guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash.

Valuable Book—FREE "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos" sent free and postpaid. Valuable 140-page book. Tells how to judge pianos. Beautiful catalog of new art styles also sent and particulars of great Free Shipment Offer. Write today—now.

Wing & Son (Est. 1868), 9th Ave. & 13th St., Dept. 2497 New York



KEEPS SHOES SHAPELY
HIDES LARGE JOINTS

Fischer PROTECTOR

Affords instant relief for bunions and large joints, hides irregularities of foot form. Worn in any shoe; no larger size required. Over one half million in use. Ask your shoe dealer or druggist. Write today for special free trial offer. No pay if no relief. State size of shoes and if for right or left foot.

THE FISCHER MANUFACTURING CO.
First National Bank Building, Dept. 50, Milwaukee, Wis.

Let Me Quote You a Special Price On My Rapid Fireless Cooker

Cook every meal on it. If you are not satisfied and delighted I will refund every cent. Get my direct to you. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Full set of famous "Wear Ever" aluminum cooking utensils comes with it. Ask for free book of valuable recipes.

Special Low Factory Price

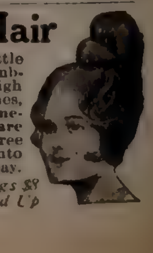
William Campbell Co.
Dept. 2, Detroit, Mich.



Send Me Your Hair

I will make your old hair new at little cost, or take your cast-off switches, combings, etc. as part payment on new, high class hair goods, toilet articles, perfumes, ostrich feathers, corsets, etc. Get something you need for something you are not using. Write for liberal offer and free Beauty Book. Your combings made into switches, $1.50. Mail your hair today.

ANNA AYERS, Dept. 282, Wigs $8
220 South State St., Chicago. And Up

During the period of captivity, the Jews undoubtedly profited greatly by their contact with a highly civilized people, and broadened the scope of their sympathies when they realized the fair and friendly treatment they had received from most of their captors. It is greatly to their credit that they broadened their views without compromising their principles. As we have seen, they became more zealous than ever for their Scriptures and their temple.

Another useful development of the Exile was the synagogue. For it is generally believed that this institution arose at that time. The Israelites, deprived of temple worship, met for prayer and social worship and instruction in the law, and soon evolved groups and buildings that corresponded essentially with our Protestant churches in architectural arrangements and practical purposes. Actually it may be said that while Roman Catholic worship is essentially similar to the rituals of ancient temples, the free churches owe to the synagogue their functions of teaching the Bible, congregational singing and family worship.

But above all else is the permanent discipline that the Exile left upon the soul of Israel. The certainty of retribution for sin, the conviction of the moral earnestness of God, the confident belief that God's punishments are to chasten and refine his children—these are the greatest contributions of Israel to the world's thought, and the Exile is their supreme demonstration. Once more, as in the deliverance from Egypt and in the foiling of Sennacherib, God was portrayed as a Saviour and Redeemer of his people.

◆

Young People's Topics for October 14

Country Boys in Crowded Cities

Epworth League Topic. Daniel 1 : 3-16

DANIEL purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself. Any boy is safe who with such a purpose goes from the country to the city or from the city to the country or from either to the army. The reason so many fall and then fail is that they have no firm anchorage of faith or loyalty to God. The life back home has given them something of education, much of ambition, but all too little of God. Young men come to the city with the false adage, "When in Rome do as the Romans do," upon their lips. They want to get on. They are deceived by the white lights and, perhaps, discouraged by the failure of some city church to show any real interest in a diffident stranger; they mistake the froth of the swirling eddy for the current of the main stream. Unless they wake up in time, all their fine ambitions are soon buried in failure; failure morally first, followed almost inevitably sooner or later by failure in all of life. The old song, "Dare to be a Daniel," is no joke; it is the best advice a young man leaving home can have. Out of the thousands of men of Israel, as well born as they, who were carried into captivity, only Daniel and his three friends wrote their names on the tablets of history. Of the young men who left home for the city in times past it is largely those who purposed not to be defiled who are today the presidents of banks and the heads of great enterprises. The city needs clean men, who will stay clean, against whom temptation is powerless. Only the country plus the Christ can produce such men.

What Is Committed to You

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic II Tim. 1 : 1-14.

FIRST, there is committed to each of us a life. Our life is our opportunity. With it we can bless the world or we can blast it. We can make our lives shining beacons to lead men upward, or bottomless pits to ensnare them. Second, there is committed to us a soul. We can prepare that soul to live throughout eternity with God, or we may prepare it for an eternity that will be godless. Others may influence the development of our souls, but the final responsibility is ours. Salvation from sin is personal. It must come through our faith in a Saviour who died for us. We must ourselves believe and must ourselves accept the gift of God, redemption through Christ Jesus. Third, there is committed to us an obligation for service. God had faith enough in us to commit to us the preaching of the Gospel in the world, to commit to us the care of his poor and the comforting of the afflicted. There is committed to us also our influence. Here is a power that works unseen by us, but works perhaps more surely on that account. We cannot pray one way and live another and have our prayers govern our influence. If we try to deal double with God our influence will ruin some other soul, just as surely as it will help save another if we, as Billy Sunday says, "trot square." Then there is our character and our reputation. The last depends upon the first. Both are committed to us. If our character is built upon the fear of God, in loving service, in unforgetting selflessness, in unyielding integrity and in unfailing charity, we need not worry over our reputation; that will take care of itself. Thus he has committed to us the way of life, that we may so mark it by our lives of faith and Christlike service that other men may find it and be led to walk in it.

◆

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

MANY times in the past few weeks requests have come for us to prepare a prayer for peace. It is hard to frame a prayer that will be true to the facts and acceptable to all Christians. We believe, however, that it would be possible for a waiting God to grant the request, if all the peoples at war could be brought to pray, somewhat as follows:

> "Our Father and our God: To thee we come, pleading the name of thy dear Son, our Saviour, acknowledging our covetings and sin, our wickedness, our forgetfulness of thee. In the midst of thy blessing we forgot thy service, and now thou art permitting us to be chastised with the chastisement of war. We did not want war; we wanted to go on prospering and forgetting thee; but war is here, and we have remembered the refuge of the saints of old. Again we turn the blessed pages of thy Word. We find once more its precious promises. We pray that in thy mercy thou mayest lead us to a righteousness which thou canst reward with peace. In the former times of peace we ground the faces of the poor, we took widows' houses for a trifling debt, we denied labor its fair reward, we held back from employers a fair return, we kept a false balance, and we dealt unjustly. We made a pretense of piety, and our solemn feasts were a mockery in thy sight. But now, O Lord, we come repentant. The rod is upon our shoulders, the spear pierces even unto our hearts; and we ask not the return of that false peace wherein we throve unjustly, but a peace wherein the rights of men shall be secure, and every tyrant, be it royal blood or class or wealth, shall be held in leash. We know that this peace can be only when the Saviour comes. We are watching. We are praying. We are believing. O God, our God, have mercy upon us and deliver us!"

Mrs. J. L. S. acknowledges answer to prayer for the safe arrival of her husband in England in the nation's service, and prays for his safe return. She also prays for the complete recovery of her niece, who has been improving in health.

Mrs. B. K. L. praises God that her brother and sister have made an open confession of Jesus as their Saviour.

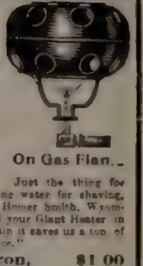
Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

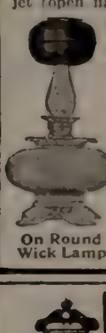
A. W. D., Geneseo, N. Y.; Mrs. C. W., Oil City, Pa.; B. C., Liberty, Tenn.; E. G., Cumberland Gap, Tenn.; Mrs. G. W., Roxboro, N. C.; E. D. P., Newark, N. J.; G. D. B., Austin, Texas; A Mother, Fort Worth, Texas; M. E. H., Ridgeway, Mo.; M. M. B., Reidsville, N. C.; Mrs. J. B., Ashville, Ohio; Mrs. E. L. C., Smyrna Mills, Me.; H. J. B., Gilead, Neb.

QUAYLE
& SON
ALBANY, N.Y.
STEEL ENGRAVERS
AND JEWELRYMEN
TO AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES
LIBERTY GOLD CLASS JEWELRY
CORRECT FORMS IN WEDDING STATIONERY
QUAYLE

TO-NIGHT
IN THIS CHURCH
THE NEW MINISTER

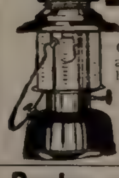
THE NEW MINISTER
The most popular play for churches yet issued. Many churches have cleared $100. and over with it. Always draws big audiences. Nothing objectionable, and any church can give it. Single copy 60 cents.
OUR BUSY LADIES' AID
Another of our best sellers, but much shorter than The New Minister. Easy to present. Few or many characters. Copies of both will be sent for examination for 5 cents postage on promise of prompt return.
BINGHAM-RADCLIFFE CO., Desk 4
Church Plays of Quality Millville, N. J.





The Giant Heater
will heat any ordinary room in zero weather at almost no cost
Applied to round wick lamp, or gas jet (open flame or mantle burner)
HEAT and LIGHT at ONE COST
Easy to apply, clean and odorless. A handy, economical, positive heater that insures comfort wherever and whenever wanted. Just the thing for sick-room, bath, bedroom, heating water for shaving, making tea or coffee, etc. Mr. Homer Smith, Wyoming, Del., writes: "We have used your Giant Heater in our home five years and are certain it saves us a ton of coal a year, besides its convenience."
On Gas Flame
Price: Black Iron, $1.00; Polished Brass, 1.50; Nickel Plated, 2.00
By mail or express prepaid
Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded if returned in ten days. BOOK FREE.
On Round Wick Lamp
GIANT HEATER CO., Inc.
763 Temple St. Springfield, Mass.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE
To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.
Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.
HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.



ACORN UNI-LITE FREE
Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weather proof. For house, barn, garage, camp and around the farm. Write for new free offer. Special opportunity to farmers, stockmen and motorists. Agents make big money. Write tonight for new 1918 offer.
Acorn Brass Mfg. Co. 850 Factory Bldg. Chicago

Pastors and Treasurers! Do your members pay prompt every Sunday? Do you want to instill systematic giving and less work for the Treasurer? Start right now; send Postal. Don't delay. F. H. Jaenicken, 709 So. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Gordon-Van Tine Homes

Plan No. 1442
A Colonial house of substantial dignity.
$1442
"Saved $375 on My Home!"
THIS is an economical time to build, before end-of-war-rush advances material prices. Investigate our Ready-Cut Houses—less labor, less time, no waste. Guaranteed costs. Also not Ready-Cut. Prompt shipments—standard grades. 100,000 buy from us. Local references.
Book of 200 Plans Free. Photos, floor-plans, guaranteed prices. Complete details. Adaptations of America's best architects to inexpensive homes. Send Now.
Gordon-Van Tine Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back
6482 Case Street Davenport, Iowa
Established Half a Century
Gordon-Van Tine Co.
6482 Case St.
Davenport, Iowa
Please send me Free the books checked below:
☐ Gordon-Van Tine Home Plans.
☐ Home Accessory Catalog.
☐ Garages.
☐ Summer Cottages.
Name..........
St. No..........
City.......... State..........

Heat Your Home through
One
Register

Get a Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace

At wholesale price and be able to burn any kind of fuel. Feed but one fire—heat your entire home.

Write for Our New Catalog

and learn what you can save in fuel bills this winter. See how easily this simple and powerful heating outfit can be installed in your home. Read what owners say about it. Kalamazoo Pipe Furnace outfits where desired, heating plans FREE.

Quick Shipment, No Waiting

Our big stocks insure immediate filling of your order. We pay the freight and guarantee safe delivery. Cash or easy payments. Write today.

Ask for Catalog No. 927

Kalamazoo Stove Company, Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We manufacture Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.

"A Kalamazoo
Trade Mark Registered Direct to You"

23-KARAT GOLD NAME
BILLFOLD
CHECKBOOK HOLDER
MEMO · DIARY
JOHN H. JONES
CHICAGO
PHOTO
IDENTIFICATION COIN PURSE
SECRET POCKETS

Guaranteed Genuine Leather Pocketbook

The "American Bankroll"—1918 Model. Combination Billfold, Coin-purse, Card and Photo-case of Finest, Genuine Black Seal Grain Leather with the show and elegance of a Dollar Article for only 50c, postpaid, ($5.40 per doz.) Any name beautifully engraved in 23-Karat Genuine Gold free (street number and city 20c each extra.) Iron-strong, yet wonderfully limp and flexible Measures 8x4 3-4 in. folded. Has coin-purse, bill-pocket, photo or pass-window, 2 secret pockets, check book holder and 48-page Memo-Diary, brimful of interesting and necessary information. If unable to get money order or bank draft, send postage stamps. 12th annual catalog of high-grade GUARANTEED LEATHER GOODS and NOVELTIES free with orders for "Bankroll" or sent alone for 10c postage.

U. S. LEATHER GOODS COMPANY Established 1906
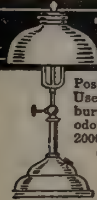
Dept. 45-C106-8-10 W. Lake St., Chicago Incorporated 1910

50c
Postpaid
Satisfaction Guaranteed
Fits any Pocket
For Ladies and Gentlemen
© U S L G CO 1917



The "BEST" LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

STEWART'S
IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
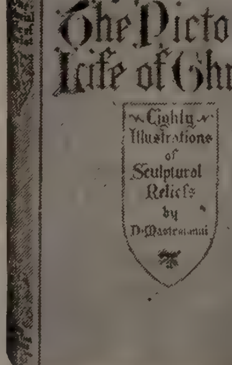
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 78 Stewart Blk., Cincinnati, O.



The Pictorial Life of Christ
Eighty Illustrations of Sculptural Reliefs by D. Mastroianni

UNUSUAL RENEWAL OFFERS

The Pictorial Life of Christ

Eighty Magnificent Sculptural Illustrations by the Famous Italian Master-Sculptor
DOMENICO MASTRIOANNI

THESE magnificent pictures are not paintings. They are something finer. The originals are combinations of sculpture and sculptural reliefs done in wax and clay and wonderfully grouped and photographed in such a way as to bring out in sharp contrast the lights and shadows and perspectives. The resulting photograph is something absolutely and entirely different in the history of art. There is a depth of space realized in looking at these pictures that you have never known in looking at a drawing or painting.

In simple, attractive language, the story of the life of Jesus is told by the Rev. Ira S. Dodd, who has adhered faithfully to the narrative in the Gospels. He is a lucid and sympathetic writer and gives a clear conception of the social, religious and political conditions in Galilee during the time Christ was upon earth. No expense has been spared in producing a book worthy in every respect of these wonderful pictures. The binding is an extremely handsome design in white vellum with red and blue letters. Size, 7 x 10 inches.

OFFER We will send The Pictorial Life of Christ, and the Christian Herald for one year for only $2.25

Martin Luther Anniversary Book

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, "Luther in Light of Recent Research," which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the celebration of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous theses on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation.

The Christian Herald has had the work translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago, who has succeeded in preserving the spirit and the expression of the original in a remarkable degree. This great book is supplemented by eighty-one Luther pictures, all of them from the most authentic sources, and the whole forming a Luther Picture Gallery.

OFFER We will send the "Life of Luther," handsomely bound in cloth, postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50

OFFER Christian Herald for 2 years—104 issues. You will save $1.00 by taking advantage of this offer. $3.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK, N. Y.

Luther
in light of recent research

How Petrograd Views the War

Continued from page 1033

Last night the searchlights were scanning the sky for Zeppelins, and anti-aircraft guns have been brought into the capital in large numbers. Petrograd is at the mercy of the Germans. Meanwhile, Berlin must be questioning just how much the Russians will stand. The Russian bear, for so long a terrifying apparition of mysterious power, has revealed weakness; but how much weakness will he show, and for how long? Would the capture of Petrograd by the Germans cause him to accept a separate peace, or would it make him fight as the freeman always fights when abstract principles become concrete examples? Germany has not been a good student of group psychology so far. Will she again blunder at Petrograd?

The city of Peter the Great is as peaceful as a pacifist. The crowds are orderly, smiling, well-clothed, and—wonder of wonders!—well fed. I don't see how they do it. After a nine-ruble dinner, which is the bargain meal of the day here now, I have a feeling of hunger. But the poor laugh and chat as they stand in line for their three-fourths of a pound of bread a day or their half-pound of butter a week, if they can afford it, as cheery a crowd as a Sunday excursion party on the outgoing trip.

I HAD expected long lines of emaciated poor, but in few cases do these food lines exceed forty people. The longest by far are made up of the men and women outside the tobacconists. I have seen bread lines, rice lines, provision lines of one sort or another in several countries, but I have never seen longer lines than those which form in front of the tobacco shops and theaters. A man will suffer more discomfort for an hour's amusement than he will for a full stomach.

Along the Trans-Siberian line food is plentiful and cheap. The average price for rich hot milk was fifteen kopecks a bottle, which means three cents, for a pint and a half. White bread cost two cents for a small loaf, and one could get heavy loaves, reminding one of a cart-wheel, for thirty cents. Berries, cucumbers, fish, chickens, butter and other foods were to be found at every station.

But when one gets within twenty-four hours of Petrograd, the prices climb like monkeys, and white bread, milk and chickens cannot be had. Canned fruit, which sold at Mandschuria for thirty cents, cost fifty at Irkutsk, sixty-five at Perm, and a dollar in Petrograd. Yet we passed thousands of box cars and refrigerator cars on the way, and in one yard I counted thirty-two idle engines. Over much of the Trans-Siberian route there is double track. The Red Cross trains returning from the front were packed to suffocation, and wounded men clung to the steps outside; but we passed scores of empty Red Cross cars on sidings where they seemed to have rooted. Russia is getting lots of advice about how to run her railroads, and some of the officials, knowing that Petrograd has hospitals on every street, face the necessity of listening to more advice from the American Red Cross Commission, which has just arrived. But what the strategic railways of Russia need is not advice, but some practical railroad men with power to act. And every American who comes out will have the satisfaction of knowing that the man he supplants will fight till the end to keep his job.

ONE of the picturesque sights of Petrograd is the women soldiers that one sees in considerable numbers. Those I have seen seem to be about twenty-one or twenty-two years old. Outside of Petrograd we talked with one girl soldier who had been wounded three times and was anxious to get back to the front. She was twenty.

Mr. William T. Ellis, Mr. Charles E. Beury and I, walking in the Alexander Garden last Sunday, saw as trim a little lady soldier as one could find off the stage. Clear eyes, pink cheeks, a rather long nose, fine carriage and an air of pride in her lot distinguished the girl,

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
SKINNER MFG CO.
OMAHA, U.S.A.
MACARONI

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

Bring Out the Hidden Beauty

Beneath the soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon. Mercolized Wax gradually, gently absorbs the devitalized surface skin, revealing the young, fresh, beautiful skin underneath. Used by refined women who prefer complexions of true naturalness. Have you tried it?

Mercolized Wax in one ounce package, with directions for use, sold by all druggists.

LEPAGE'S GLUE HANDY BOTTLES
SAVES YOU DOLLARS 10¢

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

RAISE BELGIAN HARES For Us

HUGE PROFITS easily and pleasantly made. We furnish stock and pay you $6.00 a pair and express charges for all you raise. Contract and book "Fortunes in Hares," 10c. Nothing free.

NATIONAL FOOD & FUR ASSOCIATION
Dept. 46. 557 12th St., MILWAUKEE, WISC

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

FIBRE LEGS ARMS

4-POUND FIBRE LEGS—ON EASY TERMS.
Orthopedic Braces for All Deformities. Send for Booklet.
Ray Trautman, 645 Dean Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

I am the Reward Man

I Am Going to Give Away Two Automobiles on December 15, 1917.

Last year I gave away twelve cars. This year I'm going to give away two more. Send me the coupon and I'll tell you all about it.

The Overland I am going to give away is the latest model, fully equipped and complete in every detail. It will be delivered right at some one's front door without a cent of cost to them. Don't you want to get it? Send me the coupon and I'll tell you how. The other car is a Ford, and it will also be given to some one. Would you rather have it? As soon as I receive the coupon I'll send you full details of my offer. Besides the two cars I'm going to give away thirteen other rewards, a total of over $1500 worth.

Cut out and Send the Coupon Now

THE REWARD MAN 7 H
P. O. Box 1632 Philadelphia, Pa.

Please send me full information about the automobiles you are giving away. The signing of this coupon does not obligate me in any way.

Name ______
P. O. ______
State ______ R. F. D. ____ Box ____

as she strode by in her neat military suit, but with sheer lisle stockings and light shoes. If the horror of war had ever occurred to her, she disguised the fact beautifully. Not only does one see women soldiers, but many of the well-dressed women one meets wear service medals.

As a man traveler sees women bending under the burden of his baggage in the hotels, or as he pays his fare to a woman conductor in the tram, he looks around at the thousands of loafing soldiers, who remind him of thousands of others along the five-thousand-mile railway to Harbin, and wonders why man-strength cannot be used, when it exists in such quantities. The soldiers in Petrograd have one hour of work to do every three days, and the rest of the time they loaf, talk politics and threaten the continuance of the government. The Y. M. C. A. is hoping to give these idle soldiers something to do and think about. A score of Y. M. C. A. huts on the eastern front during the last year might have prevented the recent demoralization and retreat. The most striking headline I ever saw appeared in a Petrograd paper the other day: "Russian Retreat Resumed."

Some of the Y. M. C. A. men live in a mansion which was given them under most romantic circumstances. A very wealthy family wanted to go out to their summer home, but they did not like the idea of having their palace appropriated by the government, so my China friend—who had two days with his parents in America between his return from Shanghai and his departure for Petrograd to act as secretary to John R. Mott—packed a suitcase, moved into the house and put out an American flag.

There is a spacious garden and a fine observatory, a pool-room and a plunge-bath. Up-stairs there is an art gallery of twoscore or so fine paintings and a library of Russian, Italian, German, French and English books, with a Charles Garvice novel laid across a set of Lord Lytton, and with a row of busts around the wall. Schiller looks across at Washington, and Peter the Great is opposite Moses. Pushkin, Molière and Shakespeare are grouped together in one lot, and Plato has turned his head away from this Allied exhibition.

THERE are thousands of interesting things in Petrograd, but none more interesting than the question "What is going to happen?" That is the mystery no one can fathom. For myself, I am hoping to get away to the Caucasus soon and let Petrograd take care of itself. The fact is, I want to get something to eat, and Petrograd prices interfere with my digestion. Petrograd is only the center of the cyclone, and bigger things are happening outside. Of one thing I feel sure. If you seek to learn the future of China and Russia in their yearning for liberty, you must look outside the capitals; for when six hundred million people awake, the movement transcends parliaments, rulers, politicians and amateur advisers. It cannot be localized.

The mere mention of Siberia suggests a thrill, at least to me. Siberia! Chillon, the Black Hole of Calcutta, and the North Pole combined. We had hardly crossed the frontier when the thrill commenced.

"This is the last passenger train to cross the frontier. All those in Russia must stay inside. All those outside must stay there. How long? How should we know?"

Dropping in for a little party call on our newest neighbor in Republican Row is rather likely to prove thrilling under the circumstances. We didn't come to be kidnapped, but simply to pay our respects.

In Russia rumor runs riot. So it was that night. "Russia is going to make a separate peace, and this measure is to prevent any news from getting out." "The ruble has been dropping so in value in Harbin that the Russian government has decided to close the frontier and prevent trading." "The American rolling stock has arrived, and all ordinary trains are to be stopped to let the railway materials have the right of way." "Russia has planned a new offensive, and this is to enable her to move up new troops without delay."

Hour after hour we speculated about the cause of the order, and the fact is that after a week we know no more about the reason than we did then. But the indefinite blockade has been shortened to two weeks. By the next morning we were arguing about the cost of food instead.

The New Army and Navy Chaplains

Continued from page 1032

men shall be forty years or under, in the navy fifty years or under.

At the outbreak of the war a new General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains was created, consisting of the chairmen of the official committees or commissions on chaplains of the various Protestant churches. Its headquarters is in the Washington office of the Federal Council of Churches, 1112 Woodward Building, Washington. The present committee consists of these and others under the chairmanship of Bishop William F. McDowell.

An arrangement was made with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, under which the departments turned over to the General Committee the applications of between two and three thousand men. It was an interesting study to go over and classify these names. A majority were over the age limit, a most interesting comment on the patriotism of men over forty. Large numbers were under-trained, and could not meet the educational and other standards set up by the Committee with the consent of the department. It was agreed that the demands of the war were so great that preference should be given first to men of college education, secondly with seminary training, third with extended pastoral experience involving successful work with men, fourth to men of personal tact, courage and manifest force. These men will minister to their entire regiments or to the personnel of their ships, but they will be the companions and will mess with the officers; therefore it is important that they should rank with them in personality and training.

The churches should be deeply interested in these chaplains. Their strength and effectiveness will not only determine their value to the army but also the standing of the church with the army and navy, with the government and to a large extent with the country. Every inefficient or inadequately trained chaplain gives a black eye to the church. Every good chaplain exalts the church and makes a way for its ministry and salvation. Moreover, they will actually be the church in the field. Everything the churches do to give their best ministers as chaplains, to equip them, to strengthen them, is not only safeguarding the spiritual, moral and physical welfare of the soldiers and sailors, but is lifting up the church of Christ before our great army and navy.

So the church is giving her best younger ministers to the government. It is the greatest single work she can do in the war. These chaplains will go to the cantonments. They will go as officers of the government, with authority in matters of religion. In battle they will be with their men, to help with the wounded, to visit in hospitals, to share the dangers of the men in exposure, shell fire, machine gun and rifle fire. They will take dying messages to mothers, wives and sweethearts. New traditions of heroism and death will be established by these men of God. Their names will be inscribed on tablets in colleges and seminaries, and memorial buildings will be erected in their memory, as in the period following the Civil War; but their greatest memorial will be written into the hearts and lives of men; of men who will die with a prayer of faith upon their lips, of men who will return home with hearts and lives clean and true to share in the making of the future history of this free nation.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY

© H. H. Co.

Why Not Have Your Share of the Saving that Holeproof Insures?

NOW, when every patriotic American is making war on waste and practicing thrift, Holeproof's low prices and famous wearing quality appeal to every pocketbook.

One pair of Holeproof will outwear two pairs of many kinds. Legions of Holeproof wearers know that this is true.

And Holeproof has improved in beauty—it is shapelier and finer; there are numerous shades and weights.

Thousands of up-to-date stores now feature Holeproof Hosiery in Pure Silk, Lisle, Artificial Silk, and Cotton.

Men's, 30c a pair and upward
Women's, 40c and upward
Children's, 35c and upward

Say "Genuine Holeproof Hosiery" when you order in the stores. We'll ship direct, charges paid, if your dealer can't supply you. Send your address for illustrated Holeproof Booklet and list of styles and prices.

This trade-mark identifies the genuine

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wis.

Holeproof Hosiery Company of Canada, Limited, London, Canada
Holeproof Hosiery Company, 10 Church Alley, Liverpool, England

The Happy Family
— all wear Vellastic
Fit
Comfort
Elastic
Fleeced Lined
Warm and Healthful
VELLASTIC
TRADE
BODYGARD

VELLASTIC
Elastic Ribbed, Fleece-Lined
UNDERWEAR

—makes millions happy and keeps millions healthy. The wonderful combination of comfort, fit, elasticity and warmth makes VELLASTIC the choice of men, women and children.

The patented VELLASTIC fabric that stretches with every movement of the body and the velvety fleece lining that gives warmth and health, are the secrets of the great popularity of VELLASTIC. Doctors say it is the ideal winter underwear.

Buy VELLASTIC at Your Dealer's

—you will feel good—you will feel comfortable—you will feel happy. Sold at popular prices—union suits and separate garments.

Write for Bodygard Booklet No. 2.

Utica Knitting Co., Makers, 350 Broadway, New York

MAGAZINE BARGAINS

PRICES SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE

THE prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, except in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower prices. If the magazines wanted are not given below, ask us for special quotation. Canadian postage, 50c additional; foreign, $1.00.

Christian Herald... McCall's Magazine.	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife.	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's World....	$2.00 .50	$2.10	Save 40 cts.
Christian Herald... People's Home Journal..........	$2.00 .75	$2.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Mother's Magazine	$2.00 1.50	$2.10	Save $1.40
Christian Herald... Ladies' World......	$2.00 1.00	$2.10	Save 90 cts.
Christian Herald... Every Week........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Boys' Magazine....	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's-Housewife. McCall's Magazine.	$2.00 .75 .75	$2.25	Save $1.25
Christian Herald... Little Folks.........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Etude (Music).......	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald, 1 yr. Am. Poultry Ad., 2 yrs. Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen....	$2.00 1.00 .50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review...	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.25	$2.60	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Delineator.........	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald.. McCall's Magazine. People's Home Journal.......... Ladies' World......	$2.00 .75 .75 1.00	$3.00	Save $1.50
Christian Herald... McCall's Magazine. Youth's Companion	$2.00 .75 2.00	$3.75	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.50 1.25	$3.85	Save 90 cts
Christian Herald... *Woman's Home Companion..... *American..........	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.00	Save $1.00
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.25 1.50	$4.10	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... *Youth's Companion *Review of Reviews..	$2.00 2.00 3.00	$4.75	Save $2.25
(*Must go to same address)

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York, N. Y.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 1039

tion. He asked $50,000 for the purpose. On the following day Secretary Lansing made public certain papers seized from Von Igel, a known German agent. The papers showed a widespreading net of German intrigue, tangled with efforts for Irish freedom and the activities of various "peace" societies. On September 23 further revelations showed German diplomatic agents plotting against the peace and security of Rumania, even after the United States had taken over German interests. The plan included the placing of bombs and the spreading of anthrax.

May Be a New Party. The National Non-Partisan League, an outgrowth of the farmers' movement in North Dakota, began its first national convention in St. Paul on September 18. The object of the League is to make the farmer, in alliance with the laborer, an effective force in government. The immediate impetus for this convention, however, was said to have been the fixing of the price of wheat at $2.20 when it was selling for $3.06. The farmers intend to see to it that the prices of things they have to buy are fixed on a relative basis. A great deal was said at the convention regarding the swollen war profits of certain manufacturers. It is interesting in this connection to note a statement by a New York Stock Exchange firm which shows that the wheat crop of 1917 at the government fixed price will probably exceed in value the average for the crops of 1911, 1912 and 1913 by $925,229,000. Corn will be worth an excess value of $4,680,905,000, oats $637,496,000, cotton $331,474,662 or about $6,500,000,000, out of which must come higher costs of farming but leaving considerable untaxed excess profits for the farmers, as against the excess and taxed profits of industry variously estimated at between $3,600,000,000 and $4,000,000,000.

Fragments of News. Herbert Hoover warned the business men of the country, in convention at Atlantic City on September 19, that socialism might be the penalty of the failure of business men to realize their responsibilities and to co-operate with the Government. Mr. Hoover said: "Either we must organize from the top down or from the bottom up. One is autocracy itself—the other, democracy. If democracy cannot organize to accomplish its economic as well as its military defense, it is a false faith and need be abandoned." . . . Strikes in the shipyards on the Pacific Coast spread until 25,000 men were involved. Mr. Hurley of the Shipping Board proposed as a basis of settlement that the government pay half the increased cost of the wage advances demanded by the men. The strike was ended by a direct appeal from the President. At the same time nearly 7,000 longshoremen were out on strike along the docks of New York City, seriously hampering the war activities of the government, the strike hinging entirely upon the employment of a single foreman, distasteful to the union. The workers agreed to arbitrate when convinced that a strike meant the militarizing of the piers. . . . A typhoon on September 17 at Amoy, China, destroyed 85 per cent. of the ships in the harbor and killed more than 600 natives. . . . The Food Administration denies absolutely the widely circulated report that the government planned to seize food supplies held in the homes. . . . On Sept. 18 the second 300,000 men of the new National Army reported at the training camps. . . . The entire sugar interests of the country were placed by proclamation of the President, announced on September 17, under the control of the Food Administration, through a strict licensing system. . . . Immigration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, totaled 362,877 in 1914; 1,403,081 aliens entered the United States and 633,805 returned home. The immigration of 1917 was therefore about one-half of the net increase of 1914. . . . The conferences of the House and Senate finally approved the Trading with the Enemy Act on September 19. The provision requiring all papers printed in German to publish all references to the government and its policies in parallel columns with the English translation, was changed in conference to require all foreign language publications to file with the postmaster a true translation of such matter prior to the mailing of an edition.

◆

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

DURING the past week, as has already been stated in the Christian Herald, the Russian provisional government succeeded in defeating the attempt of General Korniloff to make himself dictator and to turn it out of power.

On the Russian front during the week there has been little or no activity except northeast of Riga, where Russian troops drove back the German advance-guards for six or seven miles. On September 22 after heavy artillery fighting the Germans captured Jacobstadt on the West bank of the Dvina river and drove the Russians back over the river on a front of about twenty-six miles. The rest of the front, except for occasional artillery practice, has been absolutely quiet. There are rumors of a thorough reorganization which is being made in the Russian army to restore its morale and make it a real factor in later fighting.

On the Rumanian front north of Fokshani, and in the Oituz Valley, there has been some fighting, consisting in both sectors of attacks by the Rumanians on the Teutonic positions. Nowhere were any permanent successes achieved.

On the Macedonian front, several large skirmishes took place between the Bulgarians and British, in which the honors were even.

The Caucasian front was absolutely quiet during the whole week. On the south Palestine front the Turks bombarded the British positions from Gaza to the east rather heavily. Reports are that the Turks on this front have recently received large reinforcements both of men and artillery, and, the great heats being nearly over, there is some likelihood that the Turks will soon take the offensive here. It is confirmed that General von Falkenhayn has taken command of the Turkish forces in Mesopotamia, and it is reported that this army has been refitted and re-equipped during the past summer.

The British Admiralty reports that during the week ending September 16 the German submarines sank eight British vessels of over 1,600 tons, 20 under 1,600 tons, and one fishing vessel. This is the smallest number of large vessels reported sunk since unrestricted submarine warfare began last February, but on the other hand the number of small vessels sunk is the second largest during the same period.

The Austro-Italian front during the week was not the scene of either momentous or important events. The Italians state that the continuation of their advance on the Isonzo front has been compromised by their not possessing a sufficient quantity of heavy artillery, and have appealed to their allies to provide them with additional guns.

On the British portion of the front there were the usual trench raids and small hand-grenade attacks. For the last three days of the week a steadily increasing artillery fire has been directed by the British on the region to the immediate east of Ypres. As these lines are written the cables state that the British launched an offensive on this front early on September 20. General Haig's report merely says: "We made satisfactory progress and some valuable positions were captured." On September 21 the dispatches stated that the German front had been penetrated to the depth of a mile on an eight-mile frontage, and that upwards of 2,000 prisoners had been taken. The battle was still in progress.

Do You Need More Money?

To help your husband—to help your children—to help yourself? We can show you an easy way that is dignified, honorable and profitable.

The happy, contented women shown above are all free from worry and with money coming in. Each of them has found, with our help, a growing and prosperous business and every year sees each of them making more money. And these cases are by no means exceptional, for

In More Than 13,000 Cases We Have Helped ambitious, deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No previous experience is necessary—we show you how to make money in an easy, congenial and profitable way. We sell direct from the mill to the home through our local representatives, and our lines of hosiery and underwear for men, women and children are famous the world over.

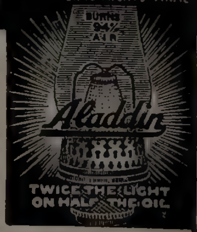
Write today for our free catalog
It tells the whole story

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
Dept. 118 BAY CITY, MICH.

We have been in business here for more than 22 years



Wonderful New Kerosene Light FREE
Beats Electric or Gasoline
FOR 10 NIGHTS TRIAL

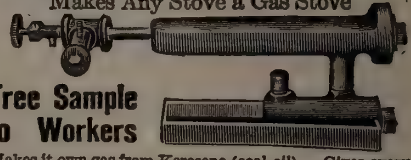
We want one person in each neighborhood to whom we can refer customers. Takes very little time and no investment. The new Aladdin kerosene mantle light

Burns 50 Hours on One Gallon

common kerosene. No odor, smoke or noise, simple, no pumping up, no pressure, won't explode. Tests by U. S. Government and thirty-five leading universities show the Aladdin gives three times as much light as best round wick flame lamps. Won Gold Medal at Panama Exposition. Over three million people already enjoying this powerful, white, steady light, nearest to sunlight. Guaranteed. And think of it—you can get it without paying out a cent. All charges prepaid. Ask for our 10-day Free Trial Offer and learn how to get one Free.

AGENTS WANTED

MANTLE LAMP CO., 358 Aladdin Building, CHICAGO, ILL.
Largest Kerosene (Coal Oil) Mantle Lamp House in the World



AGENTS—KEROSENE (COAL OIL) BURNER
Makes Any Stove a Gas Stove

Free Sample to Workers

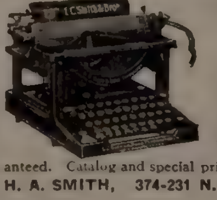
Makes it own gas from Kerosene (coal oil). Gives every home a gas stove. Absolutely safe. Cheapest fuel known. Wonderful Labor Saver Agents just coining money. Women wild about it. No coal or ashes to carry. No more danger from gasoline. Safe, Clean, Odorless, Cheap Every home a prospect. Low price makes quick sales. Easy to carry and demonstrate. Big profits. Your territory is open. Write today. Thomas Burner Co., 2524 Gay St., Dayton, Ohio

WANTED

Women to become nurses. The need was never so great as now. We have trained thousands of women in their own homes. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—with actual experiences.

Specimen lesson pages free.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.



$2.50 A MONTH Buys a Visible Writing L. C. SMITH

Perfect machines only of standard size with keyboard of standard universal arrangement—has Backspacer—Tabulator—two-color ribbon—Ball Bearing construction—every operating convenience. Five Days Free Trial. Fully guaranteed. Catalog and special price sent free.

H. A. SMITH, 374-231 N. 5th Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

I will send my 25c Book

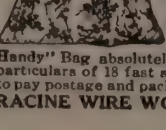
Strong Arms and Military Shoulders

For 10c in stamps or coin

Illustrated with 20 full-page half-tone cuts, showing exercises that will quickly develop, beautify and gain great strength in your shoulders, arms and hands, without any apparatus.

PROF. ANTHONY BARKER
127 West 42d St., Studio 220, New York



FREE! "So-Handy" Sewing Bag To Your LADIES AID

Thousands of Societies have earned big money with the "BUCK" line of utilities. Why not yours? We make the wire frames. You make the bags and the money. One complete 50c "So-Handy" Bag absolutely free to your society, with full particulars of 18 fast sellers, by return mail. Send 10c to pay postage and packing.

RACINE WIRE WORKS, Dept. C Racine, Wis.

HOW YOU CAN HELP OUR BOYS AT THE FRONT

EVERY mail that reaches the Christian Herald office shows how our readers appreciate the opportunity which our Soldiers and Sailors Fund offers for doing real missionary service among the boys in the ranks. To put a Testament or a Christian Herald in the hands of every member of our new National Army, before he goes to the front, is an enterprise that should enlist the ardent support of every reader of this journal. We hope to send the Testaments and Heralds out by the thousands, and that they may prove a comfort and solace to our boys, whether they are in the camps at home, in the trenches abroad, or doing service under the Stars and Stripes on the sea.

Anticipating the great demand for Testaments in this work, we have made arrangements for liberal supplies. They are put at such a price that there is no need of any one who reads the Christian Herald being unrepresented in the work. Young and old, rich and poor, alike have here an opportunity to send the message of salvation to our soldier and sailor boys, and the steadily increasing number of responses to the call shows how it is appreciated.

If you have a son, or a brother, or a sweetheart, or a friend who has been called for service, what better service could you render than to send him the Christian Herald every week?

The Christian Herald will be delivered direct to the camp. No matter where the soldier or sailor goes, the Christian Herald will follow him. The Post-office will take care of that. A neat gift card, giving the name of the donor, will be sent to the soldier or sailor for whom you order the Christian Herald.

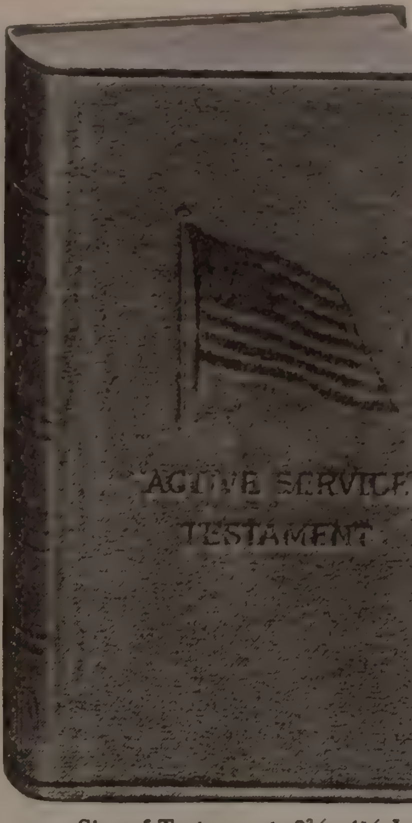
HANNAH A. G., Livingston, Wis., sends $6 and writes: "I have been canvassing the town in the interest of the Fund, and have collected this money. God bless the Herald for its noble work!"

A. H. M., Newburgh, N.Y., writes sending $40 for the New Testament Fund, and adds: "You may distribute it equally between the foreign and domestic fields, for I believe the prisoners in the camps need the Gospel as well as our own boys." He adds that he had "promised the Lord that if a certain investment proved profitable, the profit would be given to the Lord, and it came to pass in less than a week, so here it is!"

Mrs. W. H. P., Ilion, N. Y., an 83-year-old Christ an, sends $4, of which $2 is to be applied to the Testament Fund and $2 to send Christian Heralds to the soldiers. She closes with the prayer that "these little Testaments may be the means of saving some precious soul."

A. B., Kansas City, Mo., sends $1 to give New Testaments to the soldier boys, and adds: "May each Testament bring solace to some weary and worn soul." H. R. B., Fall River, Mass., sends $2 and says that she and her little son will pray for the boys who receive the khaki Testaments. Miss E. E. S., Nashua, Iowa, sends $1 and adds: "It is a fine thing, and I am glad to help a little and wish I could do more." "Enclosed are $2 for Testaments for our soldier boys," writes Mrs. E. B., Picketts, Wis., "and if I can, I will send more later. I have joined the Red Cross and am trying to help our boys." Mrs. N. S., Copac, Mich., sends $1 and adds, "I am glad I can help a little and wish that many might add to this Fund." "I have a boy myself who enlisted last March," writes Gertrude K. G., Bridgeton, Me. "He is only nineteen, and I am asking God to take care of him, and all of our boys, and to comfort all aching hearts." She encloses a gift to send the Christian Herald to our soldiers in khaki.

A Sunday school in Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, through Margaret B., sends $1.70 toward supplying magazines and Testaments to the soldiers. The writer adds, "I am taking the Christian Herald and know how it has been a joy and a blessing to me." Sarah H., Elgin, Ill., sends a gift to the fund—in response to a letter from Miss Margaret Sangster—which she wishes to be applied toward sending Christian Heralds to the soldiers. Mrs. R. F. C., Batavia, Ill., and Mrs. E. S. B., Chillicothe, Ill., also send gifts for supplying Christian Heralds to the boys in blue.



Size of Testament, 2¾ x 4⅛ Inches

MRS. LUCY M. J., Rockledge, Pa., sends $5 and writes: "For some time past I have been longing to put into the hands of our soldiers and sailor boys a copy of God's Word; for if there ever was a time or a place where its comfort is needed, it is now on the battlefield, for those dear ones are far from home and in constant danger. So I thank the Christian Herald for opening the way that I may send what I can for this purpose. It rejoices my heart to know that for so small a sum I can send to fifteen boys a portion of the Word. I never care to have my name published for such small gifts, but I would like to have you send the name and address, with a postal card, that by so doing I in turn may learn the names of those receiving the same."

George H. C., in sending his gift for the Soldiers and Sailors Testament Fund, writes: "I am an old soldier of the Civil War, and appreciate your good work."

There are many enthusiastic letters of the same character. The writers in almost every case express the warmest approval of the work and invoke God's blessing upon it. Every gift for the Soldiers and Sailors Fund and for supplying this journal to the boys in khaki should be addressed "Soldiers and Sailors Fund," Christian Herald, Bible House, New York. In all cases where subscribers desire it, the name of the donor will be sent to the recipient of the gift. Every individual gift will be acknowledged.

CONTRIBUTORS TO THE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS FUND

A M Meyer	$40.00
Lillian Wakeland	25.00
D Stuart Dodge	25.00
A Friend, Harrisville, Pa	20.00
Mrs Grant D Perry	10.00
Mrs R H Swan	10.00
Mrs C M Porter	10.00
A Friend, Troy, Ohio	10.00
R P Davies	9.00
Sophie Von Glahn	8.00
Florence Ide	7.00
George Ravn	7.00
Mrs Mary Istey	6.00
Hannah A Green	6.00
J F Williams & family	6.00
Miss Nellie Chapman & sisters	6.00
Geo W Conklin	5.35
Mrs T H Brush	5.06
Miss Lillie T Smith	5.00
Mrs William Forck	5.00
Mrs E B Robinson	5.00
Minnie A Snitzell	5.00
Mrs Remsen Rushmore	5.00
Mrs William Brooks	5.00
Florence Mays	5.00
Miss Marie Raithel	5.00
Delos W Rupert	5.00
Mrs Eunice McCoy	5.00
Mrs J J Boyer	5.00
Mrs Hubley	5.00
Rockledge, Pa	5.00
Daytona, Fla	5.00
Henry Sage Linn	$5.00
Chas E Pratt	5.00
H L Baumgartner	5.00
Harry Gainbichler	5.00
Rosella Burgess	5.00
Mrs S E Shobe	5.00
Mrs Lizzie Williams	5.00
Mrs Rose Hall	5.00
G L Bobilya	5.00
Mrs Emma Gorell	4.00
"In His Name," Newark, N J	4.00
Mrs H B Demmler	4.00
Phoebe Donty Goodwill	3.00
Annie F Patteson	3.00
Geo A Brush	3.00
M D Gorsline	3.00
Miss Stella V Cox	3.00
Mrs Catharine A Palmer	3.00
Miss Bessie Smith	3.00
"From Anxious Friend," Prentiss, Me	3.00
Miss I V Crawford	3.00
Lydia S Hewlings & friends	2.85
C B Taylor	2.50
A V Keen & Mary C Keen & D J Keen	2.35
Mrs C J Parsons	2.00
Phebe Detzel, Debora C Batley & others	2.00
Horace Martin	2.00
S J Swan	$2.00
Mrs Alvin Hawkins & daughter	2.00
M J A, Winchester, Va	2.00
Mrs Mary Yeagley	2.00
Julia P Kneedler	2.00
A Friend, Utica, N Y	2.00
Miss E E Moore	2.00
P L Hatch, M D	2.00
A A Augenstein	2.00
Mrs I A Cowdrey	2.00
Mrs H H Green	2.00
Mrs Mary Samaine	2.00
Mrs Hattie Smith & Mrs Maggie Barham	2.00
